Shaw welcomes SU challenges: finances, enrollment, and snow

By KATHERINE DROUIN
DO Editor

If you see a lone figure trudging through the snow from the chancellor's residence to the Tolley Administration Building early one morning this winter, chances are it will be Kenneth A. Shaw.

"I might not be going by car (to the office)," Syracuse University's new chancellor said in an interview this summer. "I'm used to winter. It's altogether likely that I'll walk."

"One of the things that walking around does is it gives you a chance to see and talk to people that you never see."

Shaw left his post as president of the University of Wisconsin system to become SU's 10th chancellor Aug. 20.

Chancellor Emeritus Melvin A. Eggers retired to an office in Bird Library.

Shaw was not planning to spend the summer moving to a different state. One daughter got married, and his other daughter and son moved to different states as well.

Shaw spent a June visit walking the grounds and getting familiar with the buildings, and spent three days in July talking with university leaders.

"I talked with key staff, faculty and students," he said. "I would guess I spoke to a minimum of 40 people."

Eight hours with Eggers

Shaw also spent eight hours talking with Eggers.

One of the biggest challenges SU will be facing in the next five years is declining enrollment, he said.

"We will have a financial challenge because there will be a reduction in enrollment due to fewer 18-year-olds," he said. "Less revenue means that some very difficult decisions will have to be made and priorities have to be set."

"My number one goal will be to confront (SU's) financial challenges in a way that enhances its basic values."

"Though isolation is a problem that faces every chancellor, Shaw said he has always been visible to students, though he has not yet developed a specific program.

"You might find yourself isolated from the people you're trying to serve, but all of the pressures impinge on you," he said.

"One of the things I'll try to do is spend some time to meet and interact and involve students to interact on a formal or informal basis."

"Though there will be adjustments, Shaw says he is ready for the challenge. "I like change and I welcome it," he said."

A university judicial complaint against the fraternity was filed May 2 by Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Student Association Co-president Charlie McDonald.

The complaint charged the shirts violated Section 2 of the Code of Student Conduct, which at the time prohibited "harassment, whether physical or verbal, oral or written ... when such harassment is likely to provoke a breach of the peace or other violent reaction."

Shaw says he is ready for the challenge. "I like change and I welcome it," he said.

Soviet republics secede; European diplomacy offered

On the heels of the Communist Party dissolution, one republic after another has declared independence from the Soviet Union or laid claim to the powers of the central government.

Denmark, Norway and Finland paved the way for European recognition of the republics through immediate diplomatic recognition to the Baltic republics. Popular President Boris N. Yeltsin of the Russian republic said he hoped the main republics would sign a treaty next month reorganizing the country into a looser federation.

Peruvian children starved in mines

Thousands of children, many under 18, are virtual captives of the gold rush in the Peruvian jungles as well as Peru's struggling economy.

Though children are trucked into the Peruvian jungle every year to make their fortune panning for gold, they find only unholy gold and live a life of misery. Many of the children work 10 to 12 hours a day, and many eventually die.

One Peruvian boy, Alex Tite Huaraca, told how he was fed rice, potatoes, yucca root and water by the mine's owner and had to sleep in the open to guard the mine's machinery. Alex was paid $0.25 a day and nearly died of malnutrition.

Though Peruvian law prohibits employing minors for heavy labor, the economy is dependent on such work.

Salvadoran peace talks grind to a halt

El Salvador President Alfredo Cristiani said the main obstacle to peace talks is the guerrillas' insistence that some of their members be incorporated into the national armed forces.

Although commanders of the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front, known by its Spanish initials as the F.M.L.N, had lowered the number of guerrillas they want incorporated into the armed forces, Cristiani said the proposals put forward are the same and referred to it as a "Gordion knot."

Mercury reappears in lakes, fish

Once thought to be a vanishing problem, high mercury levels have again appeared in North America's lakes and the fish that inhabit them.

Twenty states, including New York, have warned people not to eat most kinds of fish caught in certain lakes because of dangerous levels of mercury. The main source of mercury contamination is rain polluted by coal-burning power plants, incinerators and smelters. Mercury is used to make batteries, paints, electrical switches and hundreds of other products. Incineration is encouraged by the federal energy program as an alternative method of waste disposal because of shrinking landfill space.

San Francisco ready for mayoral campaigns

San Francisco is gearing up for a historic mayoral election as the city slides into a swamp of urban problems.

Panhandlers, graffiti and litter plague the city, and residents have begun to blame the problems on incumbent Art Agnos.

Agnos is being challenged by four candidates, including Tom Haisch (promised a day), the first Chinese American to run for mayor in a major city.

Campaign dialogue has focused on programs for the homeless and other public works projects. Early poll results have been inconclusive.

Lewis, Joyner-Kersee win at Tokyo Games

Runner Carl Lewis set a world record at the Tokyo Games Sunday, finishing the 100-meter race in 9.96 seconds.

Lewis squelched speculation about his age — he is a few weeks past his 30th birthday — and led a United States sweep for its first medals in the world track and field championships.

Teammate Jackie Joyner-Kersee twisted her ankle after mugging her run-up in the women's long jump, but an earlier jump of 24 feet 1/4 inch granted her the gold medal. Joyner-Kersee later recovered from the accident.

Syracuse Hospitals to burn more waste

Four Syracuse hospitals, Crouse-Irving Memorial, University, Community General and St. John's Hospital Health Center, are seeking permits to upgrade incinerators and burn more waste.

The incinerators will cost between $1 million and $3 million, and some will feature smokestacks as high as 200 feet.

Crouse-Irving on Irving Avenue will add a 12-foot smokestack that will be visible to people traveling on I-81.

Hospital officials say the incinerators are necessary to avoid the high costs of hauling waste out of state. The tall smokestacks will ensure that pollutants disperse in the air and do not get trapped on the ground.

Officials said the incinerators and smokestacks will be the key to state Department of Environmental Protection standards.

Voting process seeds grass-roots revolt

A grass-roots movement to amend the New York voting process is set for the state capitol with a 250,000-signature petition.

Liverpool resident Joan Rupperecht has begun a voters' revolt calling for the state to adopt a "initiative and referendum" process that would allow residents to introduce new laws directly to the ballot along with their votes.

To date, 26 states use the program, and 73 issues were petitioned last year by voters.

Issues petitioned included: taxes, state services, insurance rates, legislative budget reductions and term limits on lawmakers.

Frank Quill, president of the public interest group "We The People," has set a list of issues for the "initiative and referendum" process that would allow residents to vote directly on them.

Supporters of the process say it gives citizens a greater voice in government, produces more interest in politics, leads to more progressive laws and helps keep politicians honest.

SAN FRANCISCO - The San Francisco Department of Environmental Protection has issued permits for the construction of two new incinerators to the University of California Medical Center and Crouse-Irving Memorial Hospital.

The incinerators will replace existing incinerators on the campuses and will be used to burn hospital waste.

The permits were issued after the department conducted a review of the proposed projects.

The department found that the projects were consistent with state and federal regulations and would not cause significant environmental impacts.

The new incinerators will be located on the rooftops of the medical centers and will be equipped with smokestacks to disperse pollutants into the air.

The department also required the medical centers to implement a waste reduction program and to use recycled materials in the construction of the incinerators.
Freshmen party at SU's Playfair

By OMAR ALI
and ROY S. GUTTERMAN
DO Editors

The chant, "SU, SU, SU," resounded and echoed off the Dome as students high-fived, shook hands and ran through lines of other students at Sunday night's Playfair.

By packing 2,500 strangers together and giving them dances back-to-back; sitting on each other's knees and arranging groups with such common denominators as birthdays, the event prevented everyone from getting to know each other in as short a time as possible," said Miles Valentino, a facilitator from Playfair Inc.

That was the object of Syracuse University's fourth annual Playfair, for freshmen and transfer students at SU and the State University College of Environmental Science and Forestry. In three orientations, cheers and chants, the SU Office of Residence Life, Residence Hall Association, and the Admissions Office, all sponsors of Playfair, aimed to make meeting people a little easier.

Meeting and greeting

Lines of students descended the stairs inside the Dome, where students were greeted by other students cheering, shouting, chanting and dancing.

"Awkward smiles and looks of disbelief engulfed any face, but once students stepped onto the turf, many joined the party," Valentino told the group. "The only thing you need to know is that we're going to have an outrageous time."

Phillip Tufi, a Russian studies major from Eureka, Calif., had never seen anything like Playfair.

"I'm having a great time," Tufi said. "It's pretty organized and a lot of fun."

Freshman engineering major Jennifer Sharet from Brentwood, N.Y., agreed.

"It's pretty organized and a lot of fun," Sharet said as she sat in a circle with strangers.

As Valentino shouted instructions from the punch list stage, Sharet proceeded to sit on the knees of a classmate who sat upon her knees. The object of the game was to form a human circle.

According to Barbara Baker, director of the Office of Residence Life, Playfair was included four years ago as part of a reorganized orientation program for incoming freshmen and transfer students.

"It provides a non-competitive atmosphere for new students to meet and make connections," Baker said. "We urge students to attend the orientation picnic, then come to Playfair, where they can get to know each other better."

Senior Melissa Marroso, an orientation adviser and management major from Dearborn Heights, Mich., regrets not having Playfair during her freshman orientation.

"Playfair was rained out during my freshman orientation since it was held outdoors at that time," she said. "It's been in the Dome ever since."

Marroso and other orientation advisers, residence advisers, Goon Squad members, members from various campus groups, as well as the Carrier Dome staff helped coordinate Playfair.

Corinna Robbins, 17, of Chapel Hill, N.C., gets a boost in order to gather other freshmen into a large group.

"Playfair is one of the reasons I became an orientation adviser," said Kim Scalskys, a sophomore international relations major from Caracas, Venezuela. "It really helped me to meet people my freshman year."

Kim Scalskys, a sophomore resident adviser from Pittsburgh, Pa., met her best friend through Playfair.

"It was a great experience. I met a lot of people and I had a great year," Scalskys said.

If meeting people is the object of the game, then Valentino has had his fair share.

Playfair Inc. is a private organization that travels to 300 college campuses around the nation.

Valentino, who is based in Berkeley, Calif., has facilitated more than 50 Playfairs during the past year.

"Every time I facilitate a Playfair, the energy level of the groups I meet builds," Valentino said. "This group is definitely the best I have ever worked with."

Parents, students ease through move-in weekend transitions

By ROY S. GUTTERMAN
DO Editor

The cool breeze and bright sun outside the Syracuse University campus last weekend matched the easy transition and bright smiles of freshmen and their parents.

"Everything has gone so smoothly," said Lee and Stephanie Blackburn, of Manchester, N.H., to drop off their daughter for fall. "Syracuse is great, the weather is beautiful."

"It's always easier when you're prepared," said Dominic Scotti, of Springfield, Mass., joking with his son Marc at his side.

"There's always apprehension, but you emotionally prepare yourself before he's even gone," Charles Clement, of Manchester, N.H., who was dropping off his youngest son, Peter, said this was the third time he and his wife have done this. "It's much easier."

"I think everyone here to help them and we hope things will work out," Scotti said.

Jacqueline Hartert of the Admissions Office said she is currently tabulating a Goon Squad census and a large percentage of the Goons were female.

Karen Pleshio, secretary of the Traditions Commission, said more than 400 people signed up for the squad, but many failed to show.

Hartert, the squad's "contact person" for the past two years, said this year the program went "extremely smoothly."

She said more people were involved this year than last, and the majority of the members were from the Greek community who get points from their houses for participating.

Hartert said other reasons for participating included extending a welcome to incoming students.

"There were a lot of sophomores on Goon Squad this year and I'm trying to find out if that was because they received such a sense of community and helping last year when they were freshmen," Hartert said.

Wyant and McCue said the major reason they became Goons was to enter their residence halls early.

"It's worth it just to beat the traffic," McCue said.

Each Goon was allowed to choose a hall assignment and was assigned either a morning shift from 7 a.m. to noon or an afternoon shift from noon to 5 p.m.

Wyant said that although opening weekend pressures did cause some tension to rise, "most people were really appreciative."

Hartert said the program was funded by the orientation department of the Admissions Office.

Pleshia said the Traditions Commission is an organization established in the post-World War II era to preserve traditions on campus and also create new ones.

She said the Goon Squad has been around since 1947 and used to be responsible for such things as picking up freshmen at the train station and distributing freshman beanies.

Shaw must define issues

If first impressions leave lasting ideas, one has to wonder what goes on in Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw's mind.

His first impression of the university was students bombarding him with angry questions. Shaw, new to the campus, could make no real statements, but expressed an interest in getting to know students and their perceptions of the university.

He received an earful. Students fired expectations with an avalanche of questions. These, however, demand that Shaw define issues, and he needs to take decisive stances on homosexuality, sexual assault and racism. He should strive to make the university a culturally integrated place. He should determine how to appease students when inevitable tuition hikes hit are announced.

Though Shaw has only visited the campus briefly, he knows the mess the former chancellor, Mark A. Eggers, left in his wake will be difficult to repair. In fact, the obstacles he will encounter as he picks up Eggers' slack might make his old job as the leader of one of America's public school systems seem like a piece of cake.

Perhaps Shaw's experience in Wisconsin will aid him in his effort to set SU back on track.

If identifying a problem is the first step in solving it, Shaw takes a wise approach to ironing out the mess that has gratitude at SU. The Daily Orange wishes him the best in his endeavors.

DO editors welcome students

As the school year begins, I would like to introduce new students and reacquaint returning students with The Daily Orange.

The Daily Orange is your newspaper that publishes Monday through Friday throughout the academic year. We are not affiliated with either the University or the Newhouse School of Public Communications.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

I encourage any student who is interested in a journalism career to stop by our office and become involved with the DO.

We have positions available for editors, writers, photographers, artists, copy readers, production assistants and graphic artists, as well as about any other capacity you can think of that has to do with the daily production of a newspaper.

No experience is necessary, as our editors may be looking for one-on-one instruction and guidance to all staff.

Our office is located at 744 Ostrom Avenue and our doors are always open. Editors are usually here Monday through Thursday and we are here until all hours of the night. Our business staff is here from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

If you would like to get involved or if you would just like to see how we operate, please stop by. Everyone is welcome to answer your questions and show you around.

We hope you all enjoy your year at SU, and we wish you luck in all your pursuits. If any member of our staff can offer assistance in any way, feel free to call us at the appropriate phone number: News 443-2127; Editorial 443-2128; Sports 443-2129; Advertising 443-2139; Business office 443-2134.

April is the cruellest month.

Blue Lights: This is a test. This year will be the test of the emergency blue light system. Since their installation in 1990, the blue lights, which are meant to stop rape before it happens, have been relatively inactive. December is upon us and the blue lights are not being turned off. Their simplicity has been abused and fostered false alarms around the campus. This is, however, only a test. A test that is admirable.

Playfair marks the initiation of all "prospective students" to the status of "freshmen." More likely than not they stay at SU, courtesy of Your Favorite Student Group, or us here at The Daily Orange. Take note. There is no doubt you'll be hearing about these issues again.

The Administration: There will be shoes of debatable size to fill as the Shaw Administration enters the SU arena. Freshmen will know only the new administration, making them its beneficiaries. The students of the next generation will tend to compare Shaw to the previous administration, which would be a mistake. The tail end of the previous administration was understandable not as powerful as it was in its first stages, making comparisons futile.

SGA and the Activity Fee: More politics. The Student Government Association has the enviable task of allotting each student's yearly activity fee. This often creates fireworks among SGA, the students and the student groups.

If the total pot is based on student enrollment, the available monies are dwindling as enrollment numbers are down. The best critics. Students rejoining the SU community in the fall, however, things students will never have seen again.

The Daily Orange wishes him the best in his endeavors.

Phone call threatens

To the editor:

On Friday morning, the Women's Studies Program office manager, as usual, took messages from students answering machine and then called me to alert me to one directed specifically to me. She had only been able to listen to the staccato sounds of this message, which detailed various sexual acts the caller proposed engaging in with the victim.

People getting similar phone calls for contemplating making them should know that phone calls are Class A misdemeanors under the New York State Penal Code. I quote from Article 240, Section 30 (Aggravated harassment of the second degree): "A person is guilty of aggravated harassment of the second degree, when, with intent to harass, annoy, threaten or alarm another person, he communicates, or attempts to communicate, with another person, and by telephone, or by any other form of written communication, in a manner likely to cause annoyance or alarm; or"

No experience is necessary, as our editors may be looking for one-on-one instruction and guidance to all staff.

Although the SU administration did not take formal action against the fraternity, the fraternity's national headquarters investigated the chapter.
The national chapter suspended 54 SU members in June. That number was reduced to 47 after several brothers graduated. Members were required to appeal in writing or in person by July 15.

National takes action
"We hope people realize that we took large-scale action," Hotz said. "This was not a dog-and-pony show."

However, students should have their own ethical and moral standards and not simply abide by the student code, he said.

"Just because it's not illegal doesn't mean it's the right thing to do," he said.

Alpha Chi Rho will be required to sponsor an in-house workshop dealing with homophobia. Hotz added.

On Aug. 8, the national chapter revised its pledge to read: "I will not tolerate sexual harassment based on gender or sexual orientation." The pledge is read when members are sworn into the fraternity.

A lot of campus rapes

Whenever there's drinking or drugs, things can get out of hand. So it's no surprise that many campus rapes involve alcohol, drugs or both. If you're not sure where the line between consensual sex and rape lies, you're not alone. While the law may not discriminate between consensual sex and forced sex, other laws may. For example, in New York State, anyone under 16 is presumed to be incapacitated. So if you're with someone under 16 and you're not sure whether they consented, they didn't. If you're not sure if consent was given, you can't afford to be in doubt. The truth is, that's just not right. And if you're involved in a rape, you need to know that there is help available. Call the rape crisis center at 467-3141. They can help you understand your rights and responsibilities, and ensure that you're taken care of. Because, when it comes to rape, you have a right to be safe. And if you're a sexual assault survivor, you're not alone. There are resources available to help you through this difficult time, and to ensure that you're treated with respect and dignity. So if you're involved in a rape, or if you know someone who is, you can feel confident that help is available. Because when it comes to rape, you have a right to be safe. And if you're a sexual assault survivor, you're not alone.
Soviets' battle continues even after failed coup

By DAVID A. SMITH
DO Staff Writer

One week ago, the future of democracy in the Soviet Union was very much in doubt.

Centralists within the upper levels of the Soviet government had deposed President Mikhail Gorbachev and placed him under house arrest at his palace in the Crimea.

While tanks rolled in the streets of Moscow and toward the Baltic republics, the world recalled memories of a darker, more evil Soviet Union — a reminder of a time when the citizens stood up to the state of emergency.

President Bush and other Western leaders cut off much-needed support hit the streets of Moscow, ignoring the show of support.

As quickly as they had seized power, the coup leaders found themselves in a losing battle against the will of the people.

Gorbachev returned to Moscow and reassumed power, yet many questions about the future of the Soviet Union remain unanswered.

"I think we have to think of the long-range objectives of the Soviet Union," said Syracuse University professor Goodwin Cooke.

Cooke, also a former U.S. ambassador, believes President Bush would like to see the Soviet Union remain a union because this would allow for smoother diplomatic relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

"What statespeople hate most is instability," he said.

The future of Gorbachev and Soviet reform is now a very cloudy picture, Cooke said.

How far he can go is now a very cloudy picture, Cooke said.

The question now is how far will Gorbachev allow the decentralizers to act," he said. While the hard-liners, or centralists, wanted to concentrate power in the hands of a strong central government, decentralizers are pushing for more political and economic reform, Cooke said.

Gorbachev, who had tried to act as a fuzzy between the two major forces in government, now owes nothing to the conservatives in the Soviet Union, Cooke said.

"Gorbachev apparently felt that he had to balance the various trends in the Soviet Union," Cooke said.

This position failed because Gorbachev was unable to satisfy either side, he said.

"They tried to kick him out. He does not need to placate them (any longer)," he said.

Gorbachev owes a lot to the reformist forces for their actions during the coup, mainly Yeltsin and others calling for decentralization. Since he has ousted the hard-liners, reform in the USSR should move faster, Cooke said.

Gorbachev is not prepared to give up power for their actions during the coup, mainly Yeltsin and others calling for decentralization. Since he has ousted the hard-liners, reform in the USSR should move faster, Cooke said.

If Gorbachev can't kick it out, if there's further disintervention within, (reformers) will probably find another head to lead the USSR, Cooke added.

"We don't know whether or not Gorbachev can last," he said.

The coup leaders were more concerned with preventing political reform, while the decentralizers pushed for greater economic and political reforms, he said.

Gorbachev is now a very unstable, which makes foreign investment improbable and risky, he said. "There has to be some stability," Nelson said.

"There is there even going to be a Soviet Union," he asked. "Before we know that, committing resources is stupid and it doesn't lead to anything good."

"What it does is lead to opportunities for corruption," he said.

Syria’s Assad toys with U.S. to achieve goals

In early August, Syrian President Hafez Assad granted an interview to The Washington Post. During the course of the interview, the Syrian leader discussed President Bush and the Middle East peace process.

JOSEPH BURTON

NEWS ANALYSIS

The Post quoted Assad as saying, “I believe it is important to support the major goal of Israel’s return of the Golan Heights and the other occupied territories.”

Asked whether or not he accepted the existence of Israel, Assad gingerly dodged the question and said, “This has to be put forward in the conference.”

Given that Secretary of State James Baker has often critized Israel as the stumbling block to peace, Assad expects favors from the Bush administration. Last year Baker announced the White House phone number and urged Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir to call when he was serious about a peace conference.

Baker has called Israeli settlements in the occupied territories the greatest obstacle to peace in the region.

Jeanne Kirkpatrick, in her book Modern Dictator, writes, “Unlike most previous administrations, Bush and Baker do not seem to be moved by the notion that Israel deserves compensation for the three wars launched against her. The administration never seems to support his major goals—Israel’s return of the Golan Heights and the other occupied territories.”

In his book Modern Dictator, Harry Rubin of Johns Hopkins University notes that Syria has used terrorism “more effectively and with less risk than the other major purveyors of international terrorism.”

Entering Lebanon in 1975, the Syrian military easily outmatched the various militias that were engaged in a civil war. Rubin points out that Assad realized the situation in Lebanon was complicated and “the country was too fragmented to permit total Syrian control except at a very high cost.”

Through alliances and intimidation, Rubin wrote, Assad played the various Lebanese factions off of one another. He asserts, “Christian, Druze or Sunni and Shite Muslim groups were subsidized or punished depending on Syria’s immediate goals.”

Rubin notes the “most important use of Syrian-sponsored terrorism within Lebanon was to force the withdrawal of Israeli troops and U.S. Marines. At the least, the Islamic fundamentalist suicide bombers who attacked the U.S. forces and embassy in 1982 and 1983 were allowed a free hand to train and mount their operations through Syrian-held territory.”

Hostage as bargaining chips

American hostages were taken and held in areas under Syrian control. “Despite the anarchy conditions in Lebanon,” wrote Rubin, “it would have been impossible for these operations to have been mounted without Syrian knowledge and assistance.”

In exchange for siding with the U.N. coalition during the Persian Gulf War, the United States has looked the other way as events subsequently confirmed, never seemed to occur to the secretary of state.”

Kelly wrote that one month after the Baker-Assad meeting in September 1990, “Assad’s army crushed the last remaining Lebanese resistance to Syrian domination by destroying the Christian forces of General Michel Aoun.”

A month later, gunmen under Syrian direction murdered the son of former Lebanese president, Dany Chamoun. Chamoun’s wife and two children were also killed.

“Such is the man,” concludes Kelly, “whom James Baker is making the pivotal figure in his grand design to resolve the Arab-Israeli dispute, just as Saddam Hussein had been made the favored protagonist in the State Department’s strategy to contain Iran.”

Land of peace?

During an appearance on March 6, President Bush said, “We’ve learned in the modern age, geography cannot guarantee security.” This might have been a direct statement to Israel that the occupied territories were useless in the face of Arab missile capability. Thus, the notion of land for peace makes sense.

Dore Gold of the Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies at Tel Aviv University argues that Israel views the situation differently.

In the Aug. 26 issue of The National Review, Gold writes, “The basic question is whether conventional warfare is still decisive in determining the ultimate security of nations or whether new push-button missile exchanges are equally decisive.”

Iraqi tanks and troops conquered Kuwait. Although missiles rained down on Israeli civilians, the Jewish state was far from on its knees. After

Charges against Kirkaldy likely to be dropped

DO Staff Reports

A videotape uncovered by a special private investigator played a major role in clearing a former Syracuse University basketball recruit from sexual assault charges.

Wifred Kirkaldy, 19, will be unburdened of a pending sexual abuse charge in six months if no further trouble results. County Judge J. Kevin Mulroy said in closed court July 15 that Kirkaldy had been accused of raping an 18-year-old woman during a recruiting visit to the SU campus in September.

The videotape, discovered by investigator Joseph Spadafore, provided new damaging evidence which destroyed the credibility of the alleged victim, Mulroy said.

"This evidence is so damning that in the court's opinion, it removes the label of victim' from the individual," he said.

In the videotape, made one week before Kirkaldy's visit to SU, the woman talks of past sexual experiences and her desire to have sex with black athletes, a source familiar with the case told the The Post-Standard in July. She describes an episode in which she had sex with a University of Connecticut basketball player.

The woman was also taped relaying a story of how she deprived a man of having intercourse after allowing him to perform oral sex on her. She laughed as she recounted the situation, the source said.

Kirkaldy told police in September that he thought the woman was "one of the ball team groupies— the girls who hang out with the players and do whatever they want."

The alleged victim charged Kirkaldy with forcibly trying to have intercourse with her, despite her negations, after she consented to oral sex. The alleged incident took place on Sept. 22 in the Sheraton University Inn.

Kirkaldy rejected a guilty plea in April and was sentenced to five years probation. His trial was scheduled for July 22.

"I have maintained my innocence since my arrest and believe that the outcome here today now shows once and for all that I am innocent," Kirkaldy said in a prepared statement released in July.

When the charges were originally brought against Kirkaldy, he was expelled from a preparatory school in Virginia. He was then denied entrance into two more schools before enrolling in a prep school in the Philadelphia area.

Some colleges which were strongly recruiting the 6-foot-10 center from Brooklyn lost interest, Kirkaldy's attorney Donald Martin said. Kirkaldy will attend West Virginia University this fall.

While the federal government faces an ever-growing deficit, money continues to be wasted on reams of paper, malfunctioning copy machines, debilitated computers and summer employees— including me.

This summer, I worked for a federal agency in Washington, D.C. I use the term "work" loosely. It was more like your tax dollars being siphoned into my bank account.

I reported to the federal office and was shown to my cubicle where I was left to do nothing. No explanation of my job or what the office did came forth. To this day, I still don't know what one of my bosses does or what he did work on during the infrequent times he's actually in the building.

I was introduced to the workers in the office, including an analyst named Audrey who, I would soon discover, was one of the few employees in the office who seemed to work. Most of the employees were intelligent, some of them did work, but finding an employee who fulfilled both conditions was difficult.

During my first few weeks, I was bored out of my mind. There was a computer on my desk so I would write letters to friends and read books and magazines, but I did little work. Audrey tried to get me to read the federal regulations and the statute regarding the purpose of the division, but those thousand-page books just don't make for an exciting read.

I met the other secretaries in the office who eventually realized a good thing when they saw it and got me to do their work for them while they took two-hour lunches, went to softball games and talked on the phone to friends.

None of the managers noticed, or if they did, they ignored it. I soon became the office gopher: fetching faxes, printing letters and making copies — lots of copies. One day I used more than 3,000 sheets of paper and spent two hours in front of the copier.

So much paper is wasted by the federal government. While there are recycling containers, most people don't know what can and can't be recycled even though it's labeled clearly on the side of the container.

And the office's Kodak Ektaprint 225 Copier-Duplicator wasted large amounts of paper each time it malfunctioned.
New leadership official calls for student action

By LAURIE HEROLD
DO Contributing Writer

A Sigma Chi alumnus from Case Western Reserve University is now helping organize the Greek system and other student organizations at Syracuse University.

Al Page is the new associate director of leadership in student organizations for Student Programs, the university department that deals with student activities.

Page came to SU from Rutgers University where he was the associate dean of Greek affairs. He went to college at Michigan and worked at the University of Wisconsin, where he was the director of residence life.

Page said he likes the Syracuse area. "It's a medium-sized town with lots to do and less hustle and bustle than big cities," he said. "I like a big city only if I can drive away from it."

However, he quickly adds that he could live in his hometown, Cleveland, forever.

The resource person

Page said he will be the resource person for student organizations, helping them work effectively and set goals.

"We want them to be thinking of the future, not just now," he said.

Student Programs handles four areas. Page said: the Greek system, student organizations, leadership and programming. He said he hopes the department will get the Greek system back to basics, making it more effective with a more productive evaluation process, increasing positive community awareness and increasing knowledge of issues.

For student organizations, he said his main goal is to broaden university awareness of the number of diverse groups on campus. As for leadership, he said, the goals are to develop skills and style for student leaders.

He said programming will use conferences and workshops to enlighten students about multicultural issues.

Page said he likes the Syracuse area. "It's a medium-sized town and the community I like," he said. "Also, public universities lack the sense of community I like."

Page said the goals of Student Programs as a whole will include: recruiting more students into organizations, establishing a university community framework, forming a leadership community, increasing faculty participation in student activities, promoting knowledge of organizations, recognizing students who excel in organizations, recruiting the diverse university community and creating a leadership resource center.

Turning over a new page

Page has a bachelor of arts degree in interdisciplinary studies from Case Western Reserve University and a master's degree in higher education administration from Indiana State. He said before working at Rutgers he worked at Bucknell University as the associate director of residential life. He also worked at the University of California at Santa Barbara, where he handled residential life and student activities.

Page said his hobbies are reading and traveling visiting every state but preferring Ohio as well as lifting weights and reading.

He is also an active Sigma Chi alumnus, working on national committees for such issues as homeless shelters and food banks.

Page is eager to get involved with students and get them involved in student organizations. "I would like to meet as many students as possible," he said. "Drop by, that's what I'm here for."
Dome offers tickets for Rod Stewart, sports

By ROY S. GUTTERMAN
DO Editor

Classic rock, classic football and basketball rivalries will hit the stage, turf and hard floor in the Carrier Dome this year.

Students returning to campus last week were greeted by the news that Rod Stewart's "Vagabond Heart Tour" along with opening act Santana will be rolling into the Dome on Sept. 28, said the Dome's Assistant Managing Director Pat Campbell.

SU student tickets go on sale tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. at Dome Gate B. Although tickets for the public went on sale last week, about 2,300 "prime seating" tickets were reserved.

Students with a valid ID may buy two tickets at a cost of $22.50 each. "I expect we will do fairly well," Campbell said, adding that 14,000 tickets have already been sold.

"By Wednesday we will be closing in on 20,000," he estimated. "It's a great show," and no student will be turned away, he added.

Campbell said show tickets are on a "first-come first-serve basis," so official may have to issue brackets if students line up early for tickets.

First-come first served

"I'm glad you do feel badly," Bob said. "But there are times we can't help." Disappointed with the knowledge that this poor woman was forced to turn her family to another secretary who would again transfer her or accidently hang up on her with this in mind, I was forced to put the woman on hold while I went to inquire about how she could get the help she needed.

Campbell said additional students were on the correct side of the busy desk instead of blindly transferring her to someone else who would in turn connect her to another secretary who would again transfer her or accidently hang up on her. With this in mind, I was forced to put the woman on hold while I went to inquire about how she could get the help she needed.

One afternoon I answered a phone call from a woman in Kansas who started telling me her life story of woes. At first I was annoyed that she thought I could help her simply because I picked up the phone in Washington, D.C.

But as I grudgingly listened further, my annoyance turned to despair as she told me that her brother had adopted her children and was now beating them. She continued, telling me about another relative who was also no good and she always came back to her abused children.

I wanted to try and help this woman by directing her to the professional basketball will kick off.

SEPT. 11 due date for basketball

Applications for basketball season tickets are due Sept. 11, just four days after football season kicks off.

Forms for the lottery are available at the box office and the Schine Student Center.

Basketball ticket packages cost $67 for 12 games or $73 for 13.

Since the March 8 game against Villanova falls on Spring Break, Dome officials have made managers who manage and don't allow their staff to run amok. Maybe instead of making 10 copies of something that only six people will read, they could make 10 copies of something that could be passed along. And just maybe it isn't really necessary to throw away 100 reports just because they had yesterday's date instead of today's.

I'm sure that not all government agencies are as inefficient and unproductive as my office, but I still worry about the future and how the government plans to deal with its ever-growing bureaucratic body and alleviate the problems I've encountered. Unfortunately, our government is probably unaware that any problems exist.

Thirty-five Syracuse University students have been chosen to receive Remembrance Scholarships, created in memory of the 35 students killed in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103. The plane crashed over Lockerbie, Scotland, in December 1988, killing 259.

The scholarships provide $5,000 each toward the senior year of study and are funded by a $3 million endowment supported by alumni, friends, parents, and corporations. "Donors were not necessarily parents of those who died in the crash," said Darryl J. Geddes, assistant director of SU News Services. "They also included people who attended athletic events and felt remorseful."

More than 260 students were screened by a selection committee that focused on university activities, including community service. Students were required to submit an essay reflecting on the bombing.

"This scholarship has basically allowed me to go back to SU to finish my senior year," said recipient Max Prohaska. "I had to write an essay about what the tragedy meant to me," Prohaska said. "Since I try to be as positive as possible, I tried to see the tragedy as a challenge."

The students who were killed responding to a challenge when they went to England, Prohaska said, adding SU students should pick up where they left off.

"Their future was totally stripped because of political turmoil," he said.

Sixty students were chosen for interviews after the applicants' essays were submitted. The committee was looking for the extent that the students contributed to the life of the university outside of the classroom, said David Smith, dean of admissions and financial aid and the chairman of the selection committee.

Extra-curricular activities as well as grades factored into the selection, Smith said.

"The interview was partly a character analysis," Prohaska said.

Prohaska said he discussed in his interview how the media has the power to influence people. "The media can touch a lot of people," he said. "I'd like to try to change the world and make it better."

Orangewomen’s backcourt grows with Michigan guard

By ROB GUYETTE
DO Editor

The Syracuse University women’s basketball team has added depth to its backcourt for the 1991-92 season with the signing of a 5-foot-4 guard from Michigan.

Pam Young, a four-year varsity player at Murray-Wright High School in Detroit, has committed to play with the Orange.

“We think she has great potential,” said SU head coach Barbara Jacobs. “She’s real quick and has great hands.”

Jacobs called Young a defensive specialist and said she expects Young to make immediate defensive contributions to the team.

Offensively, Young will need improvement and will continue to work on her outside shooting.

“She’s had real good coaching,” Jacobs said. “It’s going to take some time for her to become a scorer for us, but in a defensive capacity she should play right away.”

Jacobs said Young will be able to blend in with SU’s other guards — Erin Kenneally, Karen Zajick, Charie Crouse and Angel Lewis — and help create a fast-paced tempo in 1991-92.

“I like to have five guards, which we haven’t had for the past few years,” Jacobs said. “We’ve been a bit sparse in that area. We’d like to run and press a little bit more than we have.”

The Orangewomen had only eight players on their roster at the end of last season and were forced to play at a slower pace.

“When you have only two or three guards it wears them out and then they can’t score,” Jacobs said. “With a little more depth, hopefully we’ll be able to run and press again.”

Young did not start at Murray-Wright, where she played as the third guard behind twins that accepted scholarships at California.

“She has a good attitude,” Jacobs said. “She did the most with the time she got. She’s a good student as well.”

This past season, Young’s high school finished the season 20-1, with the lone loss coming in the state championship game.

“I think I can contribute a lot to the team,” Young said.

The Orangewomen’s other signee this year was Melayne Cromwell, a six-foot guard out of Wheaton (Md.) High School.

Cromwell is a versatile player who can play either guard position or small forward.

With her size, she can be an impact player for us,” Jacobs said.

Owens leaves SU for professional ranks

By ROB CUVETTE

DO Editor

Three years after making one of the most celebrated arrivals into the Syracuse University basketball program, Billy Owens threw his own going-away party.

Owens, the 1991 Big East Player of the Year, announced his decision to forego his final season of eligibility and enter the NBA draft.

The 6-foot-9 junior from Carlisle, Pa., was selected by the Sacramento Kings as the third pick in the first round on June 26.

"I feel I made the right decision for my family and for me," Owens said. "I know my family wants me to finish up my degree, and I want to finish. So I promised my family that I will come back to school and receive my degree."

Owens' decision was not a surprise. Speculation pointed toward his leaving immediately after the Orangemen lost to Richmond in the first round of the 1991 NCAA Tournament.

"I feel I've learned a lot," Owens said. "I feel I've made my mark. In the summertime in the Goodwill Games and at the World Games I proved that I could play at the next level."

Owens was the United States' leading scorer at each competition. The first team All-American averaged 23.2 points and 11.6 rebounds per game this season in becoming the first player to average more than 20 points per game under coach Jim Boeheim.

Owens is the first Orangeman to leave early since Dwayne "Pearl" Washington left after his junior season in 1986.

"He's a very difficult guy to say goodbye to because he's done everything we've ever asked him to," Boeheim said. "We're going to miss him — his leadership more than anything else — but he's left some ideas of what needs to be done."

The internal investigation of alleged violations within the program, Owens said, had no bearing on his decision.

"I doubt if we would go on probation," Owens said.

Instead, he said the toughest aspect of his decision was leaving his fans, who have diligently sent Owens letters over the past month.

"If you could read some of the letters I got, you could understand how tough the decision was," Owens said. "I know deep down that they're still my fans. I just want them to stick behind me. As long as they just turn on the Sports Channel once in a while and watch me play."

Owens and Kenny Anderson of Georgia Tech were the top underclassmen to declare for the draft. Larry Johnson of UNLV, Steve Smith of Michigan State and Georgetown's Dikembe Mutombo were the top seniors.

The only player with a comparable talent to Billy is Larry Johnson," Boeheim said prior to the draft. "They're both great players. I think whoever gets either one is going to be very happy. (Billy's) position has moved up considerably this year, and I'd be shocked if he didn't go in the top three."

Owens said he expected — and would have been content with — a place in the top five.

"Next year, I could be a sure spot for one or two but now, talking to other people they say I'm in the top five (this year)," Owens said.

"I'm not really in it for the money. My dream is to be an NBA basketball player and put on that uniform."

Yet, in these days of skyrocketing salaries, the money factor is unavoidable. "I'll be set for life if I manage my money right," Owens said. "My Dad worked many jobs when we were growing up, and he kept us off the streets. I just want to return the favor to him and my mother."

Owens was joined at the press conference by his father, Bill Owens.

"We're happy for Billy," Bill Owens said. "He had a dream that he wanted to play in the NBA, and it was my job to see that Billy got to play in the NBA. As a family we're very happy for him."

THE NBA FIRST ROUND DRAFT

Two Orange men were taken in the NBA’s first round, and both will be head to the West Coast. Anthony Avent, drafted 15th by Atlanta, was traded to Milwaukee. Kevin Brooks, the 16th pick, went to Denver, and center LeRoy Ellis went from Denver to Atlanta.

Larry Johnson (UNLV)
Kenny Anderson (Georgia Tech)
Billy Owens (Syracuse)
Nino Hunter (Georgia)
Steve Smith (Michigan State)
Dino Smith (Missouri)
Lee Langley (New Mexico)
Mark Mason (Tennessee)
Shawn Vanniver (Colorado)
John Ackerman (Georgia)
Larry Johnson (Providence)
LeRoy Ellis (Syracuse)
Stanley Roberts (Syracuse)
Rick Fox (North Carolina)
Shawn Vandiver (Louisiana)
Mark Randall (Kansas)
Pete Chilcutt (North Carolina)

LeRoy Ellis, who greatly improved his draft position with postseason camp play, was selected in the 22nd pick of the first round by the Los Angeles Clippers.

LeRoy won the first season with the Kings. He has a great size and can run the floor. He will likely back up Olden Polynice, who was acquired last season in a trade from Seattle. The Clippers are stacked at the forward position with Charles Smith, Danny Manning and Ken Norman.

Hughes, then traded to the Cleveland Cavaliers for the Cavs’ 1996 second-round draft pick.
Opinion

Sports

Rob Rios about baseball writers are having a difficult time remembering which publication they write for. This month both The Sporting News and Gannett/USA Today's Baseball Weekly made themselves look like The Star, National Enquirer, or maybe People.

Both stories about San Francisco Giants second baseman Robby Thompson. The stories told the touching tale of how Thompson has honored this year on his birthday, his wife's and daughter's. And next month he's feeling the pressure because of the birthdays of his twin sons. I don't care. Repeat. I don't care. What am I supposed to do, write the twins' birthday on my calendar and root for Mr. Thompson? Next, we come to the Dave Righetti deal. This is way out of hand. The day after Righetti's triplets were born, it made the top story of the local sports section. Are you kidding me? That was the most important happening in sports that day? Then, two nights later on ESPN, Righetti entered the game in the ninth inning trying to preserve a one-run lead for the San Francisco Giants. The announcer began the triplets story at the top of the inning and didn't finish until there were two outs and the third batter had one strike on him. Never was it mentioned how Righetti's doing this season. Or if the Giants feel his big off-season contract was worth it. You know, the on-the-field stuff. I'm wondering how many times I will hear the triplets story. Worse, I'm wondering how many times Righetti has had to tell it.

But these stories talong with the wife of Texas third baseman Steve Bechele having a baby two weeks ago were just the ground-floor work. I read further in my Sporting News, and that's when I lost it. I was reading the New York Mets notes for the week. First, I read how Dave Cone's 22 strikeouts increased his National League leading total. Then, I read about Mackey Sasser's newfound prowess in right field. All of a sudden it hit me. "Wives of (Dave) Magadan and Howard Johnson gave birth on consecutive days last week... don't care!!! AAARRRRRRGGGGGHHHH!!!"

What is that news really telling me? Should I think less of these two guys if they weren't there with their wives? Or maybe they were. Why wasn't that information listed?

For that matter, I'd like to know the kids' names, height, weight and whether they're right- or left-handed. Was either the first child? And who has the most kids on the team? Excuse me for a second, I'm going to write this date on my calendar so I can look forward to the birthday update in next year's New York Mets notes. Baseball players may be big news, and their personal lives are of great interest to some people. But when I watch or read about baseball, I want to know the scores of the day, not the records of the day. At least The National had enough sensibility to separate the news from the gossip. Three times a week, the now-defunct paper devoted one full page to sports gossip and photos (called The Eagle's Eye). It didn't pretend to be newsworthy. It was dirt on all the big names, and they put it all together into a one-page extravaganza.

If you cared, you could read it. If not, you knew how to avoid it. Magazines like the aforementioned and other media publications should start taking a reasonable approach. People read the sports pages and expect sports news. Every paper has a gossip column. Only these days, it's too often being disguised as a sports page.
The Show is better without the circus

Commercialism has taken over baseball in the 1990s. But it is reassuring that there’s one place you can go in this country to see a plain old baseball game — Cooperstown.

On television, we no longer see the game summary. We don’t see the linescore after every inning, either. We see the Sherwin Williams linescore. And isn’t it nice to know out-of-town scores are brought to you every night by Desenex?

That’s just television. When you go to a game at most major league ballparks, you are offered such delicacies as the Miller Lite plays of the week or the CherMake Hot Dog oldies entertainment — hassling the players warming up to throw them a ball, the ultimate souvenir.

It’s a far cry from the midsummer game in St. Louis when a game between the Cardinals and Braves was delayed because the person in charge of between-inning music either fell asleep or had a jammed record player before the bottom of the sixth.

There were no guess-the-outside-trivia multiple choice questions on the scoreboard at Cooperstown. There were no dot races. No car races. No trivia questions.

The scoreboard, in fact, looked like one you might expect to see at your local American Legion field. It had the balls, strikes, outs and score. No frills or extra entertainment plays. And, thank goodness, no ads.

The scoreboard at Doubleday Field couldn’t have cost one-one-thousandth of what today’s do. It’s located in left field, where there are no seats, and every ball that sails over it for a home run lands in someone’s back yard.

Doubleday Field also saves itself a couple million dollars making do without a hi-fi stereo system. The only music you can get there is from your headset (which doesn’t do much good, either, because these games don’t make radio).

Every major league baseball game played today is on television somewhere. Each team has its own local contract, and ESPN’s undertaking of The Show has flooded the market with games, as well as filtered unprecedented money into owners’ pockets.

Commissioner Fay Vincent has said one of the biggest problems baseball faces today is the length of games, which is approaching the three-hour barrier.

Television, no doubt, has been the driving force. Squeezing in all those commercials is what keeps the money flowing.

The money has also led to higher player salaries, bigger egos and, most importantly, higher ticket prices.

An afternoon in Cooperstown can make you forget all the negative things commercialism brings. The game lasted just more than two hours. I wasn’t overloaded with ads for products I have no interest in over a speaker system so loud that I couldn’t think.

I didn’t hear the recorded sound of breaking glass on every other foul ball. And there was no out-of-town scoreboard. The TV sound was hearing.

I don’t consider myself a baseball purist. And I love watching baseball on ESPN as much as anyone. But sometimes you have to wonder if the game is getting too big for itself. Big contracts and free agency are sometimes bigger stories than who does what on the field.

A one-day respite is refreshing, to say the least.
Thompson rocks 'n rolls after first PGA win

By ROB GUYETTE

DO Editor

Thompson, who shot a final round total of 195, held a three-stroke advantage with four holes to play before Dent made his charge.

Dent dropped a six-foot putt for birdie on the 18th hole to pull within two strokes. He then put his second shot, a four iron, on the 18th green, a 453-yard par-5. Dent two-putted for birdie.

The 17th hole was another par-5, and both Thompson and Dent reached the green in two shots. Thompson two-putted for birdie to take a three-stroke advantage before Dent rolled in a 30-foot eagle putt to tie.

On the par-4 16th hole, both Thompson and Dent hit fairway drives. Thompson hit a 6-iron 14 feet past the cup, Dent, who also hit a 6-iron, put his ball two feet over the green. "I had too much club," Dent said.

Dent was able to use a putter from the short grass, but he slid his ball six feet past the cup, giving Thompson a chance to win with a birdie. Thompson's putt fell five inches short of the cup, and he easily tapped in his par. The pressure turned to Dent.

"I thought I hit a great first putt," Thompson said. "I thought it was going in and then it never would stop. I just breathed on mine, and it stopped next to the cup."

Dent then pulled his potential playoff-forcing putt to the left, ending his reign at Lafayette Country Club. Thompson, 51, won the tour-ment when Dent missed a 18th hole tied at 17-under-par. Dent reached the green in two shots. He then put his second shot to the cup.

"I didn't hit a good putt," Dent said. "It was nowhere near going in."

"I wasn't confident I could pull it out, but I wasn't convinced he could beat me because he never got ahead of me," said Thompson, who shot a course record-62 on Friday and led for 52 holes. "I was glad we were done with the par-5s."

Dent, one of the longest hitters on the Senior Tour, used his superior driving distance on par fives to make his run.

"I was definitely thinking playoff," Thompson said. "He had the you-know-what scared out of me, but I knew I had it in me to win."

Thompson said the key was the first hole on Friday. He made a 12-foot birdie putt and went on to make nine more birdies on his way to the course record. His confidence snowballed after that.

"That putt kind of opened everything up for me," Thompson said. "I felt good on the practice tee and played well in the pro-am on Wednesday, but that putt really did it for me."

Dent settled for a second place check of $35,000. "I just made too many mental mistakes to overcome Rocky," Dent said. "He played well and he deserved to win. It was his championship. I gave it my best."

Dent dropped a six-foot putt for birdie on the 19th hole to pull within two strokes. He then put his second shot, a four iron, on the 19th green, a 453-yard par-5. Dent two-putted for birdie.

The 17th hole was another par-5, and both Thompson and Dent reached the green in two shots. Thompson two-putted for birdie to take a three-stroke advantage before Dent rolled in a 30-foot eagle putt to tie.

On the par-4 16th hole, both Thompson and Dent hit fairway drives. Thompson hit a 6-iron 14 feet past the cup, Dent, who also hit a 6-iron, put his ball two feet over the green. "I had too much club," Dent said.

Dent was able to use a putter from the short grass, but he slid his ball six feet past the cup, giving Thompson a chance to win with a birdie. Thompson's putt fell five inches short of the cup, and he easily tapped in his par. The pressure turned to Dent.

"I thought I hit a great first putt," Thompson said. "I thought it was going in and then it never would stop. I just breathed on mine, and it stopped next to the cup."

Dent then pulled his potential playoff-forcing putt to the left, ending his reign at Lafayette Country Club. Thompson, 51, won the tour-ment when Dent missed a 18th hole tied at 17-under-par. Dent reached the green in two shots. He then put his second shot to the cup.

"I didn't hit a good putt," Dent said. "It was nowhere near going in."

"Having to get over two hurdles was a hard adjustment to make," Simmons said of his missing starters. "I think Jerry (DeLorenzo) took some chances to pick up the slack and got caught out of the cage a few times."

"Having to get over two hurdles was a hard adjustment to make," Simmons said of his missing starters. "I think Jerry (DeLorenzo) took some chances to pick up the slack and got caught out of the cage a few times."

"John going down was a big factor for us. He's been our anchor the whole year," McCabe said. "But I can't just blame it on the defense. We had trouble in every aspect of the game."

Carolina consistently outplayed and outhustled the Orangemen. The Tar Heels won the faceoff battle 22-14 and picked up 89 groundballs to Syracuse's 61.

"The balls on the floor we just didn't get to," McCabe said. "We didn't play a great game today."

"The bottom line is they wanted it more than us," SU attackman Tom Marechek said. "They just had that little edge."

Dom Fin's goal with 11 seconds left in the first quarter tied the game 3-3, but Carolina scored the first four goals of the second quarter and led 7-3 at the 8:43 mark when Goldstein beat McCabe one-on-one and rifled a shot past DeLorenzo.

Steve Bettinger and Marechek countered for SU. But Goldstein, Ryan Wade and Webster ended the half with goals that put the Tar Heels in control.

The Orangemen closed to within four goals on three occasions in the third quarter, but each time UNC had an answer. Goldstein's third goal gave the Tar Heels a 15-9 lead entering the fourth quarter.

Syracuse made one final run at the Heels, scoring four consecutive goals to cut the lead to 16-13 on a Fin goal with 2:17 remaining. But 10 seconds later, SPEARS scored off a feed from Webster, and the Tar Heels added two more goals to put an end to SU's reign.

"I'm proud of the way my team hung together," Klarman said. "I thought we showed tremendous perseverance. It's a great win for the North Carolina program."

"Anytime you don't lose a game all year, you know they are doing something right," Simmons said. "We are not going to get a silver trophy, but we had a good year. And we'll be back."

Carolina ends SU’s reign, 19-13

Orange lose first Dome playoff game

By ROB GUYETTE
DO Editor

Three years of NCAA Division I lacrosse dominance ended May 29 in the same place it began.

The only team defending national champion Syracuse University was beaten 19-13 by the North Carolina Tar Heels in a national semifinal game in front of 14,544 fans at the Carrier Dome.

The Orangemen, who beat Cornell to win the 1988 title in the Dome, failed to win an unprecedented fourth consecutive championship. The Orangemen had won 3 of their last 5 Dome games and had never lost a playoff game under the inflated white roof (13-0) before Saturday.

Carolina, 16-0, finished its undefeated season with an 18-13 win over Towson State on Monday.

"We didn't do what we had to," said SU coach Roy Simmons Jr. "We didn't get many breaks today. They had a lot of intensity and were well-deserving of the victory."

The top-ranked Tar Heels outscored the Orangemen 7-2 in the second period to take a 10-5 halftime lead. Syracuse, 19-3, could get no closer than three goals in the second half.

"It was everything we needed," said UNC Coach Dave Klarmann. "We were able to beat them in the Dome."

The Orangemen's top eight scorers, including Gilmartin, senior Dennis Goldstein scored four times, were able to post only five goals on the Tar Heels defense.

"We have no reason to hang our heads down low," said UNC coach Roy Simmons Jr. "We'll be back."

"We had a great year for a reloading year," SU coach Roy Simmons Jr. said.

"The Orangemen struggled with continuity early in the season. UNC held Syracuse to three goals — the only time in 63 games it has not reached double figures — in a 10-3 Carolina win on March 9 in Chapel Hill."

"You're going to ask me what the difference was, and I honestly don't know," said UNC first-year coach Dave Klarmann. "It's wonderful to know we have no reason to hang our heads down low."

Cinderella’s glass slipper had everything but the Heel.

Towson State’s improbable run at the NCAA Division I championship fell one game short as the North Carolina Tar Heels capped an undefeated season with an 18-13 win over Towson State in the Carrier Dome.

Towson, ranked 9th in the country today, entered the national semifinal game against a lighthearted South Carolina defense. All 13 of SU’s goals in the semi-final game were scored by non-seniors.

"We played on ‘adrenaline, but there’s only so much adrenaline you can go on," said Towson coach Carl Runk.

"The Tar Heels struggled in their first playoff game, an 11-9 win over Loyola in the quarterfinals. They controlled Syracuse 19-13 on its home field in the semifinals and played the first 30 minutes unopposed, lost junior defender Jamie Archer, whose absence was felt in his absence.

"Continuity early in the season. UNC held Syracuse to three goals — the only time in 63 games it has not reached double figures — in a 10-3 Carolina win on March 9 in Chapel Hill.

"We had a great year for a reloading year," SU coach Roy Simmons Jr. said."

SU lost 14 seniors from 1990’s national championship team but had 1-5-3 this season with an underclassman-dominated lineup. All 13 of SU’s goals in the semi-final game were scored by non-seniors.

"We had a great year for a reloading year," SU coach Roy Simmons Jr. said.

Marshall Street: Welcome to SU's wonderland

By ERIN NEFF
DO editor

The most commonly known establishments, M-Street, as it is more commonly known, is a major source of social activity for Syracuse University students. An interesting mix of townspeople, students, buggars and mounted police are seen every weekend patrolling the area, for their own respective reasons. Small children make money by doing backflips and sidewalk musicians play to crowds for tips. Some of the biggest draws to M-Street are the bars, which number six right now.

Hungry Charlie's, located in the alley at 727 S. Crouse Ave., is a perennial favorite for SU students. Nightly drink specials and a progressive mix of classic rock and non-threatening alternative music help draw a diverse crowd.

Chuck's appeal
Its graffiti-strewn walls, rows of tables and two bars that serve only beer, sangria and wine, give "Chuck's" an informal atmosphere, that appeals to just about anyone.

The more popular features at Chuck's are Wednesday night two-for-one pitchers until 1 a.m. and Friday night Happy Hour with $2.50 pitchers from 3 to 7 p.m. Cover is $2 under 21, but you have to be 19 to get in. Cover is $1 for those over 21, with no cover for ladies on Wednesdays.

Sutter's Mill and Mining Co., located next door at 729 S. Crouse Ave., plays a mix of classic rock and dance music and serves up mixed drinks, food and beer specials.

Various bands play at Sutter's during the year, and the admission policy is $2 under and $1 over.

Harry's, 700 S. Crouse Ave., is tucked beneath CVS and is 21 and over. A tiny room with only a few stools and a bar, Harry's is known for its Greek population.

Two changes are notable on M-Street. The disappearance of Murphy's Pub and the changing of the guard at Buggsy's Back Alley Bar. Buggsy's is currently being renovated as a restaurant and bar called The Olive and The Orange, at 721 S. Crouse Ave.

More than just bars
Besides drinking, the M-Street area is home to numerous restaurants, stores and services. Pizza favorites include Archie's Place, Acropolis and Cosimo's located on Marshall Street, and Pronto and the Varsity on S. Crouse Avenue.

King David's Restaurant, Friendly's, McDonald's and Baskin Robbins are all in the area and the Marshall Square Mall is home to Subway and TCBY.

Clothing stores, Greek shops and two record stores offer sales and good merchandise throughout the year.

For the academic-minded, there's the Syracuse Copy Center in the mall and Kinko's on M-Street. The Orange Book Store in the mall carries textbooks and other school supplies, and the offices of the Stanley Kaplan Educational Center in the mall.

Strong movie season slowly flickers to an end

By ROB OWEN    DO Editor

As Labor Day approaches, the summer movie blockbuster season slowly draws to an end. This summer has seen the release of more than 40 motion pictures, a barrage of movies that has taken in an estimated $1.2 billion for the film industry.

Tri-Star Pictures ranks as the top-grossing studio of the summer, according to Variety, which estimates that the franchise has seen the release of more than 101 Dalmatians, which brought in an amazing $107.8 million; Disney's re-release of The Lion King and the sequel made a come-back this summer. Aside from the Star Wars franchise, the other big hits came as sequels come on strong.

The most-talked about films this summer include Touchstone's What About Bob? which garnered $60 million; Castle Rock's City Slickers, which rounded up $108.7 million and Disney's re-release of 101 Dalmatians, which brought in an amazing $50.6 million; and Touchstone's Another You, which made $40 million.

Some of the surprise hits included Warner Bros.'s Secret Admirer, which made $30 million in ticket sales. The urchins in Home Alone, which sparked riots in some cities when it premiered. It took in more than $72 million at the summer box office. Fear successfully gathered $80 million.

But not all sequels did as well. Bill and Ted's Bogus Journey reaped a less-than-excellent $30 million in ticket sales. The sequels to Pulp Fiction and Child's Play could only muster $21.1 million at the box office, and the castaways of Return to the Blue Lagoon languished with a paltry $2 million take. Other losers included the Bruce Willis action-adventure Hudson Hawk ($1.7 million), Drop Dead Fred ($1.6 million), Dutch ($4.1 million), the Gene Wilder/Richard Pryor comedy Another You ($2.6 million) and Mel Brooks' Life Stinks, which only mused $21.1 million.

Excellent 'Doctor' needs no healing

While The Doctor could easily have been a trite look at a big-shot surgeon who gets a taste of his own medicine, this drama rises triumphantly above its one-sentence premise.

In this Touchstone Pictures release, William Hurt stars as the capable surgeon Nicky MacKee, a specialist in the treatment of heart and lung ailments. But the good doctor is a bit crass, and his bedside manner is not always to his patients' liking.

A patient tells Jack her husband is upset over the scar an operation has left on her chest. Jack responds, "I hate blood," Murray replies. "Just tell him you were a Boy Scout, and you have the staples to prove it."

Jack says with mock astonishment, "One night when Jack gets home from work before the sun has set, Anne calls for Nicky to come say hello to his father. Without hesitation, Nicky runs and picks up the phone."

Jack has had a sore throat for several months and one night coughs up blood. An examination reveals he has a malignant lung ailment, and Jack is forced to become a patient.

From here on, the film tells the story of Jack's redemption as he sees the pain and turmoil patients suffer at the hands of hospitals ruled by the insurance system. Jack is appalled at the time it takes to get admitted, exasperated that he must ride in a wheelchair, aghast that there are no more private rooms and is thunderstruck when he is mistakenly given a barium enema. He is no more private rooms and picks up the phone.

Without hesitation, Nicky runs and picks up the phone. The next day, the film tells the story of Jack's redemption as he sees the pain and turmoil patients suffer at the hands of hospitals ruled by the insurance system.

Down the hall from Spectrum!
Local restaurants deliver more than just pizza

If residence hall food sounds grossly unappealing and you're not up to cooking — don't despair. Phone for your food instead.

Syracuse has several restaurants that will deliver and there's more available than cardboard-crusted pizza or buckets of wings. A critic for The Daily Orange called six local restaurants for delivery to a Syracuse University address. Totals do not include tip.

Tony's Kitchen 472-3376: 11 a.m.-10 p.m., 11 p.m.-2 a.m. It's a great deal for a home-style meal. Tony offers fried chicken, barbecued beef and pork ribs, seafood and sandwiches as dinners for under $10.00. As these include cornbread and stick-to-your-ribs side orders such as potato salad, string beans and french fries, you can hardly go wrong.

A six-piece chicken dinner with corn bread and two side orders costs $8.75, but coupon fliers give a $1 discount. The friendly woman who took the order said they were out of corn bread so we ordered three side orders: Tossed salad, collard greens and macaroni and cheese. She said the food would be delivered in 30 minutes. It arrived a little more than 45 minutes later, but hot, and with a smile. The chicken was nicely spiced though a little greasy, the collard greens were salty and delicious with chunks of ham hock, and the salad was fresh and lightly dressed. But the macaroni and cheese that night was a mess of overcooked macaroni held together with tasteless clumps of cheese.

As a meal, it was hearty and ample for two people — and what a price! Earth alert: The food arrived in styrofoam containers.

Acropolis Pizza 472-4876: 5 p.m.-2 a.m. They deliver more than pizza: calzones, gyros, sandwiches, salads, wings, spaghetti and even frozen yogurt. But since pizza is in the name, this reviewer ordered a small pepperoni and mushroom pizza with a small Greek salad for $10.20.

It was time to eat in only 20 minutes. The Greek salad was excellent with chunks of good feta cheese, tomatoes, black olives and green pepper rings crowding out the iceberg lettuce. The oil and vinegar dressing had just the right zing. The pizza's all-important crust was good and thick, crisp and not too doughy. But the bland, acidic sauce didn't do it justice, and the pepperoni and mushroom toppings were ordinary. It was a quick and satisfying meal on balance and could have been a light dinner for two. Earth alert: The pizza came in cardboard, but the salad was in styrofoam.

12 p.m.-2 a.m.; Monday-Thursday, 5 p.m.-2 a.m.

Featuring wings, sandwiches, subs and salads in addition to pizza, this deli must train all of the other rude people who answer calls for delivery food in Syracuse. Under duress, this reviewer begged for a dozen wings with mild sauce, a small salad and two soft drinks. The total was $8.96.

As promised, the food was delivered in less than 30 minutes, and the charming manners of the delivery driver were much appreciated. All was forgiven when the jumbo-sized wings were found to be perfectly cooked, hot and generously coated in a spicy-sweet tomato sauce. The soft drinks were even cold.

The salad was monumental with tons of grated mozzarella cheese, pickles, peppers, olives, tomatoes and cucumbers burying the iceberg below. It was a meal in itself. It’s worth the risk to give them a call. Earth alert: Both the wings and the salad were delivered in styrofoam containers.

Ling-Ling on the Square 422-2800; Friday and Saturday, 5:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m.; Sunday - Thursday, 5:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m.

The ultimate in delivery food has to be Chinese, and this was a good example. Ling-Ling promises to deliver Szechuan, Mandarin and Cantonese-style food. Hungry and feeling ambitious, this reviewer ordered lemon chicken, stir-fried vegetables, an egg roll and wonton soup for the equally ambitious price of $23.75.

What arrived 40 minutes later, although 25-minute delivery was promised, was a Chinese dinner for three. Everything was in quarter-sized cartons, including the soup. There were rice, fried noodles, three fortune cookies and enough condiments to choke a Chinese horse.

For a starter though, the soup was bland with salty broth and too-chewy noodles. The chicken was an impressive dinner. Considering the amount of food delivered, it was inexpensive, too. Earth alert: Everything arrived in cardboard containers.

Calzones are made to order from any three things on the menu, which includes sausage, mushrooms, olives and mozzarella, but broccoli, ricotta and ham seemed like a good combination. Paired with a small chef salad, no onions, with Russian dressing on the side, $7.96 was reasonable.

After an hour and a half and a call to the kitchen to check on progress, the food finally arrived. The calzone was easily the size of a medium pizza, with a thick, warm crust that was slightly soggy on the bottom from the filling.

The filling was unspiced but comforting, with excellent quality ingredients. The sweet, thinly sliced shreds of ham were especially good. A dab of my own marinara sauce made it complete.

The so-so salad had a bunch of green pepper rings, underripe tomatoes, black olives and pale iceberg lettuce. The incredibly thick and creamy Russian dressing helped it out.

It was edible and inexpensive — the calzone would have served at least two people — but the long wait took the fun out of it. Earth alert: The calzone was in cardboard, but the salad was delivered in styrofoam.

Bonzai Gourmet Pizza and Fast Food 470-3378; Monday - Wednesday, 11 a.m.-3 a.m.; Thursday-Sunday, 11 a.m.-3 a.m.

The gourmet pizza options include everything from artichokes to chicken breast, walnuts and ham. There are 40 in all. Also featured are California-style calzones, wings, sandwiches, salads and Ben and Jerry’s ice cream.

Simple, pleasing pizza seemed like the thing, a small one with bacon and mushrooms. Ten wings in honey-mustard sauce, a tossed salad and maybe some ice cream. The woman who took the order said there wasn’t any of my favorite ice cream flavor left, not apologetically, and that the total came to $17.21.

Everything was uniformly delicious. The wings were hot, sticky with the tangy, sweet sauce and not at all greasy. The salad was large, to say the least, and packed with cucumbers, tomatoes, celery and iceberg lettuce.

The 12-inch pizza was superb. The crust was crisp, tasting of olive oil, and the sauce had plenty of garlic, though it didn’t compete with the bacon and mushrooms. The mushrooms tasted sautéed.

This wasn’t a fancy meal, but each item was done to perfection. There was enough food to satisfy at least two people, so the price was right, too. Earth alert: The pizza was delivered in cardboard.
Summer releases help revive music industry

Alternative bands top summer charts

By BARBARA DAVIES
and BRUCE BUCKLEY
DO Editor
and Staff Writer

The recession left a mark of confusion on the music industry this summer. Concert ticket sales, practically guaranteed to make money in the summer, dropped to record lows, and some independent labels struggled to stay afloat.

Meanwhile, familiar names on the charts (Van Halen, Paula Abdul, Tom Petty) were keeping strange company. Some of the summer's surprise successes were "alternative" acts EP, and Jesus Jones, rap group NWA and country singer Garth Brooks, who crossed over to the pop charts.

No matter what the case, there is, as usual, more music to hear than there is time to listen to. Some of summer's best recordings are reviewed here, to alleviate confusion...

Crowded House: Woodface

The dark, introspective lyrics of Crowded House's last album are bolstered this time with frank phrases of life and death. "I want everything you throw out," sings Neil Finn on "As Sure As I Am," words of wisdom, sensuality and sarcasm.

Crowded House ranks with the best in creating whole albums of perfect pop songs, as in the wonderful "Italian Plastic" and "There Goes God."

Though it's taking the band longer to write these days — it's been three years since the band's last release — the time it took to create this album was obviously well spent.

Siouxsie And The Banshees: Superstition

While the album's first two tracks, "Kiss Them For Me" and "Fear (of the Unknown)," suggest that the original gothic goddess has gone groovy, songs like "Drifter" and "Little Sister" reaffirm that Siouxsie Sioux still has strong ties to her dark past.

Despite its diverse tracks, Superstition flows smoothly from the dancey "Silly Thing" to the primal "Sister Waterfalls" to the delicate and ethereal "Softly." Superstition shows that Siouxsie still has a lot of both beauty and bite after more than 15 years on the scene.

Nitzer Ebb: ASIS

When F'ther Ebb released Showtime last year, it became apparent that the musical element of their predominantly industrial sound was replacing their earlier, minimalist sound. With the release of their most recent EP, ASIS, it is clear that change is complete.

The songs on ASIS are all very full and intricately composed, with less emphasis on repetition and danceability and more on musicality. Songs like "Family Man" and the thrashy "Higher" not only display Nitzer Ebb's newly tapped musical talent, but also show considerable depth in the vocal lines and harmonies.

The result is one of the most unique sounds on the current industrial scene, leaving the listener anxious for the album release in October.

Eurythmics: Greatest Hits

The current twenty-week pastime of reviving childhood trends moves closer to the present with this record. Beginning with "Sweet Dreams (Are Made Of This)," the single that gained the Eurythmics fame back in 1983, this compilation marks the return of new wave.

But this collection, like the band, extends itself beyond the confines of early '80s synthesizer pop. The collection moves closer to the pre-punk of the early 1970s.

Midway games seem unfair

The midway has its share of games that require a little luck, skill, or strategy, but it's not all about fairness. Some games seem to favor the skilled players while others seem to be rigged in favor of the fairgoers. But even when the odds are against you, there's always the chance to win a prize or two. And who knows—maybe you'll even win a new perspective on life.

Young farmer prizes pigs

In the world of agriculture, pigs are a valuable commodity. They provide meat, bacon, ham, and other pork products that are enjoyed by many. But for some farmers, pigs are more than just a source of food. They are a source of pride and a symbol of hard work.

Fairgoers find slice of America

When you think of the fair, you might think of cotton candy, carousels, and clowns. But there's more to the fair than just the rides and games. There's also the food. From fried dough to fried fish, the fair offers a taste of the American way of life.

In case you're not sure what to do at the fair, here are some tips to help you make the most of your visit:

1. Try the food. From fried dough to fried fish, the fair offers a taste of the American way of life.
2. Go on the rides. From the Ferris wheel to the carousel, the fair has something for everyone.
3. Watch the clowns and clowns. From the juggling to the magic tricks, the fair has some hilarious entertainment.
4. Visit the livestock buildings. From the swine to the steers, the fair has a variety of animals on display.
5. Enjoy the music. From the fairground bands to the country music stages, the fair has some great live entertainment.

So the next time you're at the fair, remember to enjoy the food, rides, and entertainment. And don't forget to take some time to appreciate the hard work and dedication that goes into raising the animals that are on display.

The Innocence Mission: Umbrellas

Hailing from pastoral central Pennsylvania, the Innocence Mission make music that exactly fits their surroundings.

Lyrics that could stand alone as poetry and shimmering guitars make this album one of the summer's most "summery".

Like 10,000 Maniacs before them, the Innocence Mission create nostalgic songs, describing 1960s housewives, 19th century Parisian painters and Victorian umbrellas.

Unlike the Maniacs' Natalie Merchant, though, Mission vocalist Karen Peris refuses to step up on a soapbox. She prefers to share her details rather than preach them.

On this album, the Innocence Mission creates songs that sound as much a part of summer traditions as June weddings, fireworks, hammocks and lemonade.

Vinx: Rooms In My Father's House

Singer-songwriter Vinx builds his songs of a cappella melodies and flares them out with a variety of traditional African percussive instruments, making Rooms... one of this summer's most distinctive albums.

Four percussionists and one singer back Vinx on the record, which also features guest artists Branford Marsalis, Herbie Hancock and Sting.

Standout tracks include: "My TV" (I ain't got nobody to come home to but you, goos the chorus); "I'll Give My All To You," an a cappella duet between Vinx and backup vocalist Mark Smith, and the album's first single, and "Temporary Love," which would be equally at home on the urban radio or VH-1.

— R.T.

Meat Puppets: Forgotten Places

Arizona's garage rock trio return to fine form with their second major-label release since leaving independent label SST several years ago.

After their last album's ventures into heavy metal territory, the Puppets retain some of the edge, but temper it with trademark sounds: country-ish twang ("That's How It Goes") and hypervactive rhythms ("Popskull"). "Nail It Down" has a classic rock feel, and "Sam" sails along on a current of superfant lyrics.

An expanded range of songwriting skills and fuller sound set this album apart from almost all of their previous efforts.

Despite the title, Forgotten Places is listener friendly, and should draw new fans as well as please the old.

— B.D.

Anthrax: Attack Of The Killer B's

Anthrax fans won't want to avoid these "Killer B's"—killer B-sides, that is.

Although it has been nearly a year since the release of their last album, it is apparent that the members of Anthrax need more time to let their hair down before getting serious about a new album.

Their most recent release is a collection of Anthrax's goofiest moments during the past three-and-a-half years. The album appropriately includes covers of "Milk" and "Chromatic Death" from the hilarious thrash band Stormtroopers Of Death, which included Anthrax members Charlie Bannette and Scott Ian, as well as a thrash version of Public Enemy's "Bring The Noise" featuring both Chuck D and Scott Ian on vocals.

Killer B's also contains a couple of live Anthrax cuts and other goofy originals including a 1991, super-acid-house remix of "I'm The Man" (a guaranteed hit at your friendly neighborhood metal/acid club). This album is sure to please any listener with a good sense of humor and a strong neck.

Mahalia Jackson: Gospels, Spirituals & Hymns
The label on the cover of this boxed set calls Mahalia Jackson "The World's Greatest Gospel Singer," but given the songs inside, the label is almost unnecessary.

Compiling a legacy of songs from 1954 to 1969, this two-disc set represents a cross-section of all variations of gospel. "Walk Over God's Heaven" gives Jackson a musical backdrop of swing. "Come On Children, Let's Sing" places Jackson in a chair. And her previously unreleased version of the 19th Century hymn "What A Friend We Have In Jesus" shows her remarkable voice bringing new life to a standard song.

Those listeners new to gospel would do well to start with a set such as this, especially considering the written history that accompanies it. Gospel fans will no doubt welcome this set as an addition to their collections.

Home video release offers sex, murder, intrigue

Although star Jeremy Irons took home an Academy Award for his portrayal of Claus von Bulow, not many people have seen the film Reversal of Fortune, which was recently released by Warner Home Video. While Kevin Costner's Dances With Wolves garnered the most attention at this year's Oscars, Reversal of Fortune was by far the best film of 1990. The story has every element necessary to make it a hit: sex, murder, intrigue and a courtroom battle, yet the film played in few theaters, did little at the box office and wasn't even nominated for best picture.

Based on the Alan Dershowitz's novel, Irons stars as real-life millionaire von Bulow who may or may not have injected his wife Sunny (Glenn Close) with a coma-causing dose of insulin. Lawyer Alan Dershowitz, portrayed by Ron Silver, takes on the defense of the icy European aristocrat and attempts to turn Claus' first conviction and disproved the evidence that he attempted to murder his wife.

Many scenes are shown from different points of view in a battle that pits von Bulow against his estranged stepson, Alexander von Auersberg (Sarah Fearon), and Sunny's maid Maria (Utta Hagen). Sunny's family claims Claus was out to get rid of Sunny so he could move in with his lover, actress Alexandra Isles, played by an uncredited Julie Hagerty.

Dynamic Close

As Sunny, Close narrates the film, asking of Claus, "Is he the devil? If so, can the devil get justice? And all this legal activity, is it in Satan's service?"

Although Claus appears in few scenes, she is dynamic as the drug-addicted heiress who was bitterly unhappy with her life. Passed over so many times for an Oscar, Close wasn't even nominated for this brief, but excellent, performance.

However, Irons did receive an Oscar for his part as the unemotional Claus. Irons plays the character with just the right amount of coldness tempered with shining glimpses of wit. When he goes to a restaurant, he tells Dershowitz that after all the "unpleasantness," he now gets the best table in the house. After the waiter refers to him as Dr. von Bulow, he deadpans, "Two injections of insulin and I'm already a doctor."

Looking at a lawyer

Reversal of Fortune is also a look at the legal process and Dershowitz's approach to the case. Dershowitz gathers his brightest students to help work on the case and has an on-again, off-again romance with ex-girlfriend Sarah (Annabella Sciorra). While Silver's performance as the jumpy Dershowitz may get on viewer's nerves, it remains a portrayal rather than a caricature. The few times von Bulow interacts with the law students, they seem to treat him in a rude manner that lacks realism. But he attempts to charm them nonetheless with jokes. "What do you give a wife who has everything?" Claus asks. "An injection of insulin." Director Barbet Schroeder, who was nominated for an Academy Award for this film, moves the film along at a leisurely pace. It may seem slow at points, but the acting from Irons, Silver and Close is so believable that your interest shouldn't wane. Reversal of Fortune doesn't give a definitive conclusion as to Claus's guilt or innocence. However, it is based on the novel by Dershowitz, so it is weighted toward his innocence.

But as a comatose Sunny assures us, "When you get where I am, you will know the rest."
Pig

"You have to know about breeding, diseases, market prices, everything," Keems says, adding 4-H competitors are not required to know about butchering.

These piggies go to market
At the end of the competition, Keems will sell the hogs to Hatfield Farms in Pennsylvania. Keems' younger sister Sandy shows up by the bleachers during the weigh-in. Sandy, 15, also has two pigs at the fair, and the sisters confer a moment on the pigs they've seen so far at the fair. Then the conversation turns to the voice of the woman operating the public address system. "She's nice but she's little loud," Sandy says, laughing.

Kristin was also the proud winner of a plastic Syracuse University mug and a small plate that had an unrecognizable stain on top, and which didn't make it back with our pile of loot. She won these by hinged mouth for hanging messages or biting people's posterior.

I was empty-handed and knew I would never get the necessary astronomical score at Skee Ball or pop a balloon with a dart. The guy guessing weight and age more expensive," Sandy says, her eyes widening.

It's fun to be away from the 115-acre farm they call home. Donna says, and both girls enjoy staying in the dorms in the Youth Building. "It hasn't been real busy yet," Donna says. "But after today, we'll have a lot to do."

Sunday's schedule includes the tests on information from breeding to market prices. On Monday, the actual competition would win if I tried to stump him for $2.

So, I walked over to the fortune-telling booth to see what else was going on in my life — since winning prizes clearly wasn't.

But, the attendant wasn't around, and I noticed I didn't have the $2 for my electronic reading. I waited for awhile — delusions of grandeur of barking out to fair-goers on the loud speaker, and then looked behind the counter to see if there was any way I could get the machine to go on my own.

No luck, but I did discover a program for the fair — one with a $2 price written on the cover. So, with the technique learned by watching 3-year-old boys at lily ponds, | picked it up with my hands and walked away. You could probably classify that as petit larceny, but hey, I didn't leave empty handed.

Students struck on Waverly Ave.

By ROY S. CUTTERMAN and JODI LAMAGNA
DO Editors

Two Syracuse University students were hit by a car last night as they crossed the street at the intersection of Waverly and Walnut avenues.

The women, both 20, suffered unspecified head and leg injuries after being hit at about 8:30 p.m., according to Syracuse Police Officer Jim Clark.

One victim was taken to Upstate Medical Center where she was listed in stable condition. The other was taken to Crouse Irving Memorial Hospital and was listed in fair to stable condition.

"It doesn't look like it's life-threatening," Clark said.

Police and hospital officials would not release the victims' names, pending notification of relatives.

A 26-year-old man from Jamesville who attends Onondaga Community College drove the car. Police at the scene said alcohol was not a factor and no charges were filed.

Several passers-by witnessed the accident.

Freshman Laura Zauderer said she saw the two women attempting to cross Waverly.

She said the two crossed the road to the yellow stripes and waited for the other side of traffic to clear.

"A Bronco stopped in the inside travel lane to let them cross the road," she said. As the students crossed the last travel lane, near Walnut Park, a Mercury station wagon hit them both.

SU student John Chasse said he also saw the accident.

"I heard screeching, a real long screeching," he said. "Then, I heard the bang and saw the girl rolling across the street."

At that point, Chasse said he pushed a blue light. "It took security a long time to respond," he said. "Like about 10 minutes."

Opinions differ on road changes

By PAULA CHRISTIAN
DO Staff Writer

When most students left for the summer, the road reconstruction project was only in its beginning phases.

Now, the finished product has left many pedestrians fearing the roads on which they walk.

Last night, two Syracuse University students were hit by a car as they crossed the street at the intersection of Waverly and Walnut Avenues.

"Cars have been screeching all over campus all week," he said. "There are no stop signs, no traffic lights, nothing to prevent cars from going crazy."

Earlier in the week, many returning to SU expressed mixed reactions to the changes.

"I've found that it is easier to drive now after the reconstruction," said SU junior Tina Sansone. "But I am much more nervous to cross the street because the driving traffic doesn't seem to consider pedestrians."

Another SU junior, Stephanie May, agreed. "I think it is a good idea blocking off the traffic on the main campus," she said. "I do not really notice a difference since there are so many more cars now," she said.

Steve Chirello, SU director of community relations, agreed that a complex problem existed during this time hours.

"But down here (the intersection of Waverly and Comstock avenues) it is very difficult to cross because there are so many more cars now," he said.

SU students cross the recently widened Waverly Ave. Tuesday afternoon. The attempt to alleviate traffic problems on campus seems to have caused greater difficulties in crossing for pedestrians.

During this two-year period the city will monitor the reconstruction plan, said Harvey K. West, president of facilities administration.

If the plan does not work, the city reserves the right to reclaim the roads as it refunds the plan's cost to the university, he said.

Some students are enthusiastic about the changes.

SU purchases DeWitt home for former chancellor Eggers

By ERIN NEFF
DO Editor

Even though Melvin A. Eggers retired as Chancellor and President of Syracuse University on Aug. 19, SU has used cash assets from tuition and other revenue to make sure he won't be left out in the cold.

The university has purchased a $182,500 home in DeWitt for Eggers and his wife Mildred. The house, a two-bedroom ranch home at 604 Scott Ave., in DeWitt, was purchased June 10 with money from the university's plant fund, Hill said.

SU's director of University relations, agreed that a complex problem existed because of the high number of drivers in the university area.

"No plan is perfect but through studying it over the two-year trial period we will be able to fine tune it," he said.

Emeritae housing policy

"Our policy in practice provides for a residence being made available to chancellors emeriti," he said. "These are university assets. (Former chancellors) may live there but may not own the facility."

The university also gave a parting gift to William P. Ibley when he retired in 1971 — a home at 107 Windsor PI. in Syracuse.

Hill said this type of purchase is standard procedure for SU, and the title of the home will remain in the university's name.

National
SATs scores show few gains, many declines
General scores on both the verbal and math sections of the Scholastic Aptitude Test showed record declines in 1991.

The average math score dropped for the first time since 1960, from 476 to 474.

The average verbal score dropped two points to 452 — the lowest level ever.

Women's average verbal scores dropped one point, while men's plummeted three points.

The average verbal and math scores for Puerto Rican and Asian American students show increases while those of other ethnic minorities declined.

Some educators saw the falling scores as signaling the deteriorating quality of the nation's school system, while others attributed the changes to the Educational Testing Service's effort to make the SAT more democratic and fairer to ethnic minority students.

Latinos hit hardest by rising poverty levels

The number of Latino-American children living in poverty rose by more than 1 million during the 1980s, according to Census Bureau Figures.

The Children's Defense Fund, a non-profit advocacy group that analyzes the figures, said that poverty rates increased during the last decade for all of the nation's ethnic minority groups, but Latinos suffered the fastest-growing poverty level.

According to the Washington D.C.-based Fund, the number of Hispanic-

American children in poverty rose 29 percent last decade.

The number of whites in poverty rose 25 percent between 1979 and 1989, and the number of African-Americans in poverty rose 8 percent.

State
Four face expulsion in St. John's sex case
A St. John's University disciplinary committee recommended Monday that three students who sexually assaulted a female student be expelled, even though they were acquitted of criminal charges.

The committee, comprised of faculty members and students, also recommended the expulsion of another student who said he had joined in abusing the woman but was not prosecuted in return for testifying.

The panel said the student was guilty of "conduct adversely affecting his suitability as a member of the academic community of St. John's."

A final decision on the four men's expulsions will be made by the university's president, Rev. Donald J. Harrington.

The three defendants were acquitted last month on sodomy and other criminal charges.

Young proposes budget
Syracuse Mayor Tom Young unveiled a proposed 1992 budget. Monday which includes utility and property tax hikes.

The city has been plagued by declining state aid and drooping sales tax revenues.

The proposed 1992 budget includes a total net appropriation of $303.1 million. Including state aid it would be $418.5 million for the school district.

The Common Council will begin its budget review next week. It must come up with a spending plan by Oct. 15.

Young administration officials said raising the utility tax from 1 to 3 percent will help redistribute the city's tax burden to the 50 percent that is exempt from property taxes, including Syracuse University.

The tax applies to Niagara Mohawk and telephone bills and must be approved by the state legislature.

Graduate school wins awards

The Syracuse University Graduate School has been named winner of the annual Petronius Award for Excellence in Graduate Admissions for Minority Students.

The award, sponsored by Peterson's Guides and presented by the National Association of Graduate Admissions Professionals (NAGAP), was given in recognition of the graduate school's success in stimulating increased enrollment of graduate students from underrepresented groups and in providing an example of excesional practices.

Arts and sciences teachers garner awards
Several SU professors received awards at the end of last semester.

Felicitas Nussbaum, professor of English and textual studies, received a Guggenheim Fellowship for 1991. The award will support her study of "English Narratives of Maternity, Sexuality and Empire, 1740-92."

Aiyalam Balachandran, a physics professor, and Jerry Kelly, economics professor, are co-recipients of the 1990-91 William Wasserstrom Prize for Outstanding Graduate Teaching.

The award is given annually to full-time faculty members who, in the opinon of their colleagues, best exemplify the following qualities: a distinguished advising; whose work is characterized by its originality and distinctive character, an outstanding record of effective teaching; and whose students are participate in the intellectual and institutional life of the university, the city and the community.

Balachandran was honored for the outstanding teaching and instruction he gives to his students.

New chaplain seeks students for interfaith communication

By KATHERINE DROUIN

Syracuse University's new Catholic chaplain is no stranger to press coverage or new challenges.

Father James Lang served for 10 years as chaplain for the State University of New York at Oswego. He left his post to succeed Monsignor Charles Borghogni, who retired last spring after 28 years as chaplain.

Lang in planning both physical and spiritual restructuring of the Alibrandi Catholic Center, including everything from lowering the height of the altar to placing Adam and Eve signs on the women's and men's bathrooms.

"I want the students to be able to live the life of Jesus," he said. "It's there. It's us. And we're living it." Lang says he does not plan to be a block-stalker, Lang wants to increase dialogue between faiths at SU.

Chaplain for 8,000

"I was the only chaplain for 8,000 students at Oswego," he said. "Twenty percent were Jews. I had to let go of one ladder rung to get to another."

"Part of what the university is about is challenging your beliefs," he said. "You have to let go of one ladder rung to get to another."

Lang plans to carry out some of the programs he had at Oswego, such as his "demographic project," which he fielded questions from dorm residents.

"I always knew that someday I would be the chaplain of SU," said Lang, who was born in Syracuse's north side and raised in Baldwinsville.

Emmy Awards out-Fox censors

It's a good thing the Emmys were on Fox this year. Otherwise, the censors would have been working overtime.

From lead actress in a comedy series winner Kirstie Alley's thanks to her husband for "giving her the big one" for the past eight years to presenter Gilbert Gottfried's five minute monologue on masturbation, Sunday night's telecast of the 43rd Annual Emmy Awards was decidedly PG-13 in nature.

The ceremony's rousing start held promise that the program would be entertaining — not long and cumbersome. And for the most part, it was an enjoyable affair.

Awaaiter James Earl Jones, who later won an Emmy for lead actor in a drama series for Gabriel's Fire and another for supporting actor in a miniseries (TNT's Heatwave), began the evening ranting about excellence in television as only he can in his strong dramatic voice. Then he got a pie in his face as the first tribute to comedy, the theme of this year's Emmys. That pie would later come back to haunt the Emmy producers as star after star slipped on the pie remains.

Presenter Crystal Bernard was one of the victims, slipping as she walked on stage. Luckily co-presenter Alan Thicke broke her fall. "She said she wanted to do that as part of the tribute to comedy," Thicke joked.

Cheers was named best comedy series and co-star Bebe Neuwirth, who plays Lilith, picked up her second Emmy for best supporting actress in a comedy series. Cheers co-creator James Burrows also won for comedy directing.

Writer Gary Donzig was awarded for a Murphy Brown episode.

In a segment Marilu Henner presented the Emmy for lead actor in a comedy to her TV husband Burt Reynolds of Evening Side.

"I've never been nominated for anything, and I've sure as hell never won anything," Reynolds said when accepting his award. "Well, I won a few People's Choice Awards."

The now-cancelled Thirtysomething was also lauded, winning a best lead actress in a drama award for a teary Patricia Wettig, who plays Nancy. Timothy Busfield (Elliot) won for supporting actor in a drama.

Thomas Carter won the best directing award for another has-been, Equal Justice. Other canceled series up for Emmys included Twin Peaks and China Beach. Neither took any trophies.

Lauding 'L.A. Law'

L.A. Law won best drama again this year. It also picked up honors for drama writing and directing.

Jonathan Winters was named best supporting actor in a comedy for ABC's mid-season replacement series Davis Rules, and Gabriel's Fire co-star Madge Sinclair was named outstanding supporting actress in a drama series.

Best mini-series/special honors went to ABC's Separate but Equal; the miniseries directing Emmy was given to Brian Gibson for HBO's The Josephine Baker Story. Gibson's wife, actress Lynn Whitfield, was a winner for best actress in a miniseries.

Ruby Dee won in the supporting miniseries actress category for her role in Hallmark Hall of Fame Decoration Day, and John Gishgud won lead actor in a miniseries for Masterpiece Theater's Summer's Lease.

The 43rd Annual Academy Awards telecast picked up three Emmys and beat Fox's In Living Color as best variety or music program.

Actor James Earl Jones won two Emmys at the television awards ceremony Sunday night. He was named best lead actor in ABC's drama series Gabriel's Fire and outstanding supporting actor in a miniseries for his role in TNT's Heatwave.

The hosts of this year's event were Jamie Lee Curtis, Dennis Miller and Jerry Seinfeld. Curtis joked about people watching award shows to ridicule what the stars were wearing, while Miller poked fun at the Reagan family. "Ron Reagan has a new show," Miller said. "I hope you all watch it, because we know what happens when a Reagan can't make it in entertainment."

While Curtis and Miller were great hosts, Seinfeld's low-key humor was too subdued for the awards show. Though it works well on his series, it slowed the pace of the ceremony.

Most of the presenters were funny, too. Burt Reynolds and Libba, Loni Anderson, humorously agonized over his demotion from film to television. "Please excuse him," Anderson said. "He's happy just to be working."

However, Gilbert Gottfried was his usual obnoxious self. The tribute to the late Michael Landon and the induction of Desi Arnaz, Leonard Bernstein, James Garner, Mike Wallace, Danny Thomas and I Love Lucy into the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Hall of Fame were well done and not com-a-inducing.

One of the best award shows in years, this year's Emmy telecast should be awarded an Emmy itself.

Be careful out there

Originally this editorial began with the words, "Be careful. At 7:30 a.m. an hour after it was written, at 8:30 p.m., the current traffic situation at Syracuse University had brought two women closer to that end. This misfortune should shake some sense into those who need it — namely, the university.

The road in question was owned but that a car accident could easily happen on any other street. It is the university's responsibility to make safe the streets we all encounter. Instead, the university treats the new road system as if it were a Matchbox car racetrack. It's time to own up to real responsibilities.

When accidents happen, people want to know one thing: Who is to blame? Was the driver going too fast? He couldn't possibly know. There are no speed limit signs.

Did the women cross at an inappropriate time? We lack this information all. The only thing we can say is that it was a sunny day.

Since university roads were re-routed this summer in favor of creating a natural quadrangle, crossing campus streets has become comparable to playing the video game Frogger. In Frogger, one has to maneuver a frog across streets filled with cars. Sometimes, either the driver or the pedestrian lacks agility, and the result is a dead-frog. 'The same holds true for the SU traffic scenario, where we're dealing with student lives. During the past two years, people have been killed in campus accidents. Let's not make it three.

Four lanes of traffic with no stop signs, blinking lights or traffic lights inevitably leads to injury and perhaps even death. Common sense tells us this university could tell the university the same thing.

When drivers see four lanes of traffic, the inclination to cut loose to freeway speeds seems large. Such tendencies could be aborted, however, if the university would take the necessary precautions. While the reconstruction of university roads seemed a novel idea, the execution of this plan leaves much to be desired. This backhand treatment seems pointed to ensure pedestrian safety must now rectify the reconstructive oversights and encourage the installation of speed bumps and speed limit signs.

At this point, the traffic conditions on the corners of Comstock Avenue at Waverly and University avenues are unacceptable and treacherous. Further complicating the problem is the fact that once one-way streets such as Comstock, S. Crouse and Euclid avenues now accommodate two-way traffic. Students, accustomed to looking one, not two ways before crossing, must navigate the two-way traffic. The traffic rules their parents prescribed for them as youngsters. Drivers must drive as if other lives depend on it, because they do.

Currently, student survival rests on safety. Perhaps the motto most applicable here comes from Robert Fulghum, author of All I Really Need To Know I Learned In Kindergarten. He writes, "When you go out into the world watch out for traffic, hold hands and stick together. And then remember the Dick and Jane books and the first word you learned -- the biggest word of all -- LOOK.

This message doubles for pedestrians and drivers.

Protest students' liberties

To the editor:

I submitted a letter to The Daily Orange criticizing aspects of the then-new Syracuse Student Code of Student Conduct. In the intervening months, several substantial and important revisions of that code have been introduced. Most notably, the harassment clause of the code has been revised to exclude any suspect "categories" of speech. This revision is fundamentally important to the protection of free expression on this campus. I would, therefore, like to congratulate the Task Force on Student Rights and Responsibility for making some of the important changes necessary to protect civil liberties on campus.

At the same time, I must warn all members of the university administration that the university administration cannot say the revisions established by the Statement of Student Rights and Responsibilities are sufficient. Nor, indeed, has the university continued its policy of encouraging open expression, of restriction of assembly rights, and of practicing reverse racism. Perhaps best-known among these violations are the recent police action against activist Pat Chang, and the university's informal rule regarding the use of homosexual T-shirts at Alpha Chi Rho. In a recent D.O. article, Dean of Student Relations Edward Golden defended the university's low-key response to the homosexual T-shirts by suggesting that the T-shirt "didn't pass the clear and present danger test," because it did not cause any immediate breach of the peace. Despite this suggestion, the university did act to prohibit Alpha Chi Rho members from wearing the T-shirts. In a letter to Steel Hall with Deen Golden, an administrative group of protesters that fraternity members had been warned not to wear the shirts and would be warned again.

The university also struck a blow to freedom of speech when "We Charged" was disciplined for her alleged involvement with the "Phi Delt fliers," which accuses some Phi Delta fraternity of gang rape. Ms. Chang was found guilty of harassment, despite Jean Golden's allegation that in this case a fraternity and an individual have been unjustly labeled "gang rapists."

Quite clear, Golden's allegation was that of libel, not harassment. And in light of this, the administration and comment on the Alpha Chi Rho T-shirts, one cannot help but wonder how the "Phi Delt fliers" could possibly have passed the "clear and present danger test" described by Golden.

The fact of the matter is that the university administration has demonstrated a continual pattern of ignoring published student concerns whenever it chooses. As a result, students should not be satisfied until the university demonstrates a commitment to honoring the fundamental student rights established by its own regulations. We all must work to protect our basic rights.

Toward this end, efforts are underway to establish a civil liberties advocacy group at Syracuse University, to be known as the Syracuse University Civil Liberties Union, or S.U.C.L.U. The group will be open to all members of the university community, and individual or group concerns may contact me by phone (474-6870) or by mail (greenly 1 top, second floor) for more information.

SU involvement vital

To the editor:

On behalf of the executive staff of the Student Government Association, I extend a warm welcome to you each, both new and returning students. The summer months have been productive ones for the Office of Student Programs and student organizations. Various student leaders worked effectively together on coordinating agendas and planning programming for the opening weeks of the fall semester.

I encourage you each to become actively involved in campus life and your student body. During the opening few weeks, student organizations actively seek your membership and involvement. The Student Organization Fair on Friday, August 30, in front of Schine is an avenue to learn more about the activities of your fellow students. Become an active consumer of your own education.

University Union, the Student Affairs Office, the Student Government Association, the Graduate Council, and the N.C.S.P., the Residence Hall Association and the Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Student Association will co-sponsor the annual Autumn Street Festival on Saturday, August 31. Student organizations and local vendors will have booths welcoming all students to Syracuse University. Live bands begin the festival at noon outside the Schine Student Center.

A student organization,

Students Concerned About Rape Education (S.C.A. R.E.D.), will have its annual anti-rape rally on Thursday, August 29, from 11:30-2:30 on the steps of Hendrick Chavez.

Administrators, community leaders and fellow student organizations are active participants in this rally in an attempt to express concern for the issue. Your support and understanding of how this issue affects each of our lives is vital.

The Student Government Association serves as an umbrella organization for over 300 student organizations. A vital component of your college education, interaction with your fellow students. Become an integral part of student life on campus. Your student organization on campus is only as strong as your involvement. Join your fellow students on campus in making proactive positive change in your own community.

The Eggers’ new home at 604 Scott Ave. in DeWitt is a parting gift from Syracuse University.

The home, purchased from Sheldon Frank, is located on the corner of Scott Avenue and Bradford Drive.

After the SU Board of Trustees gave its approval for the purchase of the home, the Eggers’ selected the house, Hill said.

The Eggers’ home in DeWitt has a study, walk-out to the lower level and a garage. “It is typical of ranch homes in that neighborhood,” Hill said.

The purchase of his new home comes at a time of shortfall in revenue for the university. Facing lower enrollment due to the national decline in the number of high school graduates, an estimated $3 million reduction in state funding and a shortfall of revenue from the Division of International Programs Abroad, the university made cuts in some programs to balance the budget.

On March 13, 1991, the Senate Committee on Budget and Fiscal Affairs recommended a 1991-92 pro forma budget that balanced at $452.1 million, according to a statement released at that time from Sandi Mulconry, director of SU News Services.
Summer construction changes road access

By PAUL CHRISTIAN

Students returning to the Syracuse University campus are finding several roads widened and closed off, as well as new traffic patterns resulting from a recently completed reconstruction plan.

"The whole idea behind the construction plan was to alleviate vehicle and student congestion on University Place," said Steve Chirello, director of community relations at SUNY. The most notable change was the conversion of College Place and sections of Comstock, South Crouse, and Euclid avenues to two-way streets, Chirello said.

University and College places have been changed to limited access streets.

Booths will control traffic flow, limiting it to emergency vehicles, shuttle buses, and faculty and students with valid parking permits, Chirello said.

The limited access will be in effect during normal business hours from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. while the university is in session, he said. These restrictions will also apply during Carrier Dome events.

Getting used to driving

"Students driving will have to go through the same acclimation process as the local residents had to," he said. "It will definitely take some time to get used to all the changes."

To insure that the plan follows its original design, parking or standing is prohibited on the improved Waverly and Comstock avenues, Chirello said.

"Students shouldn't be surprised to find tickets on their cars since area police and the university will be working together to vigorously enforce these rules," Chirello said.

"Waverly and Comstock avenues have been widened into a four lane street and it is essential to have those lanes open for the free flow of traffic," he said.

In response to concerns for pedestrian safety, a city planning commission has appointed a task force comprised of city police, fire officials, university traffic departments and neighborhood representation, Chirello said.

The task force will study the effects of the reconstruction plan over the next two years and will recommend any changes that need to be made, he said.

"We are working with the city to address the pedestrian crossing situation and we expect to have a list of recommendations as early as next week," he said.

Campus fest features food, music, games

DO Staff Report

The Schine Student Center teams up with MarketSource Corp. for the second straight year to welcome students back to school with Campus Fest, a two-day event beginning today.

Campus Fest, which takes place from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Schine, features free food, games, product samples and entertainment provided by WUSB-FM.

Students will have the opportunity to win a semester's supply of Pringles potato chips, try out IBM computers and subscribe to Newsweek at a special discount.

They can also win promotional merchandise such as baseball hats, floral displays, clothing and backpacks at games including basketball and bean bag tossing.

"This is a tremendous way to start the year," says Toby Peters of the Schine Center. "We enjoy giving Syracuse students such a hearty 'welcome back.'"

TRAFFIC

"It was so much easier to move into my dorm this year and I give the whole plan a thumbs up," said sophomore Jen Claussen.

"I don't think it has been very difficult to cross the street and I don't anticipate any problems," said junior Paul Kalamiris.

DO Editors Roy S. Guterman and Jodi Lamagna contributed to this article.

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for some very strong reasons.

"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable has powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Rahmoyea, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.

"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of math education at North Carolina State University.

So go check out the HP calculator line at your college bookstore or HP retailer. You'll agree there's no faster relief from the pain of tough problems. HP calculators. The best for your success.

CES plans fall job fair to stimulate career ideas

Career Exploration Services (CES) has planned several programs and activities aimed at providing career and major exploration and advising services for undergraduates in the College of Arts and Sciences.

CES also offers pre-law advising for students enrolled in any of the Syracuse University's schools and colleges.

An Arts and Sciences student's guide to the career fair will be presented Sept. 25 at 7 p.m. in Room 206, Hall of Languages. This session will feature a review of employers who will be attending the career fair, along with strategies for getting the most from the fair.

The career fair will be Oct. 3 from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. in Goldstein Auditorium in the Schine Student Center.

More than 150 employers will be on hand to speak with students of all class years about present and future career opportunities. The career fair is sponsored by the Placement Center and the schools and colleges of SU.

Law/MBA Day will take place Oct. 7 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Schine Student Center. This informal gathering will give students and opportunity to speak with representatives from 60 law schools and 30 graduate business programs. Law/MBA Day is co-sponsored by the SU Placement Center.

Focus on graduate school Career nights focusing on graduate school planning will be held during the semester for juniors and seniors. The senior career night, dealing with the job search and life after SU, will take place Sept. 24 at 7 p.m. in Room 207, Hall of Languages.

The junior career night advises students on adding practical experience to their education and making the most of their senior year. It will be Nov. 5 at 7 p.m. in Room 207, Hall of Languages.

Major decision groups are open to sophomores and juniors who need to declare their majors in the fall semester. Each group is limited to 10 students. Meeting once a week for four weeks, participants learn self-assessment and decision-making strategies and become acquainted with majors and career options. There will be four groups this semester. A schedule is available in Room 329, Hall of Languages.

Other services provided by CES include individual and group counseling, programs and seminars, access to the SIGI PLUS computerized career information system and a wide variety of publications and resources.

For further information on any of these programs, stop by Career Exploration Services, 329 Hall of Languages, or call 443-7077.

• Andre Agassi, best known for his performance as the Cowardly Lion in the movie "The Wizard of Oz" turned in a pitiful show in Monday's opening round of the U.S. Open.
Agassi, who was the tournament's No. 8 seed, was ousted in straight sets by Aaron Krickstein, 7-5, 7-6 (7-3), 6-2.
Agassi wore black and red, fitting attire for a quick but painful death.
Agassi, however, was not alone in his quick demise as two other ranked players also were upset.
No. 13 Andrei Cherkasov lost a straight set decision to Jonas Svensson, and No. 19 Petr Korda was defeated by Arnaud Boetsch, 6-1, 6-3, 3-6, 6-2.
• Kansas City Royals' ace Bret Saberhagen won the Major League's seventh no-hitter Monday night when he blanked the Chicago White Sox, 7-0.
Saberhagen, who won the Cy Young Award in 1985 and 1988, nearly lost his bid for the no-no when Chicago right fielder Dan Pasqua scathed a line drive into the left center alley in the fifth inning. Left fielder Kirk Gibson, never known for his defensive prowess, leaped for the ball, only to have it skip off the top of his glove.
Pasqua reached second and the ball was initially ruled a hit, but after reviewing several replays the official scorer ruled the play a two-base error.
• Multi-sport stud Bo Jackson had two hits in four plate appearances for the Chicago White Sox' AA team Birmingham Barons on Monday night.
Jackson is working his way back to the major leagues after suffering a hip pointer injury in a playoff game with the Los Angeles Dodgers last winter.
• The Syracuse University track team will hold a meeting for anyone interested in trying out for the squad.
The meeting will be held Tuesday, Sept. 9 at 4 p.m. at Manley Field House.
• Track star extraordinaire Jackie Joyner-Kersee was forced out of competition in the World Track and Field Championships on Monday after she strained her right hamstring while leading the 200 meters of the heptathlon.

Patriots pick up Carpenter

By DAVE BUSCEMA
DC Editor

Former Syracuse University wide receiver Rob Carpenter's departures and arrivals are becoming more difficult to chart than a 747.

His departure from the Cincinnati Bengals, the team that drafted him, was even more abrupt.

Carpenter, who was chosen in the fourth round by the Bengals last spring, was unexpectedly released on Monday night.

Yesterday, however, Carpenter was claimed by the New England Patriots.

The claim comes after Patriot wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes broke his kneecap in Saturday's preseason game against the New York Giants.

Carpenter will be reunited with former SU head coach Dick MacPherson.

Former West Virginia standout Reggie Rembert, a second-round pick of the New York Jets last season, beat Carpenter out of a roster spot in Cincinnati. Rembert outshined Carpenter in last Saturday's game against Green Bay snaring six balls for 73 yards. Carpenter did not make a catch.

Carpenter, who caught 52 passes for 895 yards with 5 touchdowns at SU last year, had been predicted as high as a second-round draft pick last spring.

Instead, he has caught on with his second team in as many days.

SU makes schedule changes

By ROB GYETTE
DO Editor

The Syracuse University men's basketball schedule was announced on July 16.

The Orangemen, 26-6 last season, announced a 27-game schedule that will include six national television games.

The first regular season game will be against Cornell on Nov. 26 in the Carrier Dome. The season will conclude on March 7 when Villanova visits the Dome.

The following games will be televised:
- Dec. 3 - SU plays Florida State on ESPn in Atlanta in the final year of the Big East/ACC Challenge.
- Jan 26 - SU hosts preseason favorite St. John's in a Sunday noon game on CBS.
- Feb. 3 - Connecticut brings its incredible freshman class into the Dome on ESPN.

The Carrier Classic has an especially weak field as the Orangemen play Eastern Kentucky in the opening round. St. Joseph's and Wright State will play the other first-round game.

St. Joseph's will feature the return to Syracuse of former Jamiesville-Dewitt star Bernard Blount, who was the Atlantic 10 Freshman of the Year last season.

Miami (Fla.) will begin a tricky Big East play this season as the conference schedule has been expanded to 18 games, another reason for the short, mediocre preconference schedule.

Syracuse will play two exhibition games in the Dome. The Orange play Marathon Oil on Nov. 12 and the Canadian National team on Nov. 19.

Again, the Big East Tournament will be held in Madison Square Garden. The 1992 Final Four will be held in Minneapolis.

Virginia, in fact, declined an invitation on that basis.

The city of Tempe voted in favor of the holiday, and Corrigan said last year's problems are not likely to recur.

"We discussed this situation a great deal," Corrigan said, noting the first and second rounds of the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament were played last March in Tucson.

"(The holiday) will be back on the ballot before this game is played. As long as those communities are dedicated to doing what is right, then that would be satisfactory."

Most of the minor details have yet to be worked out. The length of this agreement has not been set.

In general, the alliance will help clean up bowl-bidding wars, and appears to be the best alternative that keeps the tradition of the bowls.

"This is important in the long run for the financial aspects of college football and it will create a lot of fan interest," Brock said. "This alliance has a chance to be a big bonanza."

Coach Mac shouts life into Patriots

The National Football League season hasn't begun, but somebody sure deserves a "pat" on the back. The New England Patriots have been called one of the worst football teams of all time, but that didn't deter former Syracuse University football coach Dick MacPherson from leaving the Orange men for Foxboro.

The Patriots were 1-15 last season and ended the season with the game losing streak that didn't stop Coach Mac either.

The eternally optimistic MacPherson may have brought some new life to the Patriots, yet early in the season it will still be hard. The "Patsies" went 0-3, were outscored 101-13, and were blown out 46-0 by the Phoenix Cardinals. After the Phoenix loss, even The Optimist had to be a little pessimistic. "We take this job every season. It's not going to be easy," MacPherson said after the loss to the Cardinals. "Quite honestly, I didn't know it was going to be this hard."

But in the Patriots preseason finale, they certainly had a reversal of fortune.

New England, which hadn't broken into the win column since Week 2 of last season, soundly beat the world champion New York Giants 24-3 last Saturday at Foxboro.

The Patriots were able to win before a partisan Giant crowd in their home stadium and without holding back John Stephens and wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes, who broke his knee cap.

Granted it was only preseason and the Giants were without All-Pro linebacker Lawrence Taylor, but the Patriots were still fired up, even after beatings taken over the previous three weeks.

Credit for their attitude has to go to their fiery head coach. Coach Mac— not a 60-year-old football veteran— but in the midst of a grand slam and with the remains of the Lisa Olson affair still hanging over their heads, it sure is reassuring to see Mac out there cheering his players on with the enthusiasm of a little kid—not a 60-year-old football veteran.

When the game ended, the Patriots celebrated as if they had just won the Super Bowl and Mac got a kiss from team executive vice president Sam Jankovich.

Don't expect the Patriots to even come close to making the playoffs, especially with the quarterback combination of Tommy Hodson and Hugh McElhenny, but in the midst of a run of bad luck they could surprise some people.

With Victor Kiam's financial troubles and the remains of the Lisa Olson affair still hanging over their heads, it's reassuring to see Mac out there cheering his players on with the enthusiasm of a little kid—not a 60-year-old football veteran.

But now, with a victory under their belt and some signs that the team's enthusiasm may be rubbing off, the Patriots should be much-improved. A fresh start for MacPherson and the Patriots.

University of Miami fullback Shannon Crowell weaves his way around the Syracuse University defense in a game last year. The Hurricanes hope to avoid any tip-toeing this year and blast through the inaugural season of the Big East Conference.

Bowl Bonanza comes together

Fiesta Bowl, alliance could decide national champs

By Rob Guyette

Sports editor

The Fiesta Bowl was added this past July as the final piece of a college football puzzle that all but assures a national championship game and delays the need for a playoff system.

The alliance will begin after the 1992 college football season and includes the champion of the Big East Conference, of which Syracuse University is a member. The complicated system includes the Fiesta, Cotton, Orange and Sugar bowls.

The rationale is to match the highest-ranked team of the three locked bowls automatically extend invitations to the winners of their respective conference associations.

The other five teams will draw from the Atlantic Coast Conference, the Big East, Notre Dame and two "at-large" teams, as chosen by the seven-member alliance.

The rational is to match the highest-ranked team of the three locked bowls with the highest ranked teams from the pool of five. But if the three locked bowls do not have the No. 1 or No. 2 team, the Fiesta Bowl can draw from the pool and put forth a national championship game.

The filling of the berths will be done after the season is over, possibly eliminating early-signing and bidding wars, which in the past have backfired on bowls trying to put together a top-notch game.

SU athletic director John Crutchamed said the alliance is a step in the right direction for the Big East and for college football in general.

"We certainly didn't anticipate the collection of bowls that expressed an interest," Crutchamed said. "The fact that we got those four bowls to talk shows the strength of the need that has been lying out there unattended."

The notion was there. It was a matter of making it happen.

The major obstacle to the alliance is that neither the Big Ten nor Pac-10 champions will be included. They will continue to honor their Rose Bowl commitments, and if either champion is No. 1 or 2, there will be no championship game.

Either of the second place teams from those conferences could be included as an at-large team, however.

The second loophole in the alliance opens if the No. 1 and 2 teams both come from either the SEC, SWC or Big Eight—meaning the top two teams both would be locked. Cotton Bowl President Jim Brock said that detail has yet to be worked out, but he added it would be unlikely for one bowl to reach out in order to help another bowl create a national championship.

Big East Commissioner Mike Tranghese said all eight Big East presidents were opposed to a playoff system because of the extra games and extra time it would necessitate.

"We have a great feeling for the bowl system," Tranghese said. "We want to promote and enhance that system."

Said Crouthamel: "The exercise we've gone through is not to thwart a national playoff because that's not in favor of it. We've put ourselves in a favorable position for the future, whatever that future may be."

Because schedules are made years in advance, Big East members will play a lopsided number of conference games this season. Crouthamel said, however, the round-robin play will be in effect for the 1993 season.

"The Fiesta Bowl beat out the Citrus, Blockbuster, Gator and Holiday bowls, which all made proposals to the six-member committees."

Gene Corrigan, Commissioner of the ACC, said there were no specific factors which made the Fiesta Bowl the most attractive. He said the committee never voted, but rather came to consensus.

"The Fiesta Bowl made an incredibly good presentation," Corrigan said.

"The recipe was right," Tranghese said. "Syracuse was first in the state of Arizona. The University of Pittsburgh is in just its 21st year, and 11th on New Year's Day. The other three have been New Year's Day traditions for over 50 years."

"We're kind of the Johnny-come-lately," said Chuck Johnson, President of the Fiesta Bowl. "Our plan is to join these three major bowls and hope we can continue to grow with them."

Controversy swarmed the Fiesta Bowl last year, resulting from the rejection of the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday in the state of Arizona. The University of Pittsburgh will play Nebraska in a Big East Conference game on Oct. 19 in Pittsburgh.
Ex-football star faces rape charge

DO Staff Reports

Former Syracuse University football star Michael Owens was charged by police Wednesday with raping an 18-year-old woman.

Halflack on the team from 1987 to 1989, he was booked at 12:30 p.m. on a felony charge of rape. Police arrested Owens at the Genesse Inn, 1660 E. Genesee St.

According to Syracuse Police, Owens had been at a house party with several of his friends. Following the party, police say Owens, his cousin and three women went to the suite at the hotel.

One of the women told police she felt sick and decided to lay down on a bed in the hotel room, according to a report in the August 28 issue of the Student Daily. The victim later found her there by her friends, crying and bleeding. She charges Owens raped her there at 2:30 a.m.

The woman was taken to University Hospital and police were called. Armed with a warrant, police searched Owens' hotel room at 9 a.m. and took him into custody for questioning.

Owens was being fingerprinted and photographed at 12:50 p.m. at the Public Safety Building.

Owens, who has not received a degree from SU, was registered for fall semester classes.

The football player, from Carlisle, Pa., is the older brother of former SU basketball star Billy Owens.

Owens was selected in the spring of 1990 by the Kansas City Chiefs in the ninth round of the National Football League draft. He was cut from the team and made an unsuccessful try at playing for the World League of Football San Antonio Riders.

He was re-signed by the Chiefs last March but was cut again in July. Owens later wore the famed number 44 jersey during his three years at SU where he ran for 2,009 yards, the 10th best in school history.

In 1989, he gained 1,018 yards for the Orangemen, the fifth-best season of any running back in SU history.

Owens' most famous play might be his last second-aspect of campus life when Students Concerned About Rape Education (SCAR.E.D) holds a rally today.

Starting at 11:15 a.m., the rape awareness group will host speakers informing students about rape.

The purpose of this rally is to make sure that freshmen who are new to college life are informed and vigilant," he said.

A statement prepared by Howard and Connie Clery, parents of a Lehigh University student who was raped and murdered, will be read. The Clerys are founders of Security on Campus Inc., a national lobbying group for campus safety.

S.C.A.R.E.D. estimates that 800 students attended last fall's rally, held during the first week of classes.

Last year's rally received heavy media attention. Ditz said, "A picture of our rally ran in Newsweek and our rally made it to national television," he said.

That is "exactly Nancy Rhodes' hope for this year's rally. Rhodes, assistant to the director of the Woman's Studies Program, expects the strength of last year's rally will be maintained. "We must keep the momentum," she said, "and in the discussion that followed our students will be able to attend the rally," she said. "It's a shame that an incident had to occur."

She said she received comments and calls from about 30 students Wednesday. "Everybody agreed that the new plan would have potentially detailed in its effects, but stressed the need for observations."

"You deal with consultants and then designers and traffic engineers," he said. See LIGHTS Page 6.

Accident prompts new lights

Responsible. To Monday night's accident involving two Syracuse University pedestrians, the university announced plans Wednesday to install three new traffic lights.

Harvey Kaiser, vice president for facilities administration, said three traffic lights will be installed at the intersections of Walnut and Waverly avenues, Walnut Place and Waverly Avenue; and Comstock Avenue and University Place.

"It was quite clear something had to be done and we responded immediately," he said.

The decision came after a Wednesday morning meeting with city officials, who cleared the way for the lights to be installed "as soon as possible," he said. Such safety features were delayed until students returned to campus, so pedestrian patterns could be observed and evaluated.

"We wanted to see how students behaved as pedestrians," he said.

He called the accident which injured two 20-year-old students "unfortunate, regrettable and sad," and said, "Our role is the concern for the students."

The Today Show's Willard Scott (left) forecasted the weather from the New York State Fair yesterday. Here Scott gets clawed by a baby bobcat while owner Andrew Simmons holds his golden eagle. The NBC affiliate was in Central New York in order to promote the fair. The fair runs through Sunday.

Inside

Student Government Association President Emily Zenick was reserved in her comments on the university's response. "I'm pleased with the response," she said. "I think it's a shame that an accident had to occur."

S.C.A.R.E.D. holds rally today

By ALEX PIGMAN

New students at Syracuse University will face one of the realities of campus life when Students Concerned About Rape Education (SCAR.E.D) holds a rally today.

Starting at 11:15 a.m., the rape awareness group will host speakers informing students about rape.

"The purpose of this rally is to make sure that freshmen who are new to college life are informed and vigilant," he said.

Despite invite, Shaw's no-show

According to his secretary, Chancellor Kenneth Shaw, who was invited to speak at the rally, will be unable to attend due to meetings away from campus.

Because the rally is scheduled on the Quad while many students will be changing classes, the speakers hope to reach a large audience.

A statement prepared by Howard and Connie Clery, parents of a Lehigh University student who was raped and murdered, will be read. The Clerys are founders of Security on Campus Inc., a national lobbying group for campus safety.

Gorbachev struggles for unity, threatens to resign
Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev threatened Tuesday to resign from his position if the Soviet Union continues to collapse.

Gorbachev's statement came in the wake of the European Community's recognition of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania as independent nations.

The United States has not yet recognized the independence of the Baltics, which have been under Soviet control since Josef Stalin ordered their invasion for unity, saying the presence of American military aid is necessary for nine years. However, many members of the Philippine Senate oppose the treaty, saying the presence of American military bases prohibits the nation from sovereignty.

Cambodian factions agree to UN plan
Leaders of Cambodia's warring political factions agreed Tuesday to cut their armies by 70 percent and submit to United Nations regulations.

Thomas gets mild support
The American Bar Association Tuesday deemed Supreme Court nominee Judge Clarence Thomas "qualified" for a position as a justice.

Disaster aid granted to Mass., R.I.
President Bush has authorized federal disaster aid for Massachusetts and Rhode Island following last week's destruction from Hurricane Bob. Both states have been declared official disaster areas.

Damage to insured property has been estimated at $203 million in Massachusetts and $115 million in Rhode Island.

In Massachusetts, the federal funds will be distributed between Barnstable, Bristol, Essex and Middlesex counties. Any of Rhode Island's affected counties may use the funds.

O means no to credit, videos
O no. Or is it O?
Stephen O, in his 16 years in America, has been refused membership in video stores, had his credit history erased and has been the butt of constant jokes.

The 23-year-old Korean immigrant gave up his fight last week, and had his last name officially changed to Oh.

What's the difference? According to Oh, computers often do not recognize a single letter as a last name.

O's difficulties have also prompted him to make friends with O'Brien or O'Shaughnessy. He told The New York Times that head waiters often greet him by saying, "Gee, you don't look Irish."

Thomas' nomination has been sharply criticized by the American Bar Association, which has called him "not qualified." The ABA ranks judicial nominees on a scale of well qualified, qualified and not qualified.

Rape charges dropped against Penn student Rape charges against a Penn State University student were dropped at the victim's request in July, apparently because the student did not want to face the ordeal of a trial.

Other former Pitt players have tested positive for steroids.

Penn State policy will not ban ROTC
Penn State's recently revised non-discrimination policy will not affect the campus' branch of the Reserve Officer's Training Corps because it does not apply to intra-mural federal policies.

"The policy we follow says that gays, lesbians and bisexuals are not allowed entry into federal forces and are barred from any military service," said Lt. Col. Richard Bertolones of the Naval ROTC program. "And the university's new policy will not change the way ROTC is run."

On August 19 the world witnessed a coup in which eight Soviet hard-liners removed Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev from power. By August 22, news agencies reported its failure.

On the morning of August 24, Cable News Network announced, “Inter-Fax News Agency reports that Mikhail Gorbachev is stepping aside from the Communist Party, leaving his post as General Secretary, and using his power as president of the country to ban the party from its existence in the Soviet Union.”

Although the report could not be confirmed, Soviet journalist Ai Gurnov said he was not surprised and he hoped it was true. “Gorbachev has been very predictable these days,” said Gurnov, “and this is because he’s behind the events. This is bad for a politician... Yeltsin is ahead of the events.”

Amidst the rapid pace of change generated by the coup, there can be little doubt that Gorbachev has forever altered the face of history. The Berlin Wall has come down. Germany is whole and the Warsaw Pact is a memory. Madeleine Albright, president of the Center for National Policy describes Gorbachev as a “magnificent figure who has had a very difficult task of leading a nation of 280 million people out of the dark ages.”

Where Gorbachev stands?

But what is Gorbachev’s role today and what will his relationship be with Boris Yeltsin, president of the Russian Republic?

Yeltsin announced last Thursday that the Russian Republic will fly a new flag, without the hammer and sickle, while Gorbachev announced at his first press conference since the coup attempt, “I am a committed socialist and I see nothing contrary to socialism in Yeltsin’s actions.”

As Yeltsin announced his desire to accelerate the coup, there can be little doubt that Gorbachev has emerged as the absolute victor, he would find himself cut off from the Soviet empire remaining intact. Kissinger wrote, “Destiny and his own manipulative penchant have transformed him from a manipulator of change to be swallowed by the forces he unleashed.”

Kissinger pointed out that Gorbachev would not be the first architect of change to be swallowed by the forces he unleashed. Kissinger wrote, “Destiny and his own manipulative penchant have transformed him from a leader into a broker between the democratic reformers, who accept him only for want of a more authentic leader.”

Kissinger noted that all have succumbed to the forces of nationalism. The Soviet Union is a nation which encompasses 102 nationalities that speak over 100 different languages. There is no center left to hold them together. Perhaps Gorbachev has finallty learned what former Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze has said: “The party cannot be reformed.”

Mikhail Gorbachev’s place in history will be enshrined for surveying the road that the Soviet Union now took down. The task falls to another generation of Soviet leadership to pave the road.

Euthanasia book sells well despite restraints

By EILEEN GLANTON
DO Staff Writer

Books purchased at The University Bookstore can teach you how to dissect a frog or how to decorate a room, but they won't help you how to commit suicide.

The book Final Exit: The Practicalities of Self-Deliverance and Assisted Suicide for the Dying is not in stock at The University Bookstore. And according to store director Richard Scott, curious readers won't be able to find the controversial book by Derek Humphry there anytime soon.

"We have not taken a stand for or against the book," Scott said. "But it's not in stock now, and I don't know whether it will be in the future." Bookstore officials further confirmed that Final Exit has not been reordered from Carol Publishing, the New Jersey-based distributor of the book.

Final Exit concerns euthanasia, the much-debated right of a terminally ill patient to die rather than to continue life weak and infirm. Included in the book are Humphry's opinions on the most effective means of suicide.

According to Humphry's book, suicide by an overdose of pills is the least painful, most peaceful way to commit suicide. Final Exit denounces shooting and hanging as too violent.

That information, while captivating Humphry to the top of The New York Times best seller list of advice and how-to books, has sparked controversy among book buyers, health care professionals and counselors who don't know what to make of a book that advocates suicide.

"In these days, technology and medical knowledge can certainly prolong life," said Peggy Boyd, clinical specialist in adult psychology and mental health at the Loretto Geriatric Center.
Support S.C.A.R.E.D. rally

At least 12 times last year on the Syracuse University campus, a woman's body was violated by an unwelcome party. It is safe to assume that many more rapes went unreported.

Not coincidentally, seven of last year's victims were freshmen raped during what is known as the vulnerable "honeymoon period"—the time from the beginning of the semester until Thanksgiving. In other words, to better educate first-year students, S.C.A.R.E.D. (Students Concerned About Rape Education) is sponsoring a rally this afternoon to increase awareness of rape.

Speakers will address issues concerning rape awareness and prevention.

Fast rape rallies at SU focused national attention on the campus, increasing awareness and thrusting SU into the spotlight as an advocate for women's issues.

But a campus crusade against rape is only as viable as the administration's. National attention means nothing unless the numbers go down and awareness goes up. Despite this, S.C.A.R.E.D. is determined to speak loudly and extinguish the forces provoking rape and sexual assault.

Perhaps someday, given heightened awareness, the first few weeks at a new university will be more of a honeymoon and less of a nightmare for freshman women.

Forgotten cyclists: watch out

What a rush. You're heading back to school this morning with you bike. You're ready to cruise onto campus and show everyone how inivable you are. After a summer of hopping trails, not having to go 25 mph downhill and weaving your way through city streets, the Syracuse University campus should be a cinch.

Until Thanksgiving.

Ride on the right hand side of the road, with the flow of traffic. It also helps to understand your bike and all its functions so you can ride with confidence.

Aside from being fun, riding a bike is one of the best ways to get around. You don't use gas, contribute to air pollution, add to automobile congestion or pay for parking. And biking is one of the greatest forms of exercise.

Whatever the genius was who dreamed up this maze of possible bike accidents, forget about you. Pedestrians are watching out for motorists. Motorists are watching out for new street signs, other motorists. The city is watching its reputation with the area residents. And the University is watching its pockets, bike traffic safety and the students' safety.

In the Ideal Campus Setting, there are bike lanes so cyclists can travel safely on the right side of the road. Another thought is a reduced speed limit, or even signs that alert motorists to alert motorists to自行车交通 safety. Some campuses even have adequate bike parking so cyclists can protect their investments.

I guess these considerations were left on the planners' desk.

More than 250,000 cyclists are injured in accidents every year, most of which happen while at home. You can do it that way.

Approximately one-half of all cyclists killed in accidents each year are over the age of 14. Of all cyclist fatalities, 70 percent are caused by head injuries, 85 percent of which could have been avoided by wearing properly fitted protective head gear.

So the solution is plain to see. You've got to look out for number one. Pin on a helmet. So what if it's not attractive. Look out for number one. First and foremost, fit your protective head gear.

Anthem deserves respect

Rouging dynamic renditions of The Star-Spangled Banner sung by the players and coaches in both football and basketball. The thousands of_items of clothing-clad fans in this tradition often with clenched teeth curious as to where the team might be during this sacred moment of respect and admiration for the symbol of freedom that allows us to partake in such an event of our own free will.

It has been my privilege to be involved in Little League baseball, Pop Warner football, high school football and college athletics from the field as a band member, player, coach, and later from the press box as a public address announcer and as a news person. The tradition's origin is unknown, but in my experience everyone except SU has included the players as a part of this program. The umpire yelling "Play ball!!" as the players take the field immediately following the national anthem is accepted as a part of our heritage.

Please let the Orangemen share this proud moment with us, the fans. Thank you and good luck.

The Advisory Committee section of the state law, which mandated a committee at each school, took effect January 1, 1991. The information section of the law, which requires the release of preventative and statistical information, takes effect Sept. 1.

Bonet, Crescitielli, Student Government Association President Emily Zenick, Greek Council President Lorraine Corcoran and Scott DeLea serve, must tell how the college educates the campus community about sexual assault, personal safety and crime prevention.

Section 1-a of the law addresses sexual assault prevention information and reads: "The trustees or governing board of each college shall inform incoming students about sexual assault prevention measures through programs which may include workshops, seminars, discussion groups, and film presentations, in order to disseminate information about sexual assault, promote discussion, encourage reporting of incidents of sexual assault, and facilitate prevention of such incidents."

Other functions of the committee are to tell how the university refers complaints to appropriate authorities and how the university responds to inquiries from concerned persons.

The shutdown of University Place, which is frequented by students and used to be a major car and bus route, may make it safer for pedestrians, but it made other roads far too dangerous, Zenick said.

Other university roads may be up for adjustments as well, Kaiser said, pending further observation.

Zenick said based on feedback she received, other areas such as Comstock Avenue in front of Shaw, Delpia and Booth halls should also be considered.

"I think the reaction of putting the lights at University Place and Comstock will slow down things," Kaiser said.

When Richard Rivera was in training to be a teacher, he heard the story of a man who had lived in the jungles of Guatemala with the Peace Corps. When the man returned to the United States, he tried the job of teaching and it had been going well. The man couldn’t finish, according to the story. He said the jungles were safer.

Rivera, who graduated from Syracuse University with the Class of 1990, is a member of Teach For America. The organization is a nationwide teacher corps of people from different academic majors and ethnic backgrounds. Members commit two years to teaching in rural and urban areas with teacher shortages. Salaries range from $17,000 to $29,000.

At SU, Rivera studied political science. He now teaches 8th grade social studies at Elijah D. Clark Junior High School in the Bronx.

"You’re not teaching under normal circumstances," Rivera said. "It’s a poverty-stricken area, and you have to be aware of that.

One of the reasons for the teacher shortage in an area like ours is that most teachers don’t want to deal with the headaches that come with the job.

The headaches of teaching
In any given day, there can be many headaches in a school like Rivera’s. Many of his students come from single parent homes or broken homes. Many have been abused or have had babies. On a regular basis they see what most other kids only see on television — theft, violent crime, drugs.

"You can’t go in with the mentality that you’re going to save them," Rivera said. "That’s wrong and dangerous. They won’t learn anything. You’re there to teach."

The most difficult experience so far for Rivera occurred two days before Christmas. One of the school’s students was shot and killed by a group of kids driving by in a car. The shooting took place during lunch period, right in front of the school.

"You learn a lot about yourself and your limits because you’re tested all the time," Rivera said.

Teaching in a situation like his is like "performing on stage — and it’s a solitary act," he said.

A while ago, though, a student from the high school where Rivera student taught during training called him. The call came all the way from L.A., and the student had called just to talk and say "Hi." Rivera said the call meant a lot to him.

Helping a community
Teach For America is a great way to give of your time, he said. Rivera joined because teaching had always been one of his interests. The organization was ideal for him because it is geared towards non-education majors and offers the chance to give something back to the community.

"Especially encouraged minority students to get involved in the group. Many of the kids in inner city areas are African-American and Hispanic and need positive role models," he said.

Rivera still misses his days at SU sometimes.

"College isn’t the real world — it’s a ball," Rivera said. "The real world isn’t always too pretty.

Rivera has also become more critical of some aspects of college life.

"You don’t get taught a multicultural perspective, it’s all very Euro-centric," he said. "We need all minorities in the history books."

When his two years with Teach For America are up, Rivera says he plans to teach for a year or two longer. After that, he plans to go on to law school and possibly get involved in government. Then he might come full circle and teach again.

Rivera said Teach For America is like the Peace Corps slogan, "the toughest job you’ll ever love."
Keeping SU ID proves worthwhile

By LAURIE HEROLD
DO Contributing Writer

Hold onto that orange Syracuse University identification card, even if the picture is terrible.

The card has plenty of worthwhile uses, according to Pat Marcelly of the SU Office of Residence Services.

Marcelly said the card can save time and money in several ways.

Presentation of the ID at certain Centro bus stops allows the student to ride free to and from the university. Schedules and maps of these shuttles are available from SU Transit Service (443-4437) and can be found in the Schine Student Center.

Students also can save money on Carrier Dome tickets by using their ID, she said.

The ID can be encoded with money for use in vending machines. It can also be encoded with money for use as a SUpercard. SUpercards allow students to have accounts from which they can pay for food on campus by presenting the ID at the Carrier Dome, Gate D, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., until Friday.

After Friday, students must go to 204 Steele Hall, Marcelly said. One form of picture identification is required to receive an SU ID. The IDs are issued to the student on the day requested.

An SU ID lasts for the student's entire stay at the university. IDs are automatically revalidated each semester a student registers.

For additional information, contact Marcelly in 202 Steele Hall, or the ID Office, after Friday. The phone number is 443-2726.

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for very strong reasons.

"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable features powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Hyder, professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.

"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of mathematics at North Carolina State University.

So go check out the HP calculator line at your college bookstore or HP retailer. You'll agree, there's no faster relief from the pain of tough problems. HP calculators. The best for your success.

SUICIDE

Continued from Page 4 in Syracuse. "But the device used to do that are often painful or demeaning. Who can say whether suicide should be an option?"

Throughout Central New York, concern over Final Exit has motivated several bookstores to restrict sales. At B. Dalton's in the Carousel Center, the book may not be purchased by anyone under the age of 18.

"Our corporate people made that decision on the national level," said Dave Wiley, assistant manager of the Carousel Center store. "Personally, I think it's a good decision."

Restricted for minors

Wiley said he justifies restricting sales of Final Exit the same way he justifies prohibiting magazines such as Playboy, Playgirl or Penthouse from minors. "As a question of judgment, and chances are, this is just not a judgment minors should be making," he said.

And while she said the Court's decisions have not hurt the press, she fears that it may freeze actions of some newspapers including The New York Times.

The paper "kind of decided to go along with it" when the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, under privacy rights, refused to provide a transcript of the audio tape of the Space Shuttle Challenger crew's last seconds. The paper filed a request under the Freedom of Information Act, but did not bring it to the Supreme Court.

She said the paper feared a Supreme Court decision that would threaten the press' ability to obtain information.

Greenhouse graduated from Radcliffe at Harvard University in 1988 and received her master's degree at Yale University. She has also been a political reporter for the Times.

"I suppose that does become an issue in later life," he said.

The national chain Waldenbooks has adopted the same sales policy.

B. Dalton Bookellers in the Camillus Mall did not order Final Exit when it was first published in early August. However, consumer demand prompted buyers to place an order for the book, and store clerks anticipate the book will go on sale within the next three weeks.

Scott said concerns about the book's effect on youth were not a factor in The University Bookstore's decision to not stock Final Exit.

"We cater to an adult audience," Scott said. "Since we are selling to adults, that would not have been a worry for us."

Students determined to read Final Exit will have the easiest time finding the book at the Orange Student Bookstore. Although the first shipment has sold out, more copies are on the way, according to book buyer Gwen Pierre.

"A new shipment is due in a couple of weeks," Pierre said. "We have had many requests, primarily from professors and people from the hospital."

The committee, on which markedly undiverse group with "little experience."

"I think it's fair to wonder if (the Supreme Court) has the breadth and vision and background to deal with current issues," she said.

But she said she thinks the Court's judgements are "about right" concerning cases that deal with the press.

Ruling protects press

Referring to the 1964 New York Times vs. Sullivan case that gave the press protection against libel suits and a recent decision allowing reporters to paraphrase ideas, she said the Court has been sensitive to the "dangers" of inaccurate quotes. She said the ruling permits reporters to "clean language without changing meaning" of a quoted subject's actual or intended malice.

Syracuse University defines rape as any form of nonconsensual sexual intercourse committed by physical force, threats, or intimidation. Sexual intercourse includes anal, oral, and vaginal penetration.

Sexual assault involves any actual or attempted sexual activity, including sexual intercourse, sexual touching, exhibitionism, or sexual language of a threatening nature.

Nonconsensual sexual activity includes situations where a person is unable to consent because of physical force, threats, mental incapacitation, physical helplessness due to drug or alcohol consumption, or unconsciousness.

Sexual offenses are punishable by the Penal Laws of the State of New York. An offender may receive a misdemeanor sentence of a maximum of one year imprisonment or a felony sentences which could mean up to life in prison.

Syracuse University publishes regulations on Rape and Sexual Assault in the Syracuse University Rape and Sexual Assault Policy in the Student Handbook. Sanctions for such offenses include suspension and permanent expulsion.

A key to prevention is education. Syracuse University is dedicated to providing the information and resources necessary to fight the issues of rape and sexual assault within the campus community.

With education as a premise, it is crucial to understand the circumstances under which most sex offenses affecting our students occur.

A function of the University R.A.P.E. Center is to report rape statistics. These reports indicate that most cases involve alcohol, are between people of the same race and are committed by non-stranger perpetrators. Rape is a crime of opportunity; it occurs both on and off-campus.

Reports verify that many of the persons who report incidents of rape request formal disciplinary action. The University Judicial System and the District Attorney's Office are the resources utilized most often for this purpose.

Each month specific statistics are available through the R.A.P.E. Center (315) 443-7273. In addition, these figures are printed in the Syracuse Record and The Daily Orange.
Procedures For Dealing With Sex Offenses

An advocate meets with the survivor of a sex offense. They discuss the options available; these options are not mutually exclusive.

Options include:
- No action taken
- Getting medical assistance
- Getting counseling or support
- Filing criminal charges with the police and District Attorney
- Filing a civil suit
- Filing a University complaint. A University complaint may only be filed against SU students or organizations.

The survivor has the option of filing the complaint or having it filed on her or his behalf.

The advocate and the survivor discuss the judicial process. The survivor is involved in all stages of the judicial process.

Complaints are forwarded to the Office of Student Affairs for resolution within the University Judicial System.

The Offender is notified by the Office of Student Affairs that a complaint has been filed and the nature of the charges.

The Student meets with the Judicial Advisor and/or Dean of Student Relations to discuss options.

The options include:
- "Informal Resolutions" i.e. the case is resolved by the mutual agreement of the parties.
- Student may withdraw from the University for "disciplinary reasons," i.e. the student withdraws from the University rather than face a judicial hearing.
- A judicial hearing is convened.

A student who is found responsible is subject to sanction, including suspension or permanent expulsion.

Something to Think About

Based on national reports to police, 16 rapes are attempted and 10 women are raped every hour. An estimated 1 out of every 12 rape victims is male.

(UCR, 1989; National Crime Survey [NCS], 1989)

In a national survey of 3,187 college women, 478 reported having been raped. As the breakdown shows, only 10.6% of the offenders were complete strangers.

COMMUNICATING ABOUT SAFETY
As with many crimes, the key to preventing rape and sexual assault is awareness. Students must recognize that they can become victims and therefore need to take precautionary measures.

At Syracuse University, the campus security department, the Office of Residence Life, the University R.A.P.E. Center, and student organizations such as Students Concerned About Rape Education and the Greek Council are working together to help educate students, faculty and staff about the crime of rape and how they can protect themselves from becoming victims.

RESIDENCE LIFE STAFF
Residence Life staff members conduct safety and crime prevention programs throughout the year. As soon as students arrive on campus for the beginning of the fall semester, information is distributed and meetings are held on safety and personal security as part of orientation. In addition, Residence Life Staff conduct safety and crime prevention programs throughout the year.

CARD-KEY ACCESS SYSTEM
The card-key access system is being phased in throughout the campus. Installation in residence halls will be updated by Fall 1991. Students gain access to their residence hall by inserting their ID cards into the card-reading device at the entrance.

BLUE LIGHT SECURITY SYSTEM
Emergency alarms have been installed at strategic locations around the Main and South campuses. They are identifiable by blue lights above the alarm box. When the alarm button is struck, the warning signal summons a security patrol to the scene within seconds.

SECURITY OFFICE
Security patrols the campus 24 hours per day, seven days a week. The Security Office presents crime prevention workshops throughout the year in residence halls, fraternity and sorority houses, and through staff development programs. All Security personnel are trained in handling cases of rape and sexual assault. Female officers are available to assist in these cases upon request.

Student Safety Services provides student marshals who assist security officers by patrolling campus and monitoring all residence areas from 7:00 p.m. - 3:00 a.m. On request, they will provide an escort to and from evening classes. When this service is unavailable, Security will provide the escort service.

BUS SERVICE
After studying late at the library or laboratory, students may utilize the University’s free shuttle bus service, which runs between residential and academic buildings. Schedules are available from the Security Office, Bird Library and the Schine and Goldstein student centers.

UNIVERSITY R.A.P.E. CENTER
Syracuse has taken a proactive stance against rape and sexual assault with establishment of the Rape: Advocacy, Prevention, and Education Center. The Center provides support and assistance to victims of rape and sexual assault. The Center also conducts educational programs across campus, in residence halls and fraternities and sororities. A trained advocate is available on-call 24 hours per day. During regular business hours an advocate can be reached by calling the R.A.P.E. Center at x-7273.

STUDENTS CONCERNED ABOUT RAPE EDUCATION (S.C.A.R.E.D.)
S.C.A.R.E.D. is a student organization formed in the fall of 1989 with the purpose of offering support to survivors of sexual harassment, sexual assault and rape. Through educational programs, S.C.A.R.E.D. works to prevent future incidents. The office is located in the Schine Student Center (x-5352).

PEER SEXUALITY PROGRAM
The Peer Sexuality Program is a student-run, University-based student organization sponsored by the Office of Residence Life (x-3637). The program holds issue-oriented workshops and provides an information/referral service. Workshop topics include relationships, sex roles, birth control, rape, homosexuality, and sexually transmitted diseases.

GREEK SYSTEM
Greek Council, the governing body for Greek letter organizations, is actively involved in rape education programming. Greek Council will also provide support and assistance to any person wishing to file a complaint against a Greek letter organization. The office is located in the Schine Student Center (x-2635).

A student-initiated program within the Greek System is the Blue Light Safe House Program. Chapter houses on campus displaying a blue light are places offering safety to victims of attack. These chapters have educated their members about the crime of rape and sexual assault. Information about the Blue Light Safe House Program can be obtained from Greek Council.

WOMEN FOR WOMEN
Women for Women is a support group offered by the University R.A.P.E. Center for survivors of rape, sexual assault and incest. This service is entirely confidential, and anonymous weekly meetings are held. For more information, please call x-7273.
Although only 10% of all rapes involve strangers, students can take these few steps to reduce the risk of becoming victims of any violent crime. They must be aware that the problem exists on all campuses, and then they must incorporate some common-sense safety precautions into their daily routine:

- Don't prop open security doors in the residence halls.

- Lock your own door — even if your roommate frequently forgets his or her key.

- Don't let people who don't have proper ID cards into the residence halls. Only hosts should be responsible for letting in their guests.

- Call campus security if nonresidents are loitering around a residence hall or wandering through the halls, day or night.

- Always walk with someone you know well and trust, especially at night or in isolated areas of campus.

- Lock your car doors even if you're just leaving your car for a minute.

- Take part in crime-prevention seminars or safety classes offered around campus.
Star Wars saga goes on

A long time ago (14 years) in a galaxy far, far away (California), George Lucas created Star Wars. At the time he promised that the saga would encompass nine episodes with the original Star Wars (subtitled A New Hope) as episode four. Since then it has been speculated that the next batch of movies would take place before the first film and chronicle the nse of Darth Vader and the evil Empire. The details of the last three installments remained a mystery...until now.

Hugo Award-winning science fiction author Timothy Zahn has penned Heir to the Empire (Bantam, $15), the first in a three-book cycle that takes place five years after the events in Return of the Jedi. Published this summer, the book has topped the New York Times best seller list for 14 weeks. Although skeptics might fear this new novel is simply riding on the Star Wars name, Heir to the Empire is not a cheap rip-off. It's not classic literature either; it's just good, clean fun, with space ships battling and the good guys kicking the stuffing out of the bad guys.

Mr. and Mrs. Solo
The Rebel Alliance has transformed itself into a public, all but vanquishing the remnants of the Galactic Empire. Princess Leia has married Han Solo and is pregnant with twins — a move that runs counter to the ways of the Jedi. And he plans to teach the twins as well. But Luke is also hearing a coaxing voice, that of C-3PO, who sides with the highest bidder, and his associate Mara Jade, who holds a deep grudge against Luke.

Other Star Wars favorites such as C-3PO, R2-D2, Chewbacca, Lando Calrissian and Admiral Ackbar also make return appearances.

In George Lucas' tradition
Author Zahn is remarkably true to the characters as they were created by George Lucas. He might be painting his picture on a different canvas, but he is definitely using the same colors in a new way.

Pictured here in Return of the Jedi, R2-D2 is back with other familiar Star Wars characters in Timothy Zahn's novel, Star Wars: Heir to the Empire.

Fall Movie Preview

Sci-fi returns to the movies

By ROB OWEN

After a summer of laughs at the movies (i.e. City Slickers, Naked Gun 2 1/2, Souphead, etc.), this fall's films are largely science-fiction and fantasy.

After losing popularity in the mid-1980s, the genre is back in full force with a deluge of offbeat mythic characters who will be appearing on the silver screen in the next few months.

Paramount Pictures has two such films ready for release. The Addams Family will be in theaters at Thanksgiving and Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country, the last voyage of the original crew, will boldly go where that film series has gone before, beginning Dec. 13.

Although this is the 25th anniversary of the original Star Trek, the preview, which has been showing in theaters since mid-summer, has attracted more guffaws than genuine enthusiasm. However, The Addams Family preview has been getting great response which will likely translate into rich box office take.

Other fantasy/sci-fi films on the way include Morgan Creek's Freejack starring Mick Jagger and Silence of the Lambs' Dr. Lester, Anthony Hopkins.

An animated beauty

Disney takes us on an animated journey to meet Beauty and the Beast, with music by the composer and lyricist who made The Little Mermaid a smash hit.

Steven Spielberg unveils a re-telling of Hook to Peter Pan called Hook. Robin Williams is Peter Pan, Dustin Hoffman plays Captain Hook and Julia Roberts is Tinkerbell.

Williams will appear in a second film this fall, Williams and Jeff Bridges star in director Terry Gilliam's long-awaited, much-delayed The Fisher King about a modern day search for the Holy Grail.

Demi Moore returns as The Butcher's Wife in this October release about a clairvoyant wife and a local psychiatrist (Jeff Daniels). The mystical comedy is directed by television veteran Terry Hughes.

Ernest Scared Stupid is a Halloween release with Ernest. See MOVIES Page 17

'Book of Love' speaks volumes on teen angst

When New Line Cinema released Book of Love last spring, it had a short and unnoticed life — in theaters one week, gone the next.

Now on video from RCA Columbia Pictures Home Video, Book of Love will probably not make any great splashes at the video store. It's not a bad film, but it's nothing earth-shattering either.

Another nostalgic look back at teen life in the fabulous 1950s.

But he has his friends. Crutch (Keith Coogan) is just as desperate as Jack in his girl search, Spider Barbani (Danny Nucci) seems to have a fighting chance at picking up women and Floyd (John Cameron Mitchell) may or may not be interested in the opposite sex.

Tough guy Angelo Gabooch (Beau Dremann) warns Jack Twiller (Chris Young) to watch his moves on the dance floor with Gabooch's sister Gina (Tricia Leigh Fisher) in the RCA/Columbia Pictures Home Video release Book of Love.

No matter what Jack does, he makes a fool of himself. From tap dancing down a flight of stairs and landing on his face to shredding his t-shirt in the fan belt of a car, Jack is the epitome of an awkward adolescent.

But Jack also has a wild imagination. Wherever he looks — calendars, pictures, television sets, mirrors — the people pictured there invariably wind up talking to him and encouraging him in his pursuit.

Since Jack is considered imaginative by his friends, this could be a useful gimmick, but he never shows any creativity except in these reveries. Nothing he does in his attempts to date Lily are unique. He imitates James Dean, he works on a car like a real man and puts on airs whenever Lily walks past. But, for a kid who supposedly has an over-active imagination, Jack is disappointingly down-to-earth.

Who wrote the Book of Love? It was William Kotzwinkle, but he originally called it Jack in the Box and wrote it as a book that was published in the early 1980s. When New Line Cinema decided to make a film based on Kotzwinkle's screenplay, they turned it into a song title movie.

Kotzwinkle also did some major restructuring of his story, deleting Jack's obsession with comic book heroes and creating a younger brother for Jack who would take up that interest.

In the movie, Jack's little brother Peanut (Aeryk Eagan) gets the best lines.

"I'm fighting for the cause of justice — how do I look if my mother takes me to school?" Peanut complains.

Book abandoned

Kotzwinkle also abandons the book's more realistic ending for a wrap-around narration from an older Jack played by actor Michael McKean.

As usual, the book is better than the film. Still, Book of Love has its amusing moments such as Peanut's encounter with a showgirl at a carnival and Jack's prom date with Gina Gabooch (Tricia Leigh Fisher). But the whole movie is loosely strung together without much coherence and the wrap-around narration is pointless. Perhaps if first-time director Robert Shaye had explored the problems Jack faced later in life, the character would have had some depth. As it is, Book of Love had no hope of being a bestseller.

kind of paint. Reading the book you can easily hear the voice of Harrison Ford utter the classic Han Solo line: "I have a bad feeling about this."

One of the few faults that can be found in Heir to the Empire is the difficult names of some of the new characters. Another failing is Zahn's lack of clarity about which planet is home to which character.

Since the book is meant to be the beginning of a new trilogy, don't expect many loose ends to be wrapped up. So many plot lines are left unresolved, it will probably be necessary to read Heir to the Empire before its sequel is released in 1992. But that's okay, we're used to Star Wars cliff-hangers. Remember the end of The Empire Strikes Back?

Pick up a copy of Star Wars: Heir to the Empire, that's the John Williams soundtrack from any of the three films in the tape deck and reacquaint yourself with the Star Wars universe.

Think back to a time when you were seven years old and the broomstick was a light saber, getting an R2-D2 action figure was your greatest goal in life and plotting an imaginary X-Wing fighter seemed like the ultimate adventure.

Syracuse probe postponed again

Perhaps Syracuse University is hoping good things come to those who wait.

For the second time in the past four months, SU has delayed an announcement on its internal investigation of the Orangemen's basketball team.

A report that was originally supposed to be filed in the spring will now be filed in "mid-autumn," according to SU spokesman Robert Hill.

The internal probe, along with an NCAA probe, is the result of a Post-Standard series published last December detailing possible NCAA rule violations.

New York Yankees top draft pick Brien Taylor has finally signed, though he's still not worth as much as either Mike Wit or Tim Leary.

Taylor ended his holdout Tuesday as he signed a $1.25 million contract to become the highest paid player in the history of baseball's amateur draft.

Dennis anyone?

On the men's side, top seeds struggled but survived. Ivan Lendl lost the first two sets and staved off two match points before beating Richard Krajicek.

Detmer has taken a media and professional scout beating over the offseason, as his two-game, 10-interception performance to end last season has been magnified.

Many pro scouts have said Detmer is a fluke and will not even be drafted next April. To-night, against the top-ranked team in the nation, Detmer has his chance to prove his critics wrong.

The SU schedule will not interfere with the game, since the Orangemen will play an afternoon game on Oct. 28 at Rutgers.

The Nets-Heat game of a year ago featured just one SU player — Miami point guard Sherman Douglas. Heat center Ronny Seikaly, now one of the game's highest-paid players, did not make the trip because of a sprained ankle.

Nets Vice President Willis Reed attended a press conference in Syracuse in late July to promote the game. Reed realized, of course, that he was on the hot seat in this town for not reuniting Owens, who was drafted by the Sacramento Kings, with ex-teammate Coleman.

"We really liked Billy, but for our team to be cemented we needed another building block," Reed said, referring to Georgia Tech point guard Kenny Anderson, who was taken with the Nets' No. 2 pick.

Reed said he pictured the Anderson-Coleman duo as a possible "John Stockton-Karl Malone combination."

Anderson's selection is New Jersey's indication that Mookie Blaylock, a first-round selection of two years ago, will be phased out of their plans.

There is still a possible second former Orangeman in the game. The Nets are pursuing the services of Rafael Addison, who left SU in 1986 and played four years professionally in Europe.

Addison recently completed an impressive stint in the Nets' free agent/rookie camp.

Hairy events cause cut-up of Yankees

About a week and a half ago, I really missed working for The Daily Orange. Why, you ask? No, it was not because of the wonderful contribution this paper makes to the campus, nor was it because of the endless great times I had here. Actually, I missed this paper because an event transpired at that time that so shocked me, so annoyed me, I didn't want to be a part of it. So, ANgered me, that I was compelled to tear off a vicious, hate-filled, incoherent tirade about the Yankees. Now despite the fact that it is old news and my ire has been somewhat quelled, I will address the Don Mattingly haircut idiocy.

Don Mattingly, the captain and leader of the Yankees, the man who has played with a handsome back injury, the prestigious look for the Hall of Fame, was benched because... because... because manager Stump Merrill and general manager Gene Michael were envious of Sonny Bono's full head of hair in comparison to their receding hairlines.

Because Michael was upset that Mattingly had requested a trade from a team he had played for eight seasons with almost perennial all-star play, and without a postseason run.

Because management suddenly felt an inexplicable urge to return the Yankees' image to the halcyon days of George Steinbrenner.

No, the correct answer is: because Michael and Merrill are MORONS, MORONS!

Is is true that Merrill's lack of baseball intelligence doesn't justify the situation. Talent and work ethic aside, Mattingly's role as captain was all but stripped during the benching. How are all the promising young players in the Bronx supposed to look up to a leader who is told to forget his role? How are they supposed to keep the team fired up with great expectations.

Still, despite all the madness of the situation, I did expect to have to write something to express my anger. I would instead channel my outrage through the New York media, who would surely blast Yankee management for their aphoristic stance. In fact, I smiled with devilish glee, in pondering all the different ways the tabloids would slice and dice the Yankees.

I hurriedly dropped my 35 cents down as I picked up my copy of The Daily News, where it was, in Bill Madden's column, a debasing, and downright nasty tirade about the latest antics. Unfortunately, and incredibly, however, Madden blasted Mattingly.

Madden, a writer I once respected and admired, said Mattingly was being silly in wanting to keep his own role, that the way he wanted, because of Yankee "tradition." Tradition, Mr. Madden, is how players played Mattingly's way: with hustle, determination and talent.

God, am I glad to be back at work.

Trivia

Question: Whose record did Don Mattingly tie for most home runs in 1988?

Yesterday's answer: Frank Thomas, currently of the Detroit Tigers, threw a shutout at the Kingdome and the first game in new Camden Yards.

SU expects a little respect

Orange coach counting on Eastern ranking

By KENT FISCHER

DO Editor

The Syracuse University women's volleyball team has finally dumped its Rodney Dangerfield image.

According to coach Dan Schulte, the squad has gained national respect after last year's 35-10 campaign.

"I think people fear us now," Schulte said. "We got national respect. We beat enough teams last year to be recognized as a top team in the East."

SU finished last season ranked No. 12 in the region. They also won a school record 24 consecutive matches, after a shaky 11-9 start.

The Orangewomen will open their 1991 season Friday night at 7:30 in Manley Field House against the University of Alabama.

The 1991 Orangewomen will be virtually unrecognizable to SU volleyball fans, according to Schulte.

"This is a younger team than I expected," Schulte said. "I expect to use a lot of everybody. There will be a lot of new faces on the court."

A new style of play as well as the loss of several key players has also helped to transform the look of the Orangewomen. Schulte said he has addressed the loss of his top setters.

SU lost last season's setter and co-captain Sherry Cowling when she transferred to Florida State. A second setter was lost when highly touted freshman Stacy Lee Bollinger also transferred. Bollinger left SU for San Diego State University.

Just when Schulte thought he had recovered from the loss of his top setters, the Orangewomen received a blow when junior Denise Pearman blew out her knee. She will miss the entire season.

When we lost Denise, we lost a lot of upper class depth," Schulte said. "She could play all the positions. We'll really miss her serve, too."

Despite the cold reality of losing three of the team's top players, Schulte thinks the team fired up with great expectations.

"I'm really excited about this squad."

Junior outside hitter Aimee Mask misses a dig in a match last season. Mask is one of three returning starters for the Orangewomen's front line. SU will begin its season Friday at Manley Field House when it hosts the East.

SU's front line will consist of senior co-captain Jessica Paarlberg (6-foot-3) and juniors Annie Parisien (6-1) and Debbie Mitchell (6-2).

Coleman returning to Dome

By ROB GUYETTE

DO Editor

Many Syracusans were disappointed when the New Jersey Nets passed on Billy Owens in June's NBA draft.

That move also cost Orange fans a chance to get an early glimpse of Owens' professional career.

The Nets will play the Philadelphia 76ers in an exhibition game in the Carrier Dome on Saturday, Oct. 26.

Tickets costing $20, $15 and $10 are on sale at the Carrier Dome box office and at all Ticketmaster locations.

The big draw will be the return of SU's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, Derrick Coleman, last year's Rookie of the Year.

Coleman did not attend last year's exhibition game in the Dome because of a contract holdout.

Last year's contest between the Nets and Miami Heat drew 22,956 fans, and promoter Chris Cordes said he expects a bigger crowd this season because the game is on a Saturday night and the highest-priced ticket was knocked down from $22.50. Last year, the game was on a Tuesday.
Making it Happen—Profiles of Student Entrepreneurs

College students are generally in the classroom, in the library, at the newspaper, on the football field, at coffee breaks, etc. Meet these students who are spending time in the classroom and conducting business. Many students are breaking out of the mold and starting businesses at a young age, applying their accounting, management and marketing 101 to "real life" experience.

The Bagel Boys

"The bagels are here! The bagels are here!" It's not the Charge of the Light Brigade, but it's welcome news for the hundreds of Colgate College students who order Sunday breakfast from the New York City Bagel Express. Founded in 1989 by Colgate students Jason Block, Craig Fleischman and Bret Kossman, the service delivers fresh bagels to their customers' doors.

Block, raised in the New York City area, found that authentic, New York style bagels were not to be found in Hamilton, New York. Sensing a market for bagels on campus, he hit upon the idea of a bagel delivery service. Every Sunday, the partners drive to a bakery in Syracuse, NY to pick up the bagels for delivery to nearby Colgate College.

Individuals or groups such as fraternities, buy a "subscription" for weekly fresh bagel delivery. By selling semester-long contracts, for which the customers pay in advance, the partners keep their expenses low and have upfront capital. Recently, the New York City Bagel Express has expanded to offer a special brunch service including cream cheese, orange juice and even smoked salmon spread.

What's next for the 'Bagel Boys'? According to Block, who will graduate with a major in economics in 1992, the possibilities are wide open. Block is writing his thesis on "Privatization and Investment in Poland." Who knows? Perhaps it will soon be possible to get real New York City bagels in Gdansk and Warsaw.

From Campus to the Far East

Brian Bramhall enjoys working simultaneously from his school and his business desks. Bramhall's unique imprinted t-shirt business let him put into action immediately the concepts he learned in class while earning a business and marketing degree at Wichita State University in Kansas.

"I have a lot of stamina and rarely get stuck enough to miss class."

"The more structured the controlling the more staying motivated I am able to do this.

"Inactivity makes me impatient."

"I am equally good at developing broad visions and carrying out gritty tasks."

"I tend to solve problems in complex and confusing situations faster than most people."

"I am more satisfied by my achievements, such as a good grade, than by high status material items, such as a new CD player."

"I seem to appreciate people more for what they can do than for who they are.

"If I got in a fight with a friend the night before a major exam, although I was upset, I would not let it interfere with my studying."

"I like a challenge but am not a gambler."

If you answered true to the above questions, you tend to possess many of the characteristics of the successful entrepreneur. SU expects a little respect
Orange coach counting on Eastern ranking

By KENT FISCHER
DO Editor

The Syracuse University's women's volleyball team has finally dumped its Rodney Dangerfield image. According to coach Dan Schulte, the squad has gained national respect after last year's 35-10 campaign.

"I think people fear us now," Schulte said, "We got national respect. We beat enough teams last year to be recognized as a top team in the East."

SU finished last season ranked No. 12 in the region. They also won a school record 24 consecutive matches, after a shaky 1-9 start.

The Orangewomen will open their 1991 season Friday night at 7:30 in Manley Field House against the University of Alabama.

The 1991 Orangewomen will be virtually unrecognizable to SU volleyball fans, according to Schulte.

"This is a younger team than I expected," Schulte said. "I expect to use a lot of everybody. There will be a lot of new faces on the court."

A new style of play as well as the loss of several key players has also helped to transform the look of the Orangewomen.

SU lost last season's setter and co-captain Sherry Cowling when she transferred to Florida State. A second setter was lost when highly touted freshman Stacy Lee Bollinger also transferred. Bollinger left SU for San Diego State University.

Just when Schulte thought he had recovered from the loss of his top setters, the Orangewomen received a blow when junior Denise Pearson blew out her knee. She will miss the entire season.

"When we lost Denise, we lost a lot of upper class depth," Schulte said. "She could play all the positions. We'll really miss her serve, too."

Despite the cold reality of losing three of the team's top players, Schulte tries to keep the team fired up with great expectations.

"I'm really excited about this squad," Schulte said. "I think people fear us now."

Junior outside hitter Aimee Mank misses a dig in a match last season. Mank is one of three returning starters for the Orangewomen's front line. SU will begin its season Friday at Manley Field House when it hosts the University of Alabama at 7 p.m.

Schulte said, "They have better chemistry than last year despite being younger. The loss of two setters and Denise means we will need more out of our experienced juniors. Our freshmen are really upbeat. I think we're better this year than we were at this time last year."

This year's squad is also impressive in its height, something that typical SU volleyball teams have not had in the past.

The average height of this year's squad members is six feet.

That should make for a solid defensive team that could dominate at the net.

SU's front line will consist of senior co-captain Janice Fournier (6-5), and juniors Annie Parisien (6-1) and Denise Means.

Coleman returning to Dome

By BOB GUYETTE
DO Editor

Many Syracuseans were disappointed when New Jersey Nets passed on Billy Owens in June's NBA draft.

That move also cost Orange fans a chance to get an early glimpse of Owens' professional career.

The Nets will play the Philadelphia 76ers in an exhibition game in the Carrier Dome on Saturday, Oct. 26.

Tickets costing $20, $15 and $10 are on sale at the Carrier Dome box office and all Ticketmaster locations.

The big draw will be the return of SU's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, Derrick Coleman, last year's Bookie of the Year.

Coleman did not attend last year's exhibition game in the Dome because of a contract holdout.

Last year's contest between the Nets and Miami Heat drew 22,328 fans, and promoter Chris Cordes said he expects a bigger crowd this season because this game is on a Saturday night and will have no other scheduled events.

Last year's game was held on a Tuesday night. See COOLMAN Page 23

Former Orangemen center Derrick Coleman will return to Syracuse.

Making it Happen—Profiles of Student Entrepreneurs

The Bagel Boys

The bagels are here! The bagels are here!” It’s not the Charge of the Light Brigade, but it’s welcome news for the hundreds of Colgate College students who order Sunday breakfast from the New York City Bagel Express. Founded in 1989 by Colgate students Jason Block, Craig Fleischman and Bret Kossman, the service delivers fresh bagels to their customers’ doors.

Block, raised in the New York City area, found that authentic New York style bagels were not to be found in Hamilton, New York. Sensing a market for bagels on campus, he hit upon the idea of a bagel delivery service. Every Sunday, the partners drive to a bakery in Syracuse, NY to pick up the bagels for delivery to nearby Colgate College.

Individuals or groups such as fraternities, buy a “subscription” for weekly fresh bagel delivery. By selling semester-long contracts, for which the customers pay in advance, the partners keep their expenses low and have upfront capital. Recently, the New York City Bagel Express has expanded to offer a special brunch service including cream cheese, orange juice and even smoked salmon spread.

What’s next for the ‘Bagel Boys’? According to Block, who will graduate with a major in economics in 1992, the possibilities are wide open. Block is writing his thesis on “Privatization and Investment in Poland.” Who knows? Perhaps it will soon be possible to get real New York City bagels in Gdansk and Warsaw.

From Campus to the Far East

Brian Bramhall enjoys working simultaneously from his school and his business desks. Bramhall’s unique imprinted t-shirt business let him put into action immediately the concepts he learned in class while earning a business and marketing degree at Wichita State University in Kansas.

Bramhall's inspiration came from seeing one of his fraternity brothers buying t-shirts for five dollars and selling them for ten. With the help of an ideal partner, Kathleen Barton, Bramhall took his t-shirt business national by employing twenty-two professional sales reps across the country. He recently opened a store in a local mall and has even expanded to Japan. Part of his marketing strategy is to transform every customer into a walking billboard by printing the company's phone number on each shirt.

One of Bramhall's stumbling blocks was the temptation to do too much, too soon. "You always have ten. Advice from the Experts...

e interviewed the experts to get some advice for would-be entrepreneurs. We spoke with Kimberlee Walsh, President of the International Association for Collegiate Entrepreneurs and Professor Constance Bagley, of Stanford University School of Business and author of Managers and the Legal Environment Strategies for the 21st Century.

What are the first steps to becoming a student entrepreneur?
Professor Bagley: Find a product or service where there are sufficient barriers to entry, so that you won’t be eliminated by someone with a larger company than you.

What should students look for ideas?
Professor Bagley: Interacting with students in technical fields can be helpful. Often they have a wealth of ideas but lack the entrepreneurial drive and know-how to translate ideas into businesses.

Where should students look for ideas?
Ms. Walsh: Interacting with professors, and business people to help facilitate the successful realization of my project? In other words, network.

1. Do I believe in what I am doing? It helps to be dedicated.
2. Would I do it without getting paid, and can I take a risk? The experience is invaluable, but often it takes a while to reap the financial rewards.

How can a student get financing for a business idea?
Professor Bagley: Start with a sound business plan. Persuade people it is good, you can protect it, you have a sense of the competition, and know what it takes to roll-out, etc. Get the plan out to professionals in various sectors, related companies, and venture capital companies.

What is important to build relationships with bankers.

Professor Constance Bagley of Stanford University.

What are some of the pitfalls for students entrepreneurs?
Professor Bagley: 1. Over-optimism about the financial rewards in the early periods.
2. Underestimating the amount of work.
3. Lack of consideration of legal issues like patent and copyright laws.

Learn and Earn—Entrepreneurial & Leadership Experience Pays Off

For Dafna Ciechanover, a position as the Stanford Daily's advertising manager was the key to a successful series of job interviews. While a student at Stanford University, in Stanford, California, Ciechanover ran the office responsible for the entire budget of the completely student-run, student-funded newspaper. Working with her staff of seventeen advertising sales representatives, Ciechanover saw the paper committed to maintaining a professional number of ad pages.

Since it was ultimately her responsibility to placate disgruntled clients, she learned the importance of keeping the customer satisfied. At Barnard College, students have a similar opportunity to gain hands on experience through Barnard Student Agencies, an established student-run organization comprised of a babysitting service, a school store, and a bartending service. Each year, student managers are chosen by the organization to run the businesses. Although these students assume responsibility for an existing business rather than build one from the ground up, their experiences are no less valuable. They are responsible for all phases of the business, including hiring and training staff, troubleshooting, keeping the books and preparing budget reports.

According to Elayne Garrett, Associate Director of Barnard College's Office of Career Services, the college environment provides many opportunities for students to gain entrepreneurial experiences. The student entrepreneur benefits from working within the framework of the college. Students enjoy the support of professors and established organizations such as student business clubs. They also have a built-in client base right on campus. Employers are drawn to students who have already demonstrated a flair for business. As Garrett points out, employers are always looking for students who have demonstrated entrepreneurial and leadership skills. After all, being an entrepreneur is about more than making money. "It's about taking an idea and really making it work, and being excited about it," says Garrett.

Ciechanover is now a brand assistant at Procter and Gamble in Cincinnati, Ohio. During her job search, she found that every single potential employer wanted to know that she could generate ideas, delegate responsibility and follow through. Her job at the Daily proved she could, "make things happen," words she uses at Procter and Gamble.

Most student entrepreneurs agree that the rewards of their experience are worth the hard work. In fact, many students say they would do it even if they were not paid. The day to day experience of running a business cannot be learned in a marketing class. In today's highly competitive job market, that kind of experience can be priceless. The fact that students can earn real money at the same time is just icing on the cake.

If there were ever a time to dare, to make a difference, to embark on something worth doing, it is now. Not for any grand cause, necessarily—but for something that tugs at your heart, something that's your aspiration, something that's your dream.

You owe it to yourself to make your days here count. Have fun. Dig deep. Stretch.

Dream big.

Know, though, that things worth doing seldom come easy. There will be good days. And there will be bad days. There will be times when you want to turn around, pack it up, and call it quits. Those times tell you that you are pushing yourself, that you are not afraid to learn by trying. Persist.

Because with an idea, determination, and the right tools, you can do great things. Let your instincts, your intellect, and your heart guide you. Trust.

Believe in the incredible power of the human mind. Believing something that makes a difference. Dreaming big.

Do something all day.
Do something all afternoon.
Do something with friends.
Do something that will cross your mind.
Do something that will do something new. Believe in the hope of something great.

Anything is possible.
There is only one you.
And you will pass away.
Do it right.
With hard work, determination, and the right tools, ordinary people can do extraordinary things.

We know that, because we’ve seen it. And in the following pages, you can see it, too. Welcome to Macintosh.
What's your dream?
"American products don't do as well in Japan as they should. I'd like to help American companies become more competitive."

What do you do?
"I'm using the Macintosh and a program called EG Word to translate Japanese articles into English for my advanced modern Japanese class. It's a great way to expand my knowledge of the Japanese language and become familiar with the more common phrases and symbols. The hard part was learning more than 2,000 characters in the Japanese symbolic alphabet."

What are you most proud of?
"The fact that I'm able to write, in Japanese, to friends in Japan. I write words out phonetically, and then the software translates everything into symbols.
For me, writing in Japanese without a Macintosh would be impossible."

Why Macintosh?
"I've been able to find applications for everything I want to do."

What's your dream?
"To go to medical school. And beyond that: to travel the world, and help people in other places."

What do you do?
"We're the quickest—and most cost-effective—way to get the word out.
The Ad Agency is a completely student-run advertising agency.
We have 25 student employees. Our clients include student groups, university departments, and off-campus businesses.
We design ads, flyers, and promotions. Our flyer distribution service can get a message out to the whole campus, or pinpoint a specific group.
We use Macintosh for virtually everything associated with running the business: creating ads, doing budgets, and keeping track of expenses and paperwork—even for automatically sending out invoices. We do all of our accounting and general ledger work on the Macintosh. We keep a database of our clients that helps us keep track of all the work we've done for them."

What are you most proud of?
"Our clients really trust us. And our profits are up 124 percent from last year. Beyond that, we feel it's great that the agency offers a way for students to use their business skills and their creative inclinations."

Why Macintosh?
"With a Macintosh, once you've used one program for a little while, you can use any program. Because they all work the same way. In a business like ours, where there are a lot of different students in the office, that makes it a lot easier to train them.
The most important part is that the Macintosh never gets in the way of what you want to do. If we want to use names and addresses from our client database in HyperCard and use them in another program—say, a word processor, so we can send out letters—it's easy. We just copy the information from one program, and paste it into the other. If we want to create a great ad or draw a graphic, we just do it. It's that easy.
We couldn't run our business without it. We've already made plans to buy another Macintosh."
What's your dream?
“I want to design spaces that have great personality.”

What do you do?
“Our assignment for our master’s thesis was to design a dance school. We were given a list of the client’s needs and a site—a nicely landscaped hillside. I wanted to design something that was an expression of the use of space for dancers, and also something that responded to the site. I thought that the building should be designed from the inside out—that the inside was the most important part, and should inspire. I started from scratch. The first part of the process was to work with different volumes, and figure out the best way to take advantage of the site. The important thing was to stay open to different ideas and not get locked into one solution. The Macintosh let me explore a lot of different options. I decided there should be three basic volumes: the performance space, practice spaces, and offices and classrooms.

The next stage was to work out the floor plan and to design the roof. The challenge with dance spaces is that they should be very simple. You should just have four walls, with very few windows because they can be distracting. To create something unique, you need to work very hard.

Macintosh let me constantly switch between two-dimensional floor plans and three-dimensional models. When we were done, we used the Macintosh to write a complete 20-page proposal for our solution, including technical specs.”

Why Macintosh?
“I’d never used a Macintosh before this project. And we used it for everything. We only had seventeen weeks for the project, so I didn’t have much time to learn about the computer. It was a little hard at first, but I picked it up really quickly. Design is a very back-and-forth process. You do something, you look at it, and then you decide what to do to it. You always start with a vision, but you need to work it all out. It’s how you figure it out, and what the details are, that makes the difference. The Macintosh lets you visualize in three dimensions quickly. If you just want to see one perspective, it’s still sometimes faster to do it by hand. But if you want to see many perspectives, or see many ideas, it’s much better to use a Macintosh. It helps you try more options in the early stages, when you can have the biggest effect on a building.

With Macintosh, I could walk through my building. It’s the closest thing to building it.”
It's easy to use.

In the beginning, there was the computer.
And it was confusing.
Confusing to set up, confusing to learn, and confusing to use.
So at Apple, we decided to make a new kind of computer—an easy-to-use computer. Before we designed it, we did extensive research on how human beings think, learn, read, communicate, remember, and understand, as well as how they interact with technology and machines.

We took what we learned and created Macintosh—the personal computer designed to work the way people work. It was the world's first intuitive computer. And it was quickly recognized as a major breakthrough in personal computing.

You don't have to read computerese.
Do you recognize the images to the left? If so, you can use a Macintosh. That's because the images, or icons, you see on a Macintosh screen look just like everyday objects you already use. The report you write is represented by an icon that looks like a report. The file folder you store your report in has an icon that looks like a file folder. And the trash can you use to throw away files has an icon that looks like a trash can.

You don't have to be a science major to set it up.
There are just three simple steps to set up a Macintosh:
1. Plug in the keyboard, monitor, mouse, and power cord.
2. Flip the "on" switch.

It can grow with you.
This week you're majoring in philosophy; next week it's nuclear physics. After all, no one knows exactly what the future will bring. That's why millions of students have found that investing in a Macintosh is a smart move. Because Macintosh can help you do whatever you do—better. And if, come tomorrow, you find that you want to do something different, no problem. It's easy to upgrade your Macintosh to help you rise to the challenge.

12 It's great for college and beyond.
Doing your work better, faster, and more creatively is also a plus in the working world—and that's precisely why Apple Macintosh computers are used in 74 percent of Fortune 1000 companies.*

13 It's what you'd expect from Apple.
Apple consistently produces innovative technology that sets industry standards. That's why the features that set Macintosh apart today will probably be found on other computers tomorrow. Well, perhaps a few years from tomorrow.

14 Whatever you do, you can use Macintosh to do it better.
Thousands of programs are available for the Macintosh, to help you take on anthropology, zoology, and everything in between.

15 People love it for the same reasons Abhi does.
"I don't read manuals—never have. But I use all the most popular programs. The menus for Macintosh programs are so similar, you just say to yourself, 'This one can't be that different.' If you make a mistake, you just use the Undo command and you're right back where you started. And you don't have to memorize any fancy commands, such as Control-F1 or Shift-F7. Use a Mac once and you can come back years later and use it again. It's like riding a bike."

Why do people
It lets you work with others.

Whether you need to share a file with a friend or connect to a network, Macintosh makes it easy. You'll find that Macintosh computers become even more powerful when you connect them together and use them to work with other people.

17 Macintosh lets you work with disks from different computers.

Every Macintosh is equipped with an Apple SuperDrive*, a unique floppy disk drive that can read from and write to not only Macintosh disks, but also MS-DOS and QEM disks created on IBM and IBM-compatible computers.

18 You can use software from other computers.

SoftPC from Insignia Solutions allows you to run MS-DOS applications on your Macintosh computer. You can copy text and graphics from the MS-DOS application and paste them into a Macintosh application.

19 You can connect to your school's library.

At many schools, you can use your Macintosh and a modem to connect directly to the library, and do things such as browse through the card catalog—when the library is closed.

20 You can connect to information services.

Computer information services, such as CompuServe, Prodigy, and America Online, are only a phone call away. You can use these services to get concert tickets, make airline reservations, join on-line discussions, and more.

21 You can connect to your school's minicomputer.

With Macintosh, you can send assignments, gain access to software you need for a class, and receive lecture notes, class schedules, and other information—right from your own room.

22 It's a breeze to connect Macintosh to a network.

There are only three simple steps to connect a Macintosh to a network. First, use an inexpensive LocalTalk* cable to connect your Macintosh to another Macintosh. Second, select the Chooser from the Apple menu and select the AppleTalk network. Third, type in your name. That's it! The Macintosh can now communicate with other Macintosh computers, and install and run software programs.

23 An independent study confirms that it's the computer of choice.

A recent study by Diagnostic Research, Inc., an independent research firm, asked computer users and MIS managers (people who are responsible for computers in large corporations) to compare Apple Macintosh computers with MS-DOS computers running Microsoft Windows 3.0. The chart to the right shows which computer system was rated higher in each area. As you can see, Macintosh is the clear favorite.

24 It's backed by a company that's here to stay.

It started with two guys in a garage. Now Apple Computer, Inc., is a Fortune 100 company with more than five billion dollars in annual sales.

25 There's a Macintosh for everyone—and every budget.

Whether you're a computer novice or a power user, you'll find a Macintosh that meets your needs—and your budget, especially with the special student pricing available from your authorized Apple reseller.

26 Macintosh prices are lower than ever.

Not only are prices lower than ever, but you may also qualify for financing—making it even easier to get your Macintosh now.
What's your dream?

"I want to design products that add to the quality of our lives—things that celebrate how we live. The world is becoming a more and more homogenized place, and products are becoming more and more alike. I want to find a way to create products that are mass-produced, yet look like they were created by a craftsman, not a machine."

What do you do?

"This quarter, I wrote a Macintosh program that changes the design and manufacturing process in some fundamental ways. First, it's highly interactive, which promotes greater exploration in the design phase. Second, it randomizes the manufacturing phase, allowing for variations among the finished products. Right now, I'm using this program to create spoons—although it could be tailored to create car fenders, bicycle seats, bowls, or anything else. The program randomly chooses from different sizes, scales, and iterations of shapes that are spoonlike—and presents the designer with options. Every time the designer runs the program, it creates a usually different spoon. This way, designers can explore possibilities that they may not have conjured up in their own minds.

The program is also capable of introducing randomness to the manufacturing process. Traditionally, when it comes to computer-aided design and manufacturing, designers usually have to give very precise, completely planned commands to drive metal-cutting equipment. This program lets a designer specify loose parameters for a product. Then the computer randomly generates variations within those parameters, and automatically generates the code to drive the metal-cutting machine. The idea is that manufacturers can make a product using advanced mass-production manufacturing techniques—but still make each item completely unique."

What are you most proud of?

"I'm really proud of the people in my lab. I'm proud of everything we create that works. We continue to learn and build on our successes. We're still ten years away from being able to use chips in humans, but we're inspired by the progress we're making."

Why Macintosh?

"In 1985, I bought one of the first Macintosh computers when I was pursuing my master's degree. I wrote my whole master's report on it. Macintosh lets you be creative—and it lets you easily take advantage of the best programs: writing, drawing, and spreadsheet programs.

Since then, I've been convinced it's the best way to go. You can use it to help you in virtually everything you do as a scientist. We design silicon chips on it. We simulate how chips perform and spot problems before we actually build them. We use it to control the scientific instruments that take measurements of the chips and nerves we test in the lab. Everything from getting the data during experiments to analyzing that data, from graphing the results to publishing our findings—it all happens on the Macintosh."

What are you most proud of?

"I'm proud of Macintosh. I've had this idea to introduce randomness, or variation, to the design and manufacturing process for a while now. But you know, it wouldn't have gone beyond an idea if I didn't have a Macintosh. I think it's amazing that there are tools you can use to do something like this. You don't have to be a technician or a mathematician—all you have to have is an idea. Macintosh lets me apply my technical background in a very technical world and get very concrete results!"
Four O'Clock.

Too late for lunch. Too early for dinner. The assignment is due tomorrow—perhaps it's finally time to get started. But first a short nap. 5:00. Alarm goes off; you hit the snooze alarm till 5:30. Then dinner. The usual meatloaf. 6:30. TV till 7:30. Okay, now it's time to start. Where's the assignment? What was the topic? Nixon? Nietzsche? 8:27. Topic found: Nationalism. 11:15. When does the library close? Too late, the loan desk closed at 11:00. Is there a plan? Is there hope? How will you get it all done?
The Paper.
Deep in the archives of the University of Bologna in Italy—the world's oldest university—is a stack of precious documents. Contained within them are the brilliant thoughts and theories of 17th-century scholars.

In essence, they're papers—about history, mathematics, the sciences, life, and love.

Agonized and laboriously written, these documents have profound historical importance. They are proof positive that the paper has been the bane of college life, practically from the beginning of academic time.

But we've learned a lot in the nine hundred years that have elapsed since. Here are some of the best tips on how to get your ideas down on paper—in a polished, presentable form—and garner the great grades your ideas deserve.

Getting Started

The most important part of getting started is to get started. Experts agree: Don't procrastinate. At the very least, make sure you read over the topic assignment well before the deadline—if you don't take a chance to research or write until much later. Let your mind ponder the topic while you're doing other things.

As soon as you have time, narrow your topic. There are endless varieties of papers, they divide into two major types: assignments where the professor chooses the topic for you, and assignments where you get to choose the topic. In the case of the former: it's vital that you understand the question posed so you can answer it directly. Don't hesitate to see your professor if you don't understand or need clarification.

Getting to choose your own topic poses the opposite problem: You may understand your topic, but your professor might not. Take time to find a more appropriate topic.

The Research

Know thy subject. If you don't, research it. Like a good lawyer trying to build a case, you're trying to assemble the relevant facts, dates, sources, and quotes that will make a compelling argument.

Some advice:

• Give yourself plenty of time to discover great sources. The relevant tips here is to allow enough time to do a thorough job—six or eight hours for a short paper, and as much as fifty hours for a major term paper.

• Start by reviewing the library. In the case of the topic, you may want to comb through books, academic journals, newspapers, magazines, transcripts of speeches, or video footage and newspapers.

• Don't stop with conventional sources; rather, interview experts on the topic, use a word processing program to outline my paper, and take notes on the most relevant and important information. And keep all of your research in one place: your computer.

• Then look through all the research done. This is the proof for your paper. See how the facts relate, and which quotes and sources help to support your argument. You may want to create a new file on your computer that contains just the quotes and facts you’ll use in your final paper.

• Write an outline, being as detailed as you think will be useful. You'll want to break up the body of the paper into several subsections that deal with different aspects of the topic—each subsection can build on the one before, or can introduce a new idea that proves your thesis statement. Either way, you should decide which quotes or facts to use, and where they’ll go. In your outline, include the first few lines of a quote, or the name of the source or the person who said it. That way, when you begin writing the paper, you’ll know which quotes to paraphrase or place in your final paper.

The Outline

An organized mind produces organized writing. To get your mind organized, outline your paper.

Contrary to what you might think, there's no one right way to outline a paper. There are actually many useful outline formats.

What’s most important is that you do whatever you need to do to get your thoughts in order. Some students create very detailed outlines; others come down only the skeleton or the main ideas of their paper.

Whether you choose the former method, the latter, or something in between, you should break your outline into three main parts, which reflect the three main parts of a paper: the introduction (where you’ll state your thesis, or opinion, about the topic), the body (where you’ll explain and build a case for your arguments), and the conclusion (where you’ll pull everything together and summarize your argument).

Tips:

• Start by formulating your thesis—the main opinion you have, or the position you’ll take, about the topic. There will be plenty of time to polish your thesis later, but you should determine the basic argument you’ll like to make. Where's the point of your paper? And why should anyone care?

• Be neat and stay organized. You'll want to take notes, and leave a clear "research trail" as you go. Be choosy: Take notes on the most relevant and important information. And keep all of your research in one place: your computer.

• Then look through all the research you’ve done. This is the proof for your paper. See how the facts relate, and which quotes and sources help to support your argument. You may want to create a new file on your computer that contains just the quotes and facts you’ll use in your final paper.

Some advice on selecting a topic:

• Choose something that's relevant to your course—this is not a free-for-all. Pick a topic that integrates the material you've heard in lecture with what you've learned outside of class.

• Pick a topic that's "double." That is, make sure it's not too narrow or too obscure or too broad. You should be able to address the topic in the number of pages you've been assigned.

• Select a topic you're interested in. Passion and enthusiasm are the two most important ingredients for success. They'll lead you to better papers. Pick a topic that will show you what you know, what you think about, and what interests you.

Somewhere in the beginning of your paper, usually in the first paragraph, you'll want to clearly and directly state your particular point of view on the topic.

Writing the thesis of your paper is perhaps the most challenging part of the work. You want it to be clear and concise, but also thought-provoking. Remember that the person who reads your paper is likely to be reading thinly, and you may even have a hundred other essays as well. To get noticed, you need to grab the reader's attention. Your thesis can help you do that.

Take the time to write and revise your thesis until it fully captures the complexity of your thoughts and ideas.

When you return, rewrite the thesis and make any necessary adjustments, before embarking on the rest of your paper.

Some questions to ask as you review your thesis statement:

• Is it clear? Will the reader understand the topic and the position you're taking?

• Is it compelling? Does it convince the reader that your paper will be interesting, worthwhile to read?

• Is it original? Does your thesis go beyond the obvious, beyond what has been said before? There's too much redundant clutter in this world. Be original.

"One of the great things about the Macintosh is how easily you can write and then revise your writing. I spend a lot of time working on the introduction of a paper, revising until I'm really happy with it. I think Macintosh encourages you to do better work because you can experiment—keep the good ideas, and throw out the bad."

When you return, the thesis and my notebook will already be there (presumably waiting, along with the rest of your essay—now that you've finished the first paragraph, you can sit back and take a breath). Now that you've written the thesis for your paper and have an outline for creating the rest of it, it's time to focus on the body of your paper.

The important thing here is to block out a chunk of time on your calendar to write—at least an hour or two for each page of text you hope to produce. Turn off the ringer on your phone and send it away. Now is the time to get to work.

Have the courage to cut and throw out the bad. Put your paper aside. And reward yourself.

Some advice:

• Don't obsess, just write. Concentrate on getting the ideas down on paper; you can perfect the wording later.

• Connect your ideas. They should flow from one to the next. Concentrate on the segment you're making, and the words will come naturally.

• Use placeholders if you don't have the exact wording. If you can't seem to flesh out a particular part of the argument or the right words, or because you find you need to do more research—put in a placeholder and return later to finish it. (It's rumored that Ernest Hemingway ended each day's writing in the middle of a sentence, so he'd have a clear place to begin the next day.)

"I have a Macintosh with a color monitor. I try to write the first draft quickly. Sometimes I find the right words the first time through. Other times, I write a paragraph and I won't be very happy with it. So I'll put it in a different color, say red, which reminds me to come back to it later and work on it. Sometimes I get really ambitious and use a lot of different colors: red for things I want to rework, blue for things that need more research, green for things that need more proof."
choose a Macintosh

A computer is a substantial investment. Choosing the right one is a complicated task. That's because it's a decision that's made up of many, many smaller decisions. Should you get a 4, 6, or 8 megabytes of memory? Should you get a color monitor or monochrome? Should you get a 1.44 megabyte floppy drive? And so on. The list could go on and on. All are important questions and are sometimes tough to answer.

To make intelligent choices, you'll need to determine what you really need—and then get the last word on all the options you have.

We've done a lot of hard work for you by putting most of the information you need in one place: this page. It's a good place to start, so let's begin.

Who Macintosh is the right choice for me?

Charmer's choice: one more time than not a Macintosh will meet your needs. That's because it's a decision that's made up of many, many smaller decisions; you can tailor the Macintosh to your needs.

Both decisions depend on what you'll be using your computer for.

If you plan to do primarily word processing and simple graphics, sound, or multimedia display can be your needs. Then the Classic or Macintosh SE/30 comes with a built-in, a built-in keyboard, and a color monitor in the box. The screen is about 14 inches from top to bottom, and lets you work with the color monitor.

Some people prefer a larger screen. A number of that would be a 30. It's one of those people, if you want to work with a monitor. The Macintosh SE/30 comes with a built-in, 14-inch monitor. If you have a television, Apple has built-in, 14-inch, picture-in-picture, at least, that you should consider.

Macintosh SE/30 gives you the performance of Apple IIc in a compact case. It's small enough to fit on a desk, and big enough to make working on it enjoyable.

What type of monitor do I need?

A monitor is an important piece of equipment that you can use. It's the piece that shows you what you're doing with your computer. There are many options to choose from. The Apple IIc, Macintosh SE/30, and Macintosh SC come with built-in, built-in, built-in, and Macintosh II. The IIc comes with a built-in, 14-inch monitor. The IIc has the advantage that it's built-in, built-in, and built-in, the IIc is built-in, built-in, and built-in, on a desk, and big enough to make working on it enjoyable.

What type of keyboard do I need?

The keyboard is an important piece of equipment that you can use. It's the piece that shows you what you're doing with your computer. The Apple IIc, Macintosh SE/30, and Macintosh II come with built-in, built-in, built-in, and Macintosh SC come with built-in, built-in, built-in, and built-in, keyboards. The IIc has the advantage that it's built-in, built-in, and built-in, on a desk, and big enough to make working on it enjoyable.

What do I need to make my Macintosh work with MS-DOS computers?

The Macintosh is one of the most compatible computers you can buy. It's a small world in which you can make your Macintosh work with MS-DOS computers. It's a small world in which you can make your Macintosh work with MS-DOS computers.

If you plan to do more than just talk in a word processor or spreadsheet, you'll need a modulator. If you plan to do more than just talk in a word processor or spreadsheet, you'll need a modulator.

How much memory do I need?

A computer's working parts—your hard disk, floppy disk, and RAM—are the key to its performance. The more RAM you have, the faster your computer will run. When you're choosing a computer, you'll need to consider the amount of memory you'll need to get the most out of your computer. The amount of memory you'll need depends on the type of work you do on your computer.

What's the bottom line on storage?

Typically, on the hard disk drive inside your Macintosh, you'll store the programs you use most often. The Macintosh SE/30 gives you the performance of Apple IIc on a desk, and big enough to make working on it enjoyable.

How much storage do I need?

Storage is a computer's memory. It's the place where you keep your programs and data. The more storage you have, the more programs and data you can store. The Macintosh SE/30 gives you the performance of Apple IIc on a desk, and big enough to make working on it enjoyable.

Where do I go to get the best deal?

Just by looking at the Apple IIc, Macintosh SE/30, and Macintosh II, you can see that they're all similar computers. They're all very similar to each other.

To take advantage of special sales and promotions, all you have to do is talk to your Macintosh dealer and find out what they have in stock. You'll find that they have a variety of Apple IIc, Macintosh SE/30, and Macintosh II in stock. You'll find that they have a variety of Apple IIc, Macintosh SE/30, and Macintosh II in stock.
create graphs & charts

Some things can't be said with words alone.
Sometimes you need more to make your point.
Charts and graphs can help to illustrate an idea, show trends, and otherwise make sense of a disorderly world.

Nice, you say. But you're probably thinking that creating them would be complicated.

Not really.
There are many easy-to-use programs that can help. This page, for example, shows one of the kinds of charts you can produce using these programs and a Macintosh. There are three basic types of programs you can use:

Spreadsheet programs.
Almost all Macintosh spreadsheet programs—including Lotus 1-2-3 for Macintosh—offer charting capabilities. These programs are particularly good for turning financial, scientific, or engineering data into bar charts, line charts, or pie charts. If you do have to choose what kind of chart you want, and if Macintosh will create it automatically. You can even use these programs to create three-dimensional charts.

Charging programs.
These programs—such as Excel and DeltaGraph—were written specifically for creating charts. In general, they can create an even wider variety of chart types than spreadsheet programs can. But both Excel and DeltaGraph are especially good for scientific and engineering graphics and charts.

Drawing and painting programs.
These programs are designed for drawing illustrations or diagrams that are unique to your work and don't involve preexisting formats. Celsius MacArt, Claris Draw, Adobe FreeHand, and Adobe Illustrator are some programs you might consider.

Some advice on how to create charts.

Pictures are worth a thousand words.
Each chart or graphic should have a clear purpose—and only one purpose. Are you trying to compare two things? Show a trend? Summarize a concept? Show a correlation?

After you determine what you want a chart to convey, assemble all the data you have to show the right type of chart. Some of the basic types are shown at left.

Keep it simple.
When creating a chart, try to limit the number of fonts you use to two or three. Avoid using many different patterns for bars and adding extra lines or decoration. Focus on the data, not on the design.

Give each chart a meaningful title.
By labeling the chart, you can tell your reader what it's about. If the chart is complex, you may want to provide a main title for the chart, and below it add a subtitle that explains more. If it would help, you may also want to write a short caption to sell the reader even more.

Give your source.
Often readers will want to know where you got your data. In small type—6 points or so—cite where you got your data. In general, you'll want to limit the number of fonts you use in a paper to two or three. Using more than that is likely to make your paper look like a hodgepodge instead of a cohesive whole.

Focus on the data, not on the design.

Let's say you've been working on an assignment—perhaps a paper on the meaning of life. A problem set on the theory of relativity. A plan for your next great invention. You've spent days, weeks, maybe even months working on it.

It is—quite obviously—something you care a lot about. And you want it to look good.
How do you make your Macintosh computer help?
When you use a Macintosh, you're in complete control of how your work looks. You can easily change fonts, create graphics and charts, and move text around on the page.

And unlike the work you do on most other computers, what you create on the screen of a Macintosh is precisely what you'll see when you print. That's a huge advantage when you're trying to create something that makes sense and looks good.

Preparing your document:

Fonts, type sizes, and margins.
Goal number one: Make your document legible and logical starting with the fonts you choose. Thousands of fonts are available for the Macintosh. Here's some advice on how to use them to your best advantage:

In most cases, you'll want to use a serif font—Times, Palatine, ITC Bookman J, perhaps even use these programs to create three-dimensional charts.

In general, you'll want to limit the number of fonts you use in a paper to two or three. Using more than that is likely to make your paper look like a hodgepodge instead of a cohesive whole.

To make your paper easy to read, use 12-point type. If you have more text than you have space, you might consider using 10-point type, doing that will let you fit more text into the margins. On a Macintosh, you can do this work on a Macintosh computer. Check your library or your computer cluster, even your dorm. Some colleges let students print documents for free of charge; more offer printing for a fee, usually between $0.20 and $1.00 a page.

Your local copy store.
Many copy stores—such as Kinko's, Copycat, Krishna Copy, and Zeta Copy, to name a few—offer laser printing at reasonable rates. Look in your phone book under "Desktop Publishing," "Photocopying," or "Copying" to find the closest copy store.

A friend's printer. Not necessarily the best way to keep your files, but a good option if you have only an occasional paper or assignment to print.

Get your own Apple printer.
In an ideal world, of course, you'd have your own printer, and you wouldn't have to count on the library or the copy shop to be open. After all, late-night printing seems to be the rule, not the exception, in college.

Apple has a full line of printers you can choose from. Three of these, particularly well suited to the Macintosh, are the Apple LaserWriter 6L, the Personal LaserWriter LT, and the Personal LaserWriter PCL. They all deliver exceptional printed results—at affordable prices.

What's your dream?
"To be part of a strong global program of space expansion."

What do you do?
"I'm the art director of Release magazine. Release is a weekly entertainment magazine about concerts, movies, plays, parties, and restaurants that goes out to 10,000 students on our campus. Basically, I'm responsible for every aspect of the magazine—how the pages are laid out, from how illustrations look to what goes on the front cover. We only have five days to put together each issue. I usually get stories that have been written on a Macintosh with Microsoft Word software. On Mondays and Tuesdays, I do the layout and build the magazine using Adobe PageMaker—adding photos, headlines, and graphics and illustrations. I've gone with Adobe PageMaker, Photoshop, and Adobe Illustrator. On Tuesday nights we send the files out to be printed on a Linotronic. We get the magazine ready at the newsstand; it goes to the printer, and we have printed magazines Friday morning, just in time for the weekend."

What are you most proud of?
"I'm most proud of the improvements we've made, in terms of the way the magazine looks. It's the most creative thing I do every week that I can point to and say: Hey, I did this."

Why Macintosh?
"Macintosh is incredibly easy to use. A lot of times we like to expand our capabilities—say: I want to do the headlines in a totally new way—so we get a new program. I can use it right away. But if I wanted to do it on an IBM computer, I'd have to learn the new operating system, and I'd have to spend 800 million little, tiny codes, and learn how to work using all those IBM tricks. Macintosh is so simple and straightforward—and at the same time, such a powerful computer. Macintosh can run the best program out there."

Rally promotes rape awareness

By ALEX PIGMAN
DO Contributing Writer

Under the blazing mid-day sunshine yesterday, Students Concerned About Rape Education rallied to inform students of the history and risks of rape at Syracuse University.

The group gathered on the steps of Hendricks Chapel to incite student participation in anti-rape activities and put an end to sexual violence and harassment.

"If you are ever in your dorm and hear someone scream, go check it out," S.C.A.R.E.D. member Dionne Roberts said.

"A hundred times you might make a fool of yourself, but there may be that once when you save someone's life." Nancy Rhodes, assistant to the director of the SU Women's Studies Program, stressed that faculty members want students to feel safe on campus.

If the faculty here want you all to be safe and make of them on your side," she said.

Students added that if students spend all their time worrying about safety, they "can't concentrate on learning anything else now, our time would be wasted.

SU Security Officer Mike Byrne speaking at the rally supported S.C.A.R.E.D.'s efforts.

"Even though SU Security cannot carry out an immediate check-up or neighborhood watch, Byrne said he is pleased to see students participate in their own safety.

"We receive many phone calls every night," he said.

Paul Ditz, S.C.A.R.E.D. president, asked why members of the university administration who were invited to the rally did not attend.

"The question we have to ask each other is why the administrators who invited us to come aren't here blowing their own horns," he said.

"Students need to realize that 55 percent of rapes are by acquaintances and not by black men that jump out of bushes," S.C.A.R.E.D. member Tamia Greene said.

Greene frequently took the speaker's stand, calling for professors to release their students to attend the rally, with scant results.

"Rapists are men, rapists don't care, and rapists do not want to stop," Alcoff said.

S.C.A.R.E.D. will hold a general information session in the Noble Room in Hendricks Chapel on Sept. 3 at 7:15 p.m.

Spectrum stays afloat despite financial woes

By MICHELLE BERKOVER
DO Staff Writer

Reports that financial troubles have caused the imminent closing of Spectrum are definitely not true, according to general manager Eric Duenwald.

"We've had a tough couple of years, but we are on the road to recovery," said Duenwald, who became manager in May.

Spectrum is a branch of Campus Conveniences and rents appliances to students. It also contains a travel center, a video-rental and record store, and a florist shop.

Duenwald said Spectrum is still paying for rental items they purchased in 1986 and 1987, when the economy was in better shape.

"This year we decided to make it a real business instead of just a fun place to work," he said.

In previous years, he said, Spectrum has been very lax about controlling shrinkageank and other problems linked to its financial difficulties. Last spring, employees were caught in breaking customers' receipts before allowing them to exit the store.

Store installs new system

A new security system installed this year was paid for by Student Government Association and Graduate Student Association funding.

Duenwald said SGA funds are not usually used for such business-related needs, but all the money being lost made security this year's biggest concern.

"Funding shouldn't be used to run the business, but it should be kept," he said.

Duenwald said the store was a branch of Campus Conveniences, and that it has been paying for rental items purchased in 1986 and 1987, when the economy was in better shape.

"This year we decided to make it a real business instead of just a fun place to work," he said.

DIPA program suffers from low enrollment

By PAULA CHRISTIAN
DO Staff Writer

Enrollment in the Division of International Programs Abroad for the fall of 1991 has dropped 40 percent from last year, due in part to the Persian Gulf War, according to Nirelle Gaison, DIPA director.

The decrease in student enrollment at Syracuse University, coupled with the economic recession, has also contributed to lowering DIPA's enrollment, Gaison said.

"The bulk of the students who participate in our DIPA programs live in the Northeast part of the country," said Robert Yoshioka, DIPA associate director. "Since this area has been one of the hardest hit by the recession, many families do not have the extra funds to allow their children to go abroad.

The decreased enrollment will not hurt DIPA programs for the fall 1991 or spring 1992 semesters, Gaison said. "The decrease in enrollment will actually benefit students going abroad this semester," she said. "We are expecting smaller classes, more personal attention by the faculty and many group excursions and field trips," she said.

Enroll or eliminate

"It is possible that if DIPA enrollment does not increase, they will be forced to eliminate some programs," Gaison said. "We are in a situation where if enrollment will not go back up again, students from DIPA enrollment has been steadily increasing for the past 10 years and we are optimistic for the future years.

"We are already seeing a much better student response so far this semester," said Yoshioka. "Many more students are stopping by for applications and for information.

The program is one of the oldest, largest, and most highly recognized international study programs in the country," Yoshioka said.

"We accept students from 150 universities across the country," he said.

Students applying to study abroad do not need to know a foreign language, Gaison said, and she recommends that students have at least a 3.5 grade point average.

"The most important factors are the student's motivation and interest, and an independent streak," Yoshioka said.

The deadline date for students interested in studying abroad for the spring 1992 semester is Oct. 15.

Same tuition

Tuition for students enrolled in the program is exactly the same as campus tuition.

Nation
Attempts at bans jump 20 percent
Conservative groups backed by parents this year sought to ban books ranging from "The Grapes of Wrath" to "Little Red Riding Hood" in what a civil liberties group called an epidemic of censorship in school libraries.

The group People for the American Way presented its 11th annual report Wednesday, claiming 264 incidents of what it called attacks on the freedom to learn in the 1990-91 school year. The figures included 228 attempts at censorship. The figures represent an increase of about 20 percent over 1989-90.

Silver fillings safe, medical committee says
The American Dental Association said fillings made from silver tooth fillings into the mouth is too small to pose a threat to dental patients, the National Institutes of Health concluded yesterday.

Mercury is contained in the silver amalgam used for tooth fillings and has been a common material used by dentists for over 150 years. In recent years, some researchers have said that the material can result in serious side effects as a result of giving out mercury, which is absorbed by the body.

EPA proposes laws to regulate CFCs
The Environmental Protection Agency today proposed rules to carry out a federal law requiring the recycling of chlorofluorocarbons, gases used as coolants in automobile air conditioners.

The proposal is intended to help protect the earth's ozone layer, which blocks ultraviolet rays that can cause skin cancer. Service stations and automobile repair shops would be required to recapture the chlorofluorocarbons for reuse whenever air conditioners are repaired.

Last spring, the EPA estimated the ozone loss over the northern United States since 1978 at about five percent. The agency said the result could be an additional 200,000 deaths from skin cancer in the United States over the next 50 years.

State
Prison population hits high number
New York's prison population grew faster over the past five years than the inmate population of 40 other states. The number of prisoners in state institutions rose by 59.1 percent between 1985 and 1990. According to the U.S. Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics only eight states had a higher percentage increase.

The popularity of drugs is the main reason for the rise in the prison population, the Justice Department's statistics show.

"You can define the entire prison system in a word," said James Pateau, a spokesman for the State Division of Criminal Justice Services.

"Traditionally, robbery and burglary were the main crimes of commitment. Not anymore," Pateau said.

Runaway subway kills conductor on crack
A New York subway train hurtled out of control and derailed just north of Union Square Wednesday, killing five passengers and injuring 215.

The operator of the speeding train, Robert E. Ray, was charged with manslaughter and two counts of second-degree murder. A medical examiner said that the train approached the station at five times the allowed speed.

The driver was not injured in the crash. He faces five counts of second-degree murder, a felony that carries a maximum penalty of five to 15 years in prison.

This was the third worst accident in the history of the city's subway system.

A vial containing traces of crack cocaine was found near the operator's cab. However, he denied being under the influence of cocaine, law enforcement officials said.

Ray refused to submit to a urinalysis by the Transit Authority, which can demand one in the wake of an accident.

Professor, student work to curb famine
Dr. Edwin H. White, professor of forestry at State University College of Environmental Science and Forestry, will visit Zambia this summer to help battle that country's famine.

White and his graduate student Robson Mwanga conducted research in Agro-Forestry to help revitalize Zambia's soil. Agro-Forestry involves the combination of traditional farming of food crops with the planting of multi-purpose trees.

The trees would provide fuel and food while at the same time allow the soil to receive more nutrients for future farming.

White said in Zambia 99 percent of the land grown is used for fuel and people often have to walk 10 miles from their huts each week to gather this fuel.

This process is not only difficult, but it is also harmful to the soil, which is trampled and stripped of vegetation by the people on their hikes.

White and Mwanga are trying to determine what species of trees would be best for the tasks of revitalizing and preserving the Zambian soil.

They will report on the project at the American Forestry Association conference on agro-forestry in Denver next October.

Eggers reminisces on growth, conflict

By KATHERINE DROUIN
DO Editor

Syracuse University’s former Chancellor Melvin A. Eggers once had a fascinating office.

However, the wood-paneled room in the Tolley Administration Building was bare and devoid of everything except essential furniture and papers toward the end of August.

The bookshelves and memorabilia had been removed or sat in corners, waiting for the chancellor’s new office in Bird Library. A worn nameplate on his desk declared simply MELVIN A. EGGERS.

The office was emptied in anticipation of Eggers’ Aug. 19 retirement, when he made way for the next chancellor, Kenneth A. Shaw.

As Eggers spoke, the windowspaned slightly slimmer in their frames because of the construction taking place right beneath his office — evidence of the continuing legacy of construction enacted during his term.

A huge bookshelf covered an entire wall. “It was a very, very limited means,” he attended college part-time for several years after high school. After receiving his bachelor’s degree from Indiana University in 1941, he was drafted into the Navy, where he served during World War II. After the war, he completed his doctoral dissertation at Yale University.

Economics paved the way.

Economics was the path that led Eggers to SU in 1959. Describing his childhood as one “very, very limited means,” he attended college part-time for several years after high school. After receiving his bachelor’s degree from Indiana University in 1941, he was drafted into the Navy, where he served during World War II. After the war, he completed his doctoral dissertation at Yale University.

Eggers’ goals of modernizing the campus soon became evident, and he is now perhaps best known for the nearly 30 construction projects enacted during his term.

Former Chancellor Melvin A. Eggers sits behind his desk discussing university policy.

On the economic development of Japan from 1989 to 1990.

From there, he was hired as an associate professor of economics at the Maxwell School of Public Affairs and Citizenship. Ten years later, he was named the department’s chairman; 10 years after that, he was named vice chancellor for academic affairs and provost.

One year later, in 1971, he was named chancellor and president of SU. “It’s been a good ride,” Eggers said. When Eggers became chancellor, his first goal was to steady the university as the storm of anti-war protests passed through the campus.

The general condition of higher education was in turmoil,” he said. “It was difficult to think of many goals other than stabilizing the situation.”

Modernizing SU

Eggers’ goals of modernizing the campus soon became evident, and he is now perhaps best known for the nearly 30 construction projects enacted during his term.

Eggers said he simply continued the development of SU that was started during Chancellor William P. Tolley’s tenure in the 1950s.

“We got back on the track,” Eggers said.

Though Eggers said he doesn’t want to be remembered solely for the building described the projects with pride. “If you go into the Hall of Languages, you know that the interior is not the original, but the exterior is,” he said. “That says something about what we’re doing — it’s a hollowing out but keeping the basic character.”

As the university developed, the students and faculty needed more facilities, and the university responded to that need. It’s not like we put up a building and decided what we were going to do with it,” he said. “I don’t want people to think of the structure as a monument; a monument has no internal use.

“The Washington Monument, you can’t walk in it, but that’s about it. We build facilities in which activity can occur. In that sense we can call it symbolic or functional, but it’s really going on.

just call him ‘Mel’

The name Mel Eggers has become a symbol of SU administration to students. “I’m not sure people usually referred to ‘Mel’ when speaking of tuition increases or the latest campus controversy,” Eggers said. His position also helped Eggers to become a ready target in the name of the university.

“I don’t take it personally,” Eggers was quoted as saying. “I don’t think they hate me.”

And he sees angry protesters demonstrating on campus.

Eggers, SU’s career spans forty years

Melvin A. Eggers was elected Syracuse University’s ninth chancellor and president just prior to 1971, following a four-month service as acting chancellor.

An economist, Eggers joined the SU faculty in 1959. Ten years later, he assumed the chairmanship of the economics department, serving in that capacity for 10 years.

In 1970, Eggers was appointed provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Before completing his doctoral studies, Eggers served in the U.S. Navy as a language officer. Following World War II, he became an economic officer for the U.S. War Department in Tokyo.

He remains fluent in Japanese and has maintained a life-long interest in the Pacific Rim through participation in seminars, commissions to study linkages between American higher education and that of the Far East.

During his tenure, Eggers co-authored two books with a fellow S.U. economist, Economics and Money: The Level of Wealth, Affluence, and Economic Policy, and The Composition of the Board of Directors.

Banking in New York State: A Reexamination of Traditional Role. He has authored several articles published in professional journals and remains involved in the academic sector by returning to the classroom to teach.

Active at the national level in the development of public policy for higher education, Eggers represents SU as a member of the Association of American Universities, and has served on its executive committee and chaired the Committee on Research Libraries.

He is former chairman of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, a member of the American Council on Education and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Syracuse Symphony, the Central New York Chapter of the National Kidney Foundation and the Metropolitan Development Association of Syracuse and Onondaga County, Inc.

Eggers is a trustee of the State University of New York College of Environmental Science and Forestry, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Syracuse Symphony, the Central New York Chapter of the National Kidney Foundation and the Metropolitan Development Association of Syracuse and Onondaga County, Inc.

A former chairman of the Board of Directors of Syracuse University College of Business, Eggers was named businessmen of the Year in 1979. He continues as a director of the Chamber’s Economic Development Corporation.

Eggers is married to the former Mildred G. Chernowth and they have six grown children.

Quotes from twenty-year chancellorship

What former Chancellor Melvin A. Eggers had to say over the years:

On campus growth in the 1980s..."There were very severe problems as the decade of the '70s came to a close. The development continued. At that time, the university still did not have a student center and that was high on our list of priorities in the physical sense." — Dec. 1, 1989.

On the Schine Student Center, built in 1985..."It was critical. I don't think we got along without it. When I go into the building and see the number of people, I wonder what they would have done if we didn't have the facility." — Dec. 1, 1989.

On the last two decades..."The '70s, in particular the first half of the '70s, were periods of anxiety. As the '80s began, your life took a more venturesome, more aggressive approach." — Dec. 1, 1989.

On the future..."I think the university will continue to experience growth. There is a mix of entrepreneurship and progress that I think will be sustained throughout the '90s." — Dec. 1, 1989.

On undergraduate education...

"It is my view that there is more concern with undergraduate education than there has been in any time in the past 20 years. (If research was neglected) We would not be a better undergraduate university. We would be an unrecognized university, and you would not be here." — Oct. 26, 1989.

On the 1989 tuition hike...

"Maybe we ought to (lock tuition for incoming freshmen), because it makes planning a little easier. But it doesn't make paying any less." — Oct. 26, 1989.

On campus safety...

"I think it's the responsibility of all of us to work toward having a secure campus. We work together to make it happen. By our conduct, by our general behavior, we ought to promote security on campus as fully as we can." — Oct. 27, 1988.

On being chancellor...

On post-Sci Tech expansion projects...

"There are three that are very close together. If I were to mention the way in which they were developed, I would say the School of Art first. And then the recreation building and then something which is a little more vague right now, something we call Maxwell II, something to accommodate the social sciences. "We have to do something about accommodating their increasing numbers and consolidate the offices and consolidate the space. Within that same time span, I would hope we would have another residence hall. Not a high-rise, and I don't know exactly where." — Oct. 14, 1987.

On development...

"It is wrong to say developments have a negative effect on teaching or the quality of teaching. It is the first step to make the undergraduate experience a more effective one." — Oct. 26, 1987.

On tuition...

"There is less of a difference in total cost than in tuition between SU and other schools of this stature. Would higher tuition affect enrollment and therefore salaries? That's a judgement call. I feel at this stage I..."
Student leaders shock

Something shocking happened this summer.
For the first time in recent history, student leaders worked together effectively. The result is the creation of an event, designed to take place from June 20 to August 1 in a week a bit less hokey. Autumn Street Festival, a day-long extravaganza featuring an arts and crafts fair, food and music, will be more than just a day of entertainment.

It marks the beginning of a new day, for those who care about the success of Student Government Association (SGA) funding and exposure now work together to provide viable social options for student leaders.

But the ability for student leaders to collaborate extends beyond benefitting the campus socially. Cooperation can lead to more positive negotiations with the administration in pursuit of the achievement of our rights.

Co-sponsorship enables student groups to relax a bit and enjoy cooperation. This enhances the visibility, viability and self-preservation of student groups and places and programs for men and women.

Women who participate in SGA fund- ing the campus socially. Cooperation can lead to more positive negotiations with the administration in pursuit of the achievement of our rights.

UUTV makes renovations

By KATHERINE DROUIN
DO Editor

University Union Television is inching ever closer to becoming a true television station, said UUTV General Manager Matt Prohaska.

The station is looking into getting a construction permit to run a low-power television channel. UUTV also renovated its control room during the summer and repaired and purchased new equipment, Prohaska said.

“We’re laying the foundation,” Prohaska said: “This begins the process of becoming a real TV station.”

Carpeting was ripped out of the control room and tiles were put in to cut down on dust. “Some old things are gone,” said Program Director Laxman Gani. “There’s more space.”

The station also purchased a third videotape editor for $6,000 and repaired other equipment. “This means there won’t be people standing three deep in line to use the editor,” Prohaska said. “The editor and repairs were our number-one priority.”

The new equipment will lead to an increase in productivity, he said. “It’s running smoother with more people and more interest in the station,” he said.

UUTV also hired a development manager, senior Dave Barisky, to get underwriting for the station from small companies.

Construction of a transmitter would cost in the tons of thousands, Prohaska said.

Sadler and Kimmel main lounges will start to receive UUTV this semester, he said. UUTV is one of the few student-operated TV stations in the country and produces a variety of shows, including nightly news reports and comedies.

The shows can be seen on Coke Cablevision’s public access Channel 7. However, UUTV cannot be seen on most residence hall monitors.

UUTV produces about 17 shows, including three or four pilots, Gani said.

About 250 people work at the station, including administration staff and assistants, and talent and crew for various shows, he said.

Two of UUTV’s comedy shows, Null and Void and Uncle Bobo’s World of Fun were broadcast on the national network UNet. UNet is a branch of the National Association of College Broadcasters.

UUTV will be having its first general interest meeting Sept. 5 in Room 107 of the Hall of Languages.

The station will resume broadcasting Sept. 15.

Fall festival to hit streets

By BRUCE BUCKLEY
DO Staff Writer

An unconventional cooperative of student groups will bring what they hope is a new tradition to campus this Saturday afternoon.

Syracuse University's first Autumn Street Festival will commence at 10 a.m. with an arts and crafts fair and continue what they hope is a new tradition to campus this Saturday afternoon.

University President Dan Delehanly called the festival "a multicultural event complete with live bands, arts and crafts and information tables, aimed at showing the students what SU has to offer."

Delehanly emphasized the underlying significance of this event to students.

"This event is a combination of University, the Student Government Association, SAS, NAACP, RHA, the Admissions Office, the Student Programs Office and the GLBSA — many of whom traditionally work to interact," he said.

"This event is in some ways a celebration of difference — it symbolizes the diversity that exists on campus and proves that it can be a strength."

Strength in diversity

The diversity is illustrated by the different focuses of the participating groups. The Student African-American Society (SAS), the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Student Alliance (GLBSA) and RHA, the Residence Hall Association, typically deal with issues of interest to their respective constituencies.

The festival begins with student arts and crafts exhibitions and sales at booths in front of the Union. Also available will be a variety of ethnic foods and entertainment courtesy of several of SU's cultural student groups, such as A.S.I.A., Asian Students In America. Discounted tickets will also provide refreshments.

A diverse lineup of bands will play the festival on a stage.

Royal Crescent Mob is 'hungry' for a hit Page 8

Soliloquys switched for suspense

In his directorial debut, Irishman Kenneth Branagh took on Shakespeare and was applauded by critics for his adaptation of Henry V.

Now the 30-year-old director/actor is out to one-up Alfred Hitchcock with a psychological thriller that would make Hitchcock proud.

ROB OWEN

Mystery/Dead Again

According to Carlyle, whoever is killed in one life gets to do the killing in the next. It's the cosmic credit plan: buy now, pay forever," he says.

Thompson and Branagh both master their American accents for the present-day roles and they make for an intriguing couple in both lifetimes. Once around they're charming and romantic, the second time they become skeletal and dangerous.

Although Andy Garcia's role is limited, he makes the most of it, portraying Baker as the stereotypical alcoholic, chain-smoking, womanizing, unshaven pulp journalist. "I'm not looking for Miss Right," he tells a fellow party-goer. "I'm looking for Miss Right Now."

Garcia also delivers a nice anti-smoking scene when Baker is an old man dying of cancer in the present day.

Mike Church (Kenneth Branagh), Franklin Madison (Derek Jacobi) and Grace (Emma Thompson) look at an old magazine article about the lives of Margaret and Roman Strauss in Dead Again.
Royal Crescent Mob rocks festival with funk

By BRUCE BUCKLEY

This Saturday, Syracuse University's Autumn Street Festival will welcome the funk n' roll sound of Royal Crescent Mob, with a performance that lead singer David Ellison promises will be "full of enough flaming grooves to make Jerry Lewis wish he weren't in Las Vegas, but in Syracuse gettin' down with the Mob!"

Since 1985, Royal Crescent Mob has been turning out grooves that range from full-out-funk to straightforward rock n' roll.

After their debut album, Omerta, the Mob was quickly picked up by Warner Bros. On Warner, the band released Spin the World and, most recently, Midnight Rose.

Despite being signed by a major label, Ellison says the band's underground status has changed very little.

"We are considered an alternative band," he admits, "but I think we could be more. I feel we could have a hit album on our own.

"We're pretty hungry these days," he says. "We can barely afford to put ourselves out on the road. We've been off tour since July Fourth, because this summer you're either on Lollapalooza or forgot it."

Major predicament

Ellison says the band has fallen into a predicament common to many former independent acts — they have fallen between the cracks of alternative status and mainstream success.

"We've been thinking of moving to another label where we would be more of a priority — you want to know that the year you spent on something is going to get a fair shake."

But Ellison acknowledges that the experience with Warner Bros. was not wasted. "If we've learned anything, it's that the record companies don't know more than we do about our sound. On the new album it will be our way or no way."

They did it their way

The Mob's our-way-or-nobody ethic recurs in its shows as well. Ellison recalls one potentially dismal show that wound up with the band throwing all ethics to the wind.

"We were playing in a place that was like Walt Disney World North, in a bar complex, which you should always shy away from. In a place with a lot of natural wood and ferns, which is one thing to avoid, there was a kind of place where if you wanted to order a burger it wouldn't just be a burger, but a 'Bohemian Bavarian Boogie-Woogie burger,' which you have to order from the waitress and sound embarrassed, and there's like white shorts and floral print shirts.

"After four songs, I turned to the band and said 'I think it's time for 'Cat Scratch Fever.' We did covers from then on in and it went over great."

Such nights of abandon have led the band from doing 1970s covers to reworking current songs like "Mama Said Knock You Out."

Strictly groovy

As far as the Mob's next project, Ellison hints that it may be a return to the funky and furious Omerta sound.

"Over the years, our sound has changed from strict grooves to more structure and melody," he recalls, "but now we're going back to the strict grooves. So far the new songs have all been in the funky vein, which is rare for us because we normally will do about three funk songs, three novelty songs and a roots-rock song — it's unusual that we haven't veered off in another direction yet."

"Omerta was such an innocent time," he says. "We just kind of wrote the songs, and the fun in doing them is evident on the album. It is difficult to recapture that without it sounding really contrived."

bun, there was more production and less spontaneity than was normal for the band.

On the next project, the Mob would like to eliminate the middleman. "We want to work with a good engineer and produce ourselves again. We want to get back that spirit," he says. "Despite the occasional strike against them, Ellison and the Mob remain optimistic. "We haven't had a hit record," Ellison says, "but I'm still proud of what we've done. I feel like the band's more united now than it has been in a long time. It's an exciting time, and I like how we're writing together. We're just going to shoot the moon on the next album."

In the new novel Who P-P-P-Plugged Roger Rabbit?, Roger Rabbit and some variant (portrayed in Who Framed Roger Rabbit by Bob Hoskins) are again at odds in the investigation of a mystery.

When author Gary J. Wolf sold the film rights of his 1981 cult novel Who Censored Roger Rabbit? to the Walt Disney Company and Amblin Entertainment, he sold all the characters he created.

That is evidenced in his new book Who P-P-P-Plugged Roger Rabbit? (Villard, $17). This novel is a sequel to Wolf's book, but to Disney's movie Who Framed Roger Rabbit? with hard-boiled private eye Eddie Valiant out to solve another mystery.

Is Roger's sex-starved wife Jessica playing patty-cake with Clark Gable? Who stole a small, wooden box from film producer David O. Selznick, and what does the box contain? Who will land the coveted leads in Selznick's Gone With the Wind? And of course, who p-p-p-plugged Roger Rabbit?

Although Wolf is a master of word plays and has fun with the English language, the plot goes in so many directions that the book has a tough time keeping a reader's interest. One plot line that could have been left out involves Eddie’s brother Freddy and his sister Heddy. And the introduction of Jessica Rabbit’s six-inch tall sister Joelleyn as a love interest for Eddie is just preposterous.

Laughing at first book

Not only does this sequel ignore the events of Who Censored Roger Rabbit?, it laughs at them. The plot of the first book is reduced to one of Jessica Rabbit’s dreams that owes a nudge-nudge, wink-wink to the infamous Dallas dream sequence cop-out.

Eddie Valiant even jokes that Jessica should sell the story of her dream to a movie studio as “the story of a man, a woman and a rabbit in a triangle of...”

trouble," the exact tag line created by Disney's advertising department to promote Who Framed Roger Rabbit?

Changes in the characters from Who Censored Roger Rabbit? to B.P.P., Plugged Roger Rabbit? are incredibly blatant. In Censored, Jessica is an exotic star, Roger is an innocent honey bunny and 'toons speak in word balloons as they do in comic strips.

While Wolf keeps the word balloons for the new novel, he throws away the character's backgrounds in favor of the sanitized Disney images. Wolf even changes his description of Roger Rabbit to fit the animated character. And the new book is set in the 1940s like Disney's movie setting, while Wolf's original creations lived in the present day.

Deeper meaning missing Another aspect of the first novel that has been partially lost is the segregation and discrimination towards 'toons as an allegory for present day bigotry. While the theme still appears in a few spots, the impact is dulled by the overshadowing Disney image of love, peace, happiness and not a problem in the world. Yet for all the 'Disneyana,' Wolf never ceases to come up with a new, descriptive way for Eddie Valiant to down his liquor.

The interplay of real-life events and fiction leading up to the production of Gone With the Wind is the most amusing part of the book. Wolf pushes the two together so seamlessly that it doesn't seem unusual that Technicolor originally intended to cast Roger Rabbit or Baby Horset as Rhett Butler.

While there are undoubtedly worse places to sell the soul of your creation than the Walt Disney Company, it is still unfortunate that after the success of Who Framed Roger Rabbit? Wolf couldn't have written a follow-up involving his creations, rather than the company mascots they've become.

do n't know if it would be better to close the gap, to say, 'We're as good as they are, so we'll charge as much,' or not.

"We should raise the regard for the institution and then move tuition up as that happens." — Sept. 20, 1985.

On SU vs. Syracuse ... "Some see us as secure, rich and avai-cious. We see ourselves as constantly improving our status. We will continue to thrive side by side — university and community." — March 22, 1985.

On alcohol on campus ...

"If I had it my way, I'd take every bit of alcohol out of this place. This would be a dry campus." — Jan. 27, 1984.

On teaching his economics classes ...

"My name is Eggers and I'll be your economics TA. I re-learned the difficulty of explaining some ideas and concepts to students. It was considerably pleasurable to exchange ideas and match wits with them." — April 29, 1988.

On welcoming freshmen ...

"Hi, I'm Mel Eggers. I'm a chancellor. I'm like a president." — Sept. 13, 1977.

On universities dealing with the economy ...

"All private higher education institutes are under some kind of economic stretch. All must find ways of meeting it. "A greater burden is placed on tuition. However, there is a limit to how far one can stretch this source of income." — Oct. 24, 1974.

On the direction of education ...

"Education, as we knew it, has been based on 'product' rather than 'end use and need.' We are now organizing knowledge around its application, rather than its accumulation, and that I view as important." — Jan. 12, 1975.

strating outside his office as just part of the job. "I am a personalization of this university," he said. "If young people aren't protesting about something, they are going to be called apathetic or lethargic or bimbo," he said. "And they've got to be protesting to somebody. I have to expect to be a part of that."

As a child of the Depression, Eggers said he was "kind of a troublemaker" when he was in college. "It's a strange world," he said. "The United States was being sent to Vietnam to shoot people — (the soldiers) don't hate those people. Isn't that a strange world? Can't young people sensibly say that?"

Chances are that if typical SU students aren't talking about tuition, they are talking about the latest allegations against the sports department.

"I am disappointed with the aspect of the reports (in the The Post Standard)," he said in regard to illegal recruiting allegations made by the local paper. "It needs a little more time. I don't mean that I'm trying to whitewash it or trivialize it. But we are dealing with allegations from a newspaper that needs a story. We need to hold off until the facts are in."

Rebuilding football
"In 1970 and '71, we came close to closing out the football team because they didn't have a place to play," he said. "They were losing because they couldn't recruit; they couldn't recruit because they didn't have a place to play; without a place to play there was no audience." No audience, no revenue, no coach, no players, Eggers said. "SU sports is usually the chosen topic of conversation in Central New York, an obsession that can unite strangers with nothing else in common. "This is entertainment generated by our own community — there's an intimacy about it," Eggers said. "And really, what is there to talk about but sports and the weather?"

"But that troubles me just a little bit because it overshadows a good many other things that have happened," he said. "It's much harder for a community to talk about physics and quarks."

He lifted a gleaming plastic and metal model off the floor.

"This model was given to me by the physics department," he said. "And really, what has happened? It's not that there's an intimacy about it,...' he read from the base. "I leave it to history." Eggers bid his final farewell as chancellor on Aug. 16. "I have to link to the people...."

Eggers may teach a course or two during the coming semesters. "Possibly I'll be more visible to the students than he said. "I have no real contact with the students... that bothers me. I leave it to history." Eggers said. "And really, what is there to talk about but sports and the weather?"

The rumors, he does not foresee any more problems for this year. "Students who are considering studying abroad are urged to stop by the DIPA office for walk-in counseling or to look through our extensive resource library," Galson said.

Carrier Dome on Sept. 21, anything less than an eight win season would be surprising," it said. "It is a schedule with just one heavy-hitter (Florida State)."

SU was ranked 25th by the Associated Press, and 26th in the USA TODAY'S coaches poll.

As for the rest of the Big East, Virginia Tech is viewed as a team on the rise. The Hokies, coming off a season-ending thrashing of Virginia and a three-point loss to eventual national champion Georgia Tech, return 16 starters, including quarterback Will Furrer.

Pittsburgh, West Virginia and Rutgers are all predicted to have down years, while Temple's 7-4 season of a year ago is looked upon with great skepticism.

Boston College will need some serious help under new head coach Tom Coughlin.

The NCAA has narrowed the goalposts to cut off on those naughty field goals. The subject of overtime is treated like the plague. Two teams will defend a "national" title. Joe Paterno and Pat Dye are still coaching.

Oh, baby, college football is back!

And if you have the patience to put up with the constant problems, you've got to love it. Especially this year, when three teams with pro offenses will be right at the top: Florida, Miami (Fla.) and Florida State. Washington will be right there as well.

On the other hand, cocky Notre Dame probably won't. And the boring Big Eight teams should be back in the pack.

Syracuse should have another solid season, but more on that next week.

Boston College (+ 2) at Rutgers

Last I heard, Rutgers (3-8 last season) was still in New Jersey, but couldn't get many Garden Staters to play there.

Maybe it's that recruiting pitch.

Rutgers QB Tom Driver and TMb Coughlin's Boston College (-1/2) at West Virginia

Maybe it's that recruiting pitch.

Virginia (4-7) is inexperienced at QB, with Darren Studstill, but is more together as a team than Pitt. Don't say this with Hackett around, but Coach Don Nehlen is actually (shhhhh) popular.

The Mountaineers should cover because:

1) They probably won't be looking ahead to Bowling Green.
2) I've seen 6-foot-10, 320-pound Mountainer tackle John Ray eat lunch, and
3) Half the Pitt team would like to see Hackett become the NHL's best goalie — without pads.

West Virginia 21, Pitt 10

Miami (-2 1/2) at Arkansas

Paul Hackett is having a tough time keeping his team together. After a 3-7-1 travesty last year, the Panthers have lost key players such as RB Curran Richards, WRs Olanda Truitt and Darnell Dickerson, and thousands of fans.

No surprises for Foti in first year at soccer helm

By JEFF ELBBAUM
DO Staff Writer

There haven't been many surprises during the first week of soccer practice, according to Syracuse University first-year head coach Dean Foti.

"I don't think we're going to get many surprises, but to be fair, we've had some hard training so far," Foti said.

The Orange have won two of their first three games, including a 3-0 victory over St. John's on Sept. 7. Foti said the team has been "very solid" in its defense, allowing only two goals so far.

"We haven't had many surprises," Foti said. "We've had some good performances, but we've also had some mistakes. But overall, we've been solid."

SGA receives computers as gift to assist in allocation of funds

By KRISTINA SAUERREIN Staff Writer

Three new IBM PS/2 computers will help the Student Government Association keep better track of the student activity fees, according to SGA Comptroller Chris Loggans.

The old computers were cumbersome and incapable of keeping accurate records of the money allocated to the 77 student organizations, Loggans said.

The SGA office is now more efficient and at the functional level it should be at, he said. "In the past, SGA has had a lot of problems keeping track of the amount of money and the amount of expenditure for the different student organizations. "Something needed to be done, and this is a big step in the right direction."

The SGA Finance Board approved a $7,000 line in the SGA budget and $8,000 from unexpected revenues to buy the computers for $15,000, SGA President Emily Zenick said.

The unexpected revenues were raised from sponsors of the annual Greek Freak event who were paying off a two-year debt.

For work, not video games

"The purchase of the computers will benefit all students," Zenick said. "I don't want anyone to think that the comptroller and president will use the computers to play games. They are for the students because they will allow..."
Gorbachev promises to accept independence

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Sunday promised to accept the independence of the Baltic republics, and said he would not cease the fight to keep the Soviet Union as a country.

Since independence was the final wish of the people, "I must agree to it," Gorbachev said in an interview aired on Soviet television and the Cable News Network. Gorbachev said he would not resign, saying "that would be immoral."

British Prime Minister John Major said he would sponsor the Baltic states' entrance into the United Nations and other international organizations.

Lithuanians celebrate countries' recognition

Tens of thousands of Lithuanians gathered Sunday in a park in Vilnius to observe their first Festival of Freedom, a celebration of their newly-won independence.

As the crowd cheered and applauded, a speaker read the names of dozens of countries that have granted Lithuania formal recognition as an independent state.

The crowd waved Lithuanian flags and flags of Japan, Australia and several European nations that have granted recognition.

The United States flag was nowhere to be seen, however. President Bush seemed to be waiting for Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's approval of Baltic independence.

Estonia and Latvia are the other two Baltic states.

Court nomination challenged

On Sept. 10 the Senate Judiciary Committee will begin hearings regarding the confirmation of Judge Clarence Thomas to the U.S. Supreme Court. President Bush's nomination of a black conservative to replace the late liberal Justice Thurgood Marshall has created political turbulence. Many of the same groups who lobbied against Thomas voted for Ronald Reagan.

Bork's appointment to the high Court are now challenging the Thomas nomination. They include the National Organizations of Women, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), and the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund.

In early August, William Gibson, chairman of the NAACP, said that Thomas' "inconsistent views on civil rights policies ... make him an unpredictable element in an increasingly radical conservative Court."

Writing for The National Review, William McGurn recently asserted that Thomas' detractors appear to be "more like defenders of special interests rather than champions of civil rights." McGurn said their image was not enhanced when the national office of the NAACP moved to squelch the Compton, California branch that had voted unanimously in Thomas' favor.

St. Louis NAACP supports

The East St. Louis chapter of the NAACP also voiced its support for Thomas, but backed down after pressure was applied by its national office.

Writing in the Conservative Chronicle, Thomas Sowell recently noted that Compton and East St. Louis are both ghettos and "things look very different to people there than they do to the fast cats inside the Washington beltway."

Sowell wrote that a number of black leaders "don't like the fact that Judge Thomas has consistently opposed racial quotas and preferences -- policies which have been very beneficial to those leaders, though not for the broad masses of blacks."

Speaking out on Affirmative Action, Thomas has said, "I think that preferential hiring on the basis of race or gender will increase racial divisiveness, disempower women and minorities by fostering the notion that they are permanently disabled and in need of handouts and delay the day when skin color and gender are truly the least important things about a person in the employment context."

Regarding integration, Thomas has said, "The white push to assimilate simply doesn't make sense to me."

Three black Republicans

Only three out of 436 black state legislators are Republicans and Gary Franks of Connecticut is the only black Republican in Congress. This would seem to indicate that black conservatives are a small portion of the black population and The New York Times has noted, "To many liberal blacks and civil rights figures, the lack of support for conservative candidates reflects the degree to which blacks accurately see conservatives as traditional enemies and the degree to which black conservatives are sometimes viewed as turncoats, gravitating toward white power and money in a conservative era."

The Times added, however, that on social issues such as abortion, crime and prayer in schools, polls show the black population holds "largely conservative views."

Yale University law professor Stephen Carter said, "The nomination of Clarence Thomas will break the stereotype that if you're black and smart and prominent, you must be a liberal Democrat."

The New York Times said that Thomas "represents some of the complexities of those grouped as black conservatives, as evidenced in his fondness for quoting Malcolm X and occasionally chauvinising white conservatives for their views on race."

Abortion is a topic that will confront Thomas during the Senate confirmation hearings. Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, says he wants a direct answer from Thomas regarding his stand on the controversial issue. The Judiciary Committee failed to get a straight response from then-nominee David Souter and Metzenbaum says he is "tired of reading tea leaves."

Embracing natural law?

The Los Angeles Times reported that an aide to Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., has said that questions will also focus on Thomas' embracing of natural law. The Times wrote Thomas "has suggested that various rights of freedom are god-given...not granted by the Constitution or by Congress."

Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe notes that any replacement of Justice Marshall will "likely accelerate the Court's rightward trend." But, Tribe says it is Thomas' affiliation with natural law that may be most troublesome.

"Judge Thomas," writes Tribe, "has called even the right of married couples to use birth control -- recognized by the Court 26 years ago...an invention. Unfortunately he seems likely to help overturn Roe v. Wade."

Tribe also cited Thomas' enthusiasm for an article which appeared in The American Spectator.
Expanded counseling services offered to students

By DARIN POWELL
Contributing Writer

It still smells like fresh paint and new carpet inside the recently expanded offices of Syracuse University's Counseling Center.

But the center's new clinical supervisor, Dr. John Harkulich, is not complaining. "Now we have more than twice the amount of room we had before," said Harkulich, 39, who took over as clinical supervisor in July. "We were very crowded before." Formerly located at 804 University Ave., the center moved to its new home at 111 Waverly Ave. over the summer.

Along with fresh paint came more observation and counseling space which will help the center deal better with student needs.

And according to Harkulich, students have a lot of problems. "We deal with problems ranging from homesickness to people who have pretty significant emotional difficulties," he said.

A clinical psychologist who has lived and worked in the Syracuse area for 12 years, Harkulich received his doctorate from Florida State University in 1979. He has worked at the Hutchings Psychiatric Center in Syracuse and in private practice.

Harkulich is responsible for overseeing all day-to-day operations, as well as acting as a liaison to other mental health agencies. Serving more than 1,500 students, the center has four full-time staff members and four graduate assistants. All counseling is confidential, and free for full-time SU and SUNY Environmental Science and Forestry students.

Harkulich said the most common complaint among students who come to the center is difficulty in personal relationships. This can be anything from roommate disagreements to breaking up with a boyfriend or girlfriend.

College students in particular are vulnerable to a large number of problems, Harkulich said.

Brutality poses questions

The streets surrounding Syracuse University unfortunately bear a striking resemblance to those in Los Angeles.

Seven students filed civil complaints after witnessing the beating of two black youths near Marshall Street by members of the Syracuse Police Department on Friday night. The officers approached the youths on foot and proceeded to beat and arrest them on charges of disorderly conduct and interfering with government proceedings.

Reports filed by the arresting officers not only conflict with those filed by the students but also with the department's own departmental reports. Witnesses claim three officers beat the two young men. Police say only one officer was involved in the arrest. A member of the department was quoted by witnesses as saying he was not sure "they," implying a number of officers, were beating the men.

If the seven students, many of whom are leaders on this campus, had not spoken up and filed complaints against the officers, there would be no hope of justice in this case. Civilian complaints, however, are filed directly with the police department and are not available for public record or scrutiny. If the students had not proceeded forward with their information regarding the attack, no information would have been made public.

Many such incidents happen in the same age group as SU students should concern us all; black or white, male or female. The brutal actions seem to lead many to reevaluate the local police department unaddressed; issues such as racism and bias against students.

Too many questions about these issues will eventually lead to answers, answers the Syracuse Police Department does not seem to want to give.

Dear beloved governor and legislature: either make a serious commitment to education or get out of the business entirely. Your present efforts are very appealing: more than $700 million towards Regents Scholarship programs. The fiscal problems, however, are directly filed with the state department and are not available for public record or scrutiny. If the students had not proceeded forward with their information about their departments, no information would have been made public.

Perhaps the biggest loser of the New York State budget battle this year is higher education. Facing a massive budget deficit, Governor Mario Cuomo and the legislature wielded their axes in the direction of the state’s college students.

First of all, I have to question the reasoning behind any cuts to the Regents College Scholarships and the Tuition Assistance Program (TAP). Many schools like Syracuse University, where tuition hikes are as likely as the sun rising in the east, has become increasingly difficult for students and their families to meet costs. Obviously, these cuts are going to force some to opt for less costly private schools or other educational programs where the quality of education might be less than ideal.

However, I understand that difficult decisions had to be made. My anger and frustration at this is directed at myself for not taking the necessary steps to be prepared for this kind of event. It is rather the result of my personal state financial aid award.

Last year, the New York State Higher Education Services Corporation originally awarded me close to $1000 in aid. That included over $700 from the Regents Scholarship worth $350. While I received the full promised amount for the first semester, $2000 of aid was trimmed for the second semester. Still, I believe I received a valuable and fair amount of state aid for my second year.

This new fiscal year generated the news that Regents Scholarship payments would be withheld and TAP awards were being decreased dramatically. My TAP award this year is a whopping $59 per semester — the minimum any undergraduate student can receive. Although every penny counts these days, 5000 pennies just doesn’t do it for me. I would not be doing justice to the word insulting by calling my award that.

If New York is so financially strapped, as all state officials claim, they should abandon the current aid programs altogether.

It isn’t worth even having a Higher Education Services Corporation that is going to be so ridiculously low. I’m positive that the administrative costs of the HESC run hundreds of thousands of dollars. If that kind of savings could really make a difference to the financial well-being of New York.

BARRY STARK
The NAKED TRUTH

Let's tell those students who want to raise tuition or other fees how much they have already been paid and that it's not going to be so ridiculous any longer. I'm positive that the administrative costs of the HESC run hundreds of thousands of dollars. If that kind of savings could really make a difference to the financial well-being of New York.

NYPIRG protects environment

To the editor:

When NYPIRG began 15 years ago, students had a vision for a better New York and a better world. Today, students at 130 campuses around the state work together with staff of professional organizers, lawyers, researchers, and attorneys to fight for a healthier and cleaner environment, consumer protection and student rights. Directed by students at each campus, NYPIRG is now the largest public interest advocacy group in New York.

Through NYPIRG, Syracuse University students have been able to bring about some changes in the state legislature and on campus. By working with experienced NYPIRG students and staff, other students hang on to learn lobbying, media and grassroots organizing skills as well as the knowledge and confidence to be effective advocates in the political process.

This year NYPIRG students and staff worked together at the state and local level to promote recycling, fight the dangerous incinerator proposed for Onondaga County, provide community input on our local court action center, organize the educational community around the biased standardized testing, register many students to vote, lobby City Hall on the increased consumer rights and more.

None of NYPIRG’s successes have been easy. Students have not been afraid to work forward to research, educate, and organize fellow students and their local communities. They have been successful because they have not given up on long, hard battles. NYPIRG students have worked hard to make a better place to live because of the many effective leaders that have been trained and the new active and involved students that come through the office every day.

But we can’t stop. There are always going to be changes needed in our state. As students and leaders of the student community, we must have the determination and responsibility to take a role in those changes and to make up for the failure of the state and federal government.

It is my hope that proponents of any change with this type of project take their time and do things right the first time.

Probable Cause

Lanes cause problems

To the editor:

It is said to be heard that two Syracuse University students were hit and seriously injured on the "improved streets" surrounding the SU campus.

Neighbors and other interested citizens opposed the street closing and disputed the "expert knowledge" that was being handed out by SU-hired traffic consultants.

It is said that SU's lack of support for education, enforcement and good traffic engineering led to this event. It is a simple fact that one's chances of injury crossing any street, with or without a light or flasher is increased by the number of lanes one has to cross, let alone with traffic travelling in two directions in multiple lanes. SU and the city ignored these facts which were presented by neighbors.

It was the neighbor's contention that this specific "problem" would only be moved and if anything exacerbated in closing streets and "improving" others. What has come to be called "Harvey’s Folly" is a classic example of the pursuit of land for development over concern for public safety.

It is interesting to note the enhanced crossing "hash" markings and lights that recently appeared on the new roads. We proposed that this be done on the now closed roads. Such markings were only done after the University and the city agreed to the closing of streets and as public relations man Robert Hill claimed the acquisition of a "great asset." Where was the matter of safety either before or after the acquisition?

Those injured in this ongoing experiment rightly should consider a suit against the city and SU.

Neighbors continue to suggest embracing the "Walk Alert" program for all residents of the area. SU fortress mentality regarding its campus and the city of Syracuse’s acquiescence to any of SU’s administration’s hairbrained schemes will in this instance, cost the taxpayers legal and reacquisition costs.

And those individuals who supported these changes must share with the unaware pedestrians and motorists in this incident.

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for some very strong reasons.

"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable has powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Rahmeyer, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.

"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of mathematics at North Carolina State University.

So go check out the HP calculator line at your college bookstore or HP retailer. You'll agree, there's no faster relief from the pain of tough problems. HP calculators. The best for your success.

CD producers perplexed by packaging ploy

By BARBARA DAVIES
Assoc. Lifestyle Editor

The CD longbox presents a quandary for the music industry. The packaging that made it easy for record stores to phase out the LP has been deemed wasteful by artists and consumers alike, and a campaign to "Ban the box" is reaching all corners of the industry. But the longbox has its advantages. The package allows music retailers to reach all comers of the industry, and record stores to switch from LP to CD with few over-head costs.

A race is on now to create a package that will meet requirements of retailers as well as labels and consumers, without losing any of the longbox advantages. Geffen experimented with packaging early this year, releasing Peter Gabriel's Shaking the Tree in the familiar plastic case (jewel box) without longbox packaging. Sixty-five percent of the album's sales to date have been on CD format.

Riptide, both of which were released in Digipack form, a paperboard and plastic box the size of a jewel box. Jewel Box Advocates and Manufacturers (JAM), a group including artists, consumers, plastics manufacturers and record labels believes marketing CDs in the jewel box alone meets the right requirements. The only wasted packaging would be the shrink wrap around the jewel box, and record distributors would save 40 cents per CD — the cost to manufacture one longbox.

Costs passed to retailers. While record labels save on longbox costs, retailers will be forced to spend more on a system to display jewel boxes, as in the way cases are displayed in locked racks. Without the racks, retailers say, shoplifting would increase, forcing stores to absorb the losses. The Eco-Pak has emerged as a possible replacement for the longbox and the jewel box, attracting attention with concrete support from WEA Distribution, a company that distributes labels pre-printed paperboard glued together, is not recyclable.

When the Eco-Pak finally hits the market, consumers will be locked in to the new package, made of plastic and concrete support from WEA Distributors, and record distributors would save 40 cents per CD. WEA recently announced plans to begin selling CDs in the Eco-Pak by spring 1992.

Criticism of the Eco-Pak far exceeds the number of prototypes that millions of unsold CDs are returned to distributors every year. A jewel box can be reused after the paper is removed. An Eco-Pak, made of plastic and paperboard LP sleeve with a plastic package, made of cardboard and a few plastic parts, folds down from longbox size into a package the size of a jewel box. Cost passed to retailers will be forced to spend no test-marketing before introducing the package to the market. Questions about the Eco-Pak are many, with JAM leading the way: What's so ecological about Eco-Pak, anyway?

In addition to the upgraded computer system, Zenick and other steps to better manage the student activity fee.

Library undergoes major restructuring

By LAKSHMI SINGH
Staff Writer

Construction that began in and around Bird Library last April is right on schedule, according to Assistant University Librarian Carol Parke. Although the work has raised concern from Syracuse University students and other patrons, Parke said the renovations will make the library an easier place to manage.

"By November, just about everything will be operational," Parke said.

Parke said instead of primarily using library classification numbers to locate a book, the library will now alphabetize books starting on the second floor and ending on the fifth floor.

"Every one of those books will be moved by Sept. 6," Parke said.

She added that one of the main points of the library's reconfiguration is the reconstruction of the first floor.

The bridge entrance that once led to the second floor has become one of two first-floor entrances, Parke said.

North and South entrances

"Students can enter the building from the north or south entrance," Parke said

But, that does not guarantee access to library books in the collections area, she said.

Parke said that there will be a glass wall on the first floor separating a study area of "bull pens," or large meeting tables, from the rest of the library which would include all library see BIRD Page 19

From Backpack to Topaq
Mono-strap pack appeals to campus savvy

By SETH KELLER
Staff Writer

It's the first week of classes and students are trying to look cool with their stylish clothes, sunglasses and backpacks slung over one shoulder.

The only problem is their backpacks aren't cooperating as they stroll across the quad. Packs are falling off shoulders every five minutes, and thumbs are getting cramps trying to coerce one strap into supporting a load made for two.

Short of doing the obvious—untuck the strap and use both straps, how can students keep the packs on their backs?

Phil Straughan has the answer: get a ToPAQ.

ToPAQ is a one-strap backpack that is more comfortable than a regular backpack. And it won't slip off your shoulder, says Straughan, developer of the pack and president of ToPAQ Inc.

Straughan visited The University Bookstore Thursday to promote ToPAQ and get student feedback on the bag.

"SU's giving it a thumbs up so far," Straughan said. "I learned today that a lot of students think it makes sense."

Some even thought it might make a lot of sense to buy one.

"It's centered better on your body for more support. It felt a lot more comfortable than any other backpack," SU student Funka C. said. "I think it's a great idea."

"It's been pretty easy to sell to campus store owners," Straughan said. "They just try it on and think it's really comfortable and a great idea."

While Straughan may be having no problem unloading the pack on campus stores, at least one store in Syracuse is having trouble unloading them.

"It seems like a good product, but it's not selling. People just don't know about it. It's not advertised enough," said Lillian M. Slutzker, owner of Manny's.

"People look at it, see the big strap and don't know what to think of it," Slutzker said.

Retailers apparently think so, too.

Straughan said he hasn't had a hard time selling the pack to campus stores. The ToPAQ is being sold locally at The University Bookstore and Manny's on the SU hill. It's also available at Cornell University, Ithaca College and State University of New York at Cortland, along with many other colleges nationwide.

Autumn Street Festival
First Autumn Street Festival may result in SU tradition

By MATTHEW J. PALM
Lifestyle Editor

From the student organization tables to the craft vendors to the bands, University Union President Dan Delehanty pronounced the first-ever Autumn Street Festival a rousing success.

"It was a lot of fun for people who participated," Delehanty said. "I heard a lot of positive things."

Delehanty estimated 2,000 people attended the festival, which consisted of an arts and crafts fair, student group information tables, a street painting competition and live performances.

Winners in the street painting contest were: Dan Giancola, first place; Steve Ellis, second place; and James Edwards, third place.

Delehanty said despite the large number of people involved, there were no problems with security, littering or alcohol. Set-up also went smoothly, he said.

Delehanty said the multicultural nature of the festival was a key to its success.

"It was a whole new attitude for an outdoor concert at UU," Delehanty said. "It was multicultural instead of party-till-you-drop."

Besides UU, other sponsors were the Student Government Association, the Student African American Society, the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Student Association and the Residence Hall Association.

In addition to the sponsors, other groups participated through the information tables.

Asian Students in America, or A.S.I.A., served up fried rice and lo mein for a dollar a scoop.

"We had everyone from the Marxist Collective to La Casa," Delehanty said. "To me, that was the greatest thing."

The bands who performed also showed diversity (Royal Crescent Mob played rock and roll with a funk twist, The Meditations, a reggae band, also performed as did Mo' Better Blues, a jazz quartet.

Delehanty said the event's purpose was to give students something special to do during the long weekend. He noted many freshmen don't go home during the Labor Day weekend because the holiday occurs so close to the start of classes.

"This is a good way to spend Labor Day weekend," Delehanty said. "This is a good way to welcome students back."

Delehanty said he had hoped for a bigger turnout.

"But I couldn't really be disappointed because everything went so well," Delehanty said.

The turnout would have been better if there had been more advance publicity, Delehanty said.

"The worst criticism we got was 'We didn't hear about it in time,'" Delehanty said.

Wimpy’s wars with Ziggy’s

By TED CLANZER
Contributing Writer

The thought of the genial cartoon characters Wimpy and Ziggy fighting over customers and getting into price wars in a business may seem tough to imagine.

However, such a battle is being waged right here at Syracuse University. Ziggy’s and Wimpy’s are the names of food trucks that operate on campus.

“We were the first one. So far, everyone has copied us,” said 29-year-old Mark Burnam, co-owner of Wimpy’s.

Indeed, there is much history and controversy between the two trucks. Wimpy’s has been in business, under several owners, for more than 25 years.

“People’s fathers who came to the university have eaten here,” Burnam said. “Wimpy’s is a tradition.”

The Wimpy Wagon is located behind Bird Library on Waverly Avenue. There has been a food truck in the Ziggy’s location, the corner of University and Comstock, for about 30 years, according to co-owner Pamela Hooley.

Both offer similar food

Both trucks offer the same selection of food, ranging from hamburgers and pizza to kielbasa and chili. However, the owners of both trucks differ on which offers the best food.

“Put us (Wimpy’s and Ziggy’s) in a debate. Me on one side and him on the other with our food and a bunch of students eating. I’ll tell you he won’t be in business anymore,” Burnam said.

Hooley said she likes to think Ziggy’s offers better food, which helps in gaining regular customers.

“The guy who runs Wimpy’s Wagon said things to students about Ziggy’s paper plate (4x4), which we just don’t do. He (Burnam) used to come up here on weekends and line the trucks up side by side. Every time he cut prices, we have an extra pizza or french fries left, we will sell it for half price or give it to customers. We don’t give food to beggars,” she said.

Marketing ploys

Like most businesses, Ziggy’s and Wimpy’s have ways to attract more customers.

Ziggy’s has a telephone number students may call to place their orders in advance. The owners of Ziggy’s offer deals in the Money to Burn coupon book, which is distributed to students at the beginning of each semester. Although Wimpy’s does not advertise, it too has ways to attract customers. “We keep prices at college-student prices.”

New book examines current race relations

It's made clear in the jacket copy of Shelby Steele's book "Content of Our Character: A New Vision of Race in America" that this dossier of Steele's opinions on contemporary race relations is not "an ax-grinding treatise."

But if Steele grinds no axes, neither does he bury any hatchets in this powerfully-drawn attack on racial preferences. Even as he denounces racial-preference policies such as affirmative action, he makes it clear that today's white-controlled society is not without need of retribution. The end result: a refreshingly bold perspective on today's racial barriers.

Steele, a professor of English at San Jose State University in California, came to the forefront of political debate when Clarence Thomas was nominated to the U.S. Court. Thomas, a vocal opponent of affirmative action, mirrors Steele's long-standing views on racial preference.

Steele, in an Aug. 12 interview with Time magazine, explained the black voice against affirmative action. "What I've tried to say, and I think Clarence Thomas stands for pretty much the same thing, is that by opposing racial preferences we stand for black strength rather than weakness."

Anti-affirmative action

That becomes the basic premise of Steele's book. While he admits many of the means blacks have used to amass power—the term "Black American" and the existence of black separatist organizations, for example—he finds affirmative action the most damming of the procedures.

Steele reinforces this again and again that society needs some mechanism to pull blacks up to an equal societal footing with whites. And he does not, at any time, allow whites to escape guiltless, from past acts of racism. He recounts his own experiences with racism, from physical abuse in a segregated primary school in Chicago to stifled conversations with his professional colleagues.

But affirmative action, he says, is not the correct redress. Steele argues for an end to the victimization of blacks, but he believes that result must come from blacks—not whites.

"Historically, blacks have been terribly victimized," he writes. "But when today's black college students—who often enjoy preferential admission and many other special concessions—claim victimization, I think that it too often amounts to a repositioning of denied doubts and anxieties they are unwilling to look at."

Justifiable doubts

Some of those doubts, Steele feels, are justifiable. For example, a black student in a low-funded inner-city high school likely will not perform as well as a white, suburban-educated student performs on standardized tests.

His argument, however, is that a black student with equal raw intelligence should be able to overcome the differences in upbringing by hard work. And if the student is less naturally intelligent, he should not expect to dominate in competition for scholarships, for college admissions, for employment opportunities.

Steele believes that affirmative action encourages blacks to rely on their ethnicity and fail to develop themselves as individuals. That, he says, does nothing to further the cause of pulling blacks upward—rather, it reaffirms in the minds of all Americans the status of the minority as the victim.

A Syracuse University College of Law student had her car stolen, possibly at gunpoint from the Sparkle Car Wash on Erie Blvd. East on Saturday.

The woman was vacuuming her 1977 Buick Regal when she was approached by a man in his 20s who told her to give up her keys. The woman told police she misunderstood the man and asked him "What did you say?"

The police report states the man, who had a dark complexion and was wearing a blue hooded sweatshirt, then restated his threat. The woman then backed away from the car and the suspect asked her for the keys. She reached for her purse, knowing her keys were in her shorts pocket.

The suspect then asked for the purse back, and the woman, thinking he had a gun under his sweatshirt, gave it to him.

The woman told police she believed the man was on some kind of drug because he was reacting slow and did not smell of alcohol.

The suspect was last seen driving the vehicle down Erie Blvd. Police have no leads in the case.

A Syracuse University student attempted suicide by cutting her left wrist with a razor blade Monday morning at about 3:30 a.m.

According to a police report, the 21-year-old student said she was depressed about several problems in her life. Police say the woman realized she was making a mistake after she cut herself and then called for help.

SU Ambulance paramedics treated the woman and transported her to Crouse-Irving Memorial Hospital where she was instructed to be admitted to a psychiatric facility.

The woman refused treatment.

A Syracuse University junior reported her purse stolen from her car over the weekend.

The 21-year-old resident of 300 Walnut Avenue said her purse was in her 1988 Jeep Cherokee when it was parked at 736 Ostrom Ave. She left it there overnight on Saturday and when she returned Sunday the passenger window was broken and her purse was gone, police reported.

The purse and her credit cards were recovered as stolen property by Syracuse University Security later on Sunday. Attorney general verified that nothing was missing.

A number of license plates were also reported stolen over the weekend by people in the university area.

A 1991 Honda Accord parked in the 100 block of Walnut Avenue had its Florida plate stolen between Thursday and Friday.

A 1991 Acura Integra parked at the Fastbreak Deli, 534 Westcott St., had its New York plate removed from the car Sunday night.

A 21-year-old Syracuse University student reported the license plate from his 1997 Ford Temp broken sometime between Friday and Saturday when it was parked at the 500 block of Marshall Street.

A loud party at 960 Lancaster Ave. Sunday night was broken up by police resulting in one arrest.

Peter Tryba, a 21-year-old Syracuse University senior, who lives at the address was arrested for violation of a noise ordinance. He was not issued an appearance ticket due to his intoxicated condition, police say.

Tryba was seen drinking from a bottle of Night Train Express wine when the police came in and asked the party-goers to turn down the music. According to a police report.

A video image of Syracuse University's Summer Sessions had its home robbed sometime between Aug. 28 and Sept. 2, according to a report to police.

A videocassette recorder valued at $400 and $40 in cash was taken from his Bradford Park residence. Ms. Celen and her husband returned home from an out-of-town trip to find their home ransacked, police say.

A 19-year-old Syracuse University student was stopped by SU Security from running in and out of traffic on Comstock Avenue Friday night.

Security officers were called to the 600 block of Comstock Avenue as the Sadler Hall resident was trying to get hit by the oncoming traffic.

Officers removed her from the street against her will. She told police she "wanted to die tonight" and "tonight's a good night to give myself to Christ."

The woman was taken to the Emergency Room of Crouse-Irving Memorial Hospital for an evaluation of her psychologic condition.

A Syracuse University sophomore reported her wallet stolen from her boyfriend's car.

A 21-year-old student was approached by a man in his 20s and was seen wearing a white long-sleeved shirt, dark pants and a dark baseball cap. The suspect is tall, slim and in his 20s and was seen wearing a white long-sleeved shirt, dark pants and a dark baseball cap.

A Syracuse University senior reported her 1997 Ford Tempo broken into Aug. 17.

The Watson Hall resident said her front, passenger-side window was shattered and the antenna was broken off. According to a police report, $300 in damage resulted from the break-in and $200 in cash and the woman's bank machine cards were stolen.

Steele also points out the irony inherent in some cases of affirmative action. He cites Stanford University in Palo Alto, Calif., where the administration awards minority students as much as $15,000 per year in financial aid, yet has found itself the target of student lobbying for more financial aid. He calls students like these "super-victims," and argues that their reliance on preferential treatment is far more damming than any discrimination.

We are cheaper, but offer better food," Burman said.
Competition between the two trucks, both businesses have to contend with weather, obnoxious and intoxicated people, which wagons must each deal with.
Definitely don't compete with the people on Marshall Street, but the weather definitely affects business," Burman said.
It's strange. Sometimes it's color. Other times you feel like walking down Marshall street, so they come here," Hooley said.
Hooley said Ziggy's is the only occupation she holds. During the day, she and her partner take care of the truck's bills and maintenance.
A jack-of-all-trades
Unlike his competition, Burman is sort of a jack-of-all-trades. He has opened a pizza parlor on Marshall street bearing the same name as his truck.
When it opened in the summer, business was slow. But now that school has opened, the place is doing great," Burman said.
I also have my car dealer's license and I work in construction," he said.
The owners of both trucks disagree on their happiness in the business.
I love it. Where else can you work five or six hours for six days a week and make fun of drunk people," Burman said.
Hooley said. Hooley is not as enthusiastic. "If I knew then what I know now, I wouldn't have gone into the business," Hooley said.
Hooley cited rude students and the hassle of bills as her reasons for not liking the occupation. "Having to deal with drunk all the time gets to be a pain. It's the worst part of the job," Hooley said.
Most patrons of the trucks said the reason for going to one truck over the other had to do with location.
"I like Ziggy's better just because it's closer," said junior Maureen Grise.
"I prefer whichever one is nearest, if I have money at the time," said junior Michael Doherty.

BACKPACK

Despite slow sales at SU, Straughan said ToPAQ is really popular at his alma mater, Cornell. In the first week of school, the Cornell bookstore has sold almost half of the 83 bags it ordered, he said.
While the pack, which retails for $39.95, was designed for students, Straughan said it is also great for carrying things to the gym or work and while traveling on vacation.

Pack is waterproof
The strap fits easily on either shoulder or across the chest, leaving both hands free. It also has a velcro pouch inside, a thumb hook and a pouch on the strap to hold bus schedules, keys or pens and pencils. The ToPAQ is made of a waterproof material called Cordura.

Straughan, who graduated from Cornell's School of Architecture last year, is a native of London, England. He got the idea for ToPAQ from a friend in London, Anthony Hutton. Straughan liked the idea so much he presented it to the School of Management at Cornell and won $2,500 for the best business proposal of the year. He used that money to get the company started.
He then redesigned the pack with the help of two friends at Cornell to take back to England to negotiate a royalty agreement with Hutton and patented ToPAQ in the United States.
"I'm really excited about the whole thing. It's going really well," Straughan said. "At the beginning of the year it was only being sold on two campuses. Now it's being sold on 40 other campuses."

With a write-up in the next issue of Rolling Stone, the ToPAQ is starting to get national recognition, Straughan said. Right now, the ToPAQ is the only product the company sells, but Straughan says he has plans for expansion.
"We are developing other student-focused bags and packs and we will continue to make innovative designs," Straughan said. Already ToPAQ Inc. has developed leather and embroidered cloth versions of the original, Straughan said.
Although Straughan will stick with his company for now, he still wants to pursue architecture as a career.
"I enjoy designing a lot. And I want to be an architect someday," Straughan said. "Hopefully, I can use ToPAQ to get there."

Football cards not playing with full deck

The money machine known as Syracuse University is at it again. In each of this year's programs, there will be trading cards of six different Orange players, and there are six home games, so a complete set will feature 36 players and coaches.

The cards are sponsored by the SU athletic department, the Carrier Dome and Drumlin.

ROB CHETTIE

SPORTS OPINION

In a release designed to promote the cards, the lead sentence says, "The Syracuse University football team will continue to spread an anti-drug message to area youngsters this fall through a series of football trading cards."

The catch here is that the cards can only be obtained if you buy a game program.

To get all 36 cards, you have to shell out two or three dollars for each of the six game programs. It's a lot of money for kids to pay. The 1991 Kirby Puckett cards don't even go for that much.

This deal is shamelessly taking advantage of the card industry's success. But on top of that, they're promoting themselves for a cause that they're taking advantage of.

If you're going to promote something as anti-drug, then give the cards away to all kids 12-and-under (or in some cases, 12-and-over) as they enter the stadium. Or give them to police officers so they can distribute them in the local schools. Or, if you really want to make an impact, set up appearances by the players to give anti-drug speeches in the schools. And have them sign the cards.

To get the cards, you first have to have enough money to buy a ticket and go to the game. So, in most cases, the people getting the cards are the ones who need an influence and a role model the least.

Basically, the tri-sponsors of this ordeal are using an anti-drug message to make money. It's a phony attempt at public service. They're making a mockery of a serious public issue.

It would be like one of the local papers saying, "Buy us, we're an anti-drug paper."

It wouldn't bother me in the least if they put the cards in the program and promoted them as such without the anti-drug message. Or even put the anti-drug fact at the bottom of the release.

But to get your attention and lure you into the cards by using a cause that is taken seriously and promoted by police officers and city volunteers simply for profit is wrong.

These cards were made for all the right reasons and distributed for all the wrong causes. If these sponsors are serious about anti-drug efforts, they'll do more than sell the cards for fifty cents apiece. They'll reach out to the community that needs them.

If not, then let's just admit the cards are there to make money.

Syracuse opens strong

Weekend sweep starts season off for Orangewomen

By ZEV BOROW

Staff Writer

The 1991 Syracuse University women's volleyball team remembered to bring all the right equipment to its season opener last night at Manley Fieldhouse.

The Orangewomen swept the Crimson Tide, the Eastern Kentucky Colonels and the Temple Owls.

The Orangewomen began the 1991 campaign with a 3-1 victory against Alabama.

SU was led by senior co-captain Jessica Paarlberg, junior Annie Parisien and senior K.Y. Patton Purner, who was named the tournament MVP, and Paarlberg dominated the Crimson Tide upfront.

However, the opening match with the Crimson Tide, as well as the following matches against the Owls and the Colonels, may well be remembered as the coming-out party for freshman Angie Casazza.

Casazza, a 6-foot-3 middle blocker from Roanoke, III., recorded 13 block assists and three kills in her collegiate debut versus the Crimson Tide.

"Angie was very impressive in her debut, she still has a lot to learn, but she played very well," Schulte said.

"I was happy with the way I played," Casazza said. "I was very nervous to start with, but the team helped to calm me down."

Syracuse University's Aimee Mask (left) and Jessica Paarlberg go up for a block in Saturday night's win over Eastern Kentucky. The Orangewomen won all three matches at Manley Field House this weekend.

Syracuse University's David Walker bow out Terry Richardson for the starting tailback spot. Coach Paul Pasqualoni said both Walker, who had a fine season in 1990 as the starter, and Richardson, a sophomore, will see playing time.

Pasqualoni names SU starting lineup

Offensive line set, but not settled

By JOSH BARNETT

Staff Writer

Many questions were answered Monday when Syracuse University's Paul Pasqualoni announced the two-deep for the season opener.

The Orangemen play Vanderbilt University on Saturday in the Carrier Dome at noon.

The biggest pending question concerned an offensive line, which lost four of five starters.

"(The offensive line is) an area we're concerned with," Pasqualoni said. "They're working very hard. We don't know exactly where we stand, and we're not going to until we've played some games."

The lone returning SU starter, right guard Terrence Wilson, will be joined at the guard spot by Jerry Sharp, a back-up nose tackle last season. John Capaccione and Andrew Dee, a two-year starter at tight end, will be listed as back-ups.

The starting offensive line that Pasqualoni announced Tuesday is:

Tackle: Marvin Graves, who started 11 games last season, will be the starting quarterback.

Graves passed for 1711 yards with nine touchdowns and a 57.5 completion percentage.

Senior co-captain Mark McDonald will be the backup.

Sophomore Doug Womack will also get some playing time in different situations, Pasqualoni said.

"Doug Womack is expected to be in this game 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 times," he said.

David Walker will start at tailback but will split time with sophomore John Terry Richardson. The duo combined for 850 yards and nine touchdowns last season.

"Walker and Richardson will both be seeing time -- to what degree and how much I think we will determine as we go, but you can expect to see them both," Pasqualoni said.

Disabled require unique plan

If neither fire fighters, police nor campus security are on the scene, the person may call the University Security Office (443-1212) or 443-2255 and request assistance on behalf of the person with a disability. The phone number 711 can also be used to contact the security office from phones located in university-owned buildings where the exchange is 443 or 442.

If practicable, the person with a disability may also directly call the university’s security office at the number listed above. When calling, he or she should provide the following information: his or her location, the reason evacuation assistance is required and the necessity for any special equipment.

In order to evacuate such as a wheelchair, litter, etc., evacuation methodology normally will be left to department and police department personnel because of their safety training in evacuating persons with disabilities.

Any person with a disability who anticipates that he or she may have difficulty in evacuating any university building should request that the Office for Student Assistance include their name on the list available to the scene; the person may call the University Security Office for assistance.

SU improves accessibility for disabled students

By SHERRI BROUILLETTE
Contributing Writer

College life is an adjustment for all students. But, for the disabled, it may seem impossible.

According to Karen Zuk of the Office of Disabled Student Services, Syracuse University is determined to end this feeling of frustration.

McCauley said there are about 100 students at SU with physical disabilities and the university has made tremendous headway for an older university in its efforts at accessibility.

This belief is shared by Nora McCabe, president of the Disability Advocacy Organization.

McCabe said the campus is quite accessible; however, “in few areas need work — faculty centers, possibly the ESF campus.”

McCabe said SU has a wide range of services available to disabled students such as, “readers, note-takers, books for the blind and counselors for disabled students.”

Most campus buildings are handicapped accessible.

Opening doors

Some of the university’s older buildings may not be equipped with door openers for the handicapped. But if a disabled student is placed in a classroom which is inaccessible, the class will be moved to another location, Zuk said.

Students can also receive keys to restricted elevators from the Office for Student Assistance which is located at 804 University Ave.

All residence halls are equipped with handicapped facilities and efforts are made to place disabled students in the halls which best suit their needs, Zuk said.

Aside from outdoor ramps and automatic doors, each residence hall contains rooms which are furnished with special visual fire alarms for the deaf. Guide dogs for the blind are permitted in all residence halls and campus buildings.

Telephones for the deaf are not provided by the university because a Telecommunications Device for the Deaf (TDD) may be purchased individually by the student.

This device requires no special services for use.

Nevertheless, TDDs are available for student use at the Office of Disabled Student Services, the School of Social Work and the Disability Advocacy Organization.

Other services

Other services available to disabled students at SU are shuttle buses and sign language interpreters.

The shuttle buses which run on campus are wheelchair-accessible and wheelchair-accessible stops are marked by blue handicapped signs.

Students who need sign language interpreters either in class or otherwise may obtain this assistance through various interpreter referral services throughout central New York.

The Disability Advocacy Organization is here to “act as a trouble-shooter for students who may have problems with professors or any other academics” McCabe said.

UU offers diverse entertainment

By ALEX PICMAN
Contributing Writer

Tucked away on the ground floor of the Schine Student Center is the main office of Syracuse University’s largest and most widespread student organization.

From organizing performances by such bands as the Red Hot Chili Peppers to running the largest student-operated television station in the United States, University Union aims to provide students with alternative sources of entertainment.

“University Union offers students cheap entertainment that doesn’t need the use of alcohol,” said Kyle Poquette, UU’s director of programming.

The nine boards of UU will hold a general information meeting tonight at 8:00 in the Schine’s Underground.

The alternative radio station WERW has been attracting much attention from students, a UU member said.

In the past, WERW could only be received on a TV set, but this semester students will be able to tune their radios to WERW-AM750 and listen to the voice of UU.

Free-form radio

“The programming is free-form,” said Greg Bellerose, a WERW disc jockey.

“Bellerose is also involved in another board of UU. He has helped to organize the Coffeehouse, which meets every Sunday at 8:00 p.m. in the Faculty Center on University Place.

The Coffeehouse gives student performers and artists an opportunity to expose their work to an audience of their peers, Bellerose said.

“Students can have a cup of coffee while appreciating the talent of fellow students,” he said.

Jabberwocky is UU’s newest board.

Organized late last semester, the board was launched to provide free-form weekend entertainment in the Schine Division Center.

During Opening Weekend, Jabberwocky held a comedy night, and last weekend a student rock band took the stage.

UU’s nine boards were created to fulfill the desires of students, Poquette said.

“We are a creative outlet for the students,” Poquette said.

Gorbachev criticized, then praised by Yeltsin

Russian Federation President Boris N. Yeltsin openly criticized, then praised Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev in his speech opening the second day of the Congress of the People’s Deputies.

Yeltsin said Gorbachev and the rest of the Soviet leaders led the country “practically blindly” into last month’s coup.

According to the Russian president, Gorbachev caused the coup by not listening to the people’s participants to gain high positions in the Communist Party.

Yeltsin also said he has more confidence in Gorbachev since the coup.

The Congress is meeting to debate plans to reorganize the structure of the Soviet Union. Most insiders feel the Congress will move to grant independence to Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia.

Parts factory explodes killing 25 workers

At least 25 people died and dozens were injured in an explosion at a chicken processing plant in Hamlet, N.C. on Tuesday.

Witnesses say a ball of fire ripped through the roof of the one-story plant, which is used to supply chicken nuggets to fast food restaurants and grocery stores.

At least 100 workers were trapped inside the plant during the fire that followed. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration is looking into claims that the plant had no emergency exists and that a delivery truck blocked the entrance to the canteen, where many workers were on break.

OSHA officials say the plant has never been inspected for safety, but there are no records of safety violations there.

The investigation by OSHA is being handled by the regional office.

Fire authorities suggest a deep-fat chicken-fryer part may be the cause of the explosion, but they are still investigating.

Subway line repaired; conductor to be charged

Transit workers in Manhattan worked through the weekend to repair the section of the Lexington Ave. line where five people died last week.

Two test trains passed slowly over the new tracks as workers watched silently.

Last Wednesday’s derailment killed five riders, injured 200 and shut down the world’s busiest subway line for six days.

The conductor of the train, who was not injured in the crash, was allegedly using crack at the time.

Douglas portrait donated to School of Social Work

A portrait of abolitionist Frederick Douglass was donated to the School of Social Work by a former Syracuse University student.

The portrait, which was donated by Betty B. Chapman, who graduated from the College of Fine Arts in 1903, was presented to President John M. F. Chapman.

William Pollard, dean of the school, said he would place the portrait in Douglas’s office.

During the fall semester, the experimental Freshman Advocacy Network program will give Syracuse University students a friend and the chance for the administration to take pride in individual students, according to organizer Ronald Cavanagh, vice president of undergraduate studies.

The FAN program was planned during the spring by Cavanagh and Thomas Cummings, vice president of enrollment, in order to help freshmen enrolled in the S. I. Newhouse School of Public Communications or the School of Management integrate themselves into university life. After plans for the program were announced, 80 friends of Cummings and Cavanagh were recruited or volunteered as advocates, Cavanagh said.

SU employees from all positions were solicited with the sole requirement of having knowledge of the campus, the Syracuse area and New York state, Cavanagh said. These advocates then attended two training sessions to prepare them for the arrival of their five or six assigned freshmen.

Helping students adjust

The program teaches students about "what's involved in transitions to university life," Cavanagh said. It also will "help (students) with fears, aspirations, expectations, make the freshman feel more comfortable in their environment and how to take a role in affecting this environment," he said.

Each FAN grouping is scheduled to meet once a month to talk about concerns, questions and goals, Cavanagh said.

Each group will also go off campus for dinner and to a dining hall for lunch once a month, he said.

These activities are designed to put the leaders in the position of "older friend, mentor or advocate," Cavanagh said. However, he stressed that the FAN program is not aimed to replace academic advisers or counselors.

"It's like having a friend who knows all of the answers to the problems of college life," said Jane Brady, a Newhouse freshman.

Peter Duffy, a freshman also enrolled in Newhouse said, "FAN made me feel like I could come to the campus knowing someone." Freshmen say they enjoy meeting other students in their groups and having someone to count on for advice.

Running through January

The program is scheduled to run through January with a "war stories" party planned for the advocates in February, Cavanagh said.

If the program works, Cavanagh said he hopes to extend the program to other schools without duplicating existing programs.

"It would be the good and right thing to take FAN as far as it really contributes," he said.

Barbara Baker, a FAN advocate and director of residential life became an advocate because, "It's an opportunity to connect in a permanent way to first year students, know them as individuals and help ease their transition."

In addition to moving the 320-ton observatory, the project's funding will be handled through a special campaign called "Fifty in Five for Maxwell," he said.

"We're positive we can bring it all of the answers to the problems of campus life," Cavanagh said.

Construction of Eggers Hall to begin after spring semester

By DAVID A. SMITH
Staff Writer

Preparation has begun for the building of a $20 million addition to Syracuse University's Maxwell Hall.

The new building will be named Eggers Hall in honor of Melvin A. Eggers, former SU chancellor and professor.

Eggers retired Aug. 19 after nearly 40 years of service to SU, with 20 years as chancellor.

Construction on the building is scheduled to begin in the spring of 1993, according to John Palmer, dean of the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs.

"My understanding is that (construction) will begin shortly after graduation next spring," he said.

In order for Eggers Hall to be built, Hayden Observatory had to be moved nearly 100 feet west and 60 feet south to a location between Crouse College and the Law School.

Joel Mareiniss, a part-time radio, television news professor at Syracuse, doggedly continues an interview with a plate of shaving cream.

"It would be the good and right thing to take FAN as far as it really contributes," he said.

Program helps freshmen adjust

In addition to moving the 320-ton observatory, the project's funding was done. Palmer said.

New gas, telephone and steam lines are now set in place for the addition, he said.

Construction of parking garage Also, construction of a new parking garage, new facilities for FAN before construction on Eggers Hall can begin, Palmer said.

This money would be used for such things as endowed professorships, financial aid and academic programs, Palmer added.

Lots of room

The building will have approximately 70,000 square feet of usable space, with 10,000 square feet of classroom space.

"The most immediate, important advantage to the university and students are the classroom facilities that will be a part of this building," said Robert McClure, associate dean of the Maxwell School.

"This will be a major instructional facility," he said.

The Maxwell building has approximately 5,000 square feet of classroom space, McClure said.

"There'll be places for people to study in this building — quiet, convenient, accessible places," he said.

One advantage of the addition of building will be the centralization of Maxwell's departments, Palmer said.

"We've got pieces of the school spread out all over the campus," he said. "We have to teach all over the campus."

"Eggers Hall will enable several things to happen," Palmer said.

"One is that it will bring the school together in one complex," he said. "It will also give us a lot of new space and it will make it a home for things we can't now serve."

The hall will also include a quiet study area, better department facilities and rooms for small group study and conferences, Palmer said.

"There's going to be a cafe," he added. "There will also be space for workshops, lectures and other gatherings," Palmer said.

"That space will be freed up for the rest of the university to enhance the quality of life and instruction," he said.

The consolidation will also enhance the multi-disciplinary approach to education in Maxwell, McClure added.

"The school has always fostered learning between the social sciences, McClure said.

"When we're all spread out it becomes much harder to have the kind of access to each other that facilitates a multi-disciplinary approach to teaching and research," he said.

"The addition of Eggers Hall is not just an achievement of the Maxwell School, but an enhancement and achievement of SU as a whole," he said.

Yesterday George Bush chided the American public, telling us our educational system is disgraceful. That would make him, our self-proclaimed education president, disgraceful as well.

In an address to high school students, Bush blamed the failing school system on parents, neglecting. According to Bush, children learn nothing at home. If they do not learn there, they do not learn.

Such messages sound peculiar. Children should not spend six or seven hours a day in class if they cannot learn there. If our current educational system has deteriorated to the point of complete ineffectiveness, it is the president's responsibility to encourage the redistribution of money and control the African-American public.

He told Americans that "education and expectation go hand in hand." But impoverished schools and, at higher levels, cuts in financial aid, teach students to expect nothing. In Bush's tenure, there will be no expectation, no learning. How does our country fare? Our country is left uneducated and unfulfilled.

Some parents can take an active role in educating their children. But schools play a fundamental role in education. If we take away their ability to educate American students, we will fail as a nation.

Popular footage from Bush's premature and hypocritical campaign speech features our president saying "the world trembles with new possibilities." But the tenure of Bush has left our schools with everything they need, we take away the country's future.

I do think that the distinction between "assisted by" and "co-author" is important, just as I believe that a name put quotes around the interpretations of someone's words versus their verbatim — despite what the Syracuse University press release states.

I also want to add that I am extremely familiar with the national, even international, coverage on this issue, and for the Syracuse University, most evening handed and complete accounts have appeared — in Kathy Drouin's series of articles in the DO. It has been extremely constructive that she wrote on these issues consistently over time and that she had the space to do it.

Brooksfilms trades silly for serious

After the dismal box office performance of the comedy Life Stinks, Mel Brooks' Brooksfilms has announced a slate of upcoming serious films.

The company plans to produce Hamma, a war crimes trial drama about a Japanese general who was responsible for the killing of 10,000 prisoners of war in 1942.

Other projects for Brooksfilms include My Traitor's Heart, which is based on the book by Rian Malan about a South African-born journalist, and a Paul Verhoeven movie depicting the last three years in the life of Jesus Christ.

In the past, Brooksfilms has produced other serious films such as The Embalmer and Life.

Another peek at 'Twin Peaks'

Just when you thought it was safe to roam the Pacific Northwest without encountering cherry pie, women who talk to their logs or murderous fathers, David Lynch has announced plans to make a full-length motion picture based on his failed TV series Twin Peaks.

Twin Peaks: Fire Walk With Me, the film's working title, will chronicle the last seven days of Laura Palmer's life. Palmer is the prom queen whose murder caused the arrival of Agent Dale Cooper (Kyle MacLachlan) in the ABC television series, MacLachlan has presumably have full part in the film as he arrives only after Laura's murder. Sherilyn Fenn, who played sultry Audrey, and Lara Flynn Boyle, who played Laura's best friend Donna, will not be in the film due to schedule conflicts. However, USA Today reports that actor Kiefer Sutherland will appear in the film as an undisclosed character.

In other Peaks news, the Twin Peaks pilot episode is being released by Warner Home Video on Sept. 11 with never-before-seen footage from the Euro-European video release. The first seven episodes will be available from Warner Home Video. A Calendar is also on the market from Landmark Calendars.

Soviet books rushed into print

Bantam Books has moved up the publication of An Agent in Place (Dial, $25) from January 99 to this month. The book is about a plot to oust Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and will be billed as "The prophetic new thriller that goes behind today's headlines."

And Raiza Gorbachev's I Hope (Harper Collins, $20) is due tomorrow and has been excerpted in the current issue of Mirabella.

It has been 25 years since the crew of the Starship Enterprise first went boldly where no one has gone before. Today they continue to explore the final frontier in books, comics, movies, video games and The Next Generation.

Star Trek wasn't just a television series-turned-endless string of movie sequels, it was a pop culture phenomenon.

When the show debuted Sept. 8, 1966, NBC executives were nervous that Mr. Spock (Leonard Nimoy) would be rebuked for his devilish looks. Instead, he became a sex symbol.

And the idea of a woman in a position of command so shocking that the头 chief tains that Majel Barrett's character, Number One, was eliminated from the series after the first pilot was filmed. Barret later returned as Nurse Chapel.

Although the character of Uhura may be laughed at now as simply an intergalactic telephone operator with a salt shaker in her ear, back then having a black woman on the bridge also sent shock waves through the conservative network regime.

But Gene Roddenberry's creation triumphed.

It garnered critical acclaim, media attention and most importantly, a loyal following of fans whose letter-writing campaigns helped keep the show on the air for three seasons.

Even after Star Trek was canceled it lived on in books, comics and an animated series. By the mid-1970s the show had become so popular in syndication that Roddenberry sought to create a second series, to be called Star Trek II: When that project did not go through, Star Trek: The Motion Picture was launched.

Though the first film was ravaged by critics, the fans ate it up. Soon Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan was in production.

Better costumes, a better script and better direction by Nicholas Meyer helped the sequel garner critical acclaim. It is still regarded by many as the best in the series.

Since Spock died at the end of number two, a search for his body was necessary. So Kirk (William Shatner) and company gathered again for Star Trek III: The Search for Spock which was directed by Spock himself, Leonard Nimoy. Although this third installment was more emotional and less action-packed, it still brought in enough money to generate Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home which became a crossover hit. Not only did Trekkies love it, but so did the general public. Once again, Star Trek was hot.

Return to television

Then came Roddenberry's next slight of hand: a new Star Trek, set 85 years after the adventures of the original crew.

Star Trek: The Next Generation was born, quickly becoming one of the most popular series of all time. Now fans of the original had a whole new cast of characters to follow on weekly adventures.

But just as things were going along at warp nine, Star Trek V: The Final Frontier arrived in theaters and bombed. William Shatner took the director's chair this time and promptly sent studio executives at Paramount into red alert. Their cash cow phenomenon was in trouble.

Although Star Trek V did decently at the box office, it came nowhere near the $110 million take of the fourth film, and fans found the story dumb and the special effects slipped.

When word of this scenario was leaked, fans were appalled. They couldn't imagine their old favorites being usurped by a new Star Trek brat pack. So Paramount nixed the idea, Bennett left the production and Nicholas Meyer returned to co-write (with Leonard Nimoy) and direct the forthcoming Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country, which will be the swan song for the original series.

Spock gets a sweetheart?

Although the story of Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country pits the Federation against their sworn enemy, the Klingon Empire, Leonard Nimoy stars as Mr. Spock (far left), Kim Cattrall plays Lt. Valeria and Paul RossUi (second from right) as Brigadier Kerla.

After 25 years of voyages into the final frontier, the original cast of Star Trek is reunited for their sixth big screen adventure. The Undiscovered Country, opening in theaters Dec. 13. Michael Dom, Christopher Plummer, DeForest Kelley and William Shatner star in the Nicholas Meyer film.

Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country opens in theaters Dec. 13. In November, Leonard Nimoy will make a guest appearance as a 130-year-old Spock in a special two-part episode of Star Trek: The Next Generation. Spock is discovered making an unauthorized visit to the Romulan home world. Mark Lenard will also appear as Sarek.

After The Next Generation ends its television run, which could be as early as next year, Capt. Jean Luc Picard (Patrick Stewart) and his crew will get their turn on the silver screen. And after that, who knows.

Star Trek could go on forever with a new crew taking the reigns every 20 years. But no matter what, Gene Roddenberry's original creation will linger on, for it truly went where no television series has gone before.

‘Uh-Oh’ elicits mixed review

Robert Fulghum, in his new book Uh-Oh: Some Observations From Both Sides of the Refrigerator Door, tells the reader: "I realize that it's my part to write this book and it's your part to read it; and since you don't tell me how to write it, I shouldn't tell you how to read it."

Telling the reader how to interpret the essays, however, does not seem to be a taboo — at least in the beginning of the book.

Perhaps it just took Fulghum a couple of tries to get back in the swing of things, because once the reader gets past the first several chapters, the book takes off in the spirit of All I Really Need To Know I Learned In Kindergarten and It Was On Fire When I Laid Down On It. "Uh-Oh is not in any dictionary or thesaurus, and is seldom seen in written form. Yet most of us utter that sound every day. And have used it all our lives."

Small syllables, big meaning.

"Uh-Oh is way up near the top of a list of small syllables with large meanings."

"We say 'uh-oh' to a small child who falls down or bumps his head or pinches his finger. It means that we know the child hurts, but we also know that the hurt is temporary and that the child has the resources to get up and go on about his business... 'Uh-Oh' is the first wedge in weaning a child away from pain and injury or thesaurus, and is seldom seen in written form. Yet most of us utter that sound every day. And have used it all our lives."

"The older we get, the more experience and knowledge we have, the more able we are to distinguish momentary difficulty from serious trouble. The more we know that something is 'uh-oh' and not '11.'"

And so begins the theme prevalent throughout the book. Uh-Oh encompasses topics ranging from meatloaf, hiccup and cigar to fairy tales (particularly the pig in Cinderella) and how to know when to get up and go on. Fulghum spends several pages telling the reader about a kindergarten class that dramatizes Cinderella for a teachers' conference.

It is the story of a shy little boy named Norman who wants to play the role of the pig. "Pig?" the teacher asks. "There is no pig in this story." "Well there is now," Norman answers.

Cinderella's pig.

Fulghum writes, "As it turned out, he gave himself a walk-on part. The pig walked along with Cinderella wherever Cinderella went... He made no sound. He simply sat on his back haunches and observed what was going on, like some silently supportive Greek chorus. The expressions on his face reflected the details of the dramatic action. Looking worried, sad, anxious, hopeful, puzzled, mad, bored, sick and pleaded as the moment required. There was no doubt about what was going on, and no doubt that it was important. One look at the pig, and you knew. The pig was so earnest. So sincere. So very "there." The pig brought gravity and mythic import to this well-worn fairy tale."

This is an essay about imagination, hope and people who make their own fairy tales come true.

Fulghum, with his gift for storytelling, leaves no doubt in the readers' mind that this is the point to the essay. However, he disappoints his readers. Instead of stopping at the end of the story, instead of allowing the reader to draw his own conclusions about the circumstances set forth, Fulghum interprets the essay. He tells what he feels about it. The reader almost feels robbed.

Fulghum keeps up this practice in the first half of the book. Granted, he does not offer an interpretation for every chapter (which when included, often appears at the end of the essay, usually in italics).

But when he does, the reader is disturbed. And the who has read Fulghum's other works will know that they consist of thought-provoking articles — ones that make you stop and perhaps see some aspect of life in a different way.

But in the first half, Uh-Oh, one misses this give-and-take between author and reader. Fulghum gives, but he also tells his audience what to take away. Luckily, he abandons this unsettling practice about halfway through the book and the readers can once again draw their own conclusions.

And though the book gets off to a rocky start, no one will come away disappointed.

Once Fulghum finds his niche, he again brings the spirit of discovery and enlightenment to those who spend time with his works.
Joe Jackson: Laughter and Lust

Joe Jackson does what he damn well pleases in popular music. He's done the new wave thing. He's played with the Japan Philharmonic Orchestra. He's an accomplished pianist. In his 12-year career, he's packed records with reggae, jazz and rock 'n' roll.

After years in the business and having experimented with all forms of music, Jackson now finds himself approaching the same type of musical mid-life crisis as Elvis Costello. He's comfortable with his success in the business but makes his dislike for it obvious. He knocks his own means of employment with the wildly sarcastic anti-single “Hit Single:” “And when I go to pure pop heaven/the angels will gather around/And ask me for me for my whole life story/And ask for that fabulous sound/but I know they're gonna stop me/As I start going through every line/And say please not the whole damn big Audio Dynamite II: Creating clever chaos around The Globe.

album/nobody has that much time/Please, just the hit single.”

The most prominent persona on the album, though, is the disappointed but detached lover, delivering sing-song analyses of love, such as “Stranger Than Fiction”: “Life goes on ... ever immune to prediction/life can be strange/but love can be stranger than fiction.” He shows just how strange with the lines, “I love her so much I don't even know what planet I'm on/I love her so much, I wish she'd just go away.”

Jackson also revisits his reggae days with a world-beat rendition of Fleetwood Mac's "Oh, Well," showing that as he has aged, he's become more comfortable mixing genres. That puts him at the top of his game as a lyric writer and musician today.

Elvis Costello: Mighty Like A Rose

Once a rebellious bookworm punk in over-sized horn-rimmed glasses, Costello sang about alienation, deceit and the bitterness bad relationships breed. "Oh, Well," showing that as he has aged, he's become more comfortable mixing genres. That puts him at the top of his game as a lyric writer and musician today.

Big Audio Dynamite II: The Globe

The Clash they're not. But at least they have their moments. BAD dropped their fake-funk past to become BAD II: a genuine hip-hop punk cross reminiscent of their forerunners.

Mick Jones, guitarist and vocalist of the Clash, makes his roots obvious. From the first words on the record, Jones is still flipping off the world in the best Clash tradition: "If I had my time again I would do it all the same/And not change a single thing/Even when I was to blame."
The Clash's influence appears everywhere on the album, as in "Shall I Stay Or Should I Go." BAD II also rips off "Who's That Girl?" The Who and pute a Phil Collins sample to better use.
The album's only tragic flaw, in their own warped way, contribute to the aesthetic of the album. God's intermittent narrative by an over-bygone soulless man interrupts the flow of "Rush" causing it to get lengthy. But remove those portions of songs like "Rush" and BAD II loses comedic value.

Such is the case with "The Globe," an equally dispersive song that uses the Clash's trademark yelp as a sneeze sound effect.

Vocals that harmonize despite themselves, and the lyrics and funky music comprise the core of this record. Alternately angry and detached, funny and self-mocking, BAD II preserves the essence of The Clash within the confines of modern music.

Next week's edition of This Ain't No Disco features a fall music forecast. Reviews include Lenny Kravitz and Chris Whitley.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Staff Reports

Bo Jackson's rehabilitation song and dance routine finally paid off. Jackson, the two-sport all-star who had been kept out of the majors and trapped in television-land since January, finally returned on Monday night.

Jackson went 0-for-3 in his recall with the Chicago White Sox, as he faced, ironically enough, the team that let him go because of a hip injury, the Kansas City Royals.

Jackson did drive in a run with a sacrifice fly and also battled twice a year in division play. But this is a return to the national spotlight for the ball fans everywhere a huge army and trapped in television since January.

The second greatest rivalry in football will resume next Monday night as the Cowboys host the Redskins.

The National Football League can now officially ready to call it quits. The Redskins are coming off a 45-0 pounding of Detroit. Yet despite the victory and the loss, the intensity of the rivalry should bring out the little power Washington has left.

Nice seeing 'ya

The Miami Dolphins on Tuesday may have been the first team to literally trade a player to be named later. The Dolphins' first round pick this year, Randall Hill, was in the midst of legally changing his name to Randall Thrill Hill, when he was dealt to the Phoenix Cardinals.

The Dolphins will receive the Cardinals' first round pick next year.

"The schemes on that film are not worth anything," he said.

DiNardo, the offensive coordinator for national champion Colorado last season, has taken last year's wishbone and made it an I-bone.

He has taken last year's defense, which surrendered over 40 points seven times, and made it a "reduction 52 defense," designed to crowd the defensive line.

The I-bone, which DiNardo used to highlight tailback Eric Bienemy and utilize the strong throwing arm of Darian Hagan, is similar to the wishbone, Pasqualoni said.

"We've played option teams in the past, but Vanderbilt will run more types of options and will give us more formations," Pasqualoni said. "They will throw the ball deep more than most option teams."

Vanderbilt listed sophomore Jeff Brothers as its starting quarterback.

Brothers did not play against SU last year. Mike Healey, a better passer, and Marcus Wilson, a pure runner, did. Brothers has the best pass-run combination of the three.

"We've gone into opening games before against teams we've never played, but this is the first time we're opening up against a new staff," Pasqualoni said. "We don't even have their spring game. We don't have anything."

Pasqualoni acknowledged it will be equally difficult to prepare offensively, schematically. Vanderbilt will show some "52 formations," but anything beyond that is a guess.

"We also expect to see some things we don't expect," Pasqualoni said.

DiNardo said the 18 returning starters statistic would be misleading because each spot was reopened when he took over.

"Some (players) have more game experience than others," DiNardo said. "But I wouldn't say we're a veteran team."
"I don't think we're putting all the pressure on, or looking to only Kelly," Parker said. "I think we're looking to the senior class. They are lucky because there's eight of them so there's lots of shoulders for the burden of the season to rest on."

The goaltending tandem of Elsia DeRo'Chi and Carolyn Gramatorff returns for the Orangewomen. In 11 games, DeRo'Chi had a 0.96 goals against average, while in 9 games Gramstorff had a 0.55 GAA.

Other returnees include senior Heather Jageteki, junior Denine Groff, and sophomore Shelley Magee and Julie Clark.

The Orangewomen, seeking their first-ever Big East and NCAA tournament bid, begin their season Sept. 7 against the hosts of the Ibmple Invitational. Syracuse will play only four home games, one of which will be against Lafayette College. The Leopards defeated SU last year, 2-1.

Connors gets better with age old game

In the age of multi-million dollar, crybaby athletes there are many who are content to take the money and run. But there are others who withstand their counterparts, appreciate the fans and show some real class.

The remarkable Nolan Ryan, who at 43 still has the mechanics to pitch against players young enough to be his sons, comes to mind.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar played past the age of 40 to become the NBA’s all-time leading scorer. Abdul-Jabbar still had the ability to knock down the skyscraper when he retired.

Monday afternoon at the National Tennis Center, Jimmy Connors secured his place on that list.

Connors celebrated his 28th birthday by defeating Aaron Krickstein 6-3, 7-8 (10-8), 1-6, 6-3, 7-4 (7-4), in one of the most remarkable tennis matches in recent memory.

The five-set marathon lasted 4 hours and 41 minutes and featured two tiebreakers.

Connors has become one of those athletes who can electrify crowds with his intensity and amazing shots. It seemed as if the crowd wouldn’t let Connors lose and inspired him to comeback from a 2-5 deficit in the final set.

The fans, inspired by Connors’ first pumping and yelling, threw away the usual tennis decorum. The chair umpire, David Littlefield, was forced to request quiet after almost every point.

Connors and Littlefield several times but he showed where his allegiance lay late in the match.

After a grueling point, Connors sat down courtsaid and said, “This is what they said for, this is what they get.”

You certainly had to feel for Krickstein, a 24-year-old American, who had only two fans among the crowd of over 15,000.

It looked as if Connors might have been finished during the third set when his serve was in excess of 100 miles per hour. Connors moved into the U.S. Open quarterfinals for the 17th time in the last 18 years.

If it was anybody else they might start to be about winning the whole thing, but not Jimbo; he’s still taking them one at a time.

But, it certainly won’t get any easier for him. Next he plays Paul Harrub, who upset Connors 6-1, 6-3, 7-6.

At least for now, Connors can head to the trainer’s table and enjoy the few days he has off.

He certainly proved what kind of athlete he is. So move over Nolan and Kareem, Jimbo is now a full-fledged member of the “olde but goodie” club.

Coach hopes to improve on record-setting season

Su preparations for unknown Commodores

By GIL PAGOVICH

Last year the Syracuse University women’s field hockey team finished 17-3 — its best season ever — but failed to receive an invitation to the postseason tournament.

After last year’s controversial ending, Su coach Kathleen Parker says her team is looking to prove something to its biggest critics.

“They feel that they need to prove that last year was not a fluke,” Parker said. “I think that’s their mission, to prove that we indeed should have been given some recognition at the end of the season that we didn’t get.”

The Orangewomen, who had a school-record 22-game winning streak last year, were passed in favor of Connecticut (11-8-2) for the NCAA bids.

SU returns nine of 11 starters from last year, including its top two scorers, co-captain Kelly Larkin and Yvonne Milionis.

Milionis, a senior, tallied a school-record 22 goals last year en route to becoming Su’s all-time leading scorer (29 goals). Larkin netted 14 goals last year and has 28 for her three-year career.

This past summer Larkin competed in the Olympic Festival. She scored the winning goal in overtime of the semifinal game and netted the lone goal in the championship game in leading her team to the gold medal.

New emergency line speeds on-campus aid

By KEN ALDRICH
Contribution Writer

Emergency? Dial 711. Syracuse University students in need of emergency help need only to dial this number.

During the third week of August, the Communications Department and SU Security added the 711 program into the pre-existing 911 emergency phone line to quicke response time. The new number will be used to report the former emergency number, 443-1212.

The new software displays the phone number, street, building name and room number of the phone being used to call in an emergency.

Previously, only the telephone number was displayed. The dispatcher would have to then look up the corresponding address in a separate book before sending an officer.

The software is on a one-year trial program. It was obtained from IBM and Northern Telecom International.

The reliability isn’t in question,” said Elise Angiolillo, director of communications at SU. The security and communications departments are only looking at possible enhancements, she said.

A “resounding success”

According to Lt. Jay Duda, SU Security commanding officer in charge of communications, the program has been a “resounding success.”

As the system was implemented, the majority of incoming calls have been students stuck in elevators.

Students also report prank calls, even hang-ups, since the numbers appear on the computer before the first ring, Duda said.

The phone numbers of handicapped and disabled students are also programmed into the system. This way the security force can determine if any extra help is needed to ensure safety.

The former emergency phone number is still in operation because the system has not yet been completed. SU is on a separate phone system from local communities.

Off-campus addresses do not necessarily appear on the display, unless the phone used is serviced by the same New York Company Central Office, Angiolillo said. However, the phone number will still appear on the computer display before.

Each officer on duty can receive one call on the display at once. All other calls are put on an automatic hold until an officer is free.

Angiolillo said the departments are looking into having multiple calls appear on the display at once.

When the dispatcher receives a call, a police officer is sent to the address. The officer then must analyze the situation and decide whether to bring in medical or fire units.

New health center director stresses greater involvement

By JOANNE KARPE
Staff Writer

Syracuse University Health Services new director wants more students to take an active interest in the health center.

"I would like to get students more involved in decisions about Health Services," said Carol Simkins.

The health center consists of a general medical clinic which is open 24 hours a day, an allergy clinic, a cold clinic, a vision clinic and a gynecology clinic and an infirmary for students who do not need hospitalization. It also provides counseling, pharmaceutical, X-ray and health education services.

Simkins said she plans to focus on health promotion, providing services that address the total aspect of the student. This includes helping students make decisions about health care and healthful lifestyles.

Although SU provides health education, Simkins said a formal program will be created.

The center will work with other campus organizations to promote activities in residence halls and other programs.

A health advisory board will join the staff in January to assist in health education programming, she said.

Health advisory board

SU has a health advisory board with one student representative, she said.

A health advisory committee composed of students was formed, Simkins said. She will serve as adviser.

These students will help make decisions about how and what services are offered, she said.

"The students will serve as a liaison between Health Services and the student body," she said. "They will serve on the different committees within Health Services."

Students can do many things to improve health on campus, she said.

For example, Brown University students hold office hours in the student union, she said.

Health advisory board officers answer questions about health-care services.

Students representing all aspects of the student body will be recruited, Simkins said.

Incoming all different types of students on campus to help us make decisions about how we provide services here," she said. They can be real locations and help us make decisions.

Simkins said she is trying to reduce the amount of time students spend waiting for services.

Students concerned about waiting

We have done studies here at Health Services," she said. "Students are concerned about how much time they have to wait.

To do this, a team approach will be used because this is more efficient.

Meeting these needs, SGA representatives met with Chancellor Keneth A. Shaw during his visit to the campus in July. They have also had conversations with Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid David C. Smith.

Attending council meetings

In addition, SGA sends representatives to Syracuse Common Council meetings and works with the New York Public Interest Research Group (NYPIRG) to improve student voter registration, Zenick said.

"We try to be in touch with how issues in the community affect students," Zenick said.

During the summer, the organization also published the student handbook, had representatives on the search committee for the new associate director of leadership, and mailed first-year students information about campus life, Zenick said.

SGA has committees on administrative operations, academic affairs, student affairs, and university community relations.

China stops attempt to honor activists

Chinese police stopped three U.S. lawmakers yesterday who planned flowers in Tiananmen Square and held up a banner to honor activists slain by the Chinese army in the 1989 pro-democracy movement.

The lawmakers were allowed to leave the square after a short exchange with police confused by the language barrier.

Police detained for 90 minutes three U.S. television camera crews who were filming the incident, the crews said.

Soviet parliament approves reforms

The Soviet parliament yesterday gave preliminary approval to a plan to transfer most Kremlin power to the republics and turn the Soviet Union into a loose confederation of sovereign states.

The Congress of People’s Deputies voted 1,129-259 to approve a resolution on the measure as a basis for discussion.

The two ballots were important procedural votes on the proposal by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and leaders of 10 of the 15 republics to hand over most of the central government’s remaining power to the republics and create an interim government during the transition to the new confederation.

Presiding at the gathering of 1,900 lawmakers in the Kremlin, Gorbachev said major amendments were being made to the plan by delegates from Boris Yeltsin’s Russian Federation.

Gorbachev also agreed to grant independence to the Baltic republics, making them the first breakaway Soviet states to win such recognition from the Kremlin.

The Baltics, which began their independence drive three years ago, have already won recognition from foreign governments, including the United States.

"I was involved with opening weekend," she said. "I enjoyed talking with parents and new students. I have gotten a warm reception here both at Health Services and throughout the community."

She encourages students interested in joining an advisory board to contact her. A suggestion box will also be installed in the center, Simkins said. SUFAR fights for better treatment of animals

By MIKE OVERHOLT
Staff Writer

A relatively new student organization on campus is tackling a controversial issue that affects everyone.

Syracuse University for Animal Rights (SUFAR), which was formed in the spring of 1990, is striving to achieve better treatment of animals at the university and in the surrounding community, according to SUFAR President Jacquie Grieco.

That means "treat an animal as you would a human," Grieco said. The organization tries to reach its goal through educating the public on animal rights, often in the form of protest, Grieco said.

Last year, members of SUFAR picketed the Moscow Circus, which appeared in the Carrier Dome, and a rodeo at the War Memorial downtown which was part of the Winterfest festival. In both cases, SUFAR was protesting the treatment of the animals in the shows, Grieco said.

SUFAR also protested Bristol-Myers for the research they do using animals.

Not an extremist group

Because of protests like these, some see the group as extremist, but that is not the case, Grieco said. "We're not a bunch of radicals," she said, but to get anything done "we have to take a direct stand."

However, the organization receives a lot of hostility from people and the majority do not listen to the group's message, she said. At first that bothered her, Grieco said, but it does not anymore.

"Now I know (the problem) is not us, it's them," she said.

The protests also present problems in that SUFAR members have to be careful what they wear while protesting. Although she no longer buys leather or animal-related clothing, Grieco admits she still owns leather shoes and belts, and in the past has been caught wearing them at protests. Now she takes special care not to wear such clothes or animal-tested make-up while protesting, Grieco said.

In addition to protesting, SUFAR is striving to achieve better treatment of animals in the shows. Grieco said the group is also trying to get improved vegetarian meals for the dining halls.

Veggies, eggs and milk

Most of the current meals are for lacto-ovo-vegetarians who eat foods that come from animals, such as dairy products, Grieco said. Vegan vegetarians are a stricter group and do not eat foods related to animals. SUFAR would like to see a greater range of foods available for this group, she said.

Currently, SUFAR has between 25 and 30 members but is expecting more to join this year, Grieco said. She stressed that having an active membership is very important to the organization because of the involved role SUFAR takes in protesting. She added that SUFAR members are very open-minded to various beliefs because the group is relatively small.

Grieco admits that some people look at animal rights advocates in a negative way because of their beliefs, but says that such views should not be taken personally because they are the product of a society which places great emphasis on animal use. It will take a long time to change this emphasis, at least.

Money is prime object at SU

Freshmen, hold on to your wallets. This school does not want you for your minds. It wants you for your parents' cash. Already, bad food, lousy housing and in-state highway robbery education have squeezed $18,000 out of you. This summer, the University may go on a road trip and drive you out of the handbook. The first and most obvious waste of money possible at the University is the Schine Student Center, which is dedicated close to the administration building (allowing the administra tors, a clear view of highway robbery). Schine Dining charges around $10 per dollar for a unskinned chicken sandwich. But that's all right, because the price of the book you least eat, you can go down for if it's $5.00 or less. You are also not charged in your student fee. One of the most expensive schools in the nation is not truth and assets, charges its students to play ping pong.

Walk upstairs to The University Bookstore and there you will see sure to suck the money out of your pants. You don't need the biology text. You don't need their overpriced food ("Peter's in a Bowl"). And you don't need that Babyilonian S.U.B. card. If you plan on rushing, bring your wallet. Your new friends will cost you. Also, due to administrative safety policies, fraternity parties now have to be catered, which brings the entrance fee up to $25 per dollar. But this doesn't affect freshman because they all know they don't drink, for it's against the law.

Unlike other schools, sports here are not free. The tickets are $7.50 and you'll go to the big SU basketball games? It will cost you more than $70. Even the lacrosse and hockey games are expensive. But that's all right, because the University really needs the money to rearrange the roads and to build a safe swimming pool, and more convenient for the outbound truckloads of money.

The bottom line is that everything at SU costs money. If you find yourself doing well in academics, you may be invited into several honor societies. If so, such sensible invitation is just another devious way to yank more of your parents' cash out of your wallet.

Chancellor Shaw needs to be aware that colleges and universities do not build character minds. His glorious predecessor, however, believed that more meant better. We will see if Schine Dining, and improve the quality of student living, faculty benefits, and general education.

In a final word to Megggers, thank you for being understanding of students' problems and budgets. We will still need to send food to debtors' prison, which is where our parents now live.

This summer I learned the value of a dollar, or I should say I began to hold a lot of value in each of my green paper portraits of George. It seems to me that the poor don't have the resources to acquire the "superior" status that the wealthy population have been suspected to view the poverty-stricken as lazy, selfish, dirty, disrespectful, lacking in good values, and stupid. When such attitudes exist, both groups obviously have no interest or are afraid to communicate to the other in order to create better relations between them.

It seems to me that the poor don't have the means to attain the "superior" status that encompasses those qualities that the wealthy people have. They are often not wise about ways to acquire money, a good job, or an education. They appear to (many who are better off than they) have in fact a mental illness, and when in fact they have little choice since they have not been given the fruits of quality education and health care as safe neighborhoods of affordable housing and a pound of marzipan with the simple flash of a plastic card? Occasionally I've got the urge to "slog" on such trials for myself or as gifts for others, but more often than not to help my parents pay college expenses. With a net income of approximately $200, this wasn't easy in an expensive resort town that week.

I was working two relatively low-paying jobs. In a resort town on the beach (the trade-off). Responsible for my own rent, food, and phone bill, I was also attempting to save money to help my parents pay college expenses. With a net income of approximately $200, this wasn't easy in an expensive resort town that week.

On top of this, I worked in a gift shop and a candy store, two places selling merchandise that was almost a steal. It was unnecessary according to New Jersey state tax laws. How many vacationing customers did I watch suspicionlessly purchase a $14 pound of marzipan with the simple flash of a plastic card? Occasionally I've got the urge to "slog" on such trials for myself or as gifts for others, but more often than not to help my parents pay college expenses. With a net income of approximately $200, this wasn't easy in an expensive resort town that week.

Money is prime object at SU

A commercial released yesterday by two conservative groups, the American Conservative Victory Committee and Citizens United, attacked the credibility of three leading Democratic senators who may decide not to vote for Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

Aide aside being an unnecessary threat to personal attack, the commercial is a pathetic attempt to dodge the real issues surrounding Thomas' nomination.

If you shoot, a narrator asks how many of the three targeted senators, Edward Kennedy, Joseph Biden and Alan Cranston, could pass an ethics test. Ethics, though important in some instances, have little bearing on the ability to choose wisely when it comes to Supreme Court appointments.

So when the commercial narrator closes the spot with the question: "Whose ethics held up to Supreme Court standards - Clarence Thomas' or Ted Kennedy's?" realize that's not the issue.

Ted Kennedy does not seek a Supreme Court seat. Congress should vote to deny or accept Thomas based on his credentials, not Kennedy's ethics.

Ham radio club encourages community service

By SHEILA DOUGHERTY
Contributing Writer

Syracuse University's Amateur Radio Club is for serious hams. Ham radio is a "gentleman's hobby," said SU sophomore Dan DeRusha, the club's president. "But we like to stress community service as well as hobby." By using ham radios on different frequencies, the group has provided communications for the local YMCA as well as emergency communications for SU Security and SU Ambulance.

"Many times we volunteer services during events or emergency situations such as hurricanes," adviser Donald Shaw said.

By gaining access to license-authorized frequencies, the group puts out a "CQ," or a call for other ham radio users to come and find out about their hobby. The group encourages people from different backgrounds and majors to join. "Diversity really benefits groups such as ours because we can get in contact with anywhere in the world with amateur radio," DeRusha said.

"One thing we'd really like to do is meet more people since the campus is so diverse," he added.

"“The club will send messages for students primarily in North America as a public service, as long as they are of a personal, non-business nature," Shaw said. He said the main purpose of the group is to provide a forum of communication for people with common yet widely varying interests.

He also said that ham radio can be educational. "Through ham radio we can learn about each other and improve technical abilities," he said.

"Amateur radio can be anything you want it to be," Penrod said. "It's a group of people who have their license and enjoy communicating with other people."

The club will hold its first meeting of the year on Sunday in Link Hall.

Erie Blvd. offers alternative

By HEIDI SCHILLER

Contributing Writer

Believe it or not, there is life beyond Marshall Street. If you're new to Syracuse, you might not be familiar with Erie Boulevard, Syracuse's answer to Fifth Avenue.

If you aren't fortunate enough to have a car, then you can take a taxi (ASU-TAXI) to various stops on Erie for about $8. There is also the Centro bus (442-3300), but it does not leave straight from the SU campus. You'll have to transfer downtown in order to get to Erie.

CHEAP EATS

'Typical of every "strip" is the large number of chain restaurants. Erie Boulevard is filled with them: Arby's, Denny's, Burger King, Bennigan's and Red Lobster all have outlets on Erie. There are also local places like Galveston's, and The Swiss Chalet for Chicken and Ribs.

SHOPPING

Erie is lined by strip centers consisting of all types of stores. One popular plaza is called the Chehinger/Price Chopper Plaza. This center has Chehinger, a huge warehouse filled with items for your residence hall room or apartment. It carries everything from lights, mirrors and blinds to nails, hammers and shelves at fairly low prices. Also in this center is Linens 'N Things, a store that offers bed and bath necessities at low prices.

Price Chopper, an enormous grocery store, has everything you will need to escape residence hall food.

Hills Plaza is another strip center down the road that has national stores such as Marshall's and Sito, local stores such as SoFro, a fabric store, (great for decorating your room) and Hills department store.

Pier 1 Imports, right off Erie on Orrick St., is another place to find items that will make your residence hall room feel more like home.

Continuing down the boulevard, you will find Shoppingtown Mall.

There, you'll find Lechters, an all-purpose store that sells every kind of container needed to hold clothes and belongings that the residence hall room closet cannot.

Shoppingtown also has department stores such as Addis and Day's, Chappell's, and J.C. Penney. For female fitness buffs, there is Kelly Lyn, a workout spa just for women.

If the washing machines in the residence hall just don't do the trick, then right down the road from Erie, in East Genesee, is a strip center that has a laundromat called Easy Wash.

Options abound for mall-hoppers

By JOSEPH KISSEL

Contributing Writer

Students arriving on campus, uprooted from their familiar home-turf, can find their patterns of shopping and consumption seriously altered. This problem is particularly acute for first year students who usually lack wheels and knowledge of Syracuse's malls. The following is a brief overview of some of the malls, all with cinemas, in the area.

- Shoppingtown, Erie Blvd.

This mall, recently renovated expanded, added more than 80 new stores. Despite its gauche name, the Shoppingtown mall has considerably more flair than most, with large, clean, open spaces and lots of glass and bright banners. Its new food court, temporarily lacking in vendors, boasts a carousel that rivals you-know-whose.

As for stores, Shoppingtown has all the bases covered, ranging from bargain shoppers' delight All for A Dollar to B. Forman Co., an expensive men's store specializing in Ralph Lauren and Claiborne.

Although there is no all-important Banana Republic or Gap, the latter is promised to be "coming soon."

The mall is large and attractive, with almost as many stores as Carousel. One of its more unusual features is the DeWitt Public Library.

Emphasis in this mall is on decor. Several fountains were even designed to look like the fountain in front of DeWitt Library. Adding a carousel to the Shoppingtown mall increased the number of malls in the area with carousels to three.

Contemporary Theater of Syracuse will launch its Second Sunday Play Readings with a reading of Susan Thornton's Update at 1 p.m. Sunday in the LeMoyne College Firehouse Theater, at the corner of Salt Springs Road and Demong Drive.

Update is about a couple's marriage, which is testing cancer, anger and jealousy among their friends.

Second Sunday Play Readings feature local playwrights and will hold nine readings this year.

The next reading will be Oct. 13 with David Feldman's Steinberg in Scarsdale. Readings are also scheduled for Nov. 10, Jan. 12, Feb. 9, March 1, April 12 and May 10. Works for these dates have yet to be announced.

Baby elephant needs a name

The new baby elephant at the Burnet Park Zoo is in search of a name. There are five choices: Kedar (spotted one), Lakshmi (my son), Mehtan (of noble ancestry), Sundar (handsome) and Tundi (bright star).

The zoo has set up a hotline number for callers to name the elephant, but they have not released the name. Callers will have 10 seconds to leave their choice on a recorded message when they call 423-6222.

Ballots can also be mailed to: Name the Baby Elephant Contest, P.O. Box 311, Syracuse, NY 13201.

The contest concludes Sept. 11, with the winning name announced at 10 a.m. Sept. 16 at the zoo.

Convention center on the rise

The Onondaga County Convention Center is shaping up in downtown Syracuse one block south of the War Memorial.

The center is scheduled for completion in the fall of 1992 and will include a number of purposes: cafeteria exhibit hall, meeting rooms and banquet, ballroom facilities that can seat more than 2,000 people for meetings or dancing.

A 1,000-car parking garage will be on the lot of the center. The $40 million convention center has been in the planning stages since the mid-1980s, and the groundbreaking took place on October 24, 1990.

When the facilities are ready and fully operational, the county intends to close the War Memorial in order to renovate the aging structure. Renovations on the War Memorial should be finished in 1993 and last for 12 to 18 months.

Adding a carousel to the Shoppingtown mall increased the number of malls in the area with carousels to three.
MALLS
a few miles east on Erie Blvd.; in the foreseeable future, the mall will be clearly visible on the left-hand side of the road. By bus, take a downtown Centro and then transfer to the Salt Springs bus.

Fayetteville Mall, Fayetteville Free bus service, which picks up and drops off students in front of several dorms on Saturdays, may be the best feature the Fayetteville Mall has to offer.

Once there, expect to find many empty stores at one of Syracuse's oldest malls, despite the fact that it is far from urban centers. The food court is an alternative to those experiencing Carousel burn-out. Camillus is everything the Carousel isn't: it's old, it's small and it has a South Campus look to it. However, the kids from the nearby high school seem to adore it.

The Camillus Mall offers the expected range of goods and services, but not much else, unless you consider K-Mart a bonus. It has fountain, synthetic gardens and a Burger King. What else could you want, aside from a carousel?

• Penn Can Mall

Those contemplating suicide should steer clear of the Penn Can Mall. It is easily the most depressing mall in the Syracuse area. Reeking of earth tones, the older part of the mall looks remarkably similar to the one in George Romero's zombie pic Dawn of the Dead, and most of the customers look as if they could have been zombie extras.

Actually, the newer part of the mall is fairly pleasant, but once again it suffers from many empty stores. The Penn Can Mall may be a good choice if you need a quiet place — not usually a feature of more popular malls.

Penn Can's food court is actually a food hallway, its management having crammed most of its food outlets into one stretch of the mall. While this layout might eliminate the need for a new wing, it could be annoying to smell corn dogs while shopping for heels.

In short, if you must, but don't expect much.

• Carousel Center

Even though it really is sinking, the Carousel Center is the Mall for area shoppers. It is the newest, contains the most stores, and cost the most to build — with more expansions planned. A plus for students is that Centro's carousel bus will whisk you away from Comstock and Euclid (Shaw Hall) at many convenient times.

The Carousel, of all area malls, has the nicest mix of high- and low-end shops, such as Filene's Basement, Limited Express, Structure, the suddenly ubiquitous All for A Dollar, Chappell's, ad infinitum. Here's where you find out, after all the hype, that a Lechmere is a housewares store, or you can perhaps pick up a gift at Benwit Teller. In fact, there are so many stores and so much space that a sort of "mall-aise" can set in if one shop there too long.

There are many restaurants at the Carousel Center. The food court is easily the most varied and interesting of the area malls, offering a deli, a french fry specialty store and restaurants such as L & P Seafood and Pizzeria Uno. Just about any fast food craving can be satisfied in the pleasant atmosphere of the Carousel's food court. But don't go looking for anything particularly healthy — all you will find is frozen yogurt.

In short, if you are "going to the mall," like it or not, you will most likely end up at the Carousel Center.

The newly installed skylights in Shoppingtown Mall enhance the shopping atmosphere.

Aikido

Martial art gains popularity locally

By DREW H.

A new art form has gained popularity among students in the United States and abroad. Aikido, a martial art that originated in Japan, has been practiced in the United States for about 50 years. It is a form of self-defense that emphasizes non-violence and respect for both the person being defended and the attacker. Aikido practitioners learn to control their own energy and to use it for defense and protection.

Aikido was created in 1925 by Morihei Uyeshiba, a master of several martial arts, including karate and jujitsu. Uyeshiba developed a new system of martial arts that he called aikido, which means "way of harmonious energies." Aikido is based on the principles of respect, harmony, and understanding.

Aikido practice involves two partners, who work together to achieve a peaceful resolution to a conflict. The partners use techniques such as throwing, blocking, and striking to simulate a fight, but the goal is to resolve the conflict without violence.

The practice of aikido involves a variety of movements, including circular motions and partner-focused techniques. The students must work together in pairs to achieve a peaceful resolution to the conflict. The goal is to use the partner's energy to create a peaceful resolution, rather than to resist or fight against it.

Aikido is a popular form of exercise in Japan, and it is also gaining popularity in other countries, including the United States. In the United States, aikido schools are becoming more common, and more people are practicing this form of martial arts.

Aikido is a discipline that emphasizes non-violence and respect. It is a form of self-defense that is based on the principles of respect, harmony, and understanding. Aikido practitioners learn to control their own energy and to use it for defense and protection.

Broadway musical star Meg Bussert comes to town Friday, Sept. 6, to perform at the sold-out Syracuse Stage benefit for Hospice of Central New York.

Bussert, a veteran of Broadway shows Camelot and The Music Man, will reprise her cabaret program "An Evening with Meg Bussert" which won her critical acclaim last winter in Los Angeles.

Her most recent work was a performance of The Music Man on an audience including President Bush and Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf. Also, Bussert visited Syracuse in summer 1990, when she performed in Syracuse Stage's Closer Than Ever.

"We're delighted to have Meg Bussert," says Barbara Haas, press coordinator for Syracuse Stage. "She's a very prominent performer and she was just wonderful in Closer Than Ever. We're glad to have her back."

Change in plans

Bussert's program begins at 8:30 p.m. in Hutchings Auditorium, adjacent to Syracuse Stage. The show was originally booked for Archbold Theatre, but delays in the construction of a new roof there caused the change in plans, Haas says.

Although Hutchings Auditorium seats only 350, compared to Archbold's 600, Haas remains confident the benefit will help the Hospice as much as last year's sell-out show.

"Last year the benefit raised $30,000 for the hospice. The numbers are different this year, but there are 170 patrons this year, and that's pretty good. I'm sure we'll do well."

"The hospice is a really good community organization," Haas says. "They help families to care for patients in the home if possible or in the hospital and they also provide family counseling."

The benefit will also help AIDS patients through the Hospice, Haas says.

Following Bussert's performance, the Sunday Night Road Band will take the stage at Sutton Pavilion at 10 p.m. to play big band hits and conclude the evening.

For those holding patron tickets, the benefit also includes a pre-show cocktail-buffet at 7 p.m. on Friday in Syracuse Stage's Sutton Pavilion.

The event will be Sept. 14, 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., and Sept. 15 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., at St. Michael's Parish Center, Route 175 in Syracuse. A $2.50 donation will be collected, and all proceeds will benefit Hospice of Central New York.

Auditions planned for '23 Skidoo'

Auditions for the world premiere musical 23 Skidoo will be Sept. 6 and Sept. 9 at 7 p.m. in the rehearsal room of the Syracuse Civic Center. 23 Skidoo will open in dinner theater at the Empire Room opening Jan. 17, 1992. The musical, set in the Roaring Twenties, has a cast of 30 or more.

Auditions for Key for Two, another Theater '90 production, will be held tonight (Sept. 4) at 7 p.m. in the Civic Center rehearsal room. For more information, call Holly at 638-8448.

Defensive driving class offered

The Safety Council of Central New York will conduct a defensive driving course in Fairmount Village on Sept. 14 from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. There is a $38 registration fee to be paid at the door.

New York State drivers who complete the course will be eligible for a 10 percent discount on their liability and collision insurance premiums for a period of three years. They are also eligible for a four-point reduction on their driving record.

Fifteen-year-old tennis prodigy Jennifer Capriati continued her climb over old tennis veterans Tuesday night at the U.S. Open, when she defeated Gabriela Sabatini, 21, 6-3, 7-6 (7-1) in the third round of play. The victory advanced the wrinkle-conscious teen into a semifinal match with No. 2 seed Monica Seles, who was scheduled to play Tia-Clair Toomey. Seles advanced after destroying Gigi Fernandez 6-1, 6-2. Word is both Seles and Capriati will skip Wimbledon next year in order to attend their junior proms. They'll probably go stag.

Those high-spirited Irish Two starters for the Notre Dame Fighting Irish football team were arrested last weekend for public intoxication and disorderly conduct. The players were at an off-campus party. Arrested was quarterback Rick Mirer and linebacker Demetrius DeBose. Irish coach Lou "God Is On Our Side" Holtz defended his decision not to suspend the players in a press conference Tuesday. Holtz said the players would be disciplined for violating team rules, but would start Saturday’s season opener against Indiana.

Muir and DeBose claim they weren’t drunk and were only arrested because they were football players.

Quarterbacks crushed It’s only one week after the start of the NFL season and three quarterbacks are already down for the count.

Randall Cunningham, Dave Krieg and Tim Rosenbach have all been bitten by that nasty gnat: the injury insect.

Rumor has it replacements are on the way: Anthony Dilweg was talking to the Phoenix Cardinals, Rusty Hilger was taking offers from Seattle and Pat Ryan was contemplating a merger with the Chicago Cougars. Coupled with Joe Montana’s elbow injury, Jim Kelly’s gimpy ankle, Phil Simms sitting behind Jeff “I Can’t Believe I Won” Hostetler and Billy Joe (Bob) Tulliver’s recent trade to Atlanta, it seems no quarterback is safe these days. Except maybe David Klingler.

Foti returns to his roots
Former Orangeman takes new role

By JEFF ELBAUM
Staff Writer

Although Dean Foti may be in his first year as head coach of the Syracuse University soccer team, he’s certainly not new to SU.

Foti attended Syracuse from 1979 to 1983, a four year soccer starter and a captain his junior and senior seasons.

Foti that once he got into coaching, he hoped to end up back at SU some day.

“It’s always something you think about — coaching the school that you went to,” said Foti.

Foti grew up in Oneonta, where he started playing soccer at the age of seven.

At Oneonta, Foti excelled in football and track, as well as soccer. Foti was selected as All-County Soccer Team and All-County Track Team.

Once at Syracuse, Foti played an integral part in four straight winning seasons.

In 1992, his SU playing career came to an end as the Orangemen ended with a 16-3-3 record and their first-ever Big East Conference Tournament championship.

Foti starred in that tournament and was named to the Big East all-tournament team.

After college, he moved on to Fayettville-Manlius High School, where he served as an assistant coach for one year.

In 1983, Foti was back at Syracuse again, as a graduate assistant under then-head coach Alden Shattuck.

When Shattuck accepted the head coaching position at Maryland, he took Foti with him.

That first year coaching was my freshman year playing,” said Foti. “So I had been with him for six years.

Foti credits Shattuck for giving him a lot of responsibility at Maryland.

“Because I had been with him for about six years, up until that point I both went down to Maryland, he gave me a lot of responsibility down there,” Foti said.

It was as if I was able to run a lot of things that we did for the team. He allowed me to do a lot of coaching in the other areas and I was doing the leg work as far as running the team.

The head coaching position at Syracuse became available after last season when Tim Hancock resigned in the wake of Big East kicks off first season

The already lucrative Big East football conference hasn’t even established a round robin schedule.

But that hasn’t stopped it from gathering a spot in the newly-formed bowl alliance, a big television package and instant national recognition.

So who will win the first-ever Big East football crown?

The secret sauce is the University of Miami Hurricanes, who have finished in the national top five each of the past four seasons.

The rest of the conference will most likely battle for second place, as several teams said they were able to take that step from up-and-coming to national power.

The Big East report will appear every Thursday on this page throughout the football season. This week, we preview each team.

Miami — Who can forget the Hurricanes’ 41-14 win over Texas last year’s Cotton Bowl? And who can forget the beating Miami took for its taunting of the overmatched Longhorns?

Image is the buzzword at Miami. Some don’t care for it (administration, coaches, media). Some don’t (players, coaches).

Only 12 starters return for Miami, which only means a new influx of nation’s best talent. The Canes lost the N.C. State showdown, Butch Davis, Russell Maryland, and quarterback Craig Erickson.

Key returnees are running back Bruce Johnson, safety and All-American kicker Carlos Huerta. Miami has road games at Arizona and Florida State, and those additional road schedule also includes home games against Penn State and Florida.

Miami got off to a good start last Saturday with a 31-3 win over Arkansas. The only thing the Canes could wish for is a bigger crowd.

University installs traffic lights

By ROY S. GUTTERMAN

Three sets of traffic lights should be installed and operational by today, at intersections at night. The university will install traffic lights at three intersections, according to Harvey Kaiser, Syracuse University vice president for Facilities Administration.

The lights are to be installed at intersections of Comstock Ave., Walnut Place and Waverly Ave. and Walnut and Waverly avenues will be installed by tonight, according to Harvey Kaiser.

"We are doing our best to get them in place and operational by tonight," he said.

The university's recent widening of Comstock and Waverly avenues to four-lane roads created hazardous conditions for pedestrians and drivers, prompting student and community outcry.

That was capped by the Aug. 26 accident in which two SU students were hit by a car as they crossed the street at the intersection of Waverly and Walnut avenues.

"Quick response"

"We responded as quickly as possible," Kaiser said, citing what he called the university's concern for student safety.

Crowds and traffic expected to accompany tomorrow's SU home football game further spurred the university, Kaiser said.

Six lights — two per intersection — will be suspended on a wire strung across the intersections. He said this type of "granted permission to install the lights.

Additional signs and street lines may be added as well, he said.

The lights themselves were installed yesterday and Wednesday, Kaiser said. The university has ordered permanent metal poles; however, they will not be delivered for another week or two.

The lights are being installed by a Syracuse-based firm, Rizzo Construction, Kaiser said. The cost is a little over $50,000, Kaiser said.

"We are just bearing all the cost to get them in place as soon as possible," he said.

Since the overall street project will span two years, Kaiser said, further modifications and safety features may be added.

"We are going to be monitoring the intersections with video cameras a couple of times a month," he said.

Traffic and pedestrian patterns, sight lines and length of signals will be studied, he said.

The lights also will be coordinated with current lights for "a smooth flow of traffic," he said.

The decision to install lights was made last Wednesday after a meeting between SU and city officials.

The road project has met with criticism from several sides, Kaiser said, but "people are just sorting out the best ways to come to campus."

Workers from Rizzo Construction install new traffic lights Thursday afternoon on Waverly Ave. The installation of the lights was prompted by the Aug. 26 accident in which two Syracuse University students were hit by a car as they crossed the road.

"Students pay a small fee but they have use of the resources of the university," he said. "Onondaga County requires all students to fill out a two-page residency evaluation form that does not guarantee the right to vote, he said.

NYPIRG encourages student activism

By ROBERT SHIELDS

The Syracuse University chapter of the New York Public Interest Research Group (NYPIRG) needs students to help bring about change in the environment and government, said Bob Merli, project coordinator for SU.

"We want to get students out of their ivory tower and involved in positive change instead of just studying the issues," Merli said.

NYPIRG was formed out of the student movement of the 1960s and its first chapter was formed at SU in 1973, he said.

Today NYPIRG is the largest public interest advocacy group in New York state, with chapters on 19 campuses and a professional staff of lobbyists, attorneys, and researchers, he said.

"This is the only state organization where students can make a difference on campus and for every citizen in the state," Merli said.

All students who pay an activity fee are members of NYPIRG and are automatically funded upon request. "Students pay a small fee but they have use of the resources of a powerful statewide group," he said.

Learning a number of skills

NYPIRG will undertake many projects this fall where students will learn organizational and media skills, he said. An ongoing project of NYPIRG has been student voter registration. According to Merli, NYPIRG has registered more than 150 students to vote in Onondaga County this year. However, not all students will be given voter rights.

"We absolutely decide that students cannot vote," he said. Onondaga County requires all students to fill out a two-page residency evaluation form that does not guarantee the right to vote, he said.

NYPIRG is actively involved in environmental issues, Merli said. "We will be working with the administration to further improve the campus recycling program," he said.

NYPIRG will organize letter writing campaigns and pressure representatives in Albany to pass the Waste Reduction and Packaging Act, which NYPIRG introduced in the state legislature, Merli said. This act will require fully recyclable packaging, a "bag tax" on shopping bags, and recyclable diapers in hospitals.

NYPIRG runs a Small Claims Court Action center to help students and community members who are considering going to small claims court.

"Students are trained by attorneys to offer help to people going to the 'real-life' People's Court," he said.

NYPIRG may begin a campus safety project in conjunction with S.C.A.L.E.D. and other safety groups, Merli said.

NYPIRG will hold its first general interest meeting Sept. 11 at 7:30 p.m. in Room 304A of the Schine Student Center.

Interested students are encouraged to stop by the NYPIRG office in Schine 1264 or call 443-1401.

Syracuse University Ambulance is the only student organization authorized to give basic life support to members of the university and surrounding community, according to Glenn Dowden, attendant coordinator of SU Ambulance.

Last year, the group of 50 volunteers helped about 900 callers suffering from injuries, accidents and fractured bones, Dowden said.

"People respond to the need, personal gratification," he said.

SU senior Bridget Van Vechten, SUA supply officer, said about three-fourths of the calls they receive are from people suffering alcohol-related injuries, such as broken bones and falls.

"People don't think alcohol is a drug," Van Vechten said. "They drink to excess and can't get out of it."

SU senior Nick Feffer, director of the ambulance service, said he recommends the emergency telephone number to "people going to the 'real-life' People's Court."

"We would trust any of the volunteers with their lives," said junior LuAnn Diament, SUA personnel officer. "If you don't trust the people you work with, you have a hard time administering good care to patients."

The ambulance crew consists of the chief, driver, attendant and sometimes an observer or trainee. Dowden said the average annual mileage is about 25,000 miles.

"People don't think alcohol is a drug." said junior Lisa Van Vechten, SUA personnel officer. "If you don't trust the people you work with, you have a hard time administering good care to patients."

The group also tries to hold public seminars at least once a month on up-to-date medical issues.

Dowden said he encourages any student interested in SUA to attend its general membership meetings on the first Sunday of every month.

"SUA is not just an ambulance, but a social club," Feffer said.

Soviet lawmakers set up new parliament

Soviet lawmakers voted yesterday to end 70 years of Kremlin rule and set up an interim government to be dominated by sovereign republics.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev also formally acknowledged the independence of the three Baltic states of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. All but five of the 15 Soviet republics have declared independence.

The 1,900 members of the Congress of People's Deputies desperately tried to salvage the union in the wake of last month's failed coup by Soviet hard-liners.

The Congress also proposed that the body of Vladimir Lenin, the founder of the Soviet Union, be rescued and reburied in the Soviet capital.

Lenin's body will be decided by a smaller legislature set up under the reconstruction plan.

South African plan details voting rights

If President F.W. De Klerk gets his way, a new constitution will provide universal suffrage for the first time in the history of South Africa.

His plan details a new, racially integrated system of government that would be created at national, regional and local levels, and chosen by proportional representation on the basis of universal suffrage.

The current Parliament would be replaced by a two-chamber Parliament open to South Africans of all races.

Health care workers anticipate pay hike

About 1.5 million Texas health care workers, who receive $4.25 an hour, are expected to get wage increases.

Although government, insurers and health-care providers are trying to find ways to keep costs down, industry officials say irresistible pressure has prompted the need for a pay increase.

With an aging U.S. population, hundreds of thousands of health care workers, mostly nursing home aides and women, will be needed to care for the elderly in the 1990s.

A Federal law now requires aides to undergo formal training and certification, which enhances their value.

Political sparks fly over pro-Thomas ad

Political sparks flew yesterday over a television commercial which expresses support for Judge Clarence Thomas's nomination to the Supreme Court by three Democratic Senators.

President Bush called the commercial, which is sponsored by conservative groups, offensive and counterproductive.

The pro-Thomas commercial questioned the ethics of three Democratic Senators — Ed. M. Kennedy of Mass., Joseph B. Biden Jr. of Del., and Alan Cranston of Calif. — and called the commercial a "character assassination" of Judge Thomas during confirmation hearings scheduled for next week.

Angry man shoots gun inside train

An 80-year-old New York City man shot a pistol inside a moving Amtrak train after he missed his stop outside Rhinecliff.

Authorities said Shalomon Bashian was apparently angry and shot his pistol in a passenger car. No one was injured.

Bashian was sent to the Dutchess County jail in lieu of $20,000 bail. A hearing will be held Sept. 9.

Teenager denied youth offender status

A teenager who killed his stepfather was denied youth offender status and sentenced to 4 to 12 years in jail.

Judge Martin E. Smith said that Roy G. Rowe Jr., 18, of Vestal, showed no remorse during his trial. Rowe was accused of killing at the age of his mother.

Panel formed to pick RIT president

A committee has been formed to find a replacement for outgoing Rochester Institute of Technology President M. Richard Rose.

Rose is retiring partly because of controversy over the school's involvement with the CIA.

The committee includes Colby Chandler, retired chief executive officer of Eastman Kodak Co., and four members of the RIT Board of Trustees. Some faculty and student leaders have asked to sit on the committee.

Digital Corp. funds graduate fellowship

Digital Equipment Corp. will fund the graduate fellowship of Anthony Jones of DeWitt through the Minority Access Partnership program of the Graduate School.

The program combines New York state, university and corporate resources to provide tuition, living expenses and internships for minority graduate students.

"This is a unique opportunity to enhance my personal and professional education," said Jones, an excellent example of the private and public sectors working together toward a positive higher education goal," said Alan Merry, U.S. college relations manager for Digital.

WERW gives students AM alternative

By ERIN NEFF
Managing Editor

If you’re flipping through the AM dial sometime in the near future and you come across a mean medley of “Give Peace A Chance” and “We Will Rock You,” you’ve discovered WERW.

With programming ranging from the depths of deadly hardcore to the funkiest hip-hop, WERW AM-570 will finally break onto the airwaves after years of broadcasting only as a University cable television channel.

The fledgling station, which was recently heard spinning tunes at the Fun Schine celebration, has purchased a new set of transmitters.

This purchase and an upgrade in equipment was made possible with a $50,000 allocation from the Student Government Association, according to General Manager Ben Tesler.

With the largest alternative and hip-hop music library in Central New York, WERW will broadcast to an untapped market of listeners who are tired of the music on conventional radio stations.

Only campus radio

“WERW is the only station on campus that caters to the campus audience,” said Tesler, who is also a senior television, radio and film production and English and textual studies dual major.

The station will hit the airwaves as soon as all of the disc jockey slots are filled, he said. A grand organizational meeting will be held Saturday at 3 p.m. in Scott Auditorium.

The station’s general manager serves on the business end of the station’s organizational structure, while the station manager is in charge of personnel. WERW also has promotions, production, advertising, art, music, news and public affairs departments.

Students are able to contribute to any of these departments and will be able to sell advertising for the first time in the station's history.

Many opportunities

“WERW is the best opportunity, whether you just want to have fun or make a career out of it,” Tesler said.

In the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications, TRF majors are saturated with television studies with little emphasis placed on radio, he added.

“WERW can offer you an experience that Newhouse has not,” Tesler added. “(Newhouse) is primarily T; we’re trying to throw a little R in there.”

Junior international relations major Kurt Steinberg is station manager for WERW. Steinberg got his start at the station his freshman year when he was a DJ for the 3 a.m. to 6 a.m. slot.

Ten years ago, MTV changed music forever

Staff Reports

MTV celebrated its 10th anniversary on the air Aug. 1. For better or for worse, the network has changed the pop music scene.

One can only imagine how famous stars like Madonna, Janet Jackson, New Kids on the Block or Vanilla Ice would be if it wasn't for constant exposure on MTV.

The network has branched out from strictly mainstream programming, however, with shows emphasizing dance, heavy metal, rap and alternative music.

From its first supercontest to the flap over Madonna's banned "Justify My Love" video, the network has had many memorable moments.

Here are some of the highlights from the network's decade-long history:

Aug. 1, 1981 — MTV goes on the air at 12:01 a.m. with "Video Killed the Radio Star" by the Buggles.

The network's first veejays are Nina Blackwood, Mark Goodman, Alan Hunter, J.J. Jackson and Martha Quinn.

Aug. 8, 1981 — MTV airs its first concert, performed by REO Speedwagon.

Dec. 31, 1981 — The first New Year's Eve Rock 'n' Roll Ball is presented.

March 1, 1982 — The now-famous "I Want My MTV" advertising campaign kicks off.

Dec. 2, 1982 — Michael Jackson's 14-minute "Thriller" video premieres on MTV.

March 13, 1984 — Top 20 Video Countdown debuts.

Sept. 14, 1984 — Madonna causes a sensation with her on-stage — and on-camera — sexual writhings as the first MTV Video Music Awards are broadcast.

July 13, 1985 — MTV broadcasts 17 hours of Live Aid, a concert that benefitted Ethiopia.

March 10, 1986 — "20 Minutes, MTV's alternative music program, debuts.

May 30, 1986 — Perky Down-town Julie Brown joins the MTV veejays. She is the first new veejay since MTV's debut.

March 16, 1987 — MTV begins broadcasting in Australia.

April 18, 1987 — Headbangers' Ball makes its debut on late-night MTV.

Aug. 2, 1987 — MTV Europe is launched.

Aug. 31, 1987 — Dance show "Club MTV" debuts with Downtown Julie Brown as host.

Dec. 7, 1987 — "Remote Control," a game show in which contestants use their knowledge of movies, television and music to win prizes, debuts.

Aug. 8, 1988 — Yo! MTV Raps becomes a weekly program.

Sept. 6, 1989 — Neil Young's video for "This Note's For You," which parodies MTV and was banned from the network, is named video of the year on the MTV Video Music Awards.

March 1, 1991 — MTV Europe is the first non-Soviet channel to broadcast 24 hours a day in the Soviet Union.

SU ‘celebrates’ crime week

President Bush recently signed a policy declaring this week National Campus Crime and Security Awareness Week. This is how Syracuse University celebrated the event:

“An SU junior reported her purse stolen from her car over the weekend... A number of license plates were reported stolen over the weekend by people in the university area... A State University of Environmental Science and Forestry student reported his bicycle stolen from his porch at 116 Fieldfield Place... A woman walking at the corner of University Place and Marshall Street had $25 snatched from her hand as she was walking Tuesday...,” according to The Daily Orange.

All of this — in one long weekend.

The comfort of moccasins

For a school with a motto like “Knowledge crowns those who seek her,” Syracuse University prides itself on the aesthetic and unorthodox approach to handling a complicated situation. SU made aesthetic “improvements” over the summer, but that’s not quite enough. The renovation was a good idea to isolate the campus, but it might have been worthwhile to think the whole plan through just a little bit better.

The people involved in these renovations would ultimately affect its students and cause them personal inconvenience (no pun intended) when it came to safety. According to the Syracuse Herald Journal, this was a $2.5 million traffic plan. We can be sure that somewhere in that budget, there was a requisite that the footgear are more comfortable than sneakers after a good breaking-in. This might seem like the phenomenon isпредел. He said that they last a long time and that he values Kia very highly. My short conversation with this admirable moccasin wearer opened my eyes to the truth. I hereby officially advise all of the black people on campus to run to your nearest pawnshop and get a pair of Daniel Boone’s best.

‘Improvements’ prove unsafe

It took the hospitalization of two of our fellow students with critical injuries for the administration to realize that they had a $2.5 million deathtrap. ‘We’re lucky Mr. Kaiser wasn’t appointed our new chancellor or the SU motto would be, ‘Knowledge crowns those who dodge traffic to get to her.’”

To the editor:

I'd like to respond to a letter from the Lesbian and Gay Graduate Collective which appeared in the September 5 issue of The Daily Orange. In their letter, the LGGC protested “lack of action taken by the administration of Syracuse University after last spring’s production of wearing of gay-bashing T-shirts by some members of Alpha Chi Rho fraternity.”

Frankly, I was amazed that the LGGC was so apparently ignorant of the anti- Constitutional undertones to this incident. People have a right to their opinions, no matter how bigoted (and I do believe the shirts were homophobic) they are. Enrollment in this university does not give the right to Free speech does not violate the Code of Student Conduct, and therein lies the LGGC’s second misconception.

In their letter, the group also said that the shirts, which contained the phrase “Club Faggots,” were a violation of section two of the Code which prohibits “harassment, whether physical or verbal, oral or written, which is beyond the bounds of personal free speech, directed at specific individuals, easily construed as fighting words, and likely to cause an immediate breach of the peace.” The SPP didn’t mention any individuals by name; nor were they causing immediate breach of the peace. To my knowledge, nobody was driven into a pique of gay-bashing rage through the viewing of the shirts.

The main problem with the LGGC’s logic is that they seem to think that homo/biphobia is caused by, or originating in, a cotton-silk-screen. The shirts are merely reflections of an attitude which has been created by years of misguided thinking in this culture and society. That type of thinking should be challenged, but only when it directly impairs the rights of others.

Wearing an anti-gay shirt doesn’t necessarily make someone a gay-basher in deed, just as not all perpetrators of anti-gay violence wear shirts advertising their beliefs.

In their letter, the LGGC asked SU students for a gay or lesbian student to be arrested before taking action.”

Could LGGC be saying that people should be punished for their thoughts, even before they commit an actual crime? I agree with the group’s good intentions, but maybe the group should aim higher than mere shirts which speak in generalizations.

Finally, does anyone out there think the members of the LGGC would get angry at what they think is a Code violation if the shirts involved said “Club Frat Members”? Anyone?

Young, Conley look like bros, hit like pros

By KENT FISCHER
Asst. Sports Editor

Syracuse University linebackers Glen Young and Dan Conley are highly touted and respected. They are quick, thunderous and aggressive.

They are also best friends. "They are like Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, those two," head coach Paul Pasqualoni said. "They are great kids who are excited about the ability level of themselves and their teammates."

Young and Conley first teamed up when they were assigned to be roommates after arriving at SU in 1989. They have been together ever since.

"It's weird that as freshmen we used to be roommates," Young said. "It must have been an omen or something that we would be paired together one day."

Neither one realized the significance of that coincidental match-up until they played together, as inside linebackers, in SU's defense.

Young and Conley return to the Orangemen as the team's top two tacklers from last season. Conley, a sophomore from Carnegie, Pa., registered a team-leading 126 tackles. Young was responsible for 111.

Despite all the potential, the two did not get the chance to play together until last season. Conley redshirted his freshman year and Young blew out a knee on the opening kickoff in the second game of the 1989 season against Army.

Young's knee injury, more than anything else, put the pair's destiny on hold. "It's been two years now (since the knee injury) and I'm just back to where I was two years ago," the junior from Scarborough, Ontario, said. "This year I'm a whole different person. I have two legs instead of one and this year I want to go out and really tag some people."

Young has certainly "tagged" enough ball carriers on his own, but linebackers coach Glenn Pires said the chances of Young registering bone-crushing hits are greatly increased with Conley in the game.

Pires said last season was the first time Young and Conley began to learn from each other's game, and most importantly, to feed off it.

"Dan and Glen are two guys that really work well together in tandem," Pires said. "They've been together for a year now, so they're learning that they each have their own special talents."

"They're also learning how the other is going to react in different situations. They're just now getting comfortable with that."

It's those uncommunicated nuances, the instinctive reads and intuition, which allow the two standouts to work so well together. Both said, in fact, that despite all their gifted athletic ability, neither would be very good without the other.

"When I play with somebody other than Glen, I don't think I play as well," Conley said. "I pretty much know every move. Glen will make. We play very well together and if you separate us, I feel kind of uncomfortable."

"Dan is a hell of a kid," Young said. "I wouldn't want to play with anybody else, I really wouldn't.

Despite the eerie ability for the two to play as one, they both still manage to keep their individual styles.

Young is a stickler for technique, while Conley relies heavily on his raw athletic ability. Both styles work well and each one is always, seems, trying to outdo the other.

"We're always going head-to-head," Young said. "You know, seeing who gets more tackles, who had the biggest hit, that kind of stuff. It's a friendly-competitive sort of nature."

Conley added that their attachment runs deeper than friendship. Perhaps, he said, "It all boils down to chemistry, literally."

"I don't know. Conley said. "It's like when Glen and I are together there's this sort of chemical bond. It's like fireworks going off. Something like that, anyway."

Separated at birth, maybe? The fact that the two are hardly ever mentioned as individuals does not seem to bother either Young or Conley. A personal identity on the football field is not as important as the two making a perfect tandem.

Top three return unchained

By KENT FISCHER
Asst. Sports Editor

When the Syracuse University football team lost all four starting linebackers at the end of the 1989-90 season, many wrote off the position as the weak link in the Orangemen's defensive chain.

What was forged, instead, was arguably the quickest group of rock 'em, sock 'em, free-hitting linebackers in the East.

In one season, the linebacking unit has transformed itself from the SU defense's weakest unit to perhaps its strongest.

According to sophomore Dan Conley, the unit showed its strength in SU's 28-0 Aloha Bowl thrashing of Arizona.

"When the Syracuse University defense's weakest unit has transformed itself from the SU defense's weakest unit to perhaps its strongest," Conley said.

Young was second on the team in tackles last year with 111, including 55 solo. He also intercepted one pass and recovered two fumbles.

The two outside linebacking spots will be filled by three players. Hawkins, a second-year starter, will fill one spot. Junior JoJo Wooden will fill the second, and sophomore Chip Todd will rotate in and see playing time.

Hawkins (6-3, 229) recorded 4 1/2 sacks last year to go with his 43 tackles.

Wooden, who saw time last year primarily on special teams, is still adjusting to his position, said linebacker coach Glenn Pires.

"No do is a very stable guy," Pires said.

"He has a lot of good qualities ... he reads well and has the great vision a player needs to be an outside linebacker."

While Pires said this linebacking core is talented enough to crunch opposition offenses, linebackers face so many options in any given game that their success is not guaranteed.

"You've got to be able to read the game and react to the plays," Pires said.

Linebacker Dan Conley (49) led the Orangemen with 126 tackles, including 70 solo, last season. The linebacking core is expected to be the primary strength of the SU defense.

The coaches told us to let it fly out and not to worry about what we are supposed to do, just to go out and do it. We did it."
Sandman rises from lights-out style

By DAVE BUCSEMA
Asst. Sports Editor

He may be mellowing out a little, but the Sandman hasn’t gone to sleep.

Syracuse University co-captain and defensive back Tim Sandquist has always enjoyed “putting people to sleep” on the football field.

This year, however, he plans to awaken other parts of his game.

“When I was younger, I was just a collision-hitter,” Sandquist said. “I’d just run around and try and make people fumble the ball, or just try to get a hit on anyone, even if they didn’t have the ball.

“But as you get older, I’m trying to mature more into a defensive back than an outside linebacker.”

With a change in position from strong safety to free safety and his new status as co-captain, the 6-foot-1, 210-pound three-year starter said he will focus more on coverage and interceptions this year.

Early indications of his maturation were given last season when Sandquist finished second on the team with five pass breakups.

“This year, though, Sandquist will have to be the secondary’s signal-caller, and according to his roommate and successor at strong safety, Tony Montemorra, he is ready for the role.

“Now that he’s playing free safety, he’s our quarterback, and he’s got to get us in and out of coverage,” Montemorra said. “So he’s got a lot of responsibility now and he’s handling it great.”

The way Montemorra sees it, Sandquist may be prepared for the position now but wouldn’t have been a couple of years ago. "He’s matured a lot," Montemorra said. "He’s more relaxed and composed. He sees things and then reacts. Rather than reacting to what he thinks he sees, he actually sees it now.”

Still, when Sandquist sees the opportunity to pop someone, he will be more than happy to take advantage of it.

“When I approach someone to hit someone hard, the frame of mind is all the time, I want to try to make someone hit the ground hard," Sandquist said.

And, according to past and present teammates, when opponents hit the ground, the lights go out.

“I’ve had (the Sandman nickname) since high school," Sandquist said. "Then when I got up here (former Orange linebacker Terry Wooden) called me the Sandman because he told me to ‘sprinkle some sand on them’ after I hit them.”

If you spot Sandquist on campus, clad in the menacing silver and black of the Orangemen, try to get a hit on him. I mean that’s why I play defense.”

However, intimidating Sandquist may be for opposing offenses, he seems soft-spoken off the field.

“The idea that he is quiet is a misleading one, though, according to Montemorra.

"On the field he’s crazy,” Montemorra said. "And off the field, a lot of people don’t know him the way I do get the feeling that he’s not that crazy — but he is.

“He has moments where he’s pretty crazy, none I think I can mention.”

Sandquist said, however, he is not a screaming maniac of a vocal leader on the field. "I lead by example," Sandquist said. "You start yelling and you get tired.”

For now, Montemorra said Sandquist shows no signs of tiring, either in his punishing tackles, or his off-the-field antics.

"He’s just playing good ball now, that’s the bottom line," Montemorra said. "And, he’s a goofball.”

Tim Sandquist, a.k.a the Sandman, has switched positions this year from strong safety to free safety. Known as the hardest hitter on the SU defense, Sandquist was selected as one of the Orangemen’s four co-captains.
Experience should soothe unfamiliarity

By CHRIS STANLEY
Staff Writer

Nothing breeds success like experience, or so goes the theory of Syracuse University's new defensive back coach, Phil Elmassian.

Three out of four starters return for the Orange, while the lone newcomer played in all 13 games last season.

Greg Walker and Dwayne Joseph return as corners. Tim Sandquist has switched to strong safety from free safety, and Tony Montemorra is taking over Sandquist's old position.

"Any time you have snaps, any time you've got experience, it's a good thing," Elmassian said. "There's a lot to be said for having experience."

With that veteran core, Elmassian, who came to SU from the University of Virginia, said he can count on the players and not worry about forming a new style or new system.

"By the second ballgame, I'll be better able to tell our style," Elmassian said. "The first ball game is like a first date — you really don't know what to do with it."

Elmassian said finding that combination will be made easier after the Orangemen open the season against Vanderbilt.

"One game is worth 100 practices," Elmassian said. "I've haven't been through that yet, but I know they'll play hard. There's enough talent to overcome my coaching so we'll be in pretty good shape."

Nothing breeds success like experience, or so goes the theory of Syracuse University's new defensive back coach, Phil Elmassian.

Experience should soothe unfamiliarity

Marvin Graves' marvelous freshman season has won him much preseason notoriety, but, naturally, he wants more. Graves is taking more of a leadership role this season, as noticed by his teammates.
Kevin Mitchell didn't want to switch from a linebacker to a nose tackle. Now, he may never go back.

Mitchell, a sophomore, came to Syracuse University as a linebacker and spent his redshirt season there. But in the spring of 1990, with an overload of talent at his natural position, Mitchell was steered toward the nose guard slot.

"At the beginning I didn't want to switch," Mitchell said. "I wasn't ready to go through learning a whole new position in the middle of a season."

But after starting all 13 games last year as a freshman and earning ECAC All-Star and second team Associated Press All-East honors, Mitchell said he feels better about the switch. "At the time I wanted to play linebacker, but I just wanted to get on the field as fast as possible," Mitchell said. "I still have some ambition to play linebacker."

Now the question is whether the SU coaching staff could afford it. Mitchell has established himself in one season as a nose guard and taken a lot of pressure off senior left tackle George Rooks.

Glenn Pires coached SU's defensive line last season. He described Mitchell's move as a thing. The more Mitchell tried, the better he got.

Mitchell always had the option to go back to linebacker, but Pires said. But the way Mitchell progressed, going back would have only reduced his playing time.

"He went in there and said, 'Gee, this isn't hard,'" Pires said. "He did get better. We'd talk to the offensive coaches and they'd say, 'Yeah, he's doing pretty well.' As it went along, he ended up being the guy."

Not without, of course, a little hesitation and frustration on Mitchell's part. Nose guards take more than their share of abuse from offensive lineman. "I got upset because I get double-teamed and get cut," Mitchell said. "That's just something I have to learn to take."

"Size isn't important," Pires said. "It's what you know and how you use your skills that you have. Size is not everything." Mitchell was usually smaller than the offensive linemen he faced in 1990. At the beginning of the season, however, he wasn't facing ordinary linemen.

Mitchell was second in quarterback pressures with nine. He intercepted a pass that he took 22 yards for a touchdown. Mitchell had two sacks and a pass against the les and a sack against the Broncos. Mitchell had seven tackles and a sack against the Michigan State, Mitchell faced the biggest reason for his early season success. Despite his freshman status, Mitchell wasn't about to be pushed around.

"He doesn't back down from anybody," Pires said. "We're telling him that the right guard from USC is an All-American. He doesn't care. He's calling the other guy names. The kid from Michigan State was a second-round pick. He doesn't care. He's a tough, blue-collar kid and that's the kind of kid you need up front."

Mitchell led Syracuse linemen last year with 56 tackles, including 33 solo. He tied for third in sacks with 4 1/2 and was second in quarterback pressures with nine.

This year's biggest game came against Boston College, a 35-6 SU win, when he received the game ball. Mitchell had two sacks and intercepted a pass that he took 99 yards for a touchdown.

"He surprised some people a little bit," Pires said. "He was asked to a lot, especially in our scheme where you need a nose guard to control things."

This summer, Mitchell spent many hours in the weight room, working primarily on his bench press. Mitchell has already proven his size is no deterrent, but to move up another level, he must get stronger.

His freshman successes have only spawned higher expectations. Mitchell is not big for a nose guard (6-1, 245). He said he was intimidated by the size of the USC players in last year's opener. But as the season progressed, Mitchell became increasingly comfortable with his size, or lack thereof.

In the opener, he battled USC's Pat Harlow, who was taken in the first round of the NFL draft last April by New England. Mitchell recorded his first collegiate sack and recovered a fumble.

In the third game, against Michigan State, Mitchell faced off with Eric Moten, a second-round draft pick of the Denver Broncos. Mitchell had seven tackles and a sack against the Spartans. "It helped me because I knew back then that if I played well against them, then I'll be all right," Mitchell said.

Pires said Mitchell's attitude was the biggest reason for his early season success. Despite his freshman status, Mitchell wasn't about to be pushed around. His freshman successes have only spawned higher expectations.
Emanuel said he is a coach who refuses to deal with weaknesses or negatives. Emanuel spoke only of his defensive line’s strengths.

"The experience of Rooks, Mitchell and Jim Wentworth are strengths since they are all familiar with the defensive line schemes," Emanuel said.

Rooks, a 6-foot-4, 275-pound left tackle, is the most experienced player on the line, having started each of the past three seasons.

Rooks was the only pure freshman to play for SU in 1988. His size, speed, and big play potential helped him earn pre-season All-America honors from Football Digest.

"George Rooks is capable of being an All-American," SU head coach Paul Pasqualoni said. "He has all the tools you need to be an outstanding player — size, speed, agility and intelligence."

Rooks, the 16th-ranked defensive lineman in the country, was named as the third senior nose guard next to Mitchell and (Jim) Wentworth. Rooks said he hopes to live up to his early billing.

"I have been saying to myself, 'Hey George, you got a lot of hype. So now it’s time to go out and prove it,'" Rooks said.

Football Digest ranks Mitchell, who had a surprising freshman season, as the 10th best defensive tackle in the country.

Further accolades came from teammate Rooks.

"When you think of a true football player you should think of Kevin," Rooks said. "Whenever I line up next to him I know something special is going to happen because he is a big player."

Wentworth, a three-year letterman, was named as the third starter of this unit. Emanuel said Wentworth’s experience, work ethic and knowledge of the position make him an essential part of the line.

Last season Wentworth recorded eight tackles and one sack.

Returning to the line this season are juniors James Spencer, Scott Langenheim and Ernie Brown.

The newest addition to the line is 6-foot-2, 250-pound freshman Ed Hobson, who Emanuel said might see playing time backing up Mitchell at nose guard.

"As of now, Wentworth and Brown will share playing time," Emanuel said. "Scott will be backing up Rooks and O’Rourke and Hobson will back up Mitchell," Emanuel said. "I am pleased with the amount of depth in talent we have."

ditions for 1991. It appears to be quietly confident, knowing he can’t afford a letdown.

"I think I played pretty well (last year)," Mitchell said. "But I don’t know if it was because I was new and everyone was the think much of me, or if it was my play."

"We’ll see about that this year."

Nose guard Kevin Mitchell’s successful switch to a new position has all but eliminated the possibility of him returning to linebacker. Mitchell, a sophomore, was an ECAC all-star and led SU’s defensive linemen in tackles (36) last season.
A new era

Usually when a new head coach takes over at a major Division I football program, it is said his "era" begins. At Syracuse University, the 10-year Dick MacPherson era officially ended last December, just days after the Orange went Arizona in the Aloha Bowl on Christmas Day. In 1991, the Paul Pasqualoni era begins. Pasqualoni, referred to as 'Coach P' by his players, inherits an SU program on the rise.

He also inherits the pressures that go with easier than if SU had brought in a coach because of their accuracy. MacPherson George Rooks, SU's starting left tackle.

In 1991, the Paul Pasqualoni era begins. Pasqualoni, 42, took his first collegiate coaching job as the SU linebackers coach, and his new role as SU's head coach. Pasqualoni's appointment was made official after the resignation of Orangemen coach George DeLeone, a seven-year SU assistant who had been fired by Athletic Director Frank Laurie.

"It wasn't a big change," said senior defensive end Bob Gedney, "It's just a new era; a new era for Syracuse football.

"We're going to be a more intense team, a team that can win the Big East title," Pasqualoni said. "Every game is going to be a must-win, every game is going to be a chance to turn it around." Pasqualoni has been heard to say.

"We've got to have a new way of thinking," said senior quarterback Rob Guyette. "We've got to be more aggressive, more competitive." Guyette said.

"It's a new era, a new era for Syracuse football," said senior linebacker Mike Pires. "We've got to have a new way of thinking." Pires said.

Co-captain Dees lines up at new position

By JOSH BARNETT  Staff Writer

You would figure the practice routine would be familiar for a senior, but for Syracuse University's Andrew Dees things will be different.

Dees has moved from tight end, where he was a two-year starter, to right tackle, and has traded in his No. 86 jersey for one with No. 74.

Dees, one of the team's four co-captains, made the move to help fill a team need. He has moved to an offensive line with not just one person, "so he's under pressure — so's everyone," Dees said. "So that's helping out a lot.""The SU offensive line started its recognition trip after back-to-back impressive showings in 1988 and 1989. Dees said the pressure of living up to the past affects not only him but the rest of his fellow starting newcomers.

"To be a Top 25 team you've got to have a good offensive line," Dees said. "I'm not the only one under pressure — so's Terrence Wisdom, so's John Capachione." Though Dees' skill level is not where a lifelong offensive lineman's would be, he has won praise from the coaching staff for his unselfish attitude. "He has worked extremely hard to prepare himself in an extremely tough situation," said George DeLeone, SU's offensive coordinator. "I believe his progress is as good as anyone else's could be. Because of his character and his unselfishness, he has really tried hard to do the right thing." As a two-year starter at tight end, Dees was primarily a blocker, while Chris Gedney was responsible for most pass catching duties.

Dees' blocking ability is what made him a viable candidate to switch positions. "He was our best blocker among the tight ends," DeLeone said. "He would be the most likely to succeed."

Dees has started 24 consecutive games for the Orangemen at tight end, and his game experience should be beneficial. "I don't think the nervousness or the uncertainty of being in the game will affect him," DeLeone said. "I think that's a plus."

At 6-foot-6, Dees' height will be an advantage on the line, but he does it help him weigh 265 pounds generally associated with an offensive lineman.

"I think I have long arms for pass blocking," Dees said. "I think that's going to help if I just can stay back."

Dees said the additional responsibility of being one of SU's four co-captains has added to his excitement about the season. "I'm excited," Dees said. "My family's happy. I'm in my community at home." The work ethic of the captians has been partly responsible for the team's intensity throughout the preseason.

"As a captain everybody does look to you to see what you're doing," Dees said. "I just do everything hard and as best we can. If people see us doing this, they'll follow."

Andreas Dees (86), will no longer be catching passes from a tight end position. A two-year starter at tight end, Dees has moved to the offensive line.

Wisdom must show knowledge

By GR. PAGOVICH  Staff Writer

If the Syracuse University offensive line is going to have any success this year, experience will have to breed wisdom.

Junior right guard Terrence Wisdom is the only returning starter from last-year's line. Offensive coordinator and line coach George DeLeone said Wisdom will have to set an example for his new linemates.

"Terrence Wisdom is the only returning starter with any experience," DeLeone said. "And I am very, very, very pleased that he is back."

"Terrence must lead by example; he must lead by word and by action. And we're hoping very, very badly that he can have his best year here yet."

"As with Wisdom, left tackle John Capachione, center John Reagan, left guard Jerry Sharp, and co-captain, right tackle Andrew Dees will start on the offensive line."

"Seeing the lack of experience on the line, the coaching staff made some adjustments."

"Dees moved from tight end to offensive tackle. Also, in starting positions was junior Jerry Sharp, who was a reserve guard last year."

"Dees said he's anxious to see how Dees adjusts to his new position."

"We're looking forward to seeing how Andrew Dees responds," DeLeone said. "He's a great player. He's made a lot of sacrifices to be a tackle after being a tight end for three years. So we certainly hope he has the type of success that he had at tight end."

"With only one returning offensive starter, and two starters who moved from other positions, the line is the only unproven part of the offense."

Wisdom said he is looking forward to working with his new linemates and trying to reestablish the credibility the Orangemen have had on the offensive line. "I think we have guys that can step in and play," Wisdom said. "We've always done a good job of developing the guys that we have on the bench. There's no reason we can't be just as good or maybe even better than the guys that left before."
Hill's prime time coming in waves

By CHRIS STANLEY
Staff Writer

Syracuse University wide receiver Shelby Hill's Saturday afternoon usage used to be 60 minutes long. Now, they're 62.

Hill, who will be the Orange's No. 1 receiver this season, is adding a new facet to his resume - broadcasting.

The 6-foot, 194-pound sophomore will produce a two-minute weekly program to be broadcast on the campus radio station at halftime of SU broadcasts.

"It will be pretty hyped," Hill said. "Something exciting, something tasteful. It will be a fun, exciting experience.

Hill, a speech communications major, said he wants to bring in well known and unknown guests, including some former football and basketball players, and "just go out on a limb sometimes."

But that new role is just a part of Hill's involvement.

Hill admitted his primary focus is on the game. And he also promised not to let his starring role both on and off the field get to his head.

"I don't know if anything's guaranteed," Hill said. "You've got to go out there and work for it, regardless of the fact you might be No. 1."

Hill, who started in 10 games next to Rob Carpenter and played in all 13, said his duty on the team is much different than last year.

"My role is to help out with the fellows and be a role model," Hill said. "Everyone's a part of the team, and I have to help keep them up with the game."

Further, Hill said his confidence and attitude are better than during last season, since he knew his status most of the time.

"Being that I didn't really have to battle my butt off like last year, it did bring a sense of pride to me, knowing that I am the guy that's over there and that nobody's going to touch that spot except me," Hill said. "It's based on my progression, too."

Hill said he hopes to pick up where he left off last season when he set the freshman records for catches (33), yards (558), touchdowns (5) and average yards per catch (16.9).

"If I can expand on last season I probably will have the sole leading receiver spot in the (school) history books," Hill said. "But if not, then I hope I can have a major role and have a key contribution to our success."

Hill said he's willing to put his star status aside and make some of the little contributions that are necessary along with, of course, his big plays and touchdowns.

"Receivers do a lot, though they're not always highly looked at during a game," he said. "In certain situations and certain downs they're very visible. I don't say I want to do something spectacular but I want to do what I have to do to help the team out."

New departure leaves same old situation

By CHRIS STANLEY
Staff Writer

Last year, Syracuse University found itself with a veteran wide receiver (Rob Carpenter) and a big hole left by the departure of another (Rob Moore).

The coaches' job was to fill that hole, as Shelby Hill and Qadry Ismail fought it out for the spot.

This year, the same situation exists.

Hill, who won the battle over Ismail last fall, has locked away the starting job, but Carpenter's early exit for the NFL left another hole and another battle.

This time, it's between Ismail and Antonio Johnson.

Ismail, according to first-year SU wide receiver coach Dennis Goldman, is ready to fill the spot this season. A truce, however, has not yet been called.

"I feel right now that it will be Qadry Ismail along with Shelby Hill (against Vanderbilt)," Goldman said. "Qadry's worked hard over the summer. I think as long as we have the people to do it, we're going to play other people."

Hill said this squad is ready for that type of play and he would love to see it.

"Everyone's learned the system pretty well this season," Hill said. "I think if someone goes down or someone goes 50 yards down the sideline and they're just dead beat, someone else can come in and play. If we're running a lot of downs and they know what to do, we'd love to see us do one of those run-and-gun offenses. But if it's the right play, I think as long as we have the people to do it, we're going to play better people."

The number of receivers may change, the basic game plan, however, will be Goldman's call.

"I don't think we plan on changing our thinking," Goldman said. "We're pretty much 50-50 on running and passing and our offensive line will keep us from that.

"We'll take advantage of what the defense gives us. If the defense will let us throw the long ball, we'll take advantage of it."

Competition keeps tailbacks battling

By MIKE BUSH
Staff Writer

Syracuse University head coach Paul Pasqualoni named David Walker as his first-team tailback Monday, ending the speculation over the starting role. For now.

Yet if any animosity exists between Walker and competing sophomore Terry Richardson, who is just a step behind him, they would be the last to tell you.

"We both know that we want to play and it's friendly competition," Walker said. "We don't hold a grudge against each other or anything like that." Walker retains the role he earned last season, when he surprised many by leading the Orangemen with 730 yards rushing on 150 carries and six touchdowns.

Success for Richardson, on the other hand, has never come as a surprise. A Florida all-state performer in high school, Richardson received the honored No. 44 jersey as a freshman last season. Although he did not see action until the fifth game, Richardson finished the year with 60 carries and 320 yards rushing, second-highest on the team.

According to first-year running back coach David Mitchell, the problem of naming one starting tailback was quelled by a guaranteed positive answer.

"I think any time you have two athletes of their abilities you have a good situation," Mitchell said. "It's good competition because right now, David can't take anything for granted." With the naming of Walker as the first-string tailback and Al Wooten as fullback, Richardson will be relegated to backup status for the time being.

"It's kind of a situation like we both see each other there and we know we can't have it all," Walker said. "We just have to go out there and make the tailback position the best it can be."

Walker said, "It just pushes me to improve that much more and keep at it so I'm No. 1 and he's No. 2." Throughout the competition, both players have remained focused on the good of the team rather than personal achievements.

Richardson and Walker both spoke highly of each other's abilities and handling of the situation.

"David's a hard worker, always willing to help out," Richardson said. "As a freshman, I was trying to compete for his job and he still gave me pointers." Walker said both he and Richardson would like to be sole tailback, but as long as both are around, that isn't likely to happen.

"They both see each other there and we know we can't have it all," Walker said. "We just have to go out there and make the tailback position the best it can be."
Intensity needs to be restored

By JEFF ELBAUM

Syracuse University special teams coach Bob Casullo said there should be a different look to that group this year.

The special teams often drew ire from Dick MacPherson the past few seasons. Blocked punts, fumbled punt returns and poor coverage became the norm instead of the exception.

"Overall intensity and pride of the special teams (are what) we want to improve," Casullo said. "We want them much more intense, and we want them to be a factor in their work."

"There has been much competition for special teams positions. At one of the few positions without any competition, Pat O'Neill, a sophomore, put up 45 of his 62 kickoffs in the end zone, including 11 touchbacks.

The punting duties will also be handled by O'Neill. He took over the starting job midway through last season, when Ken Hawkins was unable to get away from his three-step style. One thing O'Neill won't be doing this year is scoring points.

Junior John Biskup has returned his place-kicking duties after making over 70 percent of his field goal attempts last season.

"He's having a great preseason," Casullo said. "So if he could put it on in the games on Saturdays, we're going to be in great shape."

Shelby Hill was named the punt returner Thursday. Hill battled for the job with Bob Grosvenor and Doug Womack. All are expected to have a chance in game situations.

"They're all doing well," Casullo said. "They're working good text drills every day. They're working on their hands, they're concentrating on catching the ball, and they're all doing a good job."

Place-kicker John Biskup, who has hit 70 percent of his career field goals, will begin his third year as the starting place-kicker.

Returning the kick-offs for the Orangemen this season will be Qodry Ismail and Terry Richardson. Ismail, a junior, needs just 126 yards to become SU's all-time kick return leader.

Richardson. Ismail, a junior, needs just 126 yards to become the Orange's all-time kick return leader.

The backfield for this season's Syracuse University football squad will be long in talent but perhaps short in versatility.

First-year running back coach David Mitchell and offensive coordinator George DeLeone have several options in their arsenal.

Mitchell said, however, none of those options can single-handedly replace do-it-all back Duane Kinnon, whose eligibility expired last year.

"I'm real pleased with the group we have," Mitchell said. "We don't have one ideal fullback or one ideal tailback. Each guy has specific abilities that can help the team."

Sophomore fullback Al Wooten will team with David Walker in the Orange starting backfield, forming a solid combination to complement quarterback Martn Graves' explosive play.

Mitchell said Wooten's inside strength will be his primary asset.

"Al is a guy who has the (bulk) but could be maybe a little taller," Mitchell said. "His main strength is his blocking and inside, but he has also improved on catching the football."

Wooten was Kinnon's backup at fullback last season, carrying 19 times for 96 yards and three touchdowns. He recorded a season-high 49 yards against Boston College.

With Terry Richardson splitting time with Walker at tailback, both Marcus Lee and Brian Picucci will see action at fullback behind Wooten.

Redshirt freshman Kirby Dorsey has the speed to be a legitimate tailback, but according to Mitchell, lacks the experience and will be relegated to special teams action.

Sophomore tailback Roy Williams junior fullback Tom Marsilio will also see limited action in the Orange backfield.

Gedney finally wins two year fight

By JOSH BARNETT
Staff Writer

For the past two seasons, Chris Gedney has been battling for the starting tight end spot, but this season he will be going it alone.

After two years of backing up Andrew Dees, Gedney will be the sole starter at Syracuse University, coaching up Andrew Dees, Gedney will be the sole starter as the Syracuse University coaching staff moves Dees to right tackle.

"Instead of playing 30 minutes, I'll be playing 60 minutes," Gedney said. "I'm going to be in there regardless of the situation, if it's 3rd-and-1 or 3rd-and-14."

Dees, a co-captain, said he has confidence in the man he once battled.

"Chris is going to do a fine job just like he did last year when I didn't start," said Dees, who missed the opener against USC because of a broken thumb.

Against the Trojans, Gedney caught a career-high seven passes for 82 yards. He followed that up with eight catches in his next two games but finished with just 24 receptions.

Since Gedney knows the job is his, you might think there would be less pressure on him. Gedney disagrees.

"I've put more pressure on myself now because I know I'm the starting tight end," he said. "I'm putting more pressure on myself so I don't just put it in cruise control and accept the role as if it was given to me."

Gedney, a junior, has played in 25 consecutive games after redshirting his freshman year at SU. He started the first four games last season at tight end and wide receiver.

Gedney, however, has never had the starting tight end position to himself.

"I just like to answer any doubts anybody has about me—answer them more for myself than anybody," Gedney said.

Gedney's 24 receptions for 322 yards ranked third on the team. He caught one touchdown pass against Arizona in the Aloha Bowl.

"He's always a viable candidate to receive the ball because he's such a good athlete," said tight end coach Bob Casullo.

Gedney said he has set no specific numbers to shoot for this season.

"I try to stay away from those kind of goals," he said. "If the object is going to be to get me the ball, then I'll think they'll get it to me more."

I'm pretty sure the object is going to be to get the open guy the ball, and I'm just going to be thankful when I'm the open guy."

According to Casullo, Gedney still has some work to do in raising his game.

"I'm very pleased with his effort," Casullo said. "He's just got to bring himself up to make him a premier tight end in the country."

Gedney has not been called on to do a lot of blocking in the past, but in his starting role that will change.

"There's always been a negative social stigma over my head as far as my run-blocking goes," Gedney said. "It's something I've accepted and have concentrated on working harder at. The day I stop trying to improve, that is the day I have a problem."

With the increased playing time, Gedney has improved his all-around skills, Casullo said.

"Chris now knows that he has to play a complete football game," Casullo said. "He has worked very hard towards being in shape and being able to execute for the whole game."
Chris Gedney has taken the role of starting tight end for himself. Gedney caught 24 passes last year and said he is out to end the "negative social stigma" about his run blocking.

Last season, the Syracuse University football team possessed a potent tight end combination. This season, they may still have a potent combination, but a 6-foot-6, 254-pound component is missing.

Senior co-captain Andrew Dees, who started 12 games last season at tight end, has moved to right guard. Junior Chris Gedney, who saw action in all 13 games, will be the starter and get most of the playing time.

"Chris is a very talented athlete," said tight end coach Bob Casullo. "He provides us with the total package of what we ask our tight ends to do."

When the Orangemen go with a two-tight-end formation, fifth-year senior Kevin Barker will be in the game. Barker, who converted from linebacker in the spring of 1989, has been SU's third tight end in the past two years.

"Kevin knows what's going on," Dees said. "He knows what his role is, and he's come a long way since he's gone over to the position." At 6-foot-2, 240 pounds, Barker will be the third tight end in the past two years.

Womack down, not out of return race

By KEVIN SAX
Staff writer

As a freshman third-string quarterback on the Syracuse University football team, Doug Womack was similar to a new car sitting in a dealer's lot.

He was just waiting to rev his engine and show what he could do.

This season, the Orangemen will take the dynamic sophomore for a test drive down a new road, as Womack vies for the starting punt returning job.

Shelby Hill was named the starting punt returner on Thursday, but Womack as well as Bob Grosvenor will get game action.

Womack, who returned two punts for touchdowns in a preseason scrimmage, said he's eager to take on the additional responsibility was the diversity of his talents.

"We've always liked Doug as an athlete, and we've always loved Doug as a quarterback," Pasqualoni said. "He's a very, very athletic, running guy. We just think he's dynamic, and if we can get him to catch punts and return them, I think he can be an exciting player back there."

Special teams coach Bob Casullo said the mobility of Womack made him an attractive candidate to fill the vacancy left by Warren Prisby, who will miss the season due to academic problems.

"Doug has always been exposed to the running, elusiveness part of the game," Casullo said. "He did these things in high school and he realizes that the tempo and the quality of the athlete is a bigger step here.

"But he's moved his game up another level, too. He's made himself a real viable candidate for that position."

Womack dabbled in punt returning while attending Aldine High School in Houston, Tex., where he was named the Houston Post and the Houston Chronicle Player of the Year. He was also honored with the Houston Touchdown Club Offensive Player of the Year award.

All indications are that Womack likes it back there, too.

"If I do get a chance to do it I'll really love it," Womack said. "I'll give it my best. That's all anybody can expect. That's all I expect."

After getting a peek at Womack last season, Orange fans may expect a lot from the sophomore, wherever he is.

As a freshman, Womack had 22 carries for 146 yards and two touchdowns, including a 49-yard touchdown scamper in his collegiate debut against Rutgers. Casullo said Womack has immersed himself in learning how to field punts in addition to quarterbacking by putting in long hours on the practice field.

"He's tireless," Casullo said. "He comes out pre-practice all the time. He's always out there. Coach, I want to be catching 'em. All three of them will do it. Doug will take his snaps from center, and then he'll come over and take his punts."

Casullo stressed that all three are likely to return punts at some point in the first few games.

"I really believe at some point in time in the first couple of games, all three of those guys will have a chance to return punts until someone stands out," Casullo said. "Or if we just want to use them all...I'm not adverse to using all of them."

Although he's working hard to learn the nuances of punt returning, Womack said he'll take in stride whatever decision the coaches make.

"I'll do my option (quarterback) role and have fun," Womack said. "If I win the job then I'll be helping the team additionally by returning punts. Anything to help the team out, I'll do."

TIGHT END

Barker isn't big for a tight end, but that hasn't stopped him from progressing, according to Pasqualoni.

"He's really become a total tight end," Casullo said. "He's really good out of the backfield, very good pass routes. He has good hands.

"I don't think he's a big kid, but he's big enough and he's made himself strong in the weight room."

The battle for the third spot is between two redshirt freshmen, Melvin Tutu and Eric Chenoweth.

Traditionally, the Orangemen have carried only three tight ends, but this season they may carry four.

"Four tight ends is better because that makes practice a little easier for Kevin Barker and myself," Gedney said. "You have to figure next year, too, both of them are going to travel and if one or the other travel, it will get them that much more ready for next season."

The new coaching staff at SU has made adjustments in the offense. Casullo said the most important things for the tight ends is committing the plays to memory.
COACHES
Now being head coaches, their time to devote to each side of the ball will be cut in half, but each will rely heavily on a new staff of assistants.
"I don't know if I'm any more involved in one side of the football than the other," DiNardo said. "We've got a good staff on both sides of the football and I've got a lot of input coming to me from our offensive coordinator."
Pasqualoni said the position of head coach may be overrated.
CHAIN
"I don't care who they are —they are always going to have to react and be experienced," Pires said. "You can never be a fully experienced linebacker.
Every week is a challenge with all the different offenses we see in a season. We're just going to going out and play, then we'll know how good they are."
Also vying for time this season are senior K.C. Sirowich, juniors Matt Greco and John Lusardi and sophomore Reggie Terry.
Greco, the long snapper on the punt unit, has 11 tackles on special teams the past two years. Lusardi played in all 13 games last season and recorded 10 tackles.
Terry sat out last season recovering from knee surge-
p. while Sirowich saw special teams action.
"I think a whole lot too much is made out of the head coach, to be perfectly honest," Pasqualoni said. "I think we've got some great, great (coaches) here who are very, very well prepared."
Pasqualoni said he has kept the same basic offensive and defensive philosophy with the Orangemen.
DiNardo, on the other hand, has tried to totally revamp the Commodores —installing the multi-look 1-bone offense and the reduction 52 defense.
Pasqualoni and DiNardo are no strangers to each other. They met in the spring of 1988 when Pasqualoni and former SU as-istant Norm Gerber went to visit Colorado.
Pasqualoni, however, said that visit will be no help in figuring out the Commodores complex offense because the visit was completely devoted to defense.
The nerves will probably set in as each coach prepares for his head coaching debut, but Pasqualoni said being nervous before a game won't be anything new for him.
"Assistant coaches get nervous, too," he said. "They're concerned about the preparation, too. You're concerned about the side of the ball you're on and the overall package. Here at Syracuse if you're a football coach—you're a football coach."
Pasqualoni and DiNardo have something else in common.
"(It will be) the battle of two Italians in New York," DiNardo said. "Is this going to be a pasta benefit or what?"

Paul Pasqualoni and Gerry DiNardo will both make their Division I head coaching debuts this Saturday.

But that may be the only common denominator between the two.

Syracuse University hosts Vanderbilt University on Saturday at noon in the Carrier Dome.

Pasqualoni takes over a Syracuse team coming off a 7-4-2 season. The Orangemen have made four consecutive bowl game appearances.

DiNardo takes over for the fired Watson Brown. Vanderbilt is coming off back-to-back 1-10 seasons and has won 10 games over the past five years.

Pasqualoni brings the Orangemen into the new Big East Conference, where they are expected to be a top contender.

DiNardo's Commodores remain in the Southeastern Conference where they have finished in the cellar three of the last five seasons.

Pasqualoni most recently comes from the defensive side of the ball, where he served as linebackers coach for the Orangemen for the past four seasons.

DiNardo had served as the offensive coordinator for the national champion University of Colorado Buffaloes before taking the job with Vanderbilt.
A 3-D laser light show tomorrow at 9 p.m. at the Landmark Theatre will accompany the music of the Grateful Dead. The songs will encompass the history of the Dead, including music by the late Brent Mydland (front, center), shown with the group in this 1989 photo. He did imply that the audience wouldn’t be hearing only the typical Dead that is always played on the radio. The bottom line is we have a top-notch crew and staff who put the show together, and a top-of-the-line digital music system,” Grod explained. The crew working on this show has toured previously with a Pink Floyd show which played in a number of cities around the country.

Saturday’s show is the first stop on a North American tour. Other cities on the tour include Rochester, Chicago, Toronto and Boston. A representative at the Landmark box office said tickets are still available for the show, which begins at 9 p.m.

Tickets are $12, which Grod pointed out: “is a fairly inexpensive re-production to comparison to a concert.”

Furs check out ‘World Outside’

For the first time since the early 1980s, the Psychedelic Furs have approached an album as a group collaboration, resulting in a cohesive collection of diverse ideas that lead singer Richard Butler says makes World Outside one of the band’s best albums in years.

“I think this album is a lot stronger than past albums,” Butler boasts. “The arrangements are a lot more unusual, which results from having a whole band writing songs. When you’re working as a whole band in the studio, there’s a much more cohesive, kind of a turnover of ideas.”

As a result, World Outside effectively captures the feeling of the Furs’ earlier albums like 1981’s Talk, Talk, Talk, while showing new growth in the group’s sound.

With help from veteran alternative producer Stephen Street (The Smiths, Darlin’ Buds), World Outside weaves together airy acoustic guitar and psychedelic 1960s organ on songs like “Until She Comes.” Drumming beats, seductive sax lines and sonic guitar grunge combine cleverly on “Don’t Be A Girl.”

Lyrical World Outside revolves around Butler’s trials and tribulations in relationships — from the lament of “Tearing Down” to the spitful “Valentine.”

World Outside’

While Butler says he feels “Get A Room” best sums up the album’s feeling, he felt I’m From Outside (taken from the song “There’s A World”) was the most appropriate title.

“This album is very introspective,” Butler admits. “It seemed to be a little more私人 than the titles I just wanted (the title) to imply that there’s something else.”

Butler, who admittedly hates concept albums, stresses the importance of World Outside to the band’s identity.

“I didn’t sit down and think, ‘I’m going to write all songs about relationships’” he says. “It just happened.”

To avoid having too many songs about relationship, Butler says he refused to record any song during that period. The record Talk, Talk, Talk, Talk, was also about relationships — it happened periodically,” he laughs.

Working as a whole band while recording, Butler attributes the album’s feeling to its short session recording period.

“We spent a lot of time in the studio with Midnight to Midnight,” he regrets. “I would’ve never spend more than two months in the studio again. It becomes counterproductive after a while.

“With music, usually your first idea is the best idea. If you spend too long, you begin examining your first ideas too much and you start looking for what is right and what is wrong. But there is no right or wrong. The longer you spend worrying about it, the more sterile it’s likely to become.”

Welcome Changes

The Furs’ newfound stability is a welcome change for a group whose sometimes spotty career has been marked with turbulence. Frequent personnel changes and lack of unity within the band had an effect on the Furs’ albums in the mid-1980s.

“For a while, around Mirror Moves time,” Butler reminiscence, “it felt like there were three songwriters and other musicians in the band. That suited that kind of record because we wanted to make a very streamlined sounding record. That was OK then, but I wouldn’t want to make that kind of record now.”

While Mirror Moves (1984) and Midnight to Midnight (1987) were the group’s most commercial successes, Butler admits that the two albums least reflected the band’s sound.

“Those two albums kind of don’t fit in the catalog of our records. I think if you were to take those two out of all we’ve done, the band would go back to the late ‘80s, mid-'90s.”

Starr Winer

The Grateful Dead are coming to Syracuse. Well sort of.

On Saturday, September 1, the Landmark Theatre will feature one dead, a 3-D laser light tribute to the band that refuses to die. According to promoter John Grod, this will be the next best thing to actually seeing the band live.

“There’s a lot going on at once,” Grod said “We have every type of laser available and 3-D glasses to enhance the effect.

Grod added that many aspects of the show are just plain bizarre, including what he called a tremendous amount of video footage that spans the entire career of the band.

“We have interviews from the late ‘60s with original band members to footage from the present day,” Grod explained.

The extravaganza is the final product of what Grod described as an intimate four-month project.

“I’d ribbons something a little different,” he explained, “not just a Led Zeppelin or Grateful Dead/N’Roses show.”

“Zeppelin is easy to do,” he said. Since much of their music is loud and fast-paced, he was imbued with choreography and the laser show to them is not that difficult.

Grod had considered creating a show based on a number of bands, including U2, before settling on the Dead.

The challenge of the Dead

The Dead provided more of a challenge and made more demands, Grod says. Most of the creative process was directed toward the designing of new effects involving lasers, smoke and fog machines.

Grod also selected the band on the basis of their appeal to the young and the young at heart.

“I’m 45 years old and I’m finding that the young people today are listening to the same stuff and wearing the same clothes as I was 20 years ago,” Grod said. For example, he said his 20-year-old son enjoys many of the same bands he did when he was his son’s age.

Grod said that this certainly wasn’t true of himself and his own parents.

Grod said today’s music in many ways just isn’t as appealing as the music of older groups. The Dead are still tremendously popular, he said, and cited their nine upcoming sold-out shows at New York City’s Central Park as an example of their undying allure.

The 75-minute show will contain about 20 songs. Grod said, and will showcase a wide spectrum of the band’s music. Some of the songs included in the show are "Sugar Magnolia" and "Ship of Fools," but Grod declined to mention more than that.

The Magermeister

After gazing upon the artwork that accompanies this column, I’ve had three recurring nightmares: 1) Ronald Reagan is writing my column. (Mommy, should I take Eureka and the pointies?) 2) I’ve grown a Dizzy Gillespie goatee. 3) Cy Sperling has done some work on my hairline. (I not only write the column, I’m also a dartboard member.)

Then again, I haven’t exactly done my part with a 2-3-1 record for Week One.

Vanderbilt at Syracuse (-2 1/2)

The new look uniforms are the same. The offensive system is the same. Four of the coaches are the same. Hey, this could be national champ Colorado visiting the Dome tomorrow!

It’s not.

In past years, Vanderbilt has been to college football what Exxon is to environmental protection. The Commodores have four winning seasons since Ike (Eisenhower, not Turner) just arrived on our side of the planet, you should know that Paterno is slightly disliked in Syracuse. He weaseled out of the classic series with SU, then muscled off to the Big 10 1/2.

But if Vanderbilt is Exxon, what’s Cincinnati? This team followed up a brilliant 1-9-1 in 1989 with a sharp 1-10 last year.

With vulnerable USC coming up next week, Penn State can’t be fully concentrating on this game. The Nittany Lions won’t quite cover this huge spread. Penn State 42, Cincinnati 7.

Michigan (-2 1/2) at Boston College

The BC club must be down after a loss to Rutgers, while Michigan should be ready to roll for a possible championship season.

Skrepenak is the best tackle in the country, and teammates Elvis Grbac and Desmond Howard form a strong passing combination. The Eagles won’t be able to run against the Michigan defense was all over BYU in the Beat-the-Disland-Thing-To-Death Pigskin Classic. The Seminoles have great young receivers and a better backfield.

The LSU defense, led by cornerback Terrell Buckley, should be able to stuff a Tulane offense that only managed three points against Ole’ Miss. Florida State 55, Tulane 3.

BYU (+5 1/2) at UCLA

The PIGSKIN Classic, there was the Pigskin Classic. There was no Pigskin Classic. BYU’s quarterback as the presenter excitedly named BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner, he was also summing BYU’s quarterback as the winner.

It’s Week 2 of the college football season — meaning bad games and big spreads. Here’s another example.

SU opens season at Duke

By JEFF ELBAUM

If the Syracuse University soccer team sounds a little hesitant about opening the season this weekend, you could understand why. The Orangemen travel to North Carolina, to face ninth-ranked Duke on Saturday and second-ranked North Carolina State on Sunday.

"Physically, we're ready to play a game," midfielder Darin Jennings said. "Mentally, we're still a little bit mystified on what to expect, because we haven't played two teams so high in the rankings this early in the season before."

The Orangemen say they don't know what to expect. Because of new NCAA regulations, college soccer teams were not allowed to play any pre-season games.

SU coach Dean Foti still refuses to look at this weekend's games as a tune-up.

"It's not a tune-up, it's the season," Foti said. "Obviously, we look at this weekend to help us get better for later on during the season.

"The experiences we get from these games are going to definitely benefit us, whether it's dealing with a rowdy crowd on an opponent's field, or whether it's dealing with a top 10 opponent.""

As of Thursday, Foti was still uncertain as to who would start in goal this weekend. He said that Charlie Wilke, Steve Pollnow, and Peter Kahn all have played well in practice.

Knicks, Ewing should make up their minds

Basketball is probably the farthest thing from fans' minds these days, but one subject which can't go unavowed is the Patrick Ewing contract fiasco with the New York Knicks.

Late this summer, Ewing had the opportunity to become the highest paid player in the history of team sports. He, along with his agent, David Falk, decided it wasn't good enough and it was time to take the team to arbitration.

Ewing and Falk claimed it's a player's freedom at stake here and not a matter of dollars and cents.

Ewing lost his case, and supposedly wants to leave the Big Apple.

A trade would not solve all of Ewing's problems. If the Knicks could get equal value for him, Ewing would probably be thrust back into a similar situation with his new bosses — no great players would be there to surround him. A trade is a difficult thing to accomplish, and a Wayne Gretzky or Herschel Walker type of trade doesn't occur overnight.

Granted the Knicks have not been the same since the departure of Rick Pitino. Under Pitino, the players flourished, and a Wayne Gretzky or Herschel Walker type of trade doesn't occur overnight.

"The Knicks are a team of underachievers, and to fit into their puzzle. They're a team of underachievers, and to fit into their puzzle.

"They've got a lot of young talent, but they lack motivation. Maurice Cheeks, Charles Oakley, Kiki Vandeweghe, Gerald Wilkins, and former UNLV floor general Greg Anthony are good players who could thrive under Riley."

You don't have to be the top pick overall to be a team's best player. Riley was able to motivate his players, and get the most out of their talents. A.C. Green was selected late in the first round and Riley turned him into a key piece of the puzzle.

Pitino and Riley are very similar. Not only are they both very sharp, but their style brings something management and the fans like — "tune-up.

Under Pitino, the players flourished. Is Ewing giving up too soon, or is he just fed up with Knicks management?

Riley is a young coach, who could relate to his players well. After all, Riley coached the NBA's all-time leading scorer and would have been the best player ever, Kareem Abdul Jabbar.

Riley is a young coach, who could relate to his players well. After all, Riley coached the NBA's all-time leading scorer and would have been the best player ever, Kareem Abdul Jabbar.

Better days are around the corner. Ewing should be back, and not foolish. With his talents and a little bit of patience, he might eventually have something in common with Johnson and Jordan.

Syracuse seeks repeat weekend

By ZEV BOROW

The Syracuse University volleyball team travels downstate this weekend for what coach Dan Schulte calls "the battle for New York's bragging rights." No, the Orangewomen, 3-0, will not be taking in a Giants-Jets game. However, they will face off against the intra-state rival Hofstra's Flying Dutch, as well as the Virginia Cavaliers and the Southwest Missouri State Bears, in the weekend tournament being held at Hofstra.

The Orangemen say they don't know what to expect, whether it's dealing with a top 10 opponent.

"It is not exactly like we are arch-rivals, but the competition at Hofstra should be a little tougher than last weekend's tournament," senior captain Jessica Paarlberg said. "We are all really excited about the season, and just hope that we can continue to play well."

"Hofstra always is a really tough place to play, and they usually have very talented teams," junior Annie Parisien said. "Hopefully we will play well there and continue to improve."

While Schulte may indeed be playing up the tight for "New York bragging rights" between SU and host Hofstra, the Orangewomen are confident and excited about the weekend trip to Long Island.

"It is not exactly like we are arch-rivals, but the competition at Hofstra should be a little tougher than last weekend's tournament," senior captain Jessica Paarlberg said. "We are all really excited about the season, and just hope that we can continue to play well."

"Hofstra always is a really tough place to play, and they usually have very talented teams," junior Annie Parisien said. "Hopefully we will play well there and continue to improve."

While both Schulte and the team are wary of the host Flying Dutch, the Orangewomen have to remain focused for their matches against the Cavaliers and the Bears.

"Virginia is a very physically talented team," Schulte said. "They have a new coach, and a lot of young talent. Their program is on the rebound and they will be tough."

Coplin stresses knowledge over good grades

By SARAH BERNSTEIN
 Contributing Writer

Students at Syracuse University have a decision to make regarding their education.

They can spend four years concentrating on getting a good education, or spend these years concentrating on getting good grades.

William Coplin, an SU professor of economics, said he is very concerned with the subject.

Coplin, founder and director of Undergraduates for a Better Education, feels there is a difference between getting good grades and getting a good education.

In a speech Thursday on making the most of an education, Coplin said he feels students are mainly interested in partying and getting good grades.

"Getting good grades" denotes negativity in Coplin's opinion because he believes students should concentrate on the amount of knowledge they are gaining, not the grades that appear on their transcripts.

Pucker up

Senior Danielle Place and junior Will Mapes perform an intimate scene for senior Jennifer Ruttenberg in Thornden Park Sunday afternoon as an assignment for Mapes' TRF 520 class.

"Unity and identity are very important because we must all strive for unity, but in order to strive for unity, we must understand who we want to unify with," he said to a clapping audience of about 150 people.

"And, in order to understand who we want to unify with, we must first understand who we are. You must understand your own identity." The program featured a student comedian, gospel and rap music, presentations of speeches by activists such as Malcolm X and the introduction of new and old SAS officers.

Sharnee Lance, vice president of educational and cultural affairs, said the new SAS administration plans to remain one of the most active, respected and dominant organizations on campus.

Powerful past presidents

"We've had some very powerful brothers in the past," she said, referring to former SAS presidents Frank Williams and Quentin Stith.

"Anybody who knows anything about SAS knows about Q (Stith). The new administration, under Vaughn, plans to take the power even further," she said.

The SAS umbrella organizations, which presented information during the program and at tables surrounding the auditorium, help bridge the gap between black students at Syracuse University and the community, Lance said.

"We, as Africans, cannot be divided," she said. "We must come together as a family."

Tuberculosis rising in major U.S. cities
Tuberculosis is on the rise in major U.S. cities where AIDS is prevalent and large populations of immigrants are not immunized.
The growing number of cases nationally has prompted hospitals to consider treatment measures abandoned decades to New York City, officials might reopen tuberculosis sanitariums.
Patients with AIDS are easily infected because their immune systems are suppressed by the AIDS virus and they are unable to fight off the germ, health officials say.
In 1989, California ranked first in the number of tuberculosis cases nation-

Last year's budget constraints nearly closed the Center for Mediation and Conflict Resolution (CMC); however, it was saved by funding from other Syracuse University sources, said Joy Meeker, the center's coordinator.

I would like to tell everyone that when we are closed, we are not really closed. We are still working to settle disputes, Meeker said.

The center is a free, voluntary and confidential way to settle disputes with the help of a third party.

The most important goal of the mediation process is to maintain campus diversity through tolerance of different values, Meeker said.

"Different sectors of the university showed they support CMC," Meeker said. "Despite the degree of course constraints of their own.

"I would like to tell everyone that when we are closed, we are not really closed. We are still working to settle disputes with the help of a third party.

The meeting is moderated by two volunteers who work with Meeker, two things are needed — money and volunteers, Meeker said.

Though CMC was once given administrative funding through the Office of Student Affairs, this funding has been suspended due to budget constraints.

Organizations support

However, the center has not gone under. It is now funded by the Graduate Student Organization, Hendricks Chapel and a graduate assistantship through the Program of Nonviolent Conflict and Change and the Program on the Analysis and Resolution of Conflicts.

The process begins when one of the conflicting parties calls the center. If CMC decides to mediate the conflict, the parties involved are contacted within two days, she said.

If both parties agree on mediation, a meeting time is arranged.

Third parties may aid in mediators. This means that the conflicting parties are free to tell their sides of the story.

Throughout the process, each side is encouraged to see the issue from the other person's perspective, Meeker said.

She added that the party should not bring their feelings of guilt or anger into the process. At the end of the process, a workable and livable contract to help future relationships is developed, she said.

Meeker said the contract is by no means legal and binding but it is hoped that both sides will adhere to it.

More effective than court

"Our studies have shown that resolution through CMC has a success rate of about 80 percent, while the success rate from litigation or small claims court is only about 30 percent," she said.

Meeker does not generate a high degree of voice of urban America. While his name does not get a high degree of recognition, Agran says his 12 years in the center is a free, voluntary and confidential way to settle disputes with the help of a third party.

The Washington Post, the New York Times, the Hartford Courant, the Boston Globe and the Daily Orange, among others, have covered the center's work.

The center hears disputes between roommates, faculty, tenants, landlords and even entire residence hall floors.

It also reaches out to the SU community through workshops offered throughout the year.

The workshops deal with avoiding conflicts through improving communication skills or learning how to deal with conflicts when they arise, Meeker said.

Volunteers are vital to the success of CMC, Meeker said. "I would like to tell everyone that when we are closed, we are not really closed. We are still working to settle disputes with the help of a third party.

The center usually needs about 20 volunteers who work with Meeker, two things are needed — money and volunteers, Meeker said.

Volunteers should have good communicative skills and be prepared to go through a training process.

CMC has made itself known around the country. Meeker and Nell Keitz, the faculty supervisor, held a conference and hosted several other mediation centers from other universities, such as Towson State University, Siena College and the University of Maryland.

The center was also covered in the National Bar Association's Dispute Resolution Update magazine.

The center is located at 36 Waverly Ave., next to the Good Food Store in the Watson Theatre Complex. The center's phone number is 466-3870.

Democrats emerge for presidential election

The 1992 presidential election is more than a year away and seven months from the Iowa caucuses, analysts say.

But new Democratic candidates are already emerging, and some Democratic politicians who have turned our swing the suburban vote," Broder said.

Groups deserve kudos

In the past two years, GLBSA held kiss-ins to force their sexuality down the throats of passers-by; tested, time and again, the university's commitment to developing homosexual rights on campus; and drew national media coverage for its efforts surrounding the Alpha Chi Rho T-shirt incident.

Still fueled, GLBSA continues to plow through our still homophobic campus challenging people to evaluate their feelings about homophobia.

T-shirt slogans for the times

I would like to thank the guys at Alpha Chi Rho for makin' one of the most profound statements of our time: "Club faggots, not sexists!"

Take a moment, and marvel at that statement's philosophical insight, its logical rationale, and the way it fits so nicely on the back of a shirt.

Actually, I think the T-shirts are a great idea.

With the intellectual depth of a mound puddle and the individuality of a school of fish, today's college students don't think very much. And most of their relevant thoughts are tailor-made for slapping on shirts.

In fact, the back of a T-shirt might be too much space.

But in keeping with the spirit of Alpha Chi Rho, I've come up with a few T-shirt ideas of my own idea, having an opinion can be as easy as going to the mall.

For example:

"Fight anti-war protesters, not Iraqis." Product of all the male patriots who were brave enough to insult people who opposed the Gulf War. But were scared to walk near a recruiting office.

If carrying a "Nuke Iraq" sign is your idea of thought, this shirt's for you. Comes in red, white, or blue.

"I'm right...and you're a sexist, racist, etc., etc." That's the left, this shirt makes a statement for all those who believe they're the only intellectually honest people available. In one, fashionably correct size.

SUNY students suffer same plight

In light of Syracuse University's recent tuition increase, I am sorry to Barry Stark (The Naked Truth, Sept. 3) lost with the details of the calculation for the Higher Educational Services Corporation to award financial aid, my concern takes no comfort that many students have suffered similar consequences, including those attending the "least expensive" public and community colleges, where the quality of education might be even lower.

Considering that your expensive university is tainted by two of the specialized (yet cheap, therefore possibly inferior to your type) of schools of this type, SUNY's Health Science Center and College of Environmental Science and Forestry, I ponder the background of this elusively descriptive statement.

When I arrived at ESL in September of '92, I was delighted to learn that my student activity fees and fees paid by the college allowed me to partake of Syracuse University's social and extracurricular activities.

"ESF students have the use of dining halls, libraries, library facilities, testing services, and athletic and recreational facilities. They also share the wide range of social and cultural resources available at the university. Students at ESL and Syracuse University likewise may take both campuses to enrich and complement their major programs." (Syracuse University Bulletin, Undergraduate Catalog 1990-1991)

The undergraduate catalog failed to mention that as part of ESF's services, we use the library of any other SUNY facility. ESF students residing at other facilities are allowed the same privileges as those students in many respects.

Perhaps with all that is going on at SUNY campuses, students at SUNY, schools, are getting quite a bit more for that affordable price tag, (besides the SUNY's own tuition increase.) But then, that may be the opinion of an inferiorly educated SUNY student.

Letters

An unnecessarily false alarm

To the editor:

This letter is addressed to three children pretending to be adults at Syracuse University.

I saw you tripping the Blue Light security system on Tuesday, September 3 at 10:40 p.m. on the corner of Marshall Street and University Avenue. I told the security officer that I saw you and I gave him description of all three of you. You turned in a false alarm. I think I was a very dangerous and disrespectful act: as far as I am concerned, you do not deserve to live here and be a part of this community. I remember the faces and the feelings of the bystanders.

Brothers take blame

To the editor:

As you may already know, an incident occurred at the end of last school year in which several Alpha Chi Rho brothers produced and wore two T-shirts displaying homophobic slogans.

Recently, members of both groups took a stance against police brutality—an important move because without our support, victimized women would have gone unnoticed. The members of both organizations deserve credit for being gutsy enough to be confrontational and aggressive in conserving and apathetic times.

S.C.A.R.E.D., formed out of necessity after 6 women were raped in the months after the Phi Mu incident in 1989, enjoys similar success.

S.C.A.R.E.D. initiated, and saw through to completion, the idea of a blue-light system, forced the development of a rape kit on campus and did the impossible in getting the university to take a definitive stance on rape.

Through educational rallies, S.C.A.R.E.D. has also made just about everybody on campus aware of a woman's right to say no.

Police BRIEFS

Police are looking for a suspect in the assault and harassment of a 58-year-old cab driver outside the house at 942 Ackerman Ave. Saturday morning.

The victim, from the 900 block of Avery Ave., picked up three males in the Sutter's Mill and Mining Co. alley at about 2 a.m. One of the males asked the driver for a cigar. When the driver refused, the male became irate, a police report stated.

When they arrived at the house, the males paid and began throwing dirt and gravel at the car. As the driver turned to leave, one of the males threw a crowbar and damaged the roof of the car, the report said.

The driver was then punched on the left cheek and his glasses were broken by the same male. The three then ran into the 942 Ackerman Ave. house.

Police interviewed a 20-year-old resident who was identified by the victim as one of the three males but did not beat him or throw the crowbar.

Vladimir N. Quinn, 21, of 304 Walnut Place, was arrested for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

Police said Quinn was standing in the middle of the street and refused to move. He then laid down in front of the patrol car. Police said he appeared drunk or high.

After being handcuffed, he refused to get up and walk to the car. Police were forced to pick him up and drag him.

A 21-year-old Syracuse University student was charged with disorderly conduct Saturday morning after trying to engage in a fight with another man.

Police said that Sean Palmer, of 62 Coton Drive, tried earlier in the evening to fight the same man. Palmer continued to shout and provoke a fight after the man had left the area, according to a police report.

Police said Palmer appeared to be highly intoxicated.

A 40-year-old Syracuse University English professor was taken to University Hospital Friday afternoon after he entered the Beta Theta Pi house and refused to leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

According to a police report, a 23-year-old man was arrested for disorderly conduct in the Sutter's alley early Saturday morning after trying to engage in a fight with another man.

Neglected syllabus results in exam panic

So I woke up bright and early one Friday morning last fall. I don't know about you, but I get up early on Fridays about as often as I smoke crack. On this particular Friday, however, I squashed all my desires to sleep in. I even showered and shaved for the occasion. I was Joe Responsible College Student.

I had to put on a tie just to let people know that I was a high-powered-intellectual type. I staggered into Maxwell ready to actually stay awake through an entire technology lecture.

When I entered, I noticed that people were leaving empty seats between them. But I decided most people don't smell too good at 9:35 on a Friday morning, so it wouldn't be too pleasant to sit right next to someone.

I also noticed that the professor was handing out packets at the front of the auditorium.

"Must be a survey," I said to myself. "I better go get one." I often make such spontaneous decisions.

My professor grimaced as he handed me a copy of the survey. "Somebody needs a cup of coffee," I further noted to myself. I smiled and politely thanked him and went to my seat. My eyes quickly scanned the cover page: "NAS 201. Introduction to Technology. Exam Two." I went back to the word "exam" and sure enough it was still there.

As you are well aware, the word "survey" and the word "exam" have two completely different meanings. A survey is something where you mark "C" for every answer. The exam is something you study for weeks in advance. At least I assume that is what a high-powered-intellectual type should do.

I was sitting there living out that dream we all have. But when you wake up from that dream you say to yourself, "Whew, it wasn't a test, it was just a dream. Thank God I would never be so stupid as to forget to look at the syllabus and know what the dates the tests are on." I, on the other hand, was not waking up — the test may as well have been written in Arabic. The initial wave of terror had washed over my body, and I regained some of my reasoning. I made a quick mental list of my options.

"Weeping came to mind first. I really wanted to bawl and yell. "Mommy," But, I thought that I might just close my professor in to my dilemma.

Where's his sense of humor? I considered marking all "C" and then telling the professor I thought it was a survey. I'm just guessing, but I would imagine he wouldn't see the humor.

Then I thought about cramming. I once did a whole semester of literature in an hour — how long could it take to cram for this test?

I scratched that idea when I remembered that cramming at this point would be considered cheating.

I decided that I would check out the test. I went to get a note from the health center. I have no history of epilepsy or diabetes so staging a fit was out. A heart attack seemed tough to fake, and hanging myself by my tie probably wouldn't have qualified as a medical excuse.

As my list of options thinned, I realized that I might just have to take this test. I would have to face up to my own irresponsibility. I would have to fail. Unhappy with this conclusion, I decided the only rational thing to do was to find a way to pass.

Students fly kites to make friends

By ROB OWEN
Auto. Lifestyle Editor

The Quad was transformed into a launch pad Friday morning for dozens of kites created by Syracuse University students in the College of Visual and Performing Arts.

The kites took off as part of an annual interdisciplinary charette, involving industrial design, interior design and surface pattern design majors.

The original intention was to launch the kites without running, but because of an absence of wind, the flies were allowed to dash across the Quad.

Kites that flew received a passing grade; those that didn't, failed, according to Professor Mary Ellen Letterman.

"This is an annual event we do where we get all the students together at the beginning of the semester to work on a team project," Professor Letterman said. "It's not an essentially serious project; it's more fun to get them mixing and to get them to integrate the sophomores who are new to the program."

In the past, projects were more open-ended. One year the theme was "East" where students designed everything from restaurants to china. Another year the theme was "West" where students designed everything from kites to movies.

But this year, there were all types of kites seen soaring above the Quad. The most unique kites were outnumbered by the unique kites built for the occasion.

From Mickey D's to explosions

A bi-plane kite, a single flying wing, a McDonald's hamburger box kite, a spinner kite, an exploding kite called The Damned, a circular kite featuring Da Vinci's Modular Man, a kite made from bargs sporting the old SUB logo, a flying t-square, Gene Gene the Dancing Machine (a humanoid-shaped kite) and a helium balloon were just a few of the many airborne creations conjuring the normally kite-free Quad sky.

Each kite-building group consisted of six students, generally two from each of the three design programs.

Brooke Carter, a senior in interior design, said her group decided on a circular kite based on Da Vinci's "Modular Man" (a sketch of the human male doing jumping jacks) for a specific reason.

"All of our majors incorporate the human body, and we all design for human factors and human dimensions," she said.

One group, which called themselves The Damned, rigged their kite so it would catch fire in the mid-flight. Lisa Monteleone, a member of the Damned group, said the prospect of fly and pass crash and fail was a challenge.

"It wasn't that intimidating," Monteleone said. "We did a mock-up version first and it flown."

But then, just in case, we got balloons. I guess we were intimiditted."

Making kites, making friends

Noel Sior, an interior design major, said she was in charge of the French curves on her group's kite. She said it was good to do the project with students in other majors, "so if we need help from another person during the year, we could go up and feel comfortable talking to them."

A bi-plane kite was built by Trace Fleegle's group. Fleegle said that they chose to be plane midnight Thursday on Westcott Street.

Fleegle said designing a kite was hard as a matter of choice.

As my list of options thinned, I realized that I might just have to take this test. I would have to face up to my own irresponsibility. I would have to fail. Unhappy with this conclusion, I decided the only rational thing to do was to find a way to pass.
Orange romp in home opener, 37-10

SU makes strong impression in drubbing of Commodores

By DAVE BUCKMAN

Gastonia, N.C. — With a 1-0 win over Vanderbilt, the Syracuse University football team took the first step toward a successful season. The Orange offense and defense produced a dominating performance, recording 37 points on the scoreboard.

The game was a one-sided affair, as the Orange outscored Vanderbilt 37-10. Syracuse’s quarterback Doug Womack completed 12 of 18 passes for 182 yards and two touchdowns. The Orange defense held Vanderbilt to just 10 points, with punter Jeff Brothers accounting for all of Vanderbilt’s points on a field goal and two extra points.

Syracuse’s strong performance was led by the offensive line, which played a crucial role in establishing a strong running game. The Orange rushing yards amounted to 249, with a season-high 363 total yards.

The Orange defense was equally impressive, forcing four turnovers and limiting Vanderbilt to just 212 yards of total offense. Syracuse’s defense also recorded a sack and five tackles for losses, contributing to the team’s victory.

Overall, the Orange offense and defense worked well together, demonstrating a well-rounded performance. The team’s strong showing in their first game of the season set a positive tone for the upcoming season.

Line gets game ball

Offensive line has coming out party, blocks out Vanderbilt, ineptness

Auburn, Ala. — The offensive line was clearly the star of the game, as they were honored with a game ball for their strong performance.

The offensive line, led by senior tackle Paul Pasqualoni, played an outstanding game, opening holes and protecting the quarterback. They were also able to keep the line of scrimmage intact, allowing the running backs to gain yards easily.

The line’s strong showing was evident in the second quarter, when they helped pave the way for a 21-yard touchdown run by running back Rob Carpenter. This touchdown helped put the game out of reach for the Commodores.

After the game, the offensive line was celebrated with a special ceremony. They were presented with a game ball, signifying their role in the team’s victory.

The line’s strong showing was evident in the second quarter, when they helped pave the way for a 21-yard touchdown run by running back Rob Carpenter. This touchdown helped put the game out of reach for the Commodores.

After the game, the offensive line was celebrated with a special ceremony. They were presented with a game ball, signifying their role in the team’s victory.

good runs," Rooks said. "The second quarter we started to shut them down... (In) the third quarter, we shut them out."

Rooks also said Vanderbilt's loss of its All-SEC center, Kevin Brothen, with 4:48 remaining in the first half, helped shift momentum.

A holding penalty on the initial second half drive left the Commodores with a 3rd-and-17 from their own 13-yard line.

Wingback Anthony Carter gained the first down on a 24-yard reception to the Vandy 37-yard line.

Then he ran into a truck in the guise of Orange corner back Greg Walker. Walker popped Carter, forcing a fumble. SU safety Tony Montemorra scooped up the loose ball and scampered 37 yards for the touchdown with 3:29 left in the third quarter.

"I saw the ball and said, 'Just pick it up and go, let's go,'" Montemorra said. "Greg Walker blasted that receiver and made it all happen. Oh, God, that hit was unbelievable.

"There was some great downfield blocking, and as I got close, I knew there would be some guys mad at me if I didn't score."

After the defense caused another Vanderbilt turnover, a fumble on the Commodores' next possession, Ismail raced down the left sideline on a reverse for a 31-yard touchdown.

Syracuse closed out the scoring on a 1-yard Al Wooten run late in the third quarter, and a 37-yard Biskup field goal early in the fourth quarter.

Vanderbilt coach Gerry DiNardo said the combination of a poor effort by the Commodores in the second half and the Orangemen's explosiveness cost his team the game.

"We didn't play well enough in the second half to win," DiNardo said. "But how Syracuse played has something to do with the outcome, too."

The nearest fire alarm and pull it.
I make no excuses. The test date was clearly printed right on the syllabus, which was given to me the first day of class. There is no excuse, I really am that stupid.

So let’s all do ourselves a favor. Don’t just use your syllabi to write down your friends’ new phone numbers. Look at those syllabi, know when your tests are, study ahead of time, and be prepared. But if not, at least be sure to sit next to the fire alarm.

“Take responsibility for your own education,” he told the students.

Students have to want to learn, he said. They have to demand prompt feedback from their teachers, ask their teachers to teach them, he said. Coplin said students will make their professors better teachers by challenging their ideas.

He also encouraged the listeners to better their relationships with classmates. “Students don’t work together to learn; they compete against each other,” he said.

Coplin said through forming study groups, students can discuss papers and share ideas. He said that students should work together to improve their departments.

Coplin also encouraged dissatisfied students to take action.

He suggested talking to the professors themselves primarily and then going through the appropriate channels.

He said that both sides are to be blamed for the lack of communication between professors and students.

“If you allow this isolation to get worse,” he said.

“You will actually learn better if you enter into a partnership with your professors,” he said.

Rape's menace still looms over women

By JODI LAMAGNA

Erin Neff was raped the summer before her junior year in high school. She was 15 years old.

The following is her account of the incident.

"I lived with my grandparents. They both had jobs so I was unsupervised a lot of the time. My friends and I used to hang out on the beach. There was this one guy—Todd. He was best friends with my boyfriend, Bill, at the time. He was really nice looking. Athletic, had a good body.

"One day he came to my house and said Bill had gone out and to come over to his house. He drove to the end of the main road on the island and parked behind some sand dunes.

"He started to grab my arms and to touch me and kiss me. Then he climbed on top of me and I started screaming. So he put me in a chokehold and raped me on the front seat of his car.

"I finally pushed him off and started to run. He followed me and I turned around and punched him. Finally he backed off.

"I ran for five miles back to my grandmother's house and cried for days. I didn't tell anyone. I thought I looked guilty for not being there. And if I told my parents, they'd pull me back home, which is where I didn't want to be.

"I didn't know what to do. I hated all men. I hated almost everyone. I didn't date any guys for a long time—until I got to college.

"I found the best friend about the rape during the next few months. We were all out for the first time in years, she called me up and told me about the rape.

"I remember my mom came in the room crying. I said, 'Oh my god, have you told your parents? I want you to tell me everything.' I told her the whole story and she was just brilliant. She helped me, and it was a long journey, to take me to court.

"There were six months later, though. She looked really bad, a counselor. We decided I didn't have a case. There was no physical evidence six months after the fact. It would be my word against his.

"He kept calling me for a couple of months after he raped me. He'd ask me how I was or if I wanted him to come over. He said he had fun when we were together.

"I'm better now. Some things still remind me of the rape. Sometimes if someone comes up behind me and puts his hands on my neck or if I'm in a dangerous situation and surf and shore remind me of it. It brings back that memory.

"I have a box at home of things from that summer—pictures of my friends, concert tickets, stuff like that. It's my Pandora's box. I open that up and—\n
Erin closed her eyes and sighed.

One out of every six women will be raped.

Ninety percent of those women will be raped by an acquaintance or a friend.

The New York state definition of rape is "forceful penetration, specifically anal, oral or vaginal."

The term rape is broken up into stranger and non-stranger, according to Joan Gibson, director of the R.A.P.E. (Rape: Advocacy, Prevention and Education) Center.

A person you meet at a bar and talk to for an hour does fall into the category of non-stranger. But there are varying degrees of non-stranger, she said.

Unfortunately, acquaintance and date rape are used interchangeably, Gibson said. "People think 'That wasn't date rape. I wasn't on a date.' Date rape is one very specific category of acquaintance rape."

Gibson said as soon as people start talking about stranger/non-stranger, date and acquaintance rape, they focus on the acquaintance part and not the rape part.

"Someone actually told me once, 'Well, at least she knew the person.' And I said, 'Are you telling me that if you were raped by your best friend, there would be less pain and hurt involved than if you were raped by a stranger?' And he said, 'Oh no. There'd be more.'

"Well, it's the same thing," Gibson said. "There's more pain and hurt involved when (the rape) is by someone you know, someone with whom there's some level of trust.

"So the term 'acquaintance' softens the term rape," she asked almost in disbelief. "The reality is the exact opposite. It's more emotionally devastating."

Societal attitudes tend to be more sympathetic toward victims of stranger rapes, Gibson said.

"There's a difference in public empathy for the victim in the Central Park jogger case than for the victim of a stranger rape," she said. "No one asks, 'Was the jogger doing anything to attract the rapist?' There's much more blame (put on the victim in the Central Park case).

Anonymity, the male or the female, has the right to stop at any point—the right to want to engage in foreplay and not have intercourse, Gibson said.

"And somehow, in society, we say that once you begin down the sexual behavior continuum, you're more to blame if you get raped."

"This is scary thinking. It's all-or-nothing thinking," she said. "So if you kiss someone, you're more likely to be raped."

According to Gibson, there is a trend of moving away from blaming the victim. She said victims who come forward are finding more support among people they know.

"There's a personal connection," she said. "People are more aware and more supportive. There's progress there."

But on a non-personal level, it's easy to say a victim would have done that. Why did she?

"We defend our own vulnerability by saying we never would have done what (the person who was raped) did," she said.

Gibson said part of that reaction is one's own self-defense—the that-would-never-happen-to-me defense.

"This was six months later, though. The person who was raped, Gibson said. "The progress is on an individual level, with victims coming forward and bringing people they know supportive of them."

Communication is key

Once a person is in a potentially dangerous situation, it's hard to employ any form of self-defense, Gibson said.

The prevention occurs in what leads up to the situation. "It's the communication that leads up to the situation," she said.

Sending as clear a message as possible where you are by the intersection helps both parties to realize what's happening, she said.

"It would help if both could be clear so the other party is not so surprised. Are they going to stop if they want to have intercourse, no matter what the other party wants?" she said.

"This is scary thinking. It's all-or-nothing thinking."

NYTEL activates
new percentage-based late penalty

By ERIC GRODE
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

People who fail to pay their New York Telephone bills on time will pay for their negligence — literally. Since April, people guilty of late payments have had to pay a 1.5 percent late fee each month.

The new system is designed to cut down on rate increases and to regain the money lost by warning repeat offenders, according to New York Telephone spokesman Cliff Lee.

Lee said almost one-third of New York Telephone's 9.2 million customers are late every month with their payments.

While it is too early to gauge the impact of the new system, Lee predicts that customers will spend $7.9 million on the late fee in the first year alone.

The late payment system has affected corporate customers since 1984. This past April, the Public Service Commission suggested a similar increase for residential customers, and New York Telephone agreed.

Lee stressed that customers would be given ample opportunity to pay their bills before the late charge is imposed.

Customers will receive a 21-day grace period after their payment is due. In addition, New York Telephone will issue a warning the first time the payment is missed.

Are students prompt?

Elise Angiolillo, director of telecommunications at Syracuse University, says she feels this new fee will not drastically affect SU students.

"Our students have traditionally paid ... fairly promptly, and I don't foresee any problem in the future," said Angiolillo in a telephone interview.

"If (the late fee) encourages students to pay on time, then it is doing what it should," she said.

Almost half of the SU students contacted in an informal poll said they were late in paying their phone bills on time at least once last year.

Penalties among those polled ranged from what was referred to as "a friendly reminder" to threats of legal action.

The recipient of the latter message was Kyle Poquette, president of the cinema branch of University Union.

Poquette said he received three warnings from New York Telephone before he paid his bill, but he never paid any late fee.

New York Telephone had been one of the last major utilities in New York not to impose a late fee.

According to Lee, the late fee policy would have resulted in a $33 million increase in revenues had it been imposed last year.

New York Telephone made significant changes in SU students' phone capabilities in 1989 with the adoption of the DECCS (Digital Education Centrex Communication Service).

Japanese teas, origami workshops and cultural dinners help Asian students at Syracuse University feel less isolated, according to SU senior Winnie Chan, a member of Asian Students In America (ASIA).

In addition to breaking cultural barriers, ASIA aims to educate and promote awareness about Asian heritage, Chan said.

"I had a couple of friends that knew about ASIA," she said. "For the first year, I wasn't active, but in my second year, I was an officer in the organization."

Students of all races should participate in ASIA's events because it gives them the opportunity to experience Asian culture, said Shirley Chin, president of ASIA. She said she wants to point out that there are Chinese, Filipino, Sri Lankan, Indian and Pakistani members.

Fighting rages between South African sects

Violence continued in South Africa this weekend as 42 people were killed and 50 injured in fighting between black opposition political groups. Johannesburg police are still waiting for someone to claim responsibility for Sunday's massacre at an Inkata Freedom Party rally.

Guns were opened fire on the crowd of about 300 people, killing 23 and wounding 18 others.

Johannesburg has been the site of recent fighting between the Inkata party and its rival, the African National Congress.

Following the rally, 13 people were killed when a grenade was thrown into the black township of Soweto.

The attacks set off a rash of violence for someone to claim responsibility for the Inkata party.

Catholic sect ordains woman

A black woman was ordained into the priesthood Tuesday in a splinter sect of the Catholic church.

The African-American Catholic Congregation blends traditions of worship that include African drums and gospel singing.

Roman Catholic officials said last week that there were no signs that the new church had caused any major shift in the Vatican's stance on ordaining African priests.

Harvard offers course to Soviet officers

Twenty-five military officers who have learned to wage war the communist way are taking a crash course to learn how any army operates in a democracy.

The two-week course is being offered at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government. It will cover such topics as the lessons of the Vietnam War to how the United States plans its defense in the 1990s.

Roof fire halts ferry service

A fire destroyed the roof of the Whitehall terminal of the Staten Island Ferry in lower Manhattan early Sunday morning.

Asbestos and chunks of ceiling showered down on workers and commuters. At least 20 people were injured.

The fire disrupted ferry service for several hours. Boats now depart from the Coast Guard terminal next door.

The incident is the second in three weeks to hit the city's beleaguered transit system. On Aug. 28, five people were killed and 200 injured when an express train derailed under Union Square.

Montana fugitive arrested in Elbridge

Police arrested an Elbridge man Sunday who escaped from Montana's only state prison in April.

Rickey J. Thorpe, 23, was serving four years for burglary at the Montana Correctional Facility in Deer Lodge.

Thorpe was living in an area called the dairy dorm, a minimum-security area where 40 inmates work on a dairy farm. There was no fence.

Thorpe was reported missing on April 23. He is being held without bail until extradition.

Man reports cards stolen six months later

A Syracuse man reported his credit cards stolen Saturday six months after he claims he was robbed.

Mayer J. Rothman, 36, told police he kept quiet because he feared that the robbers would come back.

Rothman canceled his cards recently after $2,200 in cash advances was stolen.

History program spurs students and professors

A new program at the University of Georgia's Franklin College of Arts and Sciences will offer faculty members teaching introductory freshmen courses some departments upset.

The plan, to be completed by fall 1992, was started by John Kosak, dean of the school, to improve the college's academic standards. Kosak said in a memo in 1989 that full professors in the sciences do not have the time or resources to teach courses.

Some members of the history department were worried increased class size would lead to lack of student participation and apathy.

“The word ‘history’ comes from the Greek word meaning ‘to interpret,’” said Linda Hollander, a history professor. “There needs to be discussion and this can’t be accomplished in a large lecture class,” she said.

The trend toward larger history survey courses is a matter of economics, not choice, Kosak said.

History professor James Alexander said the college treats the humanities as though they are pure sciences that do not need discussion and if the policy continues, some professors will be confronted with “vast zoos” instead of students they know by name.

Kosak said he has already provided new faculty members to several departments, including history, to aid in the necessary adjustments.

English professor Coburn Freer said that his department made little change at least in the senior English professors has always taught some freshman survey courses.

Wednesday will be partly sunny and pleasant with highs about 70. The clouds that brought the rain Tuesday will give way to clearer skies today. Cooler temperatures will roll in tonight and into the weekend.

Thursday

After Wednesday's breezy weather, Thursday will clear up even more. Expect partly sunny skies with temperatures in the low to mid 70s.

ASIA has about 300 members, Chin said. Members volunteer to help organize ASIA’s cultural events during the group’s meetings.

The group’s officers function “to get together, call performers, get members active ... and help the members get to know each other,” she said.

Organizing events

Chin said ASIA is trying a difficult time trying to organize events and involve members. “If (members) have any problems they can come to the officers,” she said.

Later this month, ASIA plans to sponsor a Moon Festival, which celebrates an Asian holiday that honors the moon, Chin said. The group is trying to find performers for the festival, she said.

Chin said ASIA also plans to make this year’s ASIA’s Annual Awareness Week successful. Chin said last year, the organization held a Japanese tea ceremony and offered a workshop on the art of origami.

Another ASIA-sponsored event for all students is a cultural dinner.

Chin said ASIA also tries to work with and involve other student organizations, such as the Student African-American Society and the International Student Group.

Holden Observatory makes room for Maxwell

Landmark moves without incident during summer

By KAREN A. TESTA
Staff Writer

Something monumental happened to the Syracuse University campus this summer.

SU's second-oldest building, a national landmark which stood the test of time for more than a century as a city and university developed rapidly around it, was lifted up and taken away.

But the movers didn't get too far. Holden Observatory, built in 1887, was moved 190 feet to its southwest, making way for the expansion of the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs.

The observatory, home to the SU Soling Program and a favorite spot for local stargazers, now sits atop the hill at Irving Avenue, between the College of Law library and Crouse College.

There was no stargazing from the observatory this summer as the telescope was overhauled during the move.

Project Manager Joe Bello said the move, which took two days, came off without a glitch.

"It went into place without any complications," he said, "it's in its final spot."

A new foundation was set and the building was set in place.

The total cost of the move and related repairs and landscaping was $200,000, according to Virginia Denton, the director of Design and Construction.

Holden Observatory was built in 1887 in memory of Charles Demerest Holden, an 1883 graduate of SU who died of a heart ailment, according to Mary L. Brien, assistant to the archivist at the SU Arens Library. His father, Erastus Holden, was a local coal dealer and the first vice president of the SU Board of Trustees. He donated the funds for the observatory and set up a $25,000 endowment to help maintain the building.

Architect Archimedes Russell designed the building to be made from Onondaga limestone. Russell also designed the old Syracuse police station on Willow Street and the Tolley Administration Building on the SU campus, Brien said.

The only other observatory of this kind in the area is at the Syracuse Astronomical Society in Vespar, N.Y.

Your student fee at the movies.
Fees require caution

New York Telephone is reaching out to touch more than just friends and family. They're reaching for customers' wallets as well.

The New York Telephone Company will be charging clients late fees. One of the last long distance companies to do so, New York Telephone is issuing a warning to offenders who do not pay their bills. Since April, the company has been tacking on an additional 1.5 percent late fee on top of regular charges.

Students may be particularly vulnerable to neglecting payments since many do not have steady jobs and may suffer from the credit card syndrome — where paying bills is put off because there is no penalty or real cash exchange involved.

The late fees are designed to catch people who do not pay bills on time. Students often fall into this category. Like a credit card, no additional charges are imposed until the minimum payment is not made on time.

Approximately one-third of all 9.2 million customers are likely to pay with their payments, which denotes an untapped income of $7.9 million for New York Telephone.

Students should be aware of traps like late fees and do their best to avoid them, which may mean returning to an ancient form of communication — letter writing.

Stupid people must be deported

Hello. My name is Barry — and I am prejudiced.

I came to the conclusion that The Daily Orange editorial staff had gone too far. Under this piece of legislation, the government would send a message conveyed by the T-shirt. It is a valid purpose.

My prejudicial attitudes transcend those boundaries — these people can be found in every corner of the universe. I despise stupid people.

Thus, I propose the SPDA (Stupid People Deportation Act) of 1991. Under this piece of legislation, the government would send a message to everyone involved. The questionnaire would contain the most basic sort of questions, such as “What job does Dan Quayle hold?” The people would then score.

You simply cannot deny the benefits my proposal would create. The tremendous burden stupid people create for the economy would be eliminated. Employers would no longer waste trillions of dollars training mental vacuums. There would be more competition among the remaining intelligent people. This would create a nation with higher expectations and accomplishments.

There would be a greater total happiness in a stupid-people-free society. As long as we have been catering to the lowest common denominator, why change that?

I encourage everyone who agrees with me to join in my campaign. Make it known to others that you have no tolerance for stupidity either. Maybe we could start an advocacy group on campus or something.

Academic freedom should prevail

To the editor:

I write this letter in the hope that it may make some light on the Alpha Chi Rho gay-bashing T-shirt issue. You yourself, many others, I think, would like to see an end to this event.

It is quite understandable that members of the Lesbian and Gay Graduate Collective and the Graduate student body have reacted in such an extreme manner. However, whatever the legitimate issues may be, the ultimate legitimacy of the-shirt and those who are speaking their minds or voicing their moral opinions is likely to erode them because of the obvious injustice.

And this is the reason why students, for the most part, continue to grow in mind and spirit. Academic freedom should never be jeopardized because of political purposes.

The university, if nothing else, is a marketplace of ideas. This is the atmosphere where theories are introduced, hypotheses are issues debated. If students cease to voice their opinions and introduce their ideas because of the fear of offending others, there will be no intellectual growth. And the university will no longer have a valid purpose.

The problem with the position that LGGC takes, as stated in The Daily Orange on Sept. 5, is that it does not request that a debate session or conference be convened where the legitimate issues will be debated. The group demands that the university must punish those responsible for the shirts.

Of course such a measure will not change the opinions of those who will wear the shirts and believe in the message. Punishing these students for speaking their minds or voicing their moral opinions is likely to enrage them because of the obvious injustice.

Their minds will not be opened any further. They may develop a greater degree of anger or think that the shirts symbolize the "fighting words" and narrow their horizons. But the students are a sign there may be hope for academic freedom and its immeasurable benefits.

GSO urges involvement

To the editor:

I suggest a study between your students and a few mealy hours of socializing snatched here and there, sleep has become a precious commodity.

Why in the world should you try to squeeze yet another activity, namely getting involved in your student government, into your overtaxed schedule?

My last identified reason, because it is your student government. Without your voice, others will decide how your student activity fee will be allocated.

Without your input, others will articulate what they perceive to be your views when addressing the administration. Will your wishes indeed be considered?

The odds increase dramatically if your academic unit (department) is actively represented in the Graduate Student Senate and all the "at large" seats.

The more participants we have, the greater the diversity within the senate, and the more likely the will of the entire graduate community will be incorporated into the programs and policies of the Graduate Student Organization, as well as those of the university.

There are, of course, even more self-serving reasons to take ten nights out of the next year and serve on the Senate. The better the university is, the more your degree is worth. It is also a chance to meet students outside your own department. Not only will this enrich your social life, but it's a great way to enhance your networking scheme. You're also in for some lively debate and plenty of free refreshments (beer, soda and a cornucopia of munchies).

So, naturally, you're prompted to ask me, "Joe, how do I go about taking on a job of this fantastic opportunity to serve my fellow students while I'm serving myself?" The answer is actually quite simple. Ask the fine folks in your department chair's office if your academic vest is vacant. If it is, tell them you intend to fill it.

On Sept. 12, come to our organizational meeting on Sept. 12 anyway and tell the curley-haired guy with facial hair packing up and down the aisle between the floor and the gallery that you want a seat on the senate and aren't about to take "no" for an answer.

He'll plerably rub his hands and enthusiastically nominate you for an "at large" senate seat.

In addition to the senate seats, we will also be filling several other positions that you may fit for your participation. You can tell by this meager offering that we desperately need an editor for this rag. We're even willing to pay the lucky candidate $1,000 to turn out a few of these.

We will also be selecting three people to sit on the Board of Graduate Studies and two people to represent the rest of us on the Inn Complete Board of Directors.

So I'll see you on Sept. 12 at 7 p.m. in Maxwell Auditorium. After the meeting you can hold your head high and tell the whiners and complainers, "You had your chance and I took it."

ACORD organizes forums

By KEN ALDRICH
Contributing Writer

Action through Creativity, Organization, Research and Discussion (ACORD) has been dedicated to organizing forums on the "cutting edge" of Syracuse University for more than five years, said Aimee Achorn, ACORD's executive coordinator.

ACORD was formed in 1985 by graduate student George S. George to bring professionals from various fields to SU to discuss subjects and see how viewpoints differ.

Achorn said the group brings people on the "cutting edge" of their fields to SU for "a forum for discussion across disciplines." These are "generally people you've never heard of before," she said.

In general, the speakers will discuss a specific topic before the audience for approximately 10 minutes. The floor is then open to audience members to speak and ask panelists questions, Achorn said. Sometimes panelists ask audience members questions, she added.

"These discussions are open to the public and are usually free."

"A smaller UI"

"We're like a smaller University Union," Achorn said. University Union's promotion board annually brings high-profile speakers to campus.

Last year ACORD held a forum in which professors from S.U. Newhouse School of Public Communication and the School of Architecture discussed how art relates to television, movies and video.

The group receives funding from the Student Government Association and has requested $2,900 this year. The group is looking into grants and will be applying for contingency funds this year. The group went over budget due to clerical errors last year.

Achorn said that "money is a bit scarce this year.

Last year the group lost the majority of its members due to graduation.

"We're working with a skeleton staff," she said. The group currently has five members, and is looking for new members.

Keeping it going

According to Achorn, ACORD is in the "process of being restructured." This includes enacting its new constitution, drafted last year. "We are going to remain an undergraduate and graduate organization," she said.

ACORD will hold a general interest meeting later in September to discuss membership and projects.

Achorn said anyone interested in the organization should contact her at 475-7055 or leave a message in the group's mailbox in Room 1260 of the Schine Student Center.

Radio is on the air, in the air

Live radio will be available to passengers on commercial airlines beginning in April when USA Today Sky Radio begins broadcasting in April.

The service will offer news, business, sports and radio reports updated every half-hour.

Its estimated that $20 million to $30 million in advertising revenues will be generated within two years.

This is USA Today's second attempt at branching out from its newspaper operation into mass media outlets. The first attempt was the syndicated USA Today: The Television Show which was canceled after a year.

Slow economy stunts salary growth

According to a survey by the College Placement Center, starting salaries barely kept pace with inflation this year.

The center surveyed 450 college placement offices and found increases in 75 percent of 71 fields and decades in 10 fields, half of which are in liberal arts.

Foreign language, political science, psychology, social science and arts majors were among the majors who were offered a lower starting salary this year than last year.

The top earners were petroleum engineers, whose pay rose 10.5 percent from last September. Salary increases were also seen in other parts of the engineering field and in the health care field.

Iacocca drives away from Chrysler

Chairman and chief executive of the Chrysler Corporation Lee A. Iacocca will retire at the end of 1995.

The 67-year-old Iacocca has faced growing pressure from Chrysler's directors to end speculation about his future with the company.

Iacocca became well-known for saving Chrysler from the brink of financial disaster and for appearing in television commercials for Chrysler cars and trucks.

Domino's readies ad campaign

Domino's Pizza is fighting a battle with Pizza Hut for the pizza delivery market and will soon add a new weapon to the fray: a new ad campaign.

Domino's will debut its new ads Sept. 13, featuring close-ups of gooey cheese and pepperoni pizzas prepared with loving care by Domino's employees for a smiling family.

Despite being known for its speed, Domino's has not enjoyed a reputation for great-tasting pizza. The company hopes this new advertising strategy will sway consumer perceptions.

Domino's is reportedly spending $50 million on the campaign in an effort to combat Pizza Hut's recently fierce comparative ads.

Alumnus achieves rank in ARCO

George Babikian leads corporation despite grades

By ERIC GRODE
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

Syracuse University students are generally given a specific impression of alumni, especially those who are recognized by the school for their achievements.

These alumni are often portrayed as hardworking, top-notch students who went straight to the top after graduating.

Meet George Babikian, one of the most highly respected alumni in the country, a 1953 graduate of the SU School of Management.

"I never was much of a student," said Babikian, who received the School's Alumnus of the Year Award this past June.

His only extra-curricular involvement was with Sigma Chi fraternity. He said Syracuse supplied "a lot of good times and a lot of good memories," but he received sub-par grades.

Babikian was born in Fulton, about 30 minutes from Syracuse, and after serving during World War II, decided to go to college on the GI Bill.

But before attending Syracuse, Babikian went to Sampson College, in Geneva, which the government set up to accommodate the influx of soldiers.

The Korean War intervened before he could graduate, and it wasn't until 1953 that he finally received his bachelor's degree from the School of Management.

A fateful project

Babikian then began his graduate work at SU, which was cut short by a fateful assignment. As part of a project, he was asked to critique a local company.

The company he chose, the Atlantic Refining Co., was impressed with his work, and Babikian was hired to critique the company's sales program.

From there, he moved into marketing and began advancing in the company, renamed the Atlantic Richmond Co. (ARCO).

He headed ARCO's marketing department from 1978 until 1985, when he was named president of the ARCO Products Co. and a senior vice president of the ARCO Corp.

ARCO is one of 14 American companies that make more than $2 billion in profit annually.

Despite all his personal successes, however, Babikian strongly feels that

College students should worry less about furthering their careers and more about enjoying themselves.
Enjoy those college days
When asked if he had any advice for his children —his daughter graduated from the SU School of Management in 1978 — he responded: "I simply told them I wanted them to graduate from college. Period. What was more important to me was that they enjoy what they do.
And while his GPA may indicate otherwise, Babikian says he owes a lot to SU.
"Syracuse did a great deal for me," said Babikian. "and I'm grateful and beholden to Syracuse for it."
Although his office is in Los Angeles, he travels to SU several times a year. The last time was in June, when he accepted the Alumnus of the Year award.
He and his wife, Mary Ann, are both active in alumni groups, and both he and ARCO are financial supporters of the university.
As president of ARCO Products, the gasoline refining and marketing division of the ARCO Corp., Babikian has helped implement many changes during the last 36 years, including:
• the conversion of several gas stations to AM/PM Mini Markets, a strategy that several other oil companies later copied;
• the creation of a new low-emission gas designed to cut down on air pollution;
• the elimination of the ARCO credit card.
Recently, he masterminded ARCO's strategy to freeze prices on gasoline during the beginning of the Persian Gulf conflict.
This strategy resulted in jumps in ARCO's market share and sales volume.

Webster’s alters for ’90s

By MIKE DAVIS
Contributing Writer

Most people believe dictionaries define words, but in reality they do much more than that. Sometimes they can define an entire culture.

Early this May, Random House published The Random House Webster’s College Dictionary, which has stirred up more publicity than any other in recent years for several reasons.

The dictionary has 20,000 more words than the nearest competitor. Also, it has added more than 400 new words and definitions.

“It’s the first dictionary of the 1990s,” said assistant publisher Jack Hornor. “It is the new definition of dictionary.”

Random House, with the use of a new database system created from The Random House Dictionary of English Language: Second Edition, Unabridged, was able to update the dictionary until mid-February.

For example, the dictionary offers an alternative spelling for the word “womyn.” It suggests that the word “womyn” would be more appropriate and less sexist.

“This is not a revision, but instead it is a brand new dictionary,” Hornor said. Many words that were included came from everyday sources such as newspapers, magazines and television commercials, Hornor said.

Also, the changing of definitions often considered sexist has received much publicity.

The dictionary is separated from its competitors in several ways, Hornor said. First, the most common definition of a word is listed at the beginning of an entry.

Although it has fewer illustrations than some of its competitors, Random House’s illustrations show the intricate details of medical diagrams, animal species and geographical maps.

A new edition is already in the works and is expected to arrive in about three years.

Hornor said the dictionary offers “a larger and more sophisticated vocabulary than the student, business person and general user is likely to encounter.”

“Random House Webster’s College Dictionary is the single most important reference book for anyone’s library,” Hornor said. “It is the most comprehensive, up-to-date, accessible, reader-friendly dictionary in the world.”
TAs bring diversity, experience to classroom

"Teaching assistants are an integral part of the American undergraduate experience, according to Professor Dan Waterman, chairman of the mathematics department. About 800 graduate students are employed by Syracuse University to work in teaching-related capacities for up to 20 hours a week, according to Leo Lambert, director of the teaching assistant program. "SU is recognized nationally for its TA program," he said.

"Many foreign TAs want to be teachers and have had teaching experience in their own countries," he said.

"A goal of the TA program is to work towards no communication barriers campus-wide," Tice said.

The Onondaga County Child Care Council announces its fall session for training family day care providers. The 10-week session will begin on Sept. 24 and run through Nov. 26. Topics include parent/provider communication, health and safety, operation and management, record-keeping and taxes, child development, abuse and maltreatment and children's play.

The free training will be at Andrews Memorial United Methodist Church in North Syracuse from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Free child care is available on the premises, and a certificate will be awarded upon completion of the course. The training, for new and experienced providers, will help to fulfill the 15-hour requirement mandated by the new Family Day Care Registration System. For further information and pre-registration, call 472-6919.

Previoulsy, if the ball was snapped over the punter's head and went to get it he could be hit as any other player.
Under the new rule, however, once he retrieved the ball and was protected by the normal kicker-roughing rule.
"It didn't look real pretty," Pasqualoni said. "But, by the interpretation of the rule Jo Jo did the right thing. I don't know what we did wrong. We didn't have any turnover starter.
"I thought Andrew looked good," Pasqualoni said. "The things that Andrew has to master are the little techniques of the position. He's learning those tings and doing very well. He's a quick learner."

A tail of two backs
The Orangemen, who had fierce competition in preseason for the starting tailback spot, showed many formations in the backfield to highlight their depth.
David Walker started at tailback with Al Wooten at fullback.
Several times the Orangemen pulled Wooten and brought reserve tailback Terry Richardson into the backfield.

Walker ran the ball 10 times for a net of 51 yards. Richardson had five carries for 29 yards.
In long distance situations,
Walker moved to fullback and Richardson to tailback, or Richardson moved onto the line of scrimmage with Walker in a single back set.
"We were pleased with it," Pasqualoni said. "It's something we practiced during the pre-season. When the down and distance situation arises, we would like to have both (Walker and Richardson) in the game."
Syracuse took advantage of the single setback situation on its last drive in the first half.
In the two minute offense,
Richardson lined up on the line and leapt for a 22-yard pass from Graves over the middle which set up a 40-yard John Biskup field goal.

Not so Marvelous start
SU quarterback Marvin
Graves certainly did not begin his season like he ended last year.

Graves, who accounted for all four touchdowns in last season's Aloha Bowl, threw two interceptions and fumbled the ball to the Commodores.
Early in the game, some of Graves' passes were overthrown, but Pasqualoni attributed it to a new football.
"I'm not making excuses for Graves at all," Pasqualoni said.
"But the first thing I thought was, he's probably using a new ball and maybe we haven't worked with a new ball and maybe it was a little slippery."

After the slow start, Graves finished with 211 yards passing, completing 11 of 18 attempts.

"I just think it was the first game," Pasqualoni said. "It's still only in his second year and we have to have some patience and give him some time to grow as a player."

Times change
The Orangemen will go from one extreme to the other in terms of kick-off time, for this Saturday's showdown with the University of Maryland.

After playing a noon game last weekend at the Carrier Dome, they will play a 7 p.m. game outdoors this Saturday at Byrd Stadium in College Park, Md.
Syracuse will attempt to get acclimated to the nighttime schedule sometime later in the week,
Pasqualoni said.
"There is nothing that we can do early in the week," Pasqualoni said. "It's more adjustments in our schedule as we go to the end of the week and what we do on Saturday."

Pasqualoni said he hoped to have Friday's practice at 7 p.m.
to simulate game conditions.

Stefan stuffs Courier

The surprisingly silky smooth sensational Swede Stefan Edberg destroyed Jim Courier on Sunday to win his first-ever U.S. Open championship. Edberg, who has now won five Grand Slam events, hammered the mad-hatter 6-3, 6-4, 6-0.

Courier beat Edberg in the quarterfinals of the French Open earlier this year.

Lost in the shuffle of Jimmy Connors' magical ride to the semifinals was Monica Seles winning her third major title of the year by beating Martina Navratilova.

Seles passed on the opportunity to win the Grand Slam when she skipped Wimbledon for unknown reasons. And there were many possibilities to choose from.

Sometimes all you hear about are the Florida Staters, Michiganans and USC's of the world.

Because the In Sports section is such a diverse arena of sports knowledge, here are a few scores you might not have read with your Sunday morning Wheaties and Gatorade (so you can be just like Mike).

NE Oklahoma 39, Langston 6

Youngstown State 24, Eastern Kentucky 23

Baseball update

The New York Mets continue to drift into oblivion as the Atlanta Braves (hey, they're in a race) beat them 7-6 on Sunday.

Atlanta's Tom Glavine helped solidify his Cy Young chances with his 16th win, tops in the National League.

On Saturday, Frank Viola continued his miserable slide (surprising, seeing as how he's an ex-Twin) and fell to 12-14.

Frankie V becomes a free agent at the end of the year, and his market value isn't going up. The Cubs' Shawon Dunston is also having a miserable pre-free agent year.

The Royals' Danny Tartabull, on the other hand, has at least doubled his market value with a .350 batting average and 30 home runs and no injuries. We also hope the value of his rookie card will increase.

The Seattle Mariners' push for their first-ever winning season was dealt a serious blow this weekend in Boston. Seattle got hammered three straight.

The Mariners are now 68-69 and floundering. They're even tied with California for last place in the AL West. Ouch.

The Atlantic Coast Conference is traditionally a haven for top ranked teams. Duke and North Carolina State are the highest ranked teams on SU's schedule.

The rest of SU's opponents aren't cupcakes or pushovers, but they're not in the class of the ACC elite, either.

"The ACC is on a different level," Foti said. "It's a different atmosphere. Now we have to see if we can match that when we play against some of the teams on our schedule."

The Orange men will begin digging into the rest of the schedule on Wednesday night when they host Colgate at 7:30 p.m. in the Carrier Dome.

Both N.C. State and Duke finished the Eighth Annual Metropolitan Life Soccer Classic with a 2-0 record.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Staff Reports

Evening Mac's record at 1-1.

"I couldn't ask for a better effort," Foti said. "If we work that hard every game, we're going to be a real good team at the end of the season."

The Packers gobbled up the Packers 23-14; past the Chiefs 17-10; the Lions past the Eagles 26-10; the Bears pirated a win from Tampa Bay 21-20: New Orleans rose past the Chiefs 17-10; the Cowboys past the Eagles 26-10; the Raiders bucked the Broncos 16-13; the 49ers struck gold against the Falcons 20-19; the Vikings grounded the Falcons 20-19; the Dolphins squished the Colts 17-6; and the Oilers spilled points all over the Bengals 30-7.

If it got any more corny, it would be like getting stuck in a 5-acre field in the middle of Des Moines, don't you think?
Syracuse: be wary of Terps

Some deep thoughts unearthed while dreaming of the Florida State road trip.

- The Atlanta Braves will not win the National League West crown.
- To be sure, Syracuse is not ready to be ranked in the top 10. But this weekend it found out what it will take to get there.
- "The Orangemen lost a pair of games, their first two of the season — this weekend at Durham, N.C., and were shutout each time."
- When Maryland doesn't have the first down the field is not as weak as many people think.
- Maybe, though, they looked so good because Vandy was so bad. It's still too early to tell.

SU linebacker Glen Young is going to have a monster season. After a year and a half of knee rehab, he will not be dented. He is the type of defender that hits harder than Thor's hammer. Look for Young to steal some of Dan Conley's spotlight.

"It is me or is SU's Marvin Graves the spitting image of Jerry Tar darder than Thor's hammer. Look for him to be the 1000 wrap up big games.

New coach keeps old ties

By JOSH BARNETT

Paul Pasqualoni may be the new head coach of the Syracuse University football team, but in his first game Saturday, he didn't forget his roots.

Pasqualoni, a former linebacker and former SU linebacker coach, said he was keeping an eye on the group he used to work with.

"I was watching them to make sure they were doing what they were supposed to do," Pasqualoni said. "I kept an eye on them. They're fun kids to watch."

Body by Conley

After the game, Conley looked as if he were limping, but Pasqualoni said not to worry.

"Danny limps around every game," he said. "He throws himself around so much that I don't know how he's not beat up and bumpted and bruised. You'll see that every week."

Among Conley's 11 tackles were two solo. Conley was also credited with a pass breakup.

SU players suspended

Before Saturday's game, the Orangemen announced the suspension of wide receiver Terry Self and defensive back Tony Jones for two games. Pasqualoni issued the suspensions because the players violated team rules, according to a press release.

The pair was charged with the theft of a student's property over the summer and were charged with three felony counts.

They were also found guilty of violating the student code of conduct by the university's judicial board.

Block, but don't touch

Vanderbilt University's first possession on Saturday ended with one of the strangest punts you're likely to see this year.

The ball was originally snapped over Wooden's head. He retrieved the ball near the goal line and then passed it over the outstretched arms of Wooden.

The Orangemen had a return on it and it was Wooden's job to eliminate the possibility of a fake punt.

Due to a new rule interpretation, Wooden had no choice but to attempt to block the kick instead of tackling Law-
Ces helps students make career plans

By SHEILA DOUGHERTY Contributing Writer

Students who have no answer for the question "What do you want to be when you grow up?" should go to Career Exploration Services, according to Joe Cicala, CES director.

CES assists Syracuse University undergraduates. The College of Arts and Sciences choose majors and explore career possibilities, Cicala said.

"In so many places, helping students prepare for and secure employment as an obligation of the university," Cicala said. "So that's seen as the province of the schools and colleges."

Students in the College of Arts and Sciences need more guidance in choosing a major because their courses are not specialized, Cicala said. "We have the least vocationally specific curricula," he said. "It's incumbent upon us to have a good, solid, comprehensive set of services to help our students."

Counselings programs

CES offers individual counseling for students to assist them in selecting a program of study, Cicala said.

SU senior Laura Cabbage said CES helped her choose psychology as her major.

"I didn't realize I wanted to do that," she said. "It's a great program that's available for students. It's free and it's very, very helpful." CES also offers group counseling sessions that help undecided undergraduates focus their interests, Cicala said.

"Students can work together with other students in a group of five to 10, with the leader, over a four-week period," he said. "(Students) go through a kind of a microcosm of the exploration process."

SU junior Michal Nissenbaum said she benefited from the group counseling session.

"Having other students that are your same age and in your same situation helped because they understood what you were going through, because they were going through it themselves," she said.

Playing for perfection

Shawn Daly, graduate student in piano performance, rehearses to do that, she said. "We're in an evolution in medicine," Rodgers said. "It's in so many places," she said. "We've learned what chemicals do to your body."

Doctors often fail to look for environmental or nutritional causes and simply prescribe drugs to mask symptoms, she said.

"We give them another chemical," she said. "These drugs further weaken the body's detoxification system, Rodgers said. "Detoxification can only occur when the body has enough vitamins, Rodgers said.

"For example, the drug prescribed to patients with cardiac disease causes magnesium loss which may cause heart muscle spasms, Rogers said.

Heart patients are told to eat corn oil and margarine but the body cannot metabolize chemicals in these substances, she said.

"If you do one thing, don't have another thing with margarine for as long as you live," she said.

"Because I look so young, it has been easier for me to participate in 5 events and fit in like a student," she said. "You're forced to do that." Rodgers said that doctors and healthcare workers are becoming aware of environmental illness. "We're in an evolution in medicine," she said. "We've learned what chemicals do to your body."

Her speech was sponsored by the Sierra Club.

Toxins may cause environmental disease

By JOANNE KARPE Staff Writer

Many diseases once thought incurable can now be treated by diet or living conditions, said Dr. Sherry Rogers, author of Tired or Toxic.

Rogers spoke to an audience of 50 people in Marshall Auditorium about environmental illness on Monday night.

"Toxic chemicals in the environment can cause environmental illness can be found in homes and offices," she said.

"These are everywhere, we're exposed to them everyday," she said.

Contaminants, for example, are found in carpets, dry cleaning solution, toothpaste, shampoo and home insulation, she said.

"We're adding chemicals to our environment. We're chemicals to our utmost advantage," she said.

"It's in so many places," she said. "Everything that is in the air is in our bloodstream."

A breath analysis of urban New Jersey residents showed their exhaled air contained carcinogens, toluene, chloromethane, benzene and styrene, Rogers said. These chemicals cause environmental illness, she said.

"The body is unable to metabolize these chemicals, she said. Indeed, they are deposited in arteries and body cells. The most common target organ for environmental illness is the brain, Rogers said. Symptoms include headaches, fatigue, depression, burning eyes and poor memory, she said.

"I can be any symptom, it depends on the individual person," she said.

"Formaldehyde in carpeting, vinyl flooring and bathroom floor can cause genetic mutations which can result in cancer," she said.

"Chemical sensitivity is how well the body detoxifies," Rogers said. "Detoxification can only occur when the body has enough vitamins, Rogers said.

"The average American diet lacks many vitamins and minerals," she said. For example, 67 percent of Americans have zinc deficiencies, she said. "Zinc and mineral deficiencies alone can mimic any disease, she said.

New director adds charisma to greek life

By ERIKA MANTZ Staff Writer

If you met 25-year-old Mariam Taft at a fraternity party or on Marshall Street, you would think she was just another Syracuse University student.

But she's not. Taft is the new director for greek life.

"Because I look so young, it has been easier for me to participate in 5 events and fit in like a student," she said. "You're forced to do that."

"I want to them to know I'm here for you, but I won't be a babysitter. Accountability is one of my biggest things."

With membership in a fraternity or sorority comes responsibility, Taft said. She said she wants to get more people involved, instead of having just a few members from each housekarri."

Education on rape and alcohol abuse are two of the things Taft said she wants to see for all members of the greek system.

"Equal responsibility for men and women is very important," she said.

Gorbachev says no more persecution

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said in a speech at a human rights conference that dissidents will no longer be persecuted and that the Soviet Union would respect human rights.

Gorbachev gave the keynote address at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The conference's first order of business was to admit Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia as full members, making it the first international organization to recognize the independent Baltic states.

The Senate's Foreign Relations Committee voted 12 to 11 against the lease.

The U.S. military is in the process of abandoning Clark Air Base, the other major U.S. military base in the Philippines, after it was covered with ash from the eruption of Mount Pinatubo in June.

Americans undecided about Judge Thomas

About two-thirds of the American people have no opinion on whether the Senate should vote to confirm Clarence Thomas as a justice of the Supreme Court, a New York Times/CBS News poll shows.

Of the respondents who had an opinion, twice as many say Thomas should be confirmed as say he should be rejected.

Thomas, who is black and has been opposed by most civil rights organizations, also receives about equal support and opposition from both whites and blacks.

He is supported by 23 percent of the blacks and opposed by 15 percent. Among whites, 41 percent favored confirmation and 10 percent did not.

Factions clash in South African violence

Black factional violence raged again in Johannesburg when gangs with knives and guns attacked commuters on trains and buses, officials said.

The attacks raised the three-day death toll to at least 92.

The fighting comes before the scheduled signing Saturday of a peace pact to end fighting between black groups.

Since 1986, the fighting between people linked to the Inkatha Freedom Party and members of the African National Congress has claimed 6,000 lives.

NYC subway stations to play music

New York City transit officials are considering playing recorded music in the subway system.

Officials said that they will survey commuters in the coming months to determine what kind of music would be played and whether the broadcasts would play in the entire system.

The music would only be played in the stations, not in the cars.

Three stations have already experimented with music. At Columbus Circle, songs by Paul Simon were played on the opening day of his Central Park concert last month.

Wizard of Oz theme park planned

Two local entrepreneurs plan to build a $250-million Wizard of Oz theme park in Chittenango.

The village is the birthplace of Oz author L. Frank Baum.

The complex would feature a resort area, theater complex and an Oz museum.

One of the developers, Charles Goldsmith, of Oneida, said the project should break ground this spring.

"We don't want to interrupt anybody's lives," he said.

State officials announced that the "I Love New York" television ads will return to some markets this fall after they were pulled in March due to budget constraints.

The Department of Economic Development saw their tourism budget cut $3 million from the $6.78 million that was spent last year.

Kahn will speak on "Culture and Community: The Roots of Power" at 3 p.m. in the Walker Lecture Hall of the College of Law and will be featured in a student-produced film.

Concert general admission is $15; $10 for students and alumni of the School of Social Work and College of Law; and $5 for children under 12. Tickets can be purchased at the door.

Scholarships awarded for part-time study

Dolores J. Fay, of Nedrow and Kathleen J. Underwood of Skaneateles, have been selected as 1991 recipients of the Levi J. Smith scholarship award for part-time study at SU. The grant pays $1,386 for six credits of study for each student.

The two were selected because of their dedication and commitment to public or social service as reflected in their outstanding academic record and community involvement.

Fay is a senior in the School of Education, and Underwood is a sophomore in the College of Arts and Sciences.
The appearance of fliers last semester that accused a fraternity of gang rape sparked a controversy that pitted members of the Greek system against student advocacy groups.

The fliers read "Phi Delta Theta Gang Rapes...We Know What You’ve Done." The flier, designed to look like a party invitation, named the fraternity’s rush chairman and gave the address of the fraternity.

"We will find out who it was" and said he was unable to discuss the situation further.

"I want something perfectly clear," Bresnahan said. "No rape occurred at this house. The fliers have absolutely no credibility at all."

"Obviously, there have been some rumors circulating around campus about the house," he said.

The fraternity was given disciplinary probations for the unauthorized behavior that supported "a climate where persons are likely to be abused," according to a statement from a press conference held on behalf of the administration on April 26. The statement was signed by Dean of Student Affairs Edward J. Golden.

"Confidential by nature" and "open" response to the recent University Judicial Board decision, Chang said she was threatened with expulsion and was told this could become a federal case.

"Since I wanted the truth, I decided to stop questioning me, I signed an affidavit saying I knew nothing about the fliers," she said.

Chang said Nushwat and Karpinko later admitted that she was with the fraternity, but we were not involved with the actions of an entire group.

"They asked me if I had ever been involved with a group that posted fliers accusing Phi Delta Theta of gang rape."

"The offense was not your responsibility," Golden said. "The university to assure that the values of our community are understood and preserved."

"I believe you've been suspended because you violated the Code of Student Conduct. However, the offense was not your responsibility," Golden said. "The university to assure that the values of our community are understood and preserved."

"I believe you've been suspended because you violated the Code of Student Conduct. However, the offense was not your responsibility," Golden said. "The university to assure that the values of our community are understood and preserved."

In that interest, I have decided to relieve groups that are responsible for the "poster" incident and the sanction that would have accompanied it for the reasons outlined above.

Within our community, the University Judicial Board, composed solely of students, has the responsibility to determine when our community standards have been violated and when sanctions should be imposed. In finding that you violated the Code of Student Conduct, the sanctions they are imposing are appropriate.

As Vice President for Student Affairs and Dean of Students, I have a broader role to fulfill within the university to assure that the values of our community are understood and preserved. You have violated the Code of Student Conduct, and the sanctions that have been imposed are appropriate.

In this case a fraternity and an individual have been "unfairly labeled as 'gang rapists.'" The values that are protected by the Code of Student Conduct have been violated, and the sanctions that have been imposed are appropriate.

I am free from any further role in this issue, and it is my understanding that you are free to retain the assistance of your counsel for the remainder of the process.

Sincerely,
Edward J. Golden

but he feared the SU community would misinterpret the incident if he did not remove Chang's punishment.
However, Chang said she is not content with Golden's decision. She also said the affair is far from over and that the issue is not one of free speech.

"Officially, on the record, I'm still guilty," Chang said. "I say I did the wrong thing. That's not true. I did the right thing — the only thing that was available.
(Chang) purposefully says it's an issue of free speech because he doesn't want to deal with the issue of rape.

Chang called the judicial board hearing an "absolute farce.
"They were there to find me guilty," Chang said. "I had requested there be no Greeks on the board, and there were two.

Questioning the board
"The greek system protects its own," she said. "The trial was supposed to be unbiased.
Chang also said the board would not allow the gang rape issue to be raised during the trial.

"There's no sanctions, yet I'm guilty," Chang said. "They missed the point about rape on campus.
Free speech is only used when it benefits the oppressor, Chang said.
"This is not the gag," Chang said. "I don't intend to be quiet about marginalized oppressed groups.
"We're not going to let the university or fraternities walk all over us," she said. "This isn't anywhere near over.

Bloodthirsty bill kills

As time wears on, George Bush uniquely titles himself the "incapacitation president."

Bush does more than get tough on crime in his bill, which passed 71-26 in the Senate in July and now awaits House approval, he literally kills it.

This extremist bill introduces about 50 new execution bills in which instruct switch-throwers to systematically kill those who kill. This bill is undemocratic, and is an attempt to rid society of what Bush perceives to be social waste products — poor people and blacks, who are disproportionately slated for punishment by death for similar crimes.

Aside from being classist and racist, the bill, if enacted, would likely be ineffective. The murder rate in the 12 states employing the death penalty between 1978 and 1986. But effectiveness probably isn't a priority.

Instead of solving the crime problem, Bush titles his program to the point of mass-scale murder. This is interesting legislation coming from a pro-lifer.

Bush even includes a subtle plan to ameliorate the prison overcrowding problem. The bill we pretend to put a sudden stop to the more than 2,400 convicts currently on death row. Federal courts overrule a sudden number of exeantees because the general public is dead. Speeding up the execution process would prevent such corrections.

Of course, without a taste of hypocrisy, this bill couldn't bear Bush's name. Mr. mortality himself has the gall to include a provision making it an accounting. It's disgusting, it think nuclear weapons or poisonous gas against Americans. We'd much rather kill ourselves.

Surveys bias poll appearances

Did you know that "Twenty-two percent of women like the way they look nude, while 68 percent of naked men are pleased with their appearance?" These statistics, compiled by Dolnick, appeared in an article "Is Nature a Bigott?", appearing in the Aug. 18 Syracuse Herald-American. Well, I am impressed by what must have been a serious and exhausting job of interviewing every man and woman who has access to a mirror such that these unnamed researchers could verify this conclusion.

ADVOCATING COMMUNICATING

Though I'd imagine most of us realize such general statements obviously can't refer to an entire population, the fact that statistics we hear or read do not specify, the tendency is to assume that the figures are relevant to at least a significant fraction of that general population. Among statistics that refer to percentages of people who might fall into broad, unspecific categories such as "men" and "women" undoubtedly lead unless men and women reading these studies think of themselves in those categories. Never mind that many, if not most, statistical studies examine relatively small numbers of subjects. Two hundred people, as an arbitrary example, isn't much of a representative sample for a population of more than 200 million, and are often limited to a relatively small geographical region — people living in New York State, for example, may indeed be influenced by different cultures, climates, nutrition, etc. than those in Florida, or Mexico, or Haiti.

Furthermore, these studies are frequently not confirmed by follow-up studies of the same subjects. How do we know that Dolnick's cited study at all consulted a "random" selection of those categories. Never mind that many, if not most, statistical studies examine relatively small numbers of subjects. Two hundred people, as an arbitrary example, isn't much of a representative sample for a population of more than 200 million, and are often limited to a relatively small geographical region — people living in New York State, for example, may indeed be influenced by different cultures, climates, nutrition, etc. than those in Florida, or Mexico, or Haiti.

In regards to being "caught" wearing leather at protests, a majority of our active members have tried or succeeded at abstaining from the purchase or consumption of animal- derived products. Regardless, those of us who own animal-derived products (i.e. leather) continue to wear them because throwing them away would only waste a life that is already spent.

To avoid the issue, those being protested against often attack the protesters based merely on attire. It is for this reason we are conscious of our dress — it is certainly not for fear of being "caught." S.U.F.A.R. looks forward to a productive and informative year of educating the SU community. We also look forward to a year of good relations with The Daily Orange.

Networks go back to the basics

By ROB OWEN
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

A new television season is once again upon us, and the four television networks are readying their new series for the air. History has proved that most will likely flop. Only a precious few may be graced with another season. After experimenting with unusual new shows last fall (Twin Peaks, The Flat Rock, Hull High, etc.) and seeing them nose-dive in the ratings, the networks are sticking with the tried and true. Sitcoms, adventure/hour and reality programs populate the network schedules.

But some acclaimed programs remain on the air. Northern Exposure returns after a successful summer run of repeats. The Trials of Rosie O'Neill is again in session, Law and Order: back with some cast changes and Dinosaur will continue exploring the tribulations of prehistoric blue-collar life.

ABC

Tim Allen stars in Home Improvement.

Carol Burnett returns to CBS in The Carol Burnett show.

Lenny Kravitz may be having an identity crisis, but he has a hit on his hands with "It Ain't Over Till It's Over." (accompanied by an open tuned Steel guitar) A la Allman Brothers. His lyrics sound country, with a white-trash edge: "Brother running powder money/ Daddy's somewhere on a drunk/in the hours after washing/ I do my dreaming/ about the road." Otherwise, he's continually pulling tricks, carving from ominous Southern rock ("Make The Dirt Stick") to the soul-stirring gospel harmonizing of "Big Day, 5 p.m." Vocally, he rivals Bono or Chris Rea.

CBS

Red Fox returns to television as patriarch of The Royal Family. (Wednesday, 8:00 p.m.) He's an Atlanta mailman who retires to live in peace with his wife, played by Della Reese. Their tranquility is shot when their daughter and her three grandchildren move back home. A black music teacher is laid off from a Philadelphia public school and gets a job at a white high school. (Wednesday, 8:30 p.m.)

Lenny Kravitz exhibits wide musical range

Lenny Kravitz Mama Said

This hip hybrid pitches another retro-rock effort into the pop music arena with Mama Said. This, his second record, is refreshing in its symbolism. He is not a Tracey Chapman one-record wonder—he's got staying power.

Ranging from the funkadelic “Stop Draggin’ Around” to the lulling pop ballad “It Ain’t Over” to “It’s Over,” Kravitz plays the stud and the sap, creating vocal patterns suitable to both roles.

Kratz, at this point in his career, experienced an identity crisis of the best sort, as his androgynous attitude and performance prowess make him a cross between Janis Joplin, John Lennon and Jimi Hendrix. His criss, though amusing, does bog down his music, as in the psychedelic mire of "Fisals of Joy," but he still manages to keep it listenable.

“All I Ever Wanted,” the album’s stand-out track, recalls “Let Love Rule” with its tortured integrity (Sean Ono Lennon on piano and Slash on guitar). The song’s vocals begin breathy and deteriorate parallel to the depicted relationship, buoyed by a strong song structure.

Krantz takes on all persons, ranging from lounge lizard in “What Are You Coming Around” to a Beattle-esque hymn-ologist in “The Difference Is Why.”

Kratz is offering it to satisfy current standards, Kravitz delivers one of the most promising records of the year.

Chris Whitley: Living With The Law

Though this record is Whitley’s first, this bluesy outsider proves he’s adept at taking the best of existing genres and creating his own.

Whitley’s constants are meaty bass and a heavy dose of Southern guitars.
Squeeze: Play

I'd suggest they quit instead. These aged angst-spewers deliver banal blah. The music is too clean, too melodic and too contrived.

The band still grapples with issues of infidelity and self-doubt but without emotion strong enough to keep listeners awake, let alone engaged.

Play is set up as a play, probably because listeners wouldn't know what to feel without instructions. The concept album is better left to The Kinks, or best left in the 99-cent record bin.

The catchiest tune on the record is a self-rip-off of "Hourglass," which speaks volumes about the band's sense of songwriting on this album.

If you're looking for Squeeze's typical up-tempo summertime music with amusing lyrics, look farther back in this band's catalog.

Violent Femmes: Why Do Birds Sing?

This band of sub-garage rockers poses an interesting question in their record title. And they unwittingly provide an answer: The birds really don't want you to listen to this album.

The Femmes used to be funny, edgy and entertaining. Now those moments are few and far between. It's a sad commentary when the highlight of a record is a marginally improved version of Culture Club's "Do You Really Want To Hurt Me?"

This predictable album proves mediocre in every respect and provides a logical regression from Violent Femmes III, which was a logical regression from the album before that, and the album before that, etc.

Simply put, a compilation of all the good songs from their past three records would produce a side and a half of worthwhile tunes.

The novelty has worn off, and fans who dug their first couple of records are unhappy. But, to put it in Femmes terms, "This is only a guess."

This Ain't No Disco is published every Wednesday in the Lifestyle department of The Daily Orange.

This season, the goalposts have been narrowed to 23 feet, 4 inches to the NFL dimensions of 18-6.
Biskup said he hasn’t thought about the change but just continues to kick as if no changes were made.
“I tried not to even think about it and have that in the back of my mind,” Biskup said.
“Hey, these goalposts are closer in. You’ve got to put the kick here. I go out there with the same approach. If you worry about that, you’re not going to be successful.”
The new goalposts have made the shorter kicks more difficult because the angle is cut more steeply.
Biskup said each season he changes how he prepares on the sidelines prior to attempting a field goal.
Last season he waited until the ball got to midfield before he would start warming up, but with so many reps his leg would be tired by the fourth quarter.
“I wait until the ball gets around the 35-yard line,” Biskup said. “I just start doing some warmup kicks and simulating being on the field. In my mind envisioning the snap coming, (holder Mark) McDonald putting the ball down and me kicking it.”
Syracuse coach Paul Pasqualoni said one of the reasons Biskup is so successful is because of his conditioning and work ethic.
Biskup kicks on Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays and does drills on Tuesday and Wednesday.
“He works hard everyday and he stays on schedule as far as what he’s supposed to do,” Pasqualoni said. “I think you saw the results of that (Saturday).”
Biskup has had his ups and downs during his Syracuse career.
As a redshirt freshman, Biskup extended the NCAA record for consecutive PATs to 202 before missing one against Temple.
On the other end of the spectrum, Biskup won the 1989 Peach Bowl for the Orangemen with a 26-yard field goal with only 10 seconds remaining.
“The Peach Bowl still sticks in my mind. I go out there with the same approach. If you worry through my mind, that also helps.”

Patton on the all-tournament team.
"Debbie's play was just outstanding," Schulte said. "She was a force on defense and with her passing. She did all the little things to help us get back into it and go on to win."

SU continued the pattern of losing their opening game in Saturday's match versus intra-state rival Hofstra. However, the Orangewomen again settled down to win the next three games and the match.

The Orangewomen seemed to finally hit on all cylinders in the weekend's closing match with the Cavaliers, dominating Virginia for SU's first sweep of the season.

"Overall I was very happy with the way we played over the weekend," Schulte said. "We definitely improved over our first tournament's performance. I think the best thing that is happening is we seem to be developing more depth. More and more of our athletes seem to be stepping up doing the job."

"I think we all played great," Patton said. "The SW Missouri game was our toughest this season, but we pulled ourselves together and won. This year's team has great spirit and chemistry to go along with talent."

We are definitely improving."

While team chemistry is an overused phrase in team sports, both Schulte and Patton feel that it is what has made this year's Orangewomen team successful.

"There is no doubt that this year's team has jelled better than those in recent years," Schulte said. "What this team lacks in talent it makes up for in chemistry and hustle."

"I wouldn't say that this team lacks the talent to compete with anyone," Patton said. "But we are getting along better than any other time I've been here. The attitude of the team has been great and that along with our talent will hopefully get us to the NCAA's."
Drop in enrollment to force cutbacks

By LAKSHMI SINGH
Staff Writer

A projected, 20-percent drop in students at Syracuse University over the next four years will force the university to make major reductions, Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw said yesterday.

Shaw, addressing the University Senate, said steps on to be university will take to cut $28 million from its annual $452 million budget over the next two to four years.

"We have before us a fiscal challenge of major proportions," he said at the senate's first meeting of the year in Soltkin Auditorium.

"The challenge is born of many things — most outside our immediate control," he said, citing a nationwide decline in prospective college students, coupled with the downturn in the economy.

He said that the university will have to depend on its own plan.

"State funds are being reduced," he said. "The largest single item is the support we have received from the Bundy program."

"(They) provided a cash award based on the number of graduates each year.

"Fewer students, less money."

SU lost about $2.3 million this year due to decreased enrollment.

"To date, budget cuts totaling $9.5 million have been made in schools, colleges and academic support units."

"This was done incrementally and without salary increases," he said.

"We cannot allow this approach to become the pattern for dealing with the challenge at hand." See USA Today Page 3

Greek Council finds AXP guilty but will not punish

In the complaints, McDonald charged that the homophobic sentiments expressed on the shirts were a violation of Section 2 of the Code of Student Conduct. The administrative complaint initially led to an investigation by the Alpha Chi Rho national fraternity and the expulsion of 18 brothers from the fraternity.

National directive

Action required by the national chapter Boards of Directors. However, the national director of the chapter's training program, 100 hours of community service and visits to the homes of a national representative each month.

The house will also be reviewed by the national chapter every semester for two years.

"We always like to have more happen," said GLBSA Treasurer Bill Thomas after the hearing. "But we're very pleased. We think this is a wonderful first step on campus by the Greek Council.

The board recommended that the sensitivity training be extended to the entire Inter-Fraternal Council, but otherwise said that no further sanctions were needed.

However, IFC promised a full investigation of the chapter's conduct and any further charges of harassment or other incidents.

The decision reached Tuesday night conflicts with conclusions reached by the Syracuse University administration. The administration ruled that the shirts did not violate the Code of Conduct.

"We the Greek Judicial Board, Chief Justice Chris Licht said the university administration should have taken a stronger stance on the issue.

Annoyed with SU

"I'm annoyed that the university was afraid to take any position on this," Licht said. See SHIRT Page 3

The following is the official statement issued by the Greek Judicial Board in response to the complaint filed against the Alpha Chi Rho fraternity:

"We, the Greek Judicial Board, find Alpha Chi Rho guilty of violating the Code of Student Conduct Section Two as it relates to the Greek community as a whole. We feel the steps taken by the Alpha Chi Rho national fraternity are appropriate and contribute to a positive direction of change."

"We believe that the university could have taken a more active role in resolving this issue, because it extends well beyond the Greek community. We hope that the university community, including faculty, administration, and students, will join the Greek community in the resolution of this campus-encapsulating issue.

Students plan restoration project

Students in Professor Frank Morigi's advanced interior design class are not only learning the skills needed to pass the class, but are also helping in the restoration of some of the area's historical buildings.

Morigi said he is approached each year by many area preservation groups seeking students for their buildings, which will be chosen as the class's restoration project.

The class have won two major national design awards for restoration plans and in 1986, they received an award for a design on a turn-of-the-century firehouse, he said.

The dilapidated Memorial Chapel in Oakwood Cemetery was the focus of the class's spring semester project, he said.

Morigi said the Heritage Coalition and other preservation groups called on him ask the students' designs help secure funding necessary for the chapel's restoration.

"The class researched the 112-year-old chapel and designed plans to restore and renovate it, he said.

Built before the highway

"The chapel was built by Joseph Lyman, who served as the entrance to the front cemetery until it was closed off when Route 81 was built. The chapel is visible from the highway.

"The chapel was in very poor condition because it was being appropriated by the derelict, homeless," Morigi said. "The woodwork was torn apart and used for firewood.

"Students proposed several ideas for the chapel and the historic cemetery which would allow people to be present at all times and prevent any future vandalism," Morigi said.

"The chapel could house the offices of area preservation groups and could also serve as a museum with pictures displaying the history of Syracuse and city buildings," Morigi said.

"Other ideas were to turn the chapel into a community center with lectures, theatricals, music and concerts taking place there," he said.

Morigi also mentioned planting gardens and conducting walking tours of the historic cemetery and park. He said there was also the possibility of having wedding ceremonies in the park.

"This is not just a cemetery — it is a monument to the history of the city," he said. See OAKWOOD Page 6

The Daily Orange
The Daily Orange is Syracuse University's independent student-run newspaper published Monday through Friday.

The newspaper is distributed free on the Syracuse University and SUNY Environmental Science and Forestry campuses.

The editors are available after 3 p.m. Sunday through Thursday.
“Charlie was very pleased with what the national was doing,” Stefanko said. “We didn’t expect anything else (as punishment).” Stefanko said the brothers are concentrating on re-educating themselves about women, homosexuals and minorities. “We have to sponsor a sensitivity program with IFC and the Panhellenic Association,” he said. “That will work out well.” Stefanko said that though the brothers living in the house this semester were not responsible for the T-shirts, they realize they have to take responsibility.

“We feel slightly wronged,” Stefanko said. “But we will take moral responsibility (for the T-shirts).”

This will be an information dissemination and discussion period, he said. The university community will have an opportunity for formal input, he said.

Details on this phase will be released Sept. 16.

The second phase will run from Dec. 10 through Jan. 15. During this period, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Ger- shon Vincow will meet with academic, administrative and student sources, and take recommendations.

The third phase will be announced on Jan. 30, followed by the chancellor’s official plan. Information about the phases will be released by SU News Services.

On Monday, a report by former Chancellor Melvin A. Eggert’s ad hoc committee will be released. The report assesses the university’s schools and colleges.

Stefanko said the brothers living in the house this semester were not responsible for the T-shirts, they realize they have to take responsibility.

Edward J. Golden said on Aug. 26 that the shirts did not violate the code because they did not present a “clear and present danger” to a particular group or individual. AXP President Jeff Stefanko said he was pleased with the outcome of the hearing.

“Focus resources”

“We must focus our resources on our highest priority activities,” Shaw said.

There will be a period of “grieving,” he said, as programs are cut back and the university will take advantage of retiring staff.

During his senate address, he outlined several goals to reshape the university: more selective resource allocation to student programs; evaluation of SU would be limited to the criteria of quality, centrality and demand and more emphasis on areas with strong student interest.

“This is both good educational policy and good business,” Shaw added.

Shaw also stressed support for research and graduate education. “We will carefully scrutinize expenditures in these areas,” he said. Shaw explained three phases leading to a final plan.

“The first two phases will provide the campus community with opportunities for full discussion of the issues and the plans for addressing them,” he said. Phase one will begin Sept. 11 and end Nov. 15.

By this time next year, 32 Kappa Sigma brothers will have a new place to call home. Plans are underway for construction of a chapter house on Walnut Place between East Adams and Harrison streets.

The fraternity brothers are excited about the new house, which is the first to have been built on campus since the Lambda Chi Alpha house was constructed two years ago.

“It’s great that it’s (the construction) finally going to happen, and I wish some of the guys who were here in the past could share it with us,” said senior Frank C. Nickodemus, a Kappa Sigma brother. “This is due partly to their hard work.”

The three-story, Georgian brick house will feature front and rear porches. The property will also have a garden and parking spaces.

The interior will include a library, which will also serve as a meeting room, a study lounge and a recreation room in addition to rooms for the brothers.

Construction of the house was financed by alumni fundraising and contributions.

Support from national “Strong support and determination from the national headquarters and alumni were critical in making the house a reality,” said Steve Gharibtan, Kappa Sigma’s rush chairman.

The SU chapter was originally established in 1906, and was rechartered in 1989. Currently, the fraternity is using a house on Euclid Avenue as its post on campus, although only six brothers live there permanently.

The chief architects of the project are SU graduates. Current chapter brothers assisted David Chase and Chris Sappura-Grant, of Chase Architectural Associates Professional, in the house’s design. Chase is also an alumnus of Kappa Sigma.

As one of the largest national fraternities, Kappa Sigma has more than 210 chapters and its alumni list includes Yankee manager Stump Merrill, actor Robert Redford and news anchor Sam Donaldson.

The Kappa Sigma brothers are enthusiastic about continuing to play an active role in SU’s greek community from their new vantage point on “fraternity row.”

“We’ve worked hard in the past, and will continue to work just as hard in the future to become the best fraternity on campus,” said sophomore brother Vincent Surwilo. “With the prospect of getting a new house on campus, there’s no telling what the future will hold.”

SU: Tightening its belt

Syracuse University is shrinking. During a University Senate meeting last night, Chancellor Kenneth Shaw unveiled plans designed to prepare administration officials, students and faculty for a four-year budget reduction that would be shared equally among all university constituents. This reduces the need for cuts in student services, dining and health services as well as bookstore allotments.

Cuts in these areas, which are particularly weak already, will affect SU students in a negative way. The food in dining halls already leaves much to be desired. Residence halls are a mess. More cuts would only impede their ability to keep bathrooms clean and the halls swept. The bookstore charges exorbitant prices now; cuts in financial support will surely make these students more financially burdened.

And all students know how long it takes to get their temperatures checked at the Health Center. Losing little competence it now has may give students high blood pressure.

Chancellor Shaw should deeply consider whether these are the right areas to cut at the university. If we tighten the university’s belt too much, we may squeeze all the good from it.

Who would have thought...

Many events have occurred recently that nobody, not even the most optimistic, could have predicted.

Who would have ever thought that the United States would participate in a war during our lifetime?

Who would have ever envisioned that Russia, democracy would defeat a Communist country? Did she really think that Ron Paul would have such impact? Chuck Woolery would have their own talk show? The world is going to hell.

Who would ever have predicted that former Chancellor Melvin Eggers would retire from Syracuse University? (Did this have any relation with the fall of communism globally?)

Who could begin to believe that SU spent $100,000 to buy a home in DeWitt for Melvin and his wife Mildred? What does that mean for our world? Will there be more wars? Will it be in fashion to be caught masturbating? Will Nipsey Russell take over as the next owner of the new Multiversity Fuel House, renovations to Bishop Library and a new traffic pattern for the students?

Who could have foreseen that the familiar term for feminism would have an alternate spelling, “womyn,” which is suggested in the newest edition of Random House Webster’s Dictionary?—addition to Manley Field $182,500 to buy a home in DeWitt for Melvin Edwards, who has received the invaluable gift of the Multiversity Fuel House, renovations to Bishop Library and a new traffic pattern for the students.

ATTACK THEORIES, NOT INDIVIDUALS

To the editor:

This letter is in response to Gerald T. Edwards’ letter entitled “Academic freedom should prevail,” which appeared in the Sept. 10 edition of The Daily Orange.

Edwards opposes punishment by the university of Alpha Chi Rho fraternity members responsible for the gay-bashing T-shirts. He writes “Homophobic and proud of it.” He defends Edwards’ “moral opinions” in this response to the “demands of LGCC for intellectual and social conformity in an extreme sense.”

The validity of Edwards’ argument lies in his advocacy of academic freedom and intellectual growth. However, his application of these principles to the AXP gay-bashing issue is historically invalid. Intellectual growth does not result in the majority demonizing andMarginalizing a minority that poses no threat to the well-being of any persons.

Allow me to draw an exaggerated comparison. Substitute Nazis for AXP and “Anti-Semitic and proud of it, club Jews not seuls.” Some would argue that this statement is no longer racist. However, it is clear that the individual who wrote this statement is ignorant of the history of the Great Depression and the consequences of his actions. In a democracy, the individual in question has the right to express his opinions, unless his actions lead to the inconvenience of others.

A constructive alternative for those wishing to oppose a club or express expression is to attack the ideology behind the group and the thinking that opposes homophobia is to attack the ideology behind the group and the thinking that opposes homophobia.

On one hand, he says students and professors should communicate more. Then he says that becoming friendly with professors is “grading up” and “destruction.

He is stereotyping all the students who develop relationships with professors as “brown-nosers.”

I believe that relating directly with a professor enhances a student’s education to a great deal. If this results in a better grade, then I think it is because the student has gained a better understanding of the course through the relationship.

In addition, Caplin says grades cause students to compete against each other instead of working together. While I believe it is very important for students to cooperate toward a common goal, competition can often bring out the very best in a student. Sometimes students get results that would not have been achieved without the push of competition.

Ultimately, the competition is a fact of life in the real world; why should it be any different at the university?

Good grades can give students a much-needed edge at such a large university, both in applying to graduate school and in the job market. In times of economic recession, academic institutions have the responsibility to find ways to enhance students’ education. They are held responsible for enhancing a student’s education, which is enhanced by cooperative learning with peers and professors.

I agree that if you are not getting the best grades, you may still be getting a good education. I do not think the opposite is true.

I think professor Caplin needs to rethink his theory and the message he is sending to students.

The Syracuse University College for Human Development (CHD) is introducing a revamped and "innovative" Human Ecology course this year, according to Susan Crockett, the college's dean.

The course is mandatory for the 190 freshmen in CHD and is designed to help the college retain student enrollment and aid in student advising, Crockett said.

It is "a completely different course" than last year's Human Ecology course, she said.

Assistant Vice Chancellor for Instructional Development Robert Diamond said, "It's a significant change from what freshmen courses have looked like."

A poll conducted last year of freshmen and faculty asked how the program could be improved. These suggestions were taken into account in the new designs.

The course was designed by a CHD task force with help from the Center for Instructional Development.

During the design, Crockett said members of the task force asked themselves, "What would be the best course we could design for freshmen?"

Lectures and labs

The new course will be made up of two parts: lectures and laboratories.

The lectures will be given by a variety of speakers, Crockett said. Some of the lectures will address leisure time for college students, intimacy, decision making, consumer policy, child, family and social policy and balancing multiple roles.

In labs, students will meet with professors in smaller groups to discuss the course's specific subjects.

These labs are meant to get students working in smaller groups. Each lab will be taught by a different professor, Crockett said.

This is to expose the student to different learning and teaching styles, she said.

A random selection of students will be asked to evaluate each lecture throughout the year.
Discovery should fly tonight

The launching of the Discovery, scheduled for tonight at Cape Canaveral, Fla., should take place as long as the weather cooperates. NASA predicts a 70 percent chance of favorable weather at the 6:07 p.m. liftoff, according to Air Force forecaster Ed Prisleac.

If the weather should take a turn for the worse, the launching can be safely delayed to 9:54 p.m. The odds of this are currently projected at 80 percent.

Water intoxication rises sharply

A new study shows that a potentially fatal condition known as water intoxication has risen significantly among infants. According to the study, ingesting a large amount of water in a short period of time can flood brain cells and cause them to swell.

This swelling can rupture the cells and eventually lead to death. Infants who are not breast-fed, especially those in poor families, are at particular risk. A common cause of water intoxication occurs when poor parents give babies water after they run out of formula.

Hybrid trees yield ethanol

A new breed of poplar trees may be a vital source of ethanol, an environmentally friendly alternative to gasoline, by the turn of the century.

Researchers are developing a strain of quick-growing poplars, one of which could yield 800 gallons of ethanol. Under ideal conditions, these trees grow faster than any in the world’s northern temperate zone.

Ethanol, which is made from renewable materials, produces fewer carcinogenic radon gas and carbon dioxides. It also reduces waste materials and gasoline and therefore reduces air pollution.

The main disadvantage is the prohibitively high price.

Reports warn of unhealthy school air

Two new reports paint a disturbing picture of the country’s public schools.

A survey conducted by the American Lung Association of 26 schools showed such hazards as high levels of caregiving agents, nitrogen gas and carbon dioxide.

The latter is a sign of stagnant air, which is conducive to the spreading of germs like chicken pox and meningitis.

The U.S. Public Interest Research Group released a study saying nearly half the art products used in schools lack required warnings about chemicals contained in them.

The American Academy of Dermatology has concluded that 80 percent of the harm caused by overexposure to the sun happens during the first 15 minutes of exposure.

FEAR

According to Briggs, students can prevent test anxiety by avoiding procrastination and excessive use of alcohol or caffeine.

"Most importantly, give yourself a chance to overcome your anxiety," Briggs said.

The Fear Clinic and the Alternative Behavioral Institute began sponsoring the first Phobics Anonymous in Central New York in August.

In addition, Briggs suggests keeping a positive frame of mind and accepting the anxiety while staying focused on the task at hand.

Skiers who are out on the slopes all day always have a good chance of getting sunburn so they should wear sunblock on areas exposed to the sun, such as the face.

"As a rule of thumb, the sunblock should be at least 15 (have a sun protection factor, or SPF, of 15 or more)," she said.

People should also avoid tanning salons, according to Camp. Past research has shown ultraviolet B rays are used in tanning salons as well.

Safe tans are possible

However, the receptionist at Diamond Life Tanning Salons said the light is carefully controlled in the salon, making it safe.

Weekly fest provides forum for fresh food

Each Tuesday from May to October, the parking lot on the corner of S. Salina and Washington streets is transformed into a cultural and season display of hard work and pride at the annual Farmer's Market.

Dealers and independent farmers from all over New York state gather to sell their products at the market. Rows of umbrella-sheltered tables offer a variety of fruits and vegetables. Fresh strawberries, grapes, and broccoli are displayed. Tomatoes, corn, and fresh-picked beans are sold. Cheeses, eggs, and home-baked goods are also available. Flowers and plants for sale add a decorative touch to the market as well.

The marketing department of the downtown Metropolitan Development Agencies begins taking applications for display areas from farmers in January. About 10 percent of the lots are rented to wholesale dealers, leaving the remainder for independent farmers. The dealers, said Greg Irving of the downtown committee, add variety to the market by bringing in different products such as lemons and other out-of-season fruits.

Many of the customers are downtown workers who stop by during their lunch hour. They claim the products are fresher and less expensive than those in most supermarkets. The farmers seem to enjoy the market and look forward to it each year. Barbara Kinney of Otisco described the market as being friendlier and more personal than working through dealers.

"It is a long winter without the markets," she said.

The annual Farmer's Market, located on the corner of S. Salina and Washington streets, has an abundance of fresh fruits and vegetables, as well as baked goods and flowers. It is open every Tuesday from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Networks vary fall fare

By ROB OWEN
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

In the past, ABC and Fox were viewed as the most innovative television networks. ABC took chances with thirty-something and Anything But Love, while Fox introduced America to In Living Color and Married... With Children.

But this fall's Fox line-up looks decidedly un-original, with Roc as the only show with any potential to make people think.

Yet NBC, known for lowest-common-denominator sitcoms, has several dramas that may actually attract some attention.

Here's a look at the two networks' new shows.

Fox

Dabney Coleman returns to television as a man convicted of tax evasion who must teach fourth grade in order to pay for his crime in Drexel's Class (Thursday, 8:30 p.m.). Also starring is Suzy Plakson as evil Principal Itkin.

The Ultimate Challenge (Friday, 9 p.m.) features stunt professionals, athletes and daredevils doing what they do best for thrills and competition. Mike Adamle and Jennifer Montana host.

Broadway star Charles Dutton stars as Roc (Sunday, 8:30 p.m.), an opinionated garbage collector trying to lead a simple life.

Herman's Head (Sunday, 9:30 p.m.) will explore the inner workings of a man's (William Ragsdale) brain. Personified versions of lust, anxiety, compassion and intellect all make appearances.

NBC

Joshua Brand and John Falsey, creators of Northern Exposure, debut I'll Fly Away (Tuesday, 8 p.m.), a one-hour drama set in a small Southern town in the turbulent 1950s. Sam Waterson is the principled Southern attorney. Kathryn Harrold and Regina Taylor also star.

Cheers producers have given birth to Flesh 'N Blood (Friday, See FALL TV Page 13).

9:30 p.m.) about Baltimore’s youngest assistant district attorney. Lisa Darr is the DA who wishes to meet the mother who put her up for adoption. David Keith plays her supposed brother.

Oscar-winner Marlee Matlin and Mark Harmon star in Reasonable Doubts (Friday, 10 p.m.). He’s a police investigator, she a hearing-impaired assistant DA. The Torkelsons (Saturday, 8:30 p.m.) features a 14-year-old girl who is mortified by her family. Connie Ray plays the mom.

Golden Girls creator Susan Harris introduces us to Nurses (Saturday, 9:30 p.m.) who are overworked, underpaid and under-appreciated.

Los Angeles radio deejays Mark Thompson and Brian Phelps try to make the jump to television with their fulfillment of lifelong dreams in The Adventures of Mark and Brian (Sunday, 7 p.m.).

A 13-year-old boy suspects his small town may be entering The Twilight Zone in Eerie, Indiana (Sunday, 7:30 p.m.). Omri Katz stars as the young boy whose overactive imagination runs rampant...or does it?

James Garner is Map of the People (Sunday, 8 p.m.) when he is named to fill his late ex-wife’s city council seat. Unfortunately for the people of the town, he’s a con-artist.

And Robert Guillaume plays a detective in Venice, Calif. in the new sitcom Pacific Station (Sunday, 8:30 p.m.).

Which new shows will survive and which will fail is at the mercy of the Nielsen ratings. But, based on past TV seasons, don’t be surprised if most of these new shows are permanently off the air by January.

Radio disc jockeys Brian Phelps and Mark Thompson live out their lifelong dreams in The Adventures of Mark and Brian, a reality-based series new to NBC.

Paul Young, who took 14 shots overall, also had many close calls early. He said the repellent threat of overtime frustrated him.
"It was frustrating because Colgate's been an Achilles heel over the years, because we have never been able to beat them," Young said. "At the start of the game, it seemed like it would turn out that way again."
Twenty minutes into the game, Colgate started putting on some pressure. At 24:47, midfielder Brian Wicall just missed the crossbar.
SU coach Dean Foti said the Orangemen let Colgate back into the game by not scoring early. "I think we could have made it easy for ourselves if we had finished some of the early opportunities that we had," Foti said. "Any time you let a team that's that athletic and that physical remain in the game, you kind of create problems for yourself."
The Orangemen started out strong in the second half also, but they couldn't put it past Colgate goalie Keith Sipes, who finished the game with a career-high 19 saves. Sipes' biggest save occurred just six minutes into the second half when Nino Galich broke in alone. Sipes was able to make a diving glove stop.
SU goalie Steve Pollnow also played a strong game. At 28:58 of the second half, Pollnow made a glove save off a Scott Coleman shot to preserve the scoreless tie. Foti said that Pollnow, who had 10 saves, was the biggest bright spot for the Orangemen.

Syracuse wins home opener, 1-0

By JEFF ELBAUM

After being shutout in its first two games of the season, and playing to a 0-0 tie through regulation Tuesday night at the Carrier Dome against Colgate, it seemed like the Syracuse University soccer team was in trouble.

That was until Paul Young scored 2:17 into overtime to give the Orange- men a 1-0 victory.

Young scored the goal on a penalty kick that was a Red Raider was called for a hand-ball.

Colgate head coach Mike Doherty said he didn’t believe with the call.

"It’s overtime, tie ball game, and it’s in a questionable area (on the upper arm)," Doherty said. "You don’t tell that You don’t decide a game on that."

Early on, it appeared the game wouldn’t have to be decided in overtime.

The Orangemen came out of the gate flying with several scoring opportunities. As had happened in the Orangemen’s first two games, losses to Duke and North Carolina State, SU had many near misses.

The first near miss occurred at 7:30 of the first half, when Eric Puls broke the winning goal in the Dallas Cup, was heavily marked by Colgate defenders and was denied the ball throughout the game.

Trivia

Question: Who was the winning pitcher in the sixth game of the 1986 World Series?

By FLOYD MALONE
Staff Writer

The winning pitcher in the sixth game of the 1986 World Series was Tom Lasorda, who pitched a complete game to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 3-0 win over the Boston Red Sox.

Lasorda was credited with the victory, improving his record to 2-0 in the World Series.

He allowed nine hits and struck out three batters in seven innings of work.

The Dodgers went on to win the World Series in seven games, clinching it with a 3-2 win in Game 7.

The beneficiary of Lasorda’s performance was a young man named Tom Coughlin, who was the head coach of the Syracuse University football team.

Coughlin had been a member of the New York Giants’ coaching staff when they won the Super Bowl in 1986, and he used that experience to lead his team to victory in the Carrier Dome.

He also used the win to boost the confidence of his players, who had struggled in their first two games of the season.

As Coughlin said after the game, "It’s a great feeling to be on top of the world."

The Orangemen will now face another wichty opponent in the Hurri- canes.

The Big East football conference will host its first annual show tonight at the Carrier Dome in Syracuse.

No, airplanes will not be flying aboveamu. But there will be a contest that matches two of college football’s premiere offenses.

Everyone is looking forward to a shootout in a contest that matches two of college football’s premiere offenses.

Everyone but Hurricane coach Dennis Erickson, that is.

"We would like to hold them in check," Erickson said. "If you get in a scoring contest with Houston, you don’t usually win. We don’t want it to be a 50-45 type game.

Houston quarterback Davenport Klingler, who threw for 397 yards and 5 passes in the first half, was facing a tough opponent in the Hurri- canes.

Miami has a 38-game home winning streak, dating back to the 1985 season.

The Hurricanes have scored 297 points in their last 10 games, and are currently ranked No. 2 in the AP poll.

The Orange has scored 182 points in its last six games, and is currently ranked No. 12.

Both teams are 2-0 this season, and are looking to prove their worth in the Big East.

The winner will likely play a key role in determining the conference champion.

The game is expected to be a high-scoring affair, with both teams relying on their strong offensive lines.

Houston has scored 212 points in its last six games, while Miami has scored 190.

With a win tonight, Miami would move to 3-0 and take over the top spot in the Big East.

The Orange would move to 4-0, and could force a tie for the conference championship with a win over Pittsburgh next week.

The game is expected to be a battle of two of the best offenses in the nation.

Viewers pay for SU football

By KRISTINA SÄUERWEIN
Asst. News Editor

Syracuse University football fans who want to watch this Saturday's game on television will have to dig into their wallets.

Cook CableVision will broadcast SU's away games against the University of Maryland, tomorrow and Tulane University, Sept. 28, as pay-per-view events, according to Mary Frances, Cook CableVision program manager.

It will cost subscribers $20 to see one game and $30 for both and season-ticket-holders $18 or $32, she said. Bars will be charged $10 times the number of their maximum fire capacity.

"The only alternative to pay-per-view is not to show the game on television," said Jake Crouthamel, SU's athletic director.

Contract the College Football Association, of which SU is a member, made with ABC and ESPN limit the times and distributions for live commercial games, Crouthamel said.

To show a live night game on commercial TV, other than on ESPN, the kickoff time has to be after 8 p.m. EST. Kickoff time for tomorrow's game is 7 p.m. EST, Crouthamel said.

"Pay-per-view is the only way people in New York state can watch the game on television," he said.

For SU football game to be broadcast on commercial TV, it would have to be at noon on Saturday. The game would only be shown in the markets of the competing teams, and not on the biggest network, Crouthamel said.

"SU doesn't want to compete against the Big East games," he said. "That is not even an option."

SU's game against Tulane is being offered as a pay-per-view event to benefit subscribers, Crouthamel said.

"The Tulane game makes the pay-per-view package more attractive," he said. "Two games are better than one."

He said pay-per-view is a group of fans.

"One TV can accommodate a lot of people," he said. "People living in the dorms, for example, can pay a buck apiece and watch two games."

No commercials will interrupt the games, Crouthamel said.

"That's one of the beauties of pay-per-view," he said. "The telecast doesn't get interrupted every two or three minutes with advertisements."

Campus 7 News resumes broadcasts

By MARK A. BROUSSEAU
Asst. News Editor

University Union Television's weekday evening news show begins its newscasts this Monday at 5 p.m. on Cook CableVision public access Channel 7.

"Our show is done by students," for students," said News Director Andrew Ehinger.

The show starts three weeks ahead of schedule, compared to previous years. Ehinger said the early start is due to planning over the summer.

"We worked throughout last semester and the summer to get the show on the air much earlier this year so we can attract more viewers and crew," Ehinger said.

With more than 150 members working on Campus 7 News, it has the largest staff of the 17 shows that UUTV produces.

Ehinger said the newscast will have 80 new reporters and crew this year.

"We had a large impact on freshmen and sophomores," he said. "With more reporters and crew, we can cover more stories and create a more informative news show."

Ehinger said this year's highlights include more stories about students "interesting and unusual places" in Central New York.

Within an Hour returns

A special segment, "Within an Hour," will return on Friday to Abbott students "interesting and unusual places" in Central New York.

One segment will visit an American Indian museum in Ithaca, he said.

The newscasts air Tuesday through Friday at 5 p.m. The program airs at 9 p.m. on Monday because of a conflict with another show.

Ehinger said UUTV hopes to regain the slot after negotiating with the producer who holds the time slot.

Campus 7 News is also simulcast on the UU network, seen in selected residence hall lounges on Channel 7.

The newscast is also a college affiliate of the Cable News Network, and uses CNN video for its national and international news.

Campus 7 News also has affiliations with other college news shows, which cover stories relating to students from across the country.

Ehinger said that in the future, Campus 7 News will begin broadcasting a 16-minute noon show called Campus 7 News Midday.

"The program is aimed at students in the Schine Student Center and the Health Center who have a short time to watch the news," Ehinger said.

UUTV is the nation's oldest and largest student-operated television station.

This year marks its 21st year of programming for the SU student community.

UUTV is also a member of U-Net, the College Satellite Broadcasting Network and the National Association of College Broadcasters.

Students asked to conserve paper napkins

By ROBERT SHIELDS
Asst. News Editor

Last year, Syracuse University students threw away 6.72 million unused napkins, according to a University Food Services study.

To help cut costs, the University and the New Public Interest Research Group have joined together to stop another 50,000 pounds of napkins from being wasted this year, said Bob Merli, project coordinator of NYPIRG.

The two groups have placed signs on napkin dispensers around campus urging students to take one napkin and not a handful.

"Taking more than one or two napkins and not using them is like throwing away trees," Merli said.

Saving napkins will also save money, according to Mark LoParco, an associate director of food services. He said SU lost $4,032 in unused napkins, "It's like throwing dollar bills in the garbage," he said.

The project was started in 1990 at Brockway Dining Hall, LoParco said. Student interns took all unused napkins off of tables and collected them for five days in the spring, he said. The napkins were then weighed and an exact number was arrived at, he said.

Identifying the problem

This year, NYPIRG became involved in the project when a student suggested they do something about the problem, Merli said.

The study was done again last April at Brockway Dining Hall, LoParco said.

Food services said that 19.75 pounds of usable napkins were thrown out every day last year.

Both NYPIRG and food services said that the amount of napkins is a conservative number because Schine Student Center and Goldstein Dining were not included in the study.

The signs were designed by NYPIRG and printed on recycled paper, Merli said. Food services hand-painted the signs and paid for the painting, LoParco said.

LoParco said that food services is planning another study during this year to determine the effect of the signs.

He said that the program depends on peer pressure now. "Students are more concerned about the environment," he said. "It's not a trendy thing to be concerned about — it's a necessary thing."

LoParco said the University of New Hampshire reduced its amount of styrofoam cups by 64 percent by selling replaceable mugs.

He also said that Ben and Jerry's Ice Cream Co. features napkin signs on their products.

Indian tribe wins court battle

The Cree Indians of northern Quebec won a court battle in their struggle to stop a hydroelectric plant development on Hudson Bay yesterday. The Cree say the electricity is not needed and that the province just wants to sell it to U.S. buyers or use it to fuel industries cheaply.

The tribe says the $12.6 billion Great Whale project will destroy their society. The Cree are one of the last remaining hunting and trapping societies.

Thirteen killed in South Africa violence

A fourth day of violence in South African black townships left 13 commuters dead, officials said. Three railway commuters were killed Wednesday by automatic gunfire, and two people were killed by a grenade thrown into a commuter minivan. Violence has raged in the townships since Sunday.

Israel aid stalled, Bush threatens veto

President Bush made a forceful public appeal to Congress yesterday for a four-month delay in considering Israel's request for loan guarantees.

The president repeated his concerns that a rancorous debate will sabotage Israel's aid request.

Bush said that because he worked so hard to bring the peace conference this far, it is not too much to ask Congress to postpone the loan-guarantee debate. The president threatened to use his veto power, saying he will stand for what he believes in.

"I believe the American people will be with me if we put it on the question of principle," Bush said.

Four-month delay in considering Israel's request for loan guarantees.

The Israeli government is building on the premise that a rancorous debate will sabotage Congress's approval of the loan guarantees.

Democrats are frustrated by what they view as the administration's efforts to "dislodge Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas," a Senate Judicial Committee that it is irrelevant whether he has a personal opinion on such a volatile issue.

Bush said he believes the American people will stand for what he believes in.

Three deans named to Newhouse school

Dean David M. Rubin has appointed two new associate deans and an assistant dean at Syracuse University's S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications.

Rosanna Grassi, former assistant dean for academic affairs, has been named associate dean for student affairs; Nancy Scholz, co-editor of newspaper, assistant dean for graduate professional studies; and Verne Sparks, professor by appointment, associate dean for academic affairs.

In her new position, Grassi is responsible for undergraduate recruitment, admissions, registration and advising.

Sharp's new job duties include graduate student recruitment, admissions and advising, monitoring enrollment and screening teaching and graduate assistants.

She will also administer Newhouse's professional master's program.

Sparks will oversee the production of Newhouse course catalogs and the hiring of adjunct professors.

Israel is asking the United States for a $10 billion package of loan guarantees. The loans are needed to resettle the nearly one million Jews who are expected to arrive in Israel from the Soviet Union by 1994.

President Bush, unyielding in his insistence that Israel stop building settlements in the occupied territories, has asked Congress to defer consideration of the loan package for 120 days.

President Bush, unyielding in his insistence that Israel stop building settlements in the occupied territories, has asked Congress to defer consideration of the loan package for 120 days.

West Bank settlements jeopardize loan guarantee

The West Bank settlements create a dangerous atmosphere in the upcoming negotiations with the Arab states. Shamir said the Bush administration was sending a gift to the Arabs: "If they suddenly receive this, they will dance on the rooftops, and the level of their demands will rise higher and higher. This very thing will not permit a peace process."

The New York Times reported that some Israeli officials have questioned whether Mr. Bush, by seeking to put off the loan guarantees and also by linking them to an Israeli pledge to freeze Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories, has disqualified himself as a fair mediator in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

 Viewing as humanitarian aid

The Israeli government views the loan guarantee as a request for humanitarian aid that shouldn't be connected to the political issue of settlements. Shamir has said, "We don't accept... that you can link humanitarian aid on the highest moral level and certain political steps over which there may be some difference of opinion."

After visiting the West Bank, columnist Don Feder noted, "Most of it is a semi-arid wasteland of value to no one, that is until the Israelis made it blossom."

In an article in The Washington Post, columnist Arthur Goldschmidt, Jr. said it was in this region where the world's first cities rose along with the first government, and the earliest religious and legal systems. Writing on the preservation of the Western Wall in Jerusalem, "We must remember our responsibilities..."

Despite this long and rich history, today's focus is on the region as a primer on conflict: Arab vs. Israeli, Arab vs. Arab, Shi'ite vs. Sunni, Christian vs. Muslim and East vs. West.

The cycle of violence seems unapparent in this land where we often ignore what Goldschmidt calls "the quest for dignity and freedom of articulate people... who have endured centuries of subjugation to outsiders..."

A number of political analysts have noted that the United States, due to its economic and military resources, is in a position to alter the level of both conflict and risk for all states in the region by making bilateral commitments to them.

The ability to deter aggression is a matter of influence and influence is a function of the willingness and ability to trade land for peace. During the Gulf War, 39 missiles attack Israeli cities and Israel did not strike back. Ze'ev Schiff, editor of the Tel Aviv daily, Ha'aretz, wrote in Foreign Affairs, "Israel, enemies within and without."

The importance of the US role, the U.S. role in the Middle East, the U.S. role in the region, is a matter of the United States' willingness and ability to trade land for peace. During the Gulf War, 39 missiles attack Israeli cities and Israel did not strike back. Ze'ev Schiff, editor of the Tel Aviv daily, Ha'aretz, wrote in Foreign Affairs, "Israel, enemies within and without."

The support, Schiff points out, is also an aspect of deterrence.

Perhaps the Bush administration should consider that the U.S. role in the Middle East is a matter of more than just the United States' willingness and ability to trade land for peace. Grassroots director urges powerless to direct rage at others, not themselves

By THOMAS SEELEY
Contributing Writer

The 1960s were a time of great expectations, when young people grew up looking forward to overcoming barriers of race and gender, said S. Kahn, executive director of the Grassroots Leadership Workshop.

Kahn told about 200 people yesterday that the children of the 1960s entered a world with a job security that the previous generation had not known.

"His speech in the College of Law focused on culture, the roots of power in society."

"The '60s seemed to be about issues that were divided down the middle," Kahn said. "It was easier to know where one stood."

"Nowadays, seem to be more about complexity and confusion. It's hard to be sure which side we are on," he said.

During the 1960s, the rage and anger of the powerless in society was directed at those who had power, he said.

He said the rage now is directed at the powerless because those who have power have generated the protection to isolate themselves. They are out of the reach of the powerless and the people go to war against themselves, he said.

Learning to solve problems

Kahn said that schools of social work are important for solving the problems of the future.

"We need to understand why these changes are happening, so that we can develop a strategy at attacking them," he said.

"We must take our problems to our peers... before we take them to our bosses... because then we can separate ourselves from the power structure, and create our own power level," Kahn said. He advised the audience to "sharpen the inner vision which distinguishes right from wrong."

Kahn began his 25-year career in social work in the early 1960s when he went from Harvard to an office to the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

He now specializes in civil liberties and organizing.

Kahn is the author of two books: How People Get Power and Organizing and has recorded six albums of original music concerning social justice issues.

He recently released a new album with Pete Seeger.

Will the real Clarence Thomas please stand up?

By downplaying his past decisions and statements and offering nothing but tempered, non-committal suggestions, Thomas abandons his past and leaves us wondering what the future will bring. There's not a person in the United States who holds no opinion on this pressing issue.

Thomas' performance at the hearings demonstrates his willingness to play political games to win a Supreme Court seat. He follows David Souter's line, perhaps unsure of what the future will bring.

When Thomas does speak, disaster strikes. Thomas suffers from Bushitus. He's not a person in the United States who holds no opinion on this pressing issue.

Weight room hours too light

I'm an avid weight lifter. I may not look like it, but I feel like it. It's a proven fact that weight lifters usually need some sort of routine to get to the gym and begin to enjoy their sport. Now you've probably wondering exactly what it is that I'm getting at.

Even recession can’t stop alternative music

Although the recession has recently hit the music industry in a choke hold, several alternative acts have shown surprising success in recent months. At last week’s MTV Video Music Awards, several of those alternative groups were commended for their achievements. They included Jane’s Addiction (Best Alternative Video), Jesus Jones (Best New Artist) and alternative crossover act R.E.M. (who totaled six awards).

A glance through this week’s Billboard 200 Top Albums chart shows no less than 16 alternative bands who have managed to find their way onto the chart-topper list. Among those are Metallica at No. 195.

Times haven’t been so easy on everyone in the alternative industry, however. With the exception of Lollapalooza, few summer tours made money and several folded. One key label of the alternative industry, Rough Trade, also collapsed under financial strain.

Fewer albums being released Subsequently, the alternative industry is going against its nature, releasing a comparatively small number of new albums. The result is a limited choice for the consumer.

Although albums may be hard to find, there’s still out there. Here are four albums worth hunting down:

Metallica:

Metallica is one of the most diverse albums on this week’s chart, featuring slower paced songs and incorporating more melody and harmonies, as on the ballad “Nothing Else Matters.”

Ned’s Atomic Dustbin:

Ned’s Atomic Dustbin provides the best cross section of the band’s crossover from cult-status to chart-topper comes without concession to the “Moral Majority,” as singer/guitarist James Hetfield continues to cover such controversial topics as the horrors of war, corruption in religion and the dark recesses of the mind.

Smashing Pumpkins:

While...And Justice For All thrived on chaos through superprecision, the arrangements on Metallica show a matured, streamlined approach. No odd time signatures, no abrupt tempo changes, no rapid-fire drum licks—just in your face, riff-ripping rock ‘n’ roll, highlighted on the album’s single “Enter Sandman.”

Metallica doesn’t use the “Metal Up Your Ass” approach of the past, either. The band is less interested in stretching the bounds of its technical precision and more into the emotion behind the music.

Metallica’s matured style can be attributed to the hard rock n’ roar, highlighted on its ’60s Hammond organ, "Siva," the album’s single, and the band’s new sound can be attributed to the lead vocalist, James Hetfield, and the new rhythm section.

Cutting through sonic-pop barrage is vocalist Jimi Hendrix, who was well-known for his fluid phrasing and vibrant approach. "Siva," the album’s single, and the band’s new sound can be attributed to the lead vocalist, James Hetfield, and the new rhythm section.

Mudhoney:

Mudhoney is one of the most diverse albums on this week’s chart, featuring slower paced songs and incorporating more melody and harmonies, as on the ballad “Nothing Else Matters.”

Jesus Jones:

Combining super-fuzz guitar, distorted-beyond-recognition guitar, drums and sequencers, Mudhoney is a unique blend of grunge and pop. The band’s crossover from cult-status to chart-topper comes without concession to the “Moral Majority,” as singer/guitarist James Hetfield continues to cover such controversial topics as the horrors of war, corruption in religion and the dark recesses of the mind.

Irish soul music rocks in 'The Commitments'

There have been many films chronicling the rise and fall of famous music groups. This year has seen the release of both The Doors and The Five Heartbeats, which deal with a fictional Motown group.

Now comes Alan Parker's The Commitments, another tale of a fictional band's successes, excesses and failures.

But watching this one brings to mind another film, the rockumentary This Is Spinal Tap. The Commitments is not a parody; it's just borderline absurd.

Jimmy (Robert Arkins) is out to form a rock band that plays music that's "about where you're from." In this case, it's working-class Dublin, Ireland, and the music is soul.

After finding his first musicians at a wedding, Jimmy proceeds to place a newspaper ad to attract the other musicians who serve as "the saviors of soul.

This leads to an uproarious door-slamming montage sequence of band wannabes showing up at Jimmy's door. One street-punk admits that his musical influences include Barry Manilow.

Another says: "I saw everyone else lining up, so I thought you were selling drugs."

Some great music

Eventually the band falls into place with an egomaniacal lead singer, Dee (Andrew Strong) and three Commitment-ettes (Angeline Ball, Bronagh Gallagher, Maria Doyle) leading the group.

The songs in the band's repertoire range from "Mustang Sally" to "Try a Little Tenderness," and the music sequences are the best parts of the film.

But some of the concert sequences have that ever-present shaky zoom-in to various band members. Evidently director Alan Parker (Mississippi Burning, Angel Heart, Pink Floyd: The Wall) thought it would make the film more gritty if he filmed it in an atypical rockumentary style.

Instead it just brings to mind Spinal Tap again.

The band's downfall is also riddled with contrivances which destroy the realistic build-up. It's the unknown cast that makes up The Commitments outshine the trappings of the story. Lead singer Andrew Strong, who is only 16, has the charisma and vocal talent necessary for portraying the lead singer. And Arkins is perfect as the calm band manager trying to steer the band through continually mounting mayhem.

Despite being a large-ensemble cast, the actors all bring an individual identity to each of their characters, so that by the halfway point, we can tell them all apart. And after a time, their accents also become more natural sounding, rather than difficult to understand.

Andrew Strong (center) is Dee (background, left to right) Maria Doyle is Natalie, Kenneth McCluskey is Derek and Glen Hansard is Outspan in Alan Parker's The Commitments.

Great music, good performances, but a weak plot are the lead elements in The Commitments. Too bad Parker and company couldn't have gone three for three.

Neo-vaudevillian act oozes into Coffeehouse

By ERIC CRODE
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

"The Sludgemonkeys are coming! That was not meant to alarm you. As far as we can tell, this is not something to be concerned about."

But we could be wrong.

The Sludgemonkeys, who call themselves "the world's finest traveling blues, jazz, rock, folk, classical, country-western, neo-vaudevillian comedy show," will perform Sunday at the Coffeehouse at 9 p.m.

Joe Smith, lead vocalist and co-founder of the Sludgemonkeys, elaborated on this hyperbolic title.

According to Smith, there are only two Sludgemonkeys, himself and Curt Stetka, and they write and perform all their material.

Stetka plays guitar, kazoo and occasionally sings. In addition to vocals, Smith plays the harmonica, kazoo and "various other weird instruments."

He added that two other people will sit in with them on Sunday, but they are not Sludgemonkeys.

Smith and Stetka met last year when the two, freshmen at the time, were roommates in Lawrinson Hall.

While they have been performing together for only one semester, they have already made appearances at the Coffeehouse, Jamnesty, an open-mike night at Lawrinson and an Earth Day benefit.

Before you hear the songs, the Sludgemonkeys' titles are enough to let you know what you're dealing with.

Some of the offerings this Sunday will include "Mother Goose on Barbiturates," "The Continuing Saga of Shlomo Shadownight" and, of course, "The Sludgemonkey Folk Song."

The last one's sort of a crowd favorite," said Smith.

Jennifer Gnady, a sophomore in the Newhouse School and the College of Arts and Sciences, said the band was popular in Lawrinson, where she also lived.

"A lot of kids came (to the open-mike night) just because they were performing," said Gnady. "They're a lot of fun."

Greg Bellerose, coordinator of the Coffeehouse, had a different response.

"After some prodding, Bellerose would only say, with an ominous tone in his voice, "They're... different. Very different."

Stetka, who lists Eric Clapton and the Beatles as his chief influences, has performed with such groups as Mr. Thangy and the Flaming Tree Zebras. He said nothing, however, had prepared him for the Sludgemonkeys.

"We attended a conference this summer with every other traveling blues, jazz, rock, folk, classical, country-western, neo-vaudevillian comedy show," Smith deadpanned.

"It was put to a vote, and we won."

"We have the certificate somewhere," added Stetka.

The Orangemen gained 270 yards on the ground against Vanderbilt’s new multi-tool system. This could allow the Terrapins to open up and get off to a better start than their sluggish opening, especially in the Commodores’ defense. "Having had the opportunity to see them on film and having played them in 1998, we have a little history on them," Pasqualoni said.

"I’m not going to say that we’re going to go out there and be wide open but I think we’ll be a little bit more prepared in our approach to the start of the game," he added.

An SU offense which produced 17 second-half points and 492 yards total offense is reason for concern among the Maryland defense. "They’ve got a really good offensive philosophy, and it’s not skill guys," Maryland safety Ron Reagan said. "(Marvin) Graves is always dangerous. If we can slow down the option, or even stop it, we’ll be all right." The Terrapins rushed for 167 yards against the Commodores without their win over Virginia. "I’m sure Swinney is going to really work on stopping our running game and force us to throw," Terrapins quarterback Jim Sandwisch said. "We’ve been working on that this week and I believe we’re going to pass a little bit more.

Maryland runs what has been described as a pro-set offense and they generally use a single halfback.

"There’s a lot of problems with that offense," Pasqualoni said. "There’s a lot of multiplicity that Maryland uses. They have many sets and they motion and shift the many sets to force you to make adjustments."

Maryland coach Joe Krivak, a 1957 graduate of SU, is 0-2 against his alma mater since taking the head coaching position with the Terrapins in 1987.

Krivak said he isn’t preparing any differently to play against the Orangemen.

"Other than the fact that I graduated from here, there’s nothing else," Krivak said. "It’s the same. preparation for anybody else."

"We’re just going to have to go out and play as hard as we can and see what happens."

Notes
The Terrapins will be without starting left tackle Steve Wilkins, who suffered a spiral fracture of the right fibula. It is expected that he will miss 6-8 weeks.

Starting quarterback Jim Sandwisch and defensive tackle TBD Zizakovic missed contact drills this week but are expected to start.

Syracuse leads the all-time series, dating back to 1920, 16-14-2.
The Orangewomen home for the weekend

By ZEV BOROW
Staff Writer

Although there may not be a blemish on the Syracuse University volleyball team's record, SU coach Dan Schulte said the team could still use a bit of a makeover.

While the Orangewomen swept their weekend matches last weekend at the Hofstra/TDK Invitational to remain undefeated at 6-0, Schulte said there is room for improvement going into this weekend.

Syracuse faces off against the Rutgers University Scarlet Knights Friday night at 7:30 p.m., followed by matches with the University of Buffalo Royals at 1 p.m. and the Northeastern University Huskies at 5 p.m. on Saturday.

The Orangewomen return to Manley Field House undefeated, confident, and, according to Schulte, much improved.

"I feel that we have played very well for this point in the season," Schulte said. "But we are definitely still improving and this is the most important and exciting part."

The Orangewomen will need to continue improving for their match with the Scarlet Knights. The Friday night matchup looks like it will be the most challenging of the weekend.

"Rutgers is a quality program and I'm sure that they will provide us with some stiff competition," Schulte said.

Last weekend's matches at Hofstra displayed the emerging talents of junior outside hitter Debbie Bernet and Aimee Mask.

"We seem to be developing more depth at every position," Schulte said. "We are getting contributions from more and more of our players, and that will only increase the amount of things we are able to do on the court."

"Everyone is definitely stepping up and contributing," junior outside hitter Andrea Carson said. "The team is coming together well and really improving."

This weekend's matches will be the final tune-up for the Orangewomen before they head to Ohio for the Buckeye Classic held at Ohio State.

"The Buckeye Classic will be the first real test for the Orangewomen, as Ohio State is currently ranked 14th in the nation."
Radio guy, Paterno not on good terms

By DAVE MAGER
The Magenheimer

Welcome to Dave's Dartboard, Friday edition. In honor of this special day, and in honor of Penn State's hard fought 81-0 win over Cincinnati, I'd like to honor my favorite team with 13 reasons to hate Joe Paterno.

But he's not worth it.

I've tried to be kind. I've tried to put up with Paterno. Why? To put up with Paterno. Hey, I'm not a cruel guy; I just can't keep it up with Paterno. But — here we go again!

People have been defending Paterno since he was the guy in the bag. "No, Joe, that's all you'll hear from me the matter. For about the next six paragraphs. Syria's M. Mary Paterno Game one was not much of a problem for Syracuse University. Going should be a walk in the park. Why waste a second feeling bad for Paterno because he's being criticized?

Spend your time feeling bad for Cinco, cost. Tim Murphy, whose team should be condemned.

Klingler hype tilting the big picture

Is it possible these days to watch any kind of college football show and not hear about David Klingler and his chances for the Heisman Trophy? Klingler's statistics and the offensive line he's on are surely going to get a lot of attention on ESPN, CNN, ABC or CBS, there's more talk about the Heisman than about the national championship. And the talk, for now, revolves around Klingler, the record-setting quarterback from the University of Houston.

The general assumption is that Klingler is a certainty to win or lose. For gosh sakes, it's the second week of the season and already postseason award hunters have been staking out their positions around Klingler, the record-setting quarterback from the University of Houston. After Houston's 73-3 win over Louisiana Tech two weeks ago, ESPN did a live postgame interview with him and probed him into another cliché-ridden speech. That, in itself, is crazy.

But does anybody care? No. All the Heisman hype is generally the focus of attention. College football as a whole is played above the issues, and we've started the hype too early.

Can we at least wait until half the season is over before this starts? With Klingler's high profile and television's publicity assist, the rest of the nation's top talent is resorting to a hyped up Heisman injury as their only chance.

Talented Pac-10 players have no chance because they play many of their games at night and the day's chance because they play many of their games at day.

Cal's Kevin White, Stanford's Ty Detmer and UCLA's Todd Marinovich have all but been decided.

For gosh sakes, that's why we have a season to lose it.

Sandwich follows pace; QB walks into tradition

By JOSH BARNETT

On any football team, the quarterback is generally the focus of attention. At the University of Maryland, the quarterback seems to draw the attention of National Football League scouts.

The last six Terrapin quarterbacks, dating back to Boomer Esiason in 1983, have been drafted. (Those) shouldn't affect us that much," said Detmer. "I know what we're doing against them so we're just going to work and make sure everything is going correctly.

Maryland has also brought eight and nine defenders up to the line to try and stop Klingler. "If they put eight or nine guys up the line, I don't know how they're going to run the ball," Syracuse coach Paul Pasqualoni said. "We're going to have to be prepared to reduce the front, to get some of those people out of there."

Maryland, 1-0, presents more and different problems for Syracuse than Vanderbilt University did. The Orange, 1-0, beat the Commodores 37-10 last weekend.

The Terrapins defense uses only two linebackers and a five-man line. Their defense held the University of Virginia to only two field goals in their 17-6 win last weekend.

Advisory group submits fiscal recommendations

The following are excerpts from the Report on the Schools and Colleges at Syracuse University as submitted by the Chancellor's Ad Hoc Advisory Group.

Introduction:
The fiscal challenge facing private higher education has several underlying causes. Through the 1980s virtually all universities experienced cost increases that were well beyond normal inflationary pressures. The addition of new cost commitments, both among academic and administrative units, has been the result of a determination to maintain modern facilities, a desire to increase quality, a willingness to create new programs and a necessity to meet external requirements such as compliance with governmental regulations and various accreditation standards.

On Tuition:
At private universities the costs of the additional educational services have been largely passed on to students through increases in tuition. There is now substantial resistance to the cost of private higher education, and it is neither feasible nor fair to maintain the steep upward spiral of escalating costs.

The fiscal challenge facing Syracuse University is the result of the 1990 cost escalation factors, declining enrollments, reduced state appropriations, reduced federal contributions to student financial aid, and reduced revenue projections from other sources. See GROUP Page 17

Speaker probes Iraqi women's movement

Women of Western countries still believe the women of Iraq live in the Dark Ages with no power or awareness, but Iraqi women have been fighting for equality for 70 years, said Hayatun Nesa, a doctoral candidate in the Syracuse University philosophy department.

Nesa spoke Friday about the plight of Iraqi women as part of the Women's Friday Series held in the Schine Student Center.

"This was a time when social basis for self-respect for women started," she said.

"Third World country women become aware of themselves through a national movement and by fighting against colonialism," Nesa said. "This is why their feminist movement is much more modeled and why it is difficult for them to draw the line with their male comrades and say this is really our movement," she said.

The women's movement must remain separate in order to ensure separation from the country's movement in the end, she said.

Few rights before 1920

Before 1920, Iraqi women had very few rights and were often killed if raped because rape was seen as a complete dishonor to the victim's family, she said.

"The only punishment (for a rapist), if any, was a short detainment of perhaps three months," Nesa said. "If to say they could just go off after this short holding as if they had only killed a cow."

After 1920, and into the 1930s, Iraqi women began claiming rights and stopped wearing veils, she said. Forced marriages in urban areas became rare, actual laws regarding women were written and published, she said.

The Iraqi Women's League and its 42,000 members were recognized by the Iraqi government in 1933, she said. With this recognition, women gained entry into the work force, received education and even received paid maternity leave, Nesa said.

In 1963, however, when the Bath Party took over, women lost their rights and the Women's League leaders were arrested and tortured, she said.

It was considered herey to have anything outside of the Bath regime and women could only gain emancipation through Bath ideologies," Nesa said.

Strain from the war

At the Iran-Iraq War strained Iraq's manpower, women were once again called to the work force, she said. The war not only took away manpower, but also cut the salaries of women in the labor force, she said.

Low income, bad working conditions and emotional distress from dealing with sons and husbands in war left Iraqi women seriously deprived, she said.

In 1981, the Women's League rebelled against the Baath Party. Women and Kurdish women have been involved in armed struggle since that time, she said.

The most important thing to resistance is that each individual is important and powerful and must retain their sense of identity," she said.

"The power of resistance, in a metaphorical sense, is in the power to tell the truth to the power," she said.

"Western understanding of resistance must be changed to see that resistance won't stop," Nesa said.

The Women's Friday Series is held weekly at noon in Room 130 in the Schine Student Center.

Michelangelo’s David hit with hammer

A 47-year-old mentally disturbed man attacked Michelangelo’s statue of David in Florence, Italy, with a hammer, police said.

Police said that the man broke the second toe of the statue’s left foot, but that the pieces were recovered and repairs would be made.

The man was held down by museum patrons until police arrived. He was charged with assault to a national cultural treasure.

Nuclear industry looks for revitalization

The nuclear power industry is looking to Congress for revitalization. Proposals to streamline the nuclear reactor permit process, build more efficient plants and open the power market to private energy producers may make the energy more attractive, according to industry experts.

Another piece of legislation would open the energy market to companies other than utilities. Also, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission is studying standardized designs of nuclear plants, which means there will eventually be two or three reactor types instead of 30.

Supporters and opponents of nuclear power say the legislative proposals indicate that lawmakers want to keep nuclear power as a viable energy source in the future.

BankAmerica linked to BCCI scandal

BankAmerica Corp. had more control over the Bank of Credit and Commerce International and more knowledge of its illegal operations than previously disclosed, according to allegations in an amended class-action lawsuit.

The new charges against Bank of America, which helped fund BCCI in 1982, come as the House Banking Committee holds hearings on the international bank, which has been linked to fraud, money laundering, terrorism and the loss of up to $15 billion in depositor funds.

The wide-ranging suit also charges more than 50 other defendants with violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act.

Mayor Dinkins tightens security

The role of homeless people in fires, including the recent blaze at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal in Manhattan and another that led to the death of a firefighter, have caused New York City Mayor David Dinkins to order all city-owned buildings and property to be secured from people taking refuge there.

Advocates for the homeless said New York City’s order illustrates its failure to deal effectively with the homeless problem.

New York City officials say they have devised a new way of getting prisoners to court — by closed-circuit television.

The center will have an improved Emergency Department, a Diagnostic Imaging Center, a more advanced critical care inpatient facility and inpatient nursing unit, and an expanded academic and patient care center for the Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation.

Analysis of school budgets presented

By JODI LAMAGNA
Editor in Chief

The calculation of fiscal performance of schools is based strictly on credit hours of instruction. The index used calculates the implicit overhead returned by each school to the university. This is the percentage of the budget of each school that is returned in revenues exceeding its university budget. Tuition revenues are calculated for each school as if it were an independent operation, and the difference is said to provide the implicit overhead for instruction. This total revenue less the average financial aid provides an estimate of the net resources available to each school. At least 100 percent may be seen as net fiscal contributors and schools with less than 100 percent may be seen as fiscal cost centers.

Category 1: Colleges with fiscal positions and strong application demand, likely to maintain current enrollments.

The advisory committee has recommended that no reductions in budget and possibly receive net add-ons, provided enrollment is maintained or increased.

Architecture

The committee has found this to be a problem that needs to be addressed. The school has a strong teaching program and a strong demand.

Visual and Performing Arts

The school has a strong national reputation as an undergraduate school and consequently has a robust application demand.

The Newhouse School has a bright future if the university maintains a strong program in this area. Enrollments can be maintained or increased, and we recommend some modest increases in enrollment or additional institutional investment.

The budget in the near term requires that budget add-ons be invested in order to improve the quality of the faculty and the academic program.

Category 2: Fiscally healthy colleges that will probably experience enrollment declines

In these colleges, the committee believes that the decline in enrollment will have to be balanced with other budget considerations and enrollment strategies to arrive at proper budgets.

Category 3: Schools and colleges currently receiving substantial subsidies

The committee has recommended "strategic actions to achieve the appropriate enrollment and maintain a viable set of programs for academic quality." The committee also recommends that an insufficient number of programs be eliminated, but significant reductions in the number of faculty, staff and teaching assistants are possible. Some flexibility is possible in increasing the proportion of academic year faculty salaries paid on sponsored research, which is below the level maintained by many engineering schools.

School of Information Studies

There is some debate as to whether the separation of information studies as an independent discipline is either organizationally or intellectually optimal.

Almost all the undergraduate enrollment is derived from alternate offers.

The challenge for ITS will be to maintain or increase enrollment while advancing its scholarly profile. If it remains an independent discipline, ITS should eliminate its subsidy and become fiscally positive over the next few years by some combination of increased enrollment, additional external resources, and reduced university budget.

College of Nursing

Many faculty do not have a strong record of scholarship. Undergraduate enrollment is below the national average and at SU has decreased to one-third of the 1989 enrollment.

A fundamental problem appears to be that an insufficient number of prospective undergraduate students in nursing are willing to pay the high cost of private university costs. The present level of enrollment is maintained only by providing the highest level of financial aid in the university.

It is questionable whether it is possible to reduce the size of the program to a budget that is commensurate with enrollment and maintain a viable set of course offerings and infrastructure.

School of Social Work

There is very little primary demand for the programs offered, and there is not optimistic that the school can raise its enrollment sufficiently to reduce the subsidy which is a very large credit hour load. Most of the remaining credit hour subsidy is allocated.

Although we believe that the subsidy to the School of Social Work is not optimistic about prospects for accomplishing that reduction adequately through enrollment increases of the highest priority units and eliminate or greatly downsize of some of its other units.

School of Education

The School of Education has been a center of investment at SU for many years. Undergraduate application demand Twelve sweatshirts were reported stolen Saturday from Shirt World at 125 Marshall St.

The store's owner saw a 5-foot-9 black male wearing a yellow shirt and blue jeans enter the store and take 18 sweatshirts off a rack and exit the store, a police report said.

In his car, the owner chased the man who was running toward Adams Street. When they reached the Upstate Medical Center the suspect met up with another man. He then threw six sweatshirts at the owner.

The suspect was last seen running toward the hospital.

A 22-year-old Syracuse University student reported his jacket containing his wallet was stolen following a fight in the intersection of University Avenue and Marshall Street early Sunday morning.

The student told police he confronted the man who was running and the man, who then turned and ran off, threw the items. The student was hit and demanded the suspect throw the bandages on the ground and demanded his attorney.

The student told police she returned home and found the front door wide open. She said the door is usually locked.

A Syracuse University student reported that her house on the 1000 block of Euclid Avenue was burglarized Saturday.

The student told police the suspect confronted her in the intersection, a police report said.

A Syracuse resident who tried to gain entry to Faegan's Pub without an ID became verbally abusive and shattered a front door window Saturday night.

The bar manager told police that the suspect confronted him with threats, kicked a bouncer and proceeded to shatter the door.

The manager chased the suspect through a South Crouse Avenue alley and apprehended him on the 1100 block of East Adams Street by forcing the suspect to the ground.

When police offered first aid, the suspect threw the bandages on the ground and demanded his attorney.

A Syracuse University student reported his car burglarized Thursday in a Westcott Avenue parking lot.

The student told police the vent window on the passenger door was bent and two large speakers were stolen.

Read between the lines

Faced with students at this university know that downsizing the budget is a necessary evil that leads to cuts in important areas, namely academics. But the approach the university proposes is faulty. The report, issued by the Chancellor's Ad Hoc Advisory Group, suggests that programs will be cut based on how much money they bring to the university and how many students enroll in these programs.

The report reads: “As a practical matter, and in a spirit of service, we have taken to the floor the position that any unit with a strong student enrollment should be preserved and nurtured.” This cleverly-worded statement fails to enumerate for us the small colleges which are unworthy of preservation.

This approach will effectively cripple important programs on campus. If it is a sad day when African-American Studies, Women’s Studies, and other such programs are lumped together (“consolidated”) in an Operations Department.

Shortly after promises of making SU a more multi-cultural university were made, SU proposed its downsizing plan which strikes elitism and effectively strips the university of any multiculturalism it has developed.

The report, Some of the judgments to be made in the coming months will rely on an interpretation of the University’s primary values.” That would be reassuring if we weren’t already painfully aware of them: looks and money.

Library leads to wild goose chase

If you’re in search of hell on earth, go to Bird Library. You’ll find it somewhere.

But if it’s a book you want, you might consider somewhere else.

I ran to almost any books in Bird. Actually, the place is filled with books: books pipelines, the floor, the position that any unit with a strong student enrollment should be preserved and nurtured. This cleverly-worded statement fails to enumerate for us the small colleges which are unworthy of preservation.

New Calvin Klein ads sure to shock
Calvin Klein has unveiled its latest jeans ads, which they hope will make the product.

The most prominent item on display is the nude body of Marcella Schenkenberg, 23, a Stockholm-born model. In the ad, Schenkenberg's body is glistening with beads of water as he holds a very small shred of Calvin Klein under his arm.

Bruce Weber, noted for his homeroom photos, took the pictures for the ads that will soon appear in W. Mirabella, Vogue, L.A. Style and Rolling Stone.

Chasers' debuts on home video
Paramount Pictures Television and Columbia House Home Video are releasing episodes of Cheers on video cassette through Columbia House Home Video.

Each tape will contain three episodes from the hit television series. The first tape, which includes the pilot episode, is priced at $19.95. Subsequent tapes will be sold for $19.95.

Paramount and Columbia used a similar program to sell episodes of Star Trek: The Next Generation last year.

‘Murphy Brown’ clears up questions
The cast is in under gag order, but fans of Murphy Brown will only have to wait until 9 p.m. to learn who fans want.

Is the father her ex-husband, Jake, or someone new? Does Murphy have a secret? What happens to Murphy, Murphy, Murphy? We will find out.

As sort of a thank you to all the staff at Houston Memorial, Kevl announced in his most spectacular indoor stunt ever, Evel was to leap his bike (Rocketcar was the name) over 50 buses lined up inside the eighth wonder of the world, the Astrodome.

I sat in front of my television all night to see my hero face his greatest challenge yet. Then he appeared in all his glory, white, and blue jump suit glory.

Evel never actually went through with the stunt the first time he started at the ramp. He liked suspense and this was a stuntman who knew how to work a room.

Suspense wears thin
Suspense slowly turned to boredom as Evel repeatedly started his run and turned away right before he got to the ramp. Finally, Evel whipped off his helmet and began yelling at his pit crew. It almost seemed like he was concerned over whether the stunt was going to work.

Then the impossible happened. Evel left the building.

When we were young, we all had our idols. We looked up to them and tried to emulate them. It's like that time Bobby Brady decided that Jesse James was his hero.

But it was probably just because my Mom hated him.

The greatest thing about Evel was that he never took a hint. There he was in a hospital recovering from a broken leg. Then the impossible happened. Evel jumped again.

"Basically they're opening up Schine for the students," Aitken said.

Drumming up spirit
The scheduling of Homecoming this year has made it a little more difficult to get orange and blue pumping through participants' veins.

"With the fraternities, it's really tough," Aitken said. "The frats said they were having a tough time."

Fraternity rush began Sunday, the same time, sorority rush ended Sunday.

Programming for Homecoming is also difficult because of the number and variety of student groups at SU.

"There are so many different organizations, and so many things are going on," said Aitken, "it can be difficult."

However, one thing is sure to fire up the campus — the football game against the Florida Gators.

"Obviously the game isn't going to be a problem. There'll be a lot of hype involved."

Group finds buddies for mildly retarded

By ROB OWEN
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

Four years ago, Anthony Ken- nedy Shriver founded Best Bud- dies as an on-campus student organization at Georgetown Uni- versity.

New Syracuse University sen- ior Maureen Nunes has brought the program to SU.

The goal of Best Buddies is to provide an opportunity for college students and persons with mild to moderate retardation to become friends.

Nunes, who serves as chapter director of SU's Best Buddies program, said an informational meeting will be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Room 202 of the Hall of Languages.

"My goal is to break down the stereotypes of people with mental retardation and let people know that they're the same as you and me," Nunes said. "Most college students never meet someone with a disability unless there's someone in their family. This is a way they can meet."

Nunes said the program benefits both college students and their buddies. It gives the buddies an opportunity to go out and do things they normally aren't able to, and it gives college students a break from school, Nunes said.

"Through Best Buddies, college students learn that there is really no reason to fear or pity people with mental disabilities," Nunes said. "You see how they are more able than dis- abled."

Good friends, good times

Nunes said 112 colleges and universities currently have Best Buddy chapters. College students who participate in the program are matched with a buddy who is mildly retarded but highly functional. Students meet with their buddies two or three times a month and go on four group outings a semester. These events could include apple- picking, a trip to the zoo, a...See BUDDIES Page 14

out SU, 31-17

nboyland

COLLEGE PARK. Md. — Syracuse
University's offense looked unstoppable in the first half of its 31-17 victory over the University of Maryland on Saturday.
The Orangemen churned out a n incredible 309 yards of offense in the game's first 30 minutes, but managed just 53 in t h e second half.
And so. it w a s t h e defense, for the second straight week, t h a t put the winning points on t h e scoreboard.
With the game tied 14-14 in the third quarter. SU punter P a t O'Neill pinned the Tferrapins inside their own one-yard line with a school-record 72-yard punt.
Three plays later, reserve linebacker
John Lusardi picked off Tferps quarterback John Kaleo's last-ditch shovel pass in t h e end zone for a touchdown and a lead SU did not give up.
'"We came out strong in t h e second half because we wanted the people on the line to put more pressure on the quarterback," Syracuse defensive lineman George Rooks said. "I chased (Kaleo) out of the pocket, he saw me b u t I ran him down. I guess he got nervous because he pitched it away right to Lusardi."
Kaleo. who w a s making his first Division-I appearance after transferring from Montgomery-Rockville Junior College (Md.), was playing because senior J'im Sandwisch injured his throwing shoulder late in t h e second half. Neither QB was effective, as they combined for only 170 yards passing on 44 attempts with four interceptions.
For the second consecutive week, t h e defense rose a t a crucial time to force a turnover and break open a close ball game.
Last week, defensive back Tbny Montemorra returned a fumble 37 yards for t h e decisive play in SU's 37-10 win over Vanderbilt.
"Last week we made some turnovers," said Orange defensive coordinator Kevin Coyle. "I didn't even know we had five today. If we are going to be a great team we've got to get t h e ball to our offense a s often as possible. Tbnight t h e (defense) came up with some big plays and i t certainly affected t h e outcome of t h e game."
The Orangemen, who turned the ball over four times themselves, took away five Tferp possessions.

On Syracuse's second drive of t h e game. Graves moved SU 43 yards on j u s t four plays before t h e turnovers began.
Following a TVrry Richardson 11-yard r u n . Graves h i t Antonio Johnson across t h e middle for a 20-yard pickup. On t h e next play. Graves dumped off a screen to Richardson for a gain of 13 to the Tferps'
45-yard line.
The sophomore quarterback elected to keep t h e ball on t h e option on t h e fourth play of the drive, only to fumble on Maryland's 32-yard line.
Two plays and 51 seconds later, Maryland sophomore running back Mark Mason lumbered 71 yards off right tackle for the score and SU trailed 7-0.
"It's j u s t one of those things t h a t happen," said Graves, who would also fumble later in the quarter leading to a second Maryland touchdown. "I have to t a k e better care of t h e ball. Coaches preach and preach ball security. Luckily today I found out w h a t they mean and we were still able to win the game."

When he wasn't fumbling. Graves looked impeccable in t h e first half. He hit on 13 of 19 attempts for 204 yards, including a 41-yard pass to Qadry Ismail in t h e opening scoring drive.
Ismail was the beneficiary of Graves' accurate arm all night, a s he finished with six receptions for 141 yards, both career highs.
"We came out p r e t t y good, and we wanted to get off to a good start," Graves said. "If you eliminate t h e turnovers, you're looking at a good ball club here.
If you take away my fumbles, I think we're up 21-0."
Maryland went up 14-7 after recovering Graves' second fumble on the SU 18, Aided by an Orange personal foul penalty, the Tferps needed only 26 seconds to go t h e distance for t h e score, a four-yard run by Troy Jackson with 3:08

and more talented.
But when All-American candidate
Dan Conley suffered a knee iiyury midway through t h e first quarter of Syracuse's 31-17 win over Maryland,
L u s a ^ was ready to the point of having the best game of his career.
He recorded a game-high 14 tackles, including seven solo, and intercepted a pass in t h e end zone for a touchdown
t h a t proved to be the game-winner.
Before Saturday, Lusardi had 22 tackles in his career as a backup linebacker and special teams player at Syracuse.
''It's been my role since I've been here," the 6-foot-l. 220-pound Lusardi said.

As mentally prepared as Lusardi could have been, a little bit of luck was needed for him to make the play t h a t gave SU a

With the score tied 14-14 and Maryland facing a 3rd-and-5 from its own 6-yard line, quarterback John Kaleo dropped back to pass and was flushed

SU defenders George Rooks. Kevin just before Kaleo's knee hit t h e ground, he tried to shovel pass t h e ball out-ofbounds and save t h e safety.

But Kaleo didn't get enough strength behind the pass, and t h e bait ended up in the a r m s of a sliding Lusardi, who was about three yards in front of t h e

SU defensive coordinator Kevin Coyle

Coyle, i n h i s first season a t Syracuse,

COLLEGE PARK. Md. — Dan Conley, Syracuse University's leading tackier last year, had knee surgery on Sunday and will miss t h e rest of t h e season.
Conley, a sophomore, tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee at the end of a play midway through t h e first q u a r t e r .
SU head coach Paul Pasqualoni said
t h e injury was non-contact and accidental, but Conley said, "it was a cheap shot right in the back of the knee."
Conley said he didn't know which player caused the injury and added t h a t t h e play, a 1-yard reception by Chad Wiestling in the right fiat, was almost over when t h e hit came.
"(Wiestling) w a s pretty much going down," Conley said. "I was going down to make an assist on the tackle. I didn't even see him. That's t h e sad part. It definitely came from behind. It was definitely late."
SU linebacker Glen Young, who was credited with the tackle on t h e play, said he didn't see what happened. Young said Conley told him t h a t he was clipped from behind.
Pasgiialoni h a s not named a replacem e n t for Conley, who h a d 126 tackles last year, including 70 solo, a n d five sacks.
Record punt
Punter P a t O'Neill set a Syracuse record with a 72-yard p u n t in t h e third quarter t h a t s e t u p J o h n Lusardi's interception in t h e end zone.
O'Neill needed t h e record-breaking effort, which was downed a t t h e 1-yard line, to salvage his game average. His first two punts, both in t h e first half, went 11 and 26 yards.
"On t h e first two, I j u s t took my eyes off the ball and lifted my head," O'Neill said. "TTiat's what happens when I don't totally focus."
Don B u l l a r d (1966) a n d Darryl Johnston (1986) shared t h e previous SU record of 71 yards.
"1 envisioned i t going over t h e guy's head," O'Neill said. "1 said. T m going to said. "He made some big plays for us."

Glen Young, SU's opposite starting inside linebacker, said he was surprised how quickly Lusardi picked up the game plan. "I didn't think John would do that good, but he came in and I thought he deserved the game ball," Young said. "I know he had a little trouble in the past, but the way he played tonight, I have no problems playing alongside him."

TURNOVER

SU countered with a 10-play, 74-yard drive culminating in sophomore quarterback Doug Womack's first career touchdown. Womack took a keeper on the option around the right end for a seven-yard run with 4:46 left in the half.

Defense and turnovers won the game for the Orangemen in the second half. As prolific and accurate as SU's offense was in the first half, the defense came to be just as dominating in the second.

The Orange, led by Lusardi, Rooks and nose guard Kevin Mitchell, forced three Terrapin turnovers in the third quarter and held the Terps to just 89 yards in the second half.

"(The turnovers) had to do with our aggressiveness and the way we fly to the ball," said SU linebacker Glen Young, who had his second career interception in that pivotal quarter. "Once you get the first one you start looking for another, especially if it's early in the game. If things start going crazy like they did tonight, they usually end up that way."

With SU leading 24-17 and six minutes left in the game, Shelby Hill, who did not catch a pass and had been limited to only 37 yards on six punt returns, burst through coverage for a 61-yard punt return touchdown, giving Syracuse its final margin of victory.

"We dominated in kicking and special teams and we dominated defensively," DeLeone said. "The only way we walked out of here with a win was because of our defense and special teams."

Dear Students, Faculty and Staff:

You are cordially invited to the second convocation honoring the Remembrance Scholars for 1991-1992 at Syracuse University on Tuesday evening, October 1, at 7:30 PM in Hendricks Chapel.

A Remembrance Scholarship is one of the highest awards a Syracuse University student can receive. These 35 outstanding seniors have been chosen for their distinguished scholarship, citizenship and service to the community. Their achievements honor the memory of our students tragically lost on December 21, 1988, over Lockerbie, Scotland.

I hope you will find it possible to join me on this important occasion.

Sincerely,

Kenneth A. Shaw

On Enrollment Decline:
The decline in total enrollment will occur over several years as the smaller entering classes move through the curriculum and earlier classes graduate. Current projections are for a decline in enrollment of between 18 and 25 percent over a five-year period that began with the class entering in Fall 1990.

Budget Cuts:
The total of academic and administrative budgets for fiscal 1992 is $161.6 million, of which $112.2 million is in Academic Affairs. The sum of the budgets for the schools and colleges is $91.1 million.

Indeed, it seems appropriate that the university construct its budgets recognizing differential costs of certain kinds of teaching and scholarly endeavor.

Obviously, the magnitude of the budget reductions that need to be made will require substantial reductions in the budget of Academic Affairs and of the schools and colleges.

However, we strongly urge that the university make every attempt to preserve our primary functions — teaching and research — by making proportionately larger reductions in administrative costs.

This principle should guide the apportionment of the budget cut to Academic Affairs and within each of the academic units as well.

We strongly recommend that other budgets be reduced in greater proportion than those of the schools and colleges, but substantial reductions in the budgets of the school and colleges will be unavoidable.

Faculty Recommendations:
We share the overwhelming view of faculty respondents that in the face of fiscal challenge the university must respond in an equally strategic fashion.

Some of the judgments to be made in the coming months will rely on an interpretation of the university's primary values.

Popular Units:
We believe that it is essential to reject an across-the-board or incremental approach that would damage some of our high-est quality and most heavily enrolled units.

As a practical matter, and in a spirit of service, we have taken the position that any unit with a strong student enrollment should be preserved.

Conclusion of Report:
The data and information compiled in this report and the views expressed are intended to provide a background for a campus-wide discussion that should precede the formulation of a detailed action plan.

The Advisory Group will gratefully receive any comments on this report. We are continuing our work on the consideration of the academic support services and academic auxiliaries in Academic Affairs; we will issue a report on these units shortly.

We will also continue to provide information and advice to Chancellor Shaw and Vice Chancellor Vincow to whatever degree they request.

However, the substantive discussion regarding the strategic plan for Academic Affairs are now the responsibility of the university's regular governance structure.

We support the Chancellor's initiative to conduct a review of the administrative operations of the university, and we will cooperate with that process in any way that may be helpful.

We are confident that the SU community will join together in the discussions that will constructively shape our strategy and in the challenging task of implementing the final plan.

We believe that Syracuse University will emerge from this era of challenge as a stronger, more vital and more strategically focused institution.

Members of the Ad Hoc Committee who submitted the report include: Robert T. Allen, chair of advisory group and chair, Trustee Budget Committee.

Susan Crockett, dean, College for Human Development.

Cynthia Hirtzel, professor and chair, Chemical Engineering.

Howard Johnson, associate vice Chancellor for Human Development.

John Palmer, dean, Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs.

Gary Radke, associate professor of Fine Arts and director of the university Honors Program.

David Rubin, dean, S.I. Newhouse School of Public Affairs.

Ben Ware, vice president for research.

Michael Wasylenko, professor of Economics, chair Senate Budget Committee.

Tragedy inspires creation of program

What began as a little girl's losing battle with brain cancer ended with the creation of a summer camp for children with cancer.

When Gary Mervis' daughter Teddi became terminally ill with brain cancer, Mervis founded a camp for children afflicted with the disease. The camp, which came to be called Camp Good Days & Special Times, opened in 1980 with 63 campers and 75 volunteers. Today about 2,000 campers and volunteers participate every summer.

Julie Murfin, a sophomore at Boston University, has seen and experienced the healing power of Camp Good Days & Special Times firsthand. Murfin attended a program at camp called KATS, or Kids Adjusting Through Support, to help her deal with her grandfather's lung cancer. She found herself helping the volunteers and decided to become a Counselor-in-Training at Camp Good Days at the age of 16.

Although some may find it depressing and heartbreaking to work with children who are terminally or gravely ill, Murfin sees it differently. She describes the experience as "probably one of the purest happy feelings, or however you say that — not superficial, not like, 'Oh, I got an A.'"

A somber side
But of course, things are not always merry. One of the camp activities is a candlelight gathering in which campers express their feelings about fellow campers who have died.

One of Murfin's saddest memories is her recollection of one young girl saying, "It seems like every time I get to know someone, they die."

Such is the experience of many children at Camp Good Days.

Syracuse University doesn't take for granted its role in Camp Good Days, a Syracuse-based program for terminally-ill children and their families.

After graduating from the Newhouse School of Public Communications, Friedman interned at WTVI TV Channel 5.

"I have a passion for the camp," she says.

A volcano of energy is personified by Friedman.

"You can't be around cancer and not be affected by it," says Friedman.

Friedman's role is to plan and implement activities such as the New Kids On the Block concert and the Moscow Circus at the Carrier Dome. (Friedman has taken 50 kids to the circus as a circus in itself.)

The office coordinates support groups and other programs that aid families touched by cancer.

And the work of bringing a touch of joy and comfort to children continues.

A volcano of energy is personified by Friedman.

"You can't be around cancer and not be affected by it," says Friedman.

Friedman's role is to plan and implement activities such as the New Kids On the Block concert and the Moscow Circus at the Carrier Dome. (Friedman has taken 50 kids to the circus as a circus in itself.)

The office coordinates support groups and other programs that aid families touched by cancer.

And the work of bringing a touch of joy and comfort to children continues.
Report recommends school restructuring

By JODI LAMACNA
Editor in Chief

Appropriate consolidation and restructuring of schools and colleges may help maintain Syracuse University’s commitment to quality in research, teaching and service, according to a report written by the Chancellor’s Ad Hoc Advisory Group.

The group believes restructuring will enhance the university in four areas: improved quality of research and teaching, improved appeal to students, improved identity among potential donors and sponsors, and fiscal savings. The five schools and colleges that were smaller than many departments within larger academic units were the focus of the group, according to the report.

Architecture

The report recommends the consolidation of the School of Architecture with the College of Visual and Performing Arts. “Both are professional schools and have some overlap in their design programs,” the report begins. “However, it would be important that architecture retain considerable autonomy and visibility.”

Computer and Information Science

The faculty in the CIS department share research and teaching facilities with faculty in three areas, according to the advisory group’s report. These areas include computer engineering, physics and mathematics. The group advises that the CIS activities be moved into all three areas of study.

Information Studies

“The most obvious consolidation of Information Studies would be with the School of Management,” the report said. See STRUCTURE Page 4

SU Security occupies temporary quarters

By ALEX PICMAN
Contributing Writer

Syracuse University Security officers are comfortable in their temporary mobile offices, John Zrebiec, director of SU Security, said.

Plans for renovating security headquarters in the basement of Sims Hall have moved the security offices into three mobile offices, Zrebiec said.

He said security has been in the offices, which sit prepped up on a few bricks in front of Sims Hall, since June.

Over the summer, we were comfortable in our temporary facilities, he said. “So far, with all the students back, we still haven’t had any problems.”

The offices in Sims Hall will be renovated to offer SU an upgraded security department, according to Lt. Jay Duda, head of the renovation committee.

Most of SU Security’s departments have been moved into a smaller space in the mobile homes, Zrebiec said.

“Because of difficulties involved with moving technical equipment, Zrebiec said the communications department is still located in the basement of Sims Hall.

Still answering calls

The small communications room remains active, with an officer answering emergency calls and distress alarms from the blue light system, he said.

The renovations, scheduled to begin this week, will give officers more advanced data systems and improved space allocations, Duda said.

“We just outgrew the old facility,” Duda said. “We need day-to-day increases in space allocation for interviewing suspects, report writing, and in the locker room and lunchroom area.”

All renovations reflect the direct needs of the officers, Zrebiec said.

“I think it is important to say that the officers gave a strong input to guide the Design and Construction Department,” he said.

SU’s Design and Construction Department will oversee the development of the project, Duda said.

In SU Security’s present quarters, Zrebiec said life has not changed much for the officers, except that they have to adjust to smaller spaces. Duda said the renovation also has not affected where security officers send detainees.

“We have always sent detainees down to Syracuse Police,” Duda said. SU Security will remain in their mobile home unit until mid-November, when the renovation is scheduled to end.

Task force studies police relations

By JEREMY FREEMAN
Contributing Writer

The Syracuse-area Task Force on Community and Police Relations is half-way through its speakout series designed to improve community and police relations in Syracuse.

The group will hold another speakout Thursday at 7:00 p.m. at the Boys and Girls Club, 2100 E. Fayette St.

The speakout will present an opportunity for students and community members to voice their concerns and feelings about the police, said New York State Division for Human Rights Representative Valerie Woods.

The task force was created amid such recent events as the police beating of Rodney King in Los Angeles, Milwaukee police officers’ alleged negligence in the case of serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer, and recent charges of police brutality on Marshall Street, Woods said. The task force speakouts are intended to raise serious questions about the role of police officers in the community and possible abuses of power, she said.

“The common thread present in the past two meetings has been one of substantial disrespect on the part of police,” said Rainbow Coalition representative Alan Rosenthal.

Fact finding mission

The task force is primarily concerned with fact finding and has no legal authority to bear on elected officials, he said.

Rosenthal said that although a racial bias toward blacks is commonly voiced at the speakouts, the scope of police brutality extends well beyond that.

Citizens are being offered the opportunity to express their attitudes and recall experiences with law enforcement, he said.

The task force’s goal is to examine and See RELATE Page 4

Aquino seeks vote for base

Philippine leader Corazon Aquino will sponsor a referendum on the future of the Subic Bay Naval Station, after the Philippine Senate rejected a new base treaty yesterday.

The current treaty for Subic Bay, the largest American military base in Southeast Asia, expires on Monday.

Aquino's call for a referendum under the terms of the Philippine Constitution has the effect of extending the deadline for an American departure by at least several months.

The vote will not be held until late this year or in 1992.

Israeli loan dispute turns ugly

The Israeli loan dispute turned ugly Sunday when a rightist Cabinet minister called President Bush an anti-Semite and a liar.

The Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Arens later repudiated the verbal attack on Bush by his fellow Cabinet member.

Arens said that North's testimony was influenced by North's four-year-old hearing.

Harkin announces bid for Presidency

Senator Tom Harkin, 51, of Iowa, declared his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination yesterday.

Harkin joins Gov. L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia and former Senator Paul E. Tsongas of Massachusetts as the third major candidate for the nomination.

President Bush called the acquittal "a good decision." North said he and his family were "fully and completely exonerated."

Harkin was a member of the House of Representatives from 1975 to 1985 and has been a U.S. senator since 1985.

Thomas close to confirmation

After five days of hearings, the appointment of Judge Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court may be close to confirmation, according to Democratic sources.

Thomas said yesterday that he supports the death penalty in certain cases but would not give details about what those cases might be.

Democratic senators said that Thomas "stonewalling" on the subject of abortion and constitutional rights is working and the vote to confirm him will be close.

State

Graham set to save state

The Rev. Billy Graham is expected to tell New Yorkers what he thinks about the state during his Central Park crusade Sunday, from 4 to 6 p.m.

The crusade is the culmination of a four-year effort called Mission New York, which has already drawn five million people in appearances in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Albany and Uniondale.

"New York is definitely ready for the word of God," the 72-year-old evangelist said.

Graham's appearance on the park's Great Lawn, the first evangelistic crusade in New York City in more than 20 years, is expected to draw tens of thousands of people.

Dairy farmers plan protest

Dairy farmers in Oneida County say they cannot pay their taxes.

The farmers, hurt by low milk prices, will mail notices to local tax collectors this month informing them they do not have the money to pay school taxes.

The notices were distributed to about 120 dairy farmers Thursday at the Sangerfield Inn where dairy farmers upset over low milk prices have been meeting for the past six months.

The farmers said they hope the notices will prompt local officials to support the national milk supply by introducing production quotas.

The dairy farmers are on the brink of becoming extinct unless something is done to ensure profitable milk prices, said Peter Iannucci, a Waterville dairy farmer who has been organizing the dairy farmers.

The dairy group also decided to dissociate itself from other dairy groups in the state planning to participate in a nationwide milk strike scheduled for Oct. 1.

Swedish socialists suffer defeat

Financial problems including high taxes and a stagnant economy prompted Swedish voters to swing sharply to the right Sunday, giving non-Socialist parties about 53 percent of the vote.

The American people have been assured time and time again that President Bush is doing what he can to aid the plight of the unemployed in the United States. Yet his actions, entirely recent, seem to directly contradict his words.

This summer, President Bush signed a bill designed to show his political concern about the unemployed. The bill gave him the power to spend money on the unemployed, the United States, which would help the unemployed people and give money to unemployed people and their families until they can get back on their feet financially.

Since unemployment numbers are higher than they were last year at this time, a bill like this would make sense. Foreign aid to countries like Bangladesh as well as the proposed Most Favored Nation status for China continue to redirect revenues and potential markets from the United States to other countries.

President Bush must bite the bullet and make himself accountable to the American people for the skyrocketing unemployment rates. If he signs this bill and essentially takes the power out of his representatives who are closer to the problems, he will be doing the country a favor.

And maybe Americans will have reason to start believing the president’s words again.

T-shirts pose mindless threat

Since the beginning of the semester, we have heard everyone’s opinion on the Alpha Chi Rho T-shirt controversy — except mine.

Those T-shirts were the ultimate example of unscrupulous garbage. An army which participated in the manufacture, distribution, or wearing of the shirts ought to be put out of business in the mirror and asked themselves if they were proud of their actions.

BARRY STARK
NAKED TRUTH

I read about the T-shirt controversy in my hometown newspaper. The last thing Syracuse University needs is another public relations nightmare. It didn’t help in our pursuit of a better national reputation.

By the way — the best choice made was to ban the T-shirts.

I’m not going to insult anybody’s intelligence by claiming that the T-shirts fell under the category of academic freedom of expression.

The theme is separation. Garbage mixed in with recycling and cans mixed in with paper is at best annoying to the garbage and recycling cleaners. At worst, it is not recyclable, because it contaminates the recyclable material in the common bin so that it is unacceptable.

Waste overwhelms and we want quick riddance of the remains of our daily activities (such as eating, drinking, shopping, cleaning). Many of us are so anxious to clean up ends of our own by-products that we’ll employ the most convenient method to do so. Instead of “You’re not an Orangeman until you know the words to your school songs.”

You understand one of the finest institutions in the world! Be proud of it! Syracuse University has some of the finest traditions around. From the ringing of the Grousie Chimes to Down Squad to SU football, these traditions have tied SU students and alumni together for over a hundred years.

Two traditions that are integral to our history but unknown by the majority of our student body are our fight song, “Down the Field,” and our alma mater. These songs are played at the beginning and end of every home Orangemen football and basketball game.

So let’s bring these songs out of the archives and back onto the playing field! Below are the lyrics. Cut them out and bring them to the game Saturday! What better chance to revive his/her/our increase school spirit than at a football game? Weekend and such an important game as SU vs. Florida? The team needs our support!

So cheer loud, blood Orange, and sing along when the Pride of the Orange play our school songs in the Dome!

If you want some practice, come out to the Quad at 2:30 p.m. Saturday for the Pre-game concert. Get that school spirit started early! Then match with the band and let the Gators hear what they are in for!

Each loyal son knows the GATORS will lose.
For we’ll fight, yee we’ll fight, and with all our might.

Minorities speak out on environment

By GENARO C. ARMAS
Contributing Writer

The Baobab Society, a new student group on the SUNY College of Environmental Science and Forestry campus, is dedicated to creating and preserving a voice for black and Hispanic students on environmental issues. The fledgling organization, which was formed last April, consists of about 25 students. It derives its name from a tree, common throughout the sub-Saharan region of Africa, which sometimes grows sturdier and older than California’s redwoods.

Flores, also known as Kamua Seitu Karume, wants to change the general perception of the environmental movement. “When you visualize the movement’s image today, you think about hippies and tie-dyes. We must realize that all citizens are part of the environment, whether they live in Harlem, Watts or the Upper East Side.”

“Everyone within the population has the power to impact the environment,” Flores said. What is most distressing, however, is the lack of involvement within the black and Hispanic communities.

“Most environmental problems hit these areas worse because of poverty,” said Flores. “There is a lack of knowledge and understanding that they are a part of the environment as well.”

Where’s the toxic waste?

In addition, Flores said the majority of toxic waste dumps and sewage plants are located in disadvantaged areas, such as rural Alabama and Harlem.

“The attitude of the American government, let alone the university, has been one of laissez-faire,” Flores said. “It is a silent issue.”

According to Flores, this is a direct result of a lack of representation by the concerned groups.

“We must realize that it is not a problem with the people themselves, but economic struggle within these poverty-stricken areas. There aren’t many other alternatives these people can turn to,” he said.

Flores maintains, however, that the future looks bright. At the society’s first meeting, Flores received positive feedback and a willingness to work from his small but loyal group.

In terms of an organization in ESF, though, there is a substantial membership. Flores also added, “We are the first group at ESF to provide a sense of unity and cultural identity for minority students.”

Students of all races are welcome to join Baobab, however.

“The environment is everyone’s problem,” Flores said. The self-supported group meets every Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. in the ESF Student Group Room.

1-900 firm goes bankrupt
The nation's sixth-largest long-distance company, Teleglobe Communications Inc., has announced its intention to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection.
The company, based in Rockville, Md., is one of the biggest providers of 900-number talk lines. It took in half its $300 million revenue last year from 900-number services that charge $3.90 a minute for dating services, financial advice and job tips.
Part of the reason for the company's collapse is angry customers who have refused to pay high fees for 900 calls.

Ad agencies pick best new shows
Advertising agencies may not be fond of the new fall television lineup, but they've chosen the shows that would most likely buy time on nonetheless.
Their favorite shows, according to USA Today, include ABC's Home Improvement, Step By Step, CBS' The Royal Family and The Carol Burnett Show and NBC's Nurses.
Home Improvement and Step By Step benefit from their time slots—Improvement follows the hit Roseanne, and Step By Step joins the already popular TGIF lineup on Friday nights.
The ad executives' least-liked shows were Good & Evil, I'll Fly Away, Flash 'N Blood, The Adventures of Mark and Brian and The Ultimate Challenge.

Ted Delias has been part of Varsity for over three decades.

Just as the Varsity is a campus institution, so is the annual crowning of the Homecoming king and queen, which took place at the restaurant last night. The coronation story is on Page 11.

Before the Carrier Dome, before Vietnam, before Elvis Presley, before Pearl Harbor, there was the Varsity restaurant.
Then, there was a wide-screen television showing a Dave Johnson basketball dunk prompting students to scream, their cheers unintelligible because of mouths stuffed with mozzarella and pepperoni.

In fact, pizza wasn't served at Varsity back then, just entrées like beef stew and chicken a la king.

Ted Delias was there, though he looked quite different. Fifty-five years ago, Delias' perpetually tousled hair wasn't a stark white. He was only 11 years old.

Delias, now 66, began working in 1936 at the restaurant his Greek immigrant father founded 11 years earlier. He and his two brothers, who have co-owned Varsity since 1967, have seen three generations of Syracuse University students come through the doors and plunk money on the counter.

"In the '30s, students dressed well — suits and jackets and shirts and ties," said Delias, gesturing towards one of the poster-sized photos on the wall. The picture depicts two students, one in a gray three-piece suit and the other in a white varsity sweater emblazoned with an orange 'S.'

Styles change
"After that everyone wore dungarees," Delias continued. "It was total blue up here. Now people are starting to dress better again."

"Of course, they're not quite there yet," he observed.

Delias said Varsity has not always been the student hangout it is now. In the beginning it was mainly a place for neighborhood residents and only incidentally for students. Those students, too, were different, Delias said.
This was a gourmet restaurant in the Job placement office aids education majors

By SHEILA DOUGHERTY
Contributing Writer

Students in Syracuse University's School of Education who need help finding jobs should go to the Educational Placement Office, according to Neal Appelby, director of student services for the School of Education.

The placement office helps students prepare job applications and resumes, offers workshops on interviewing techniques and notifies students of job openings, Appelby said.

"It's a service provided by the School of Education for education graduates to help them locate positions and follow through on the job application process," he said.

Graduating students pay a fee of $35 to open a placement file at the office, Appelby said. The office then sets up credentials and keeps letters of recommendation to be sent to prospective employers, he said.

"Education requires placement files," said Barbara Maphey, coordinator of education placement.

"People have come in and they've tried to apply to jobs in education without a placement file, but it's almost impossible now," she said.

Official files

Employers want prospective employees to send official credentials and reference letters, Maphey said.

"They have to have something in a confidential state, representing a university," she said.

Onces they have started a file, graduates are free to use and update it anytime, Appelby said.

"After (graduates) have used the service, they can let it lapse and pick it up again at any time by paying a reactivation fee and by putting new letters in as they want," Appelby said.

The office publishes a weekly newsletter in which school districts advertise open teaching and administrative positions, Maphey said.

"It's a very significant thing at Syracuse," she said. "It's a consortium of 13 area schools and universities like Wells College, Colgate and Cornell."

The event is held in Cortland, and about 70 to 100 school districts from across the United States participate, Maphey said.

"It's an opportunity for students who are graduating with a teaching degree to meet with a number of potential employers," Appelby said.

"On the other side, it's an opportunity for potential employers who are looking for new teachers to fill positions in their area to meet with people who are potential candidates."

The publication advertises information about jobs in all 50 states, but the majority are from the northeastern United States, Maphey said.

"Syracuse University has a very good reputation for producing very good teachers," Maphey said. "The School of Education has a very good reputation, so (school districts) do seek us out to advertise in our newsletter."

The placement office also participates in a central New York education event known as Teacher Recruitment Day, Maphey said.

"It's a very significant thing at Syracuse," she said. "It's a consortium of 13 area schools and universities like Wells College, Colgate and Cornell."

Tom Petty tour comes to Syracuse

BY KRISTIN LIEB
Editorial Editor

Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers’ most recent tour, in support of their new album Into The Great Wide Open, stops at Syracuse’s War Memorial Auditorium on Tuesday, September 19th.

DELLAS Continued from Page 7 early ’30s,” Dallas reminisced. “It was very art deco, with high-backed, wooden, black-walled booths. We had all kinds of home-cooked meals and two different menus for lunch and dinner. Students ate better then. Everyone ate well-rounded meals.”

It was only the demand for fast food after World War II that caused Varsity to switch to cafeteria-style dining and establish the restaurant as a place where students could relax.

Varsity entered its current era about 20 years ago when the homemade ice cream stand became the pizza kitchen it is today. Seven years ago Dallas introduced wings, and today dinners have all but disappeared from the menu to make room for better-selling items such as cheesesteaks and burgers.

But those menu changes haven’t kept Varsity from becoming less and less a student hangout in the past decade, according to Dallas. He said he knows fewer of the students of the past years.

As time goes by:

“The social structure was different then,” he said. “The school was so small you could walk down the street and know nine out of 10 people. Now it’s hard to get close.”

Although he cited increased enrollment and new choices for students like the Schine Student Center, it’s clear that Dallas believes students themselves have changed. He is hard-pressed to think of stories from recent times but can think of tales out of the 1930s and 1940s.

Dallas talked about pop rallies held on Marshall Street the night before a big Syracuse-Colgate football game, including one at which students poured gasoline down the streetcar tracks and lit a fire that torched the railroad into Genesee Street.

He reminisced about the time a group of students drove a Model A Ford through the front doors of Varsity and ordered ice cream.

“During the ’30s, students were more relaxed, but I think they had more unit of life. It was the old decor,” he said. “Kids today are drinking it’s all a holl of more than these days. I think they’re drinking it more today, though,” he added.

With its garish orange walls, juke box, hand-lettered menu and thick plastic soda glasses, Varsity seems like an old college hangout that made only a half-hearted attempt at entering the 1990s.

But one is taken aback at how much of the venerable old Varsity, is it possible that the four-word sign: “ALL MAJORS WELCOME!” barely predates Coach Mac? And can it be that the four-word phrase “Your wings are ready” dates only to 1938?

That was then, this is now.

And is it possible that the nostalgic atmosphere that makes Varsity so appealing is not enough for a man who longs for a time not 30 years past, but half a century?

“I like it both ways,” Dallas said about the differences between working now or when he began. “But I guess I enjoyed the ’30s more.”

Dallas looked around the restaurant, scanning first at the new menu above the pizza en- clave and finally stopping at the television in the middle of the dining room. “Sometimes I wish there was more of a menu,” he said. “It would be unique today. There’s nothing around like that.”

Dallas turned to Marie, his wife of 22 years, who was drumming her fingers on the cash register to the Chevrolet jingle coming from the TV behind her. She smiled and shrugged.

Dallas was asked how long he expects to be manning the same cash register.

“Forever and ever,” he answered. “This is the fountain of youth. No one is always 17 to 22 years old. They never change. They never change.”

“MY FREE TIME REALLY PAYS OFF.”

No matter how hard you hit the books, you can’t study all the time. And no matter how much you spend, you never have enough money. So I decided to put my free time to good use. I got a job at UPS.

UPS pays me almost $10,000 a year for working about 4 hours a day. They let you pick a part-time schedule that won’t conflict with your course load. You can work mornings, afternoons, even evenings. You get benefits, paid vacations, even a student loan if you need it. Most jobs are in Operations. But you might get a job at Accounting, Industrial Engineering, I.S. or Customer Service.

“Look into UPS. No other employer in town pays students more for their ‘free’ time.”

For Mark Peterson and Tina Antonakakis, the wait is over.

Last night at Varsity, at 7:45 p.m., Channel 3 weatherman Wayne Mahar named them Homecoming king and queen amidst thunderous cheering and the shedding of a few tears.

Antonakakis, a public relations student, is dually enrolled in political science and Spanish, and she is also a member of Golden Key, the Order of Omega, and the Newhouse Public Relations Faculty Search Committee.

He is also a member of Golden Key, the Order of Omega, and the Newhouse Dean’s Advisory Board.

After graduation, he hopes to work in public relations in either a corporate or agency setting.

Antonakakis is dually enrolled in political science and Spanish, and she is also a member of Golden Key, the National Honor Society, the Order of Omega and the Tau Alpha Chi Journalism Honor Society.

Last semester, she studied abroad in Madrid. She also served as a newscaster for UUTV and 289, and she is a member of Choral Union.

Peterson, a public relations major with a minor in geography, is president of the Public Relations Student Society of America (PRSSA) and is the only student serving on the Newhouse Public Relations Faculty Search Committee.

1991 Homecoming King and Queen Mark Peterson and Tina Antonakakis were crowned Monday night at Varsity Pizza.

Antonakakis hopes to move to the District of Columbia after graduating and work on Capitol Hill or for the State Department.

From 208 to 2

The announcement was the climax of a selection process that began two weeks and 208 applicants ago.

First, all applicants took an exam on the history of Syracuse University.

From this test, the top 10 males and females were selected. These 20 students were then interviewed by a selection committee comprised of three judges.

Based on the interviews and the exam scores, the top three males and females were selected. The judges then chose the winners, but no one knew who won.

That is, until last night.

The runners-up were, in order, Bill Gehman and Mitchell Messinger for king, and Randi Beth Goldberg and Stephanie Lynn Nazzaro for queen.

The runners-up were, in order, Bill Gehman and Mitchell Messinger for king, and Randi Beth Goldberg and Stephanie Lynn Nazzaro for queen.

This year, however, something else has been added. During Sunday’s football game against Florida, Peterson and Antonakakis will be included in the half-time proceedings.

In addition, they may be called upon to speak to alumni groups.

Perhaps Peterson summed the evening up best when he said, “It should be a great week for everybody.”

State in 1989 when David Bavaro was injured on the fourth play of the game.

The Seminole offense took advantage of Lusardi’s inexperience. That game served as motivation for Lusardi’s play against the Terps, Pasqualoni said.

"(Florida State) gave John a hard time all day," he said. "I think what had happened was John remembered that and I reminded him about it when he went into the game."

"I told him, 'It's not going to be that way tonight. You put in two hard years and this is why you work hard. This is why you pay attention because anybody's only one hike away from being in the game.' He played his butt off."

Lusardi, who was known mainly for his special teams play, also made a key block in Shelby Hill’s 61-yard punt return for a touchdown in the fourth quarter.

The Womack Package
Sophomore quarterback Doug Womack may be the third string quarterback, but he still has found his niche in the SU offense.

Pasqualoni said the Orange-men have a group of plays designed for Womack.

Womack scored his first touchdown of the year against Maryland, taking a keeper on the option around right end for a seven-yard score.

"We have some plays, the Doug Womack package, that we want to use in certain areas of the field," Pasqualoni said. "He went in and scored. He did a good job of operating the plays we've asked him to play. We're just excited about him. He's a dynamic player."

Up-Hill climb
On the first Maryland punt, Shelby Hill was hit in the chest by the Terps’ Brandon Bertha despite his fair catch signal. The hit to the chest kept Hill, in only his second game returning punts, out for two plays.

Hill got revenge on the Terrapins when he returned a punt for 61 yards to the Terrapins 6 with 6:00 left in the game and the Orangemen leading 24-17.

"It was a good shot he took," Pasqualoni said. "You've got to give Shelby a lot of credit. He got knocked out on the first one, but he came back and knocked them out on the last one."

Hill's return was the first punt returned for a touchdown since Scott Schwedes broke an 80-yard return against Navy in 1986.

Mitchell on the nose
Maryland quarterbacks Jim Sandwisch and John Kaleomu have a group of plays, the Womack Package, the Orangemen leading 24-17.

"Kevin is still getting better," Pasqualoni said. "Kevin's strong point in his intensity, tremendous athletic ability, quickness and speed."

"He's working hard and learning the fine points and techniques of the position."

Running away
An integral part of a wide receiver's job is returning punts, but SU receivers Hill and Qadry Ismail have been working overtime.

Hill returns punts for the Orangemen and Ismail returns kickoffs. Ismail is also the outside contain man on punt coverage.

Because of all this running, Pasqualoni said he will rotate Hill returns for punts and Ismail returns kickoff. Ismail is also the outside contain man on punt coverage.

The beneficiary of the majority of the additional playing time will be Antonio Johnson.

"I think one of the things we have to be careful of is how much running Qadry and Shelby are doing," Pasqualoni said. "They're covering punts. They're covering kickoffs. Shelby's now returning punts. We've got to get more receivers involved in the game. It's just too much for them."

Field hockey draws blank during weekend

By GIL PACOVICH
Staff Writer

The Syracuse University women's field hockey team of 1990 went 17-3, and so far this year's squad has only one thing in common with last year's team.

Three losses.

The Orangewomen, 1-3, fell to Penn State 5-0 on Friday, and North Carolina on Saturday, 5-1.

SU coach Kathleen Parker said she was more disappointed with her team's performance than its record.

"The record doesn't bother me," Parker said. "It's the scores from this weekend that bother me."

Most irritating to Parker was the Orangewomen's lack of offense.

"I was extremely disappointed that we were blown out by both teams," Parker said.

Still, Parker praised the Lady Lions, who were a Final Four team last year.

"Penn State is stronger than us at every position," Parker said. "We were outclassed by them."

Not only did Penn State shut out Syracuse, but the Lady Lions also kept North Carolina off the scoreboard in registering a 5-0 win.

Parker said Syracuse's loss to North Carolina could affect the team later in the season.

"We should have had a better game with them," Parker said. "It might hurt us down the line that we didn't."

Even though the team dropped two games over the weekend, Parker praised the play of senior Diana Despiau Molina.

"Because the team was easily defeated this weekend, Parker said the team has to win virtually all of its remaining games in order to qualify for postseason play.

"We've really got to win," Parker said. "We have no other choice. We have to win every other game. I don't think we can lose very many more."

This Sunday the Orangewomen host the Alumnae game at 11 a.m. on Coyne Field. Their regular-season schedule resumes on Sept. 28 and 29 when the team will play C.W. Post and Hofstra on Long Island.

The Orangewomen against what looks like their toughest competition of the year: the 14th ranked Ohio State Buckeyes.

"We will definitely need to maintain our focus and keep improving as we move toward Ohio State," Schulte said. "I think this past weekend was a step in that direction."

After compiling three goals and nine assists last season, Syracuse University soccer forward Eric Puls had been shut out through the first three games of this season.

Now Puls leads the Orangemen in scoring.

Puls scored two goals, the last one coming with 7:15 left in the game, to break a 3-3 tie, and he now has six in the Orangemen's 0-3 victory at Boston College on Sunday.

"Eric played a good game," SU coach Dean Foti said. "He finished off the opportunities when he had them. He did some nice things on attack."

Since the only college games I attended are at the Carrier Dome, and the only college league I root for is Syracuse University, I get this empty feeling as I watch other college games.

Because, compared to going to a game at somewhere like Michigan or Glamis, SU football games are about as much fun and excitement as a really good Winston-Salem State game.

The primary cause for the general aura of apathy that is connected with SU football on this campus, without a doubt, the Carrier Dome.

The Dome, as we here at SU endearingly call it, is the closest one will come to watching a football game from the comfort of his home. The lighting which induces migraines and nausea.

If you're lucky enough to actually be a student at the university that the football team proudly represents, you are ushered to your seat in the corner of the end zone.

The 50-yard line seats are reserved for the really berserk fans—55-year-old couples from DeWitt that are the epitome of what is called the uncontrollable fan.

The entire atmosphere surrounding an SU football game at the Dome is sleep-inducing. I find myself looking around in the third quarter more for the time left in the game than the score.

Let's face it, watching football indoors from bad seats is not fun.

For everything the Dome has done to help the football program, it has made going to an SU home game a chore, and has helped foster the apathetic attitude that most students have toward the football team.

Dome football is interchangeable. The fact that Syracuse is often home to incontinent weather does not necessitate indoor football.

Football was made to be played outdoors in the elements. SU fans would flock to games with blankets and thermoses of uh ... coffee.

Going to a game would be fun. Cold, but fun. Besides I'm sure the imaginative student body would find ways to keep warm.

The SU student body's homecoming game against Florida should be a frenzy of excitement. Hey, I would even settle for something like last week.

"We're certainly concerned about the turnover situation," Pasqualoni said. "The ball security something I thought I coached last week, but obviously I'm not doing a good job at it."

"We talk about ball security all the time. We're going to continue to coach and stress it. The players have to want to get it."

Syracuse running back David Walker carried the ball 14 times for 92 yards and caught a touchdown pass in SU's 3-0 win over Rutgers University. Walker was one of several Orangemen who lead SU to a three-game sweep.

Junior middle blocker Aimee Mask attempts a spike during last weekend's action in Syracuse University's 3-0 win over Rutgers University. Mask was one of several Orangewomen who lead SU to a three-game sweep.

Their concentration and positive attitude for this weekend's tournament, the Bucknell Invitational in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, is the key.

Orange truck along, remain undefeated

By JEV BOROW

Staff Writer

To paraphrase the Grateful Dead, as did Syracuse University volleyball coach Dan Smith, the Orangewomen "just seem to keep on trucking along."

Schulte's allusion to the songwriting of the great woman is reminiscent of the Orangewomen's third consecutive weekend sweep at Manley Field House, where SU raised its record to 9-0 for the season.

The Orangewomen won their opening two matches, Friday night against Rutgers Scarlet Knights and then Saturday versus the University of Buffalo Bulls.

After losing a game, SU finished off the weekend sweep with a 3-1 victory over the Northeastern Huskies.

The 9-0 start is the best start of a season for the Orangewomen since SU bounced back from getting in to 3-3 in the NCAA in 1981.

SU's early season success can be attributed to many factors, perhaps the greatest of which is the combined performance of seniors Jessica Paarlberg and Kathy Patton, as well as junior Annie Parisien.

The trio's success has given rise to a couple of nicknames; the killer P's and Lethal Weapon III. Whatever the name, Paarlberg, Patton and Parisien were again at the forefront of the SU attack.

Other Orangewomen who excelled over the weekend are freshman Tina Grasselli, who recorded fifteen assists against the Royals, and juniors Aimee Mask and Andrea Carson, who also turned in outstanding efforts.

"It was a good weekend for us," Schulte said. "We had contributions from a lot of different people, and we played pretty well."

While the Orangewomen are pleased with the 9-0 start, they are not surprised with the level the team has been playing at.

"We're pretty much where I think we should be at this point of the season," Paarlberg said. "We have been doing a lot of things well, but, I think we are more relaxed and are communicating better than we have been since I have been here," Mask said. "Our passing and our defense have really improved, and I think we are all getting along really well."

The Orangewomen will have to keep kicking in the first three games. Then we turn it around to get four goals in regulation."

The Orangemen tied the score at 2-2, with 13:45 left in the first half, when Paul Young scored his second goal of the season on a pass from Grace.

"We had a corner kick," Grace said. "They cleared it out and it was pulled out to me wide. I just tucked it in to Young, who tapped it once and drilled it."

The Orangemen still weren't finished in the first half. With 2:45 to go, Mike Bortolletti scored his first goal of the season on an assist by Puls. This goal gave SU the 3-2 halftime lead.
Shortage of students forces SU budget cuts

By ERIN NEFF
Managing Editor

As Syracuse University enters an era of downsizing with budget cuts and the probable consolidation of programs and schools, Chancellor's Ad Hoc Advisory Group has made its recommendations based in part on proposed demographic and enrollment figures for the Northeast.

An estimated 406,590 high school graduations will occur in the Northeast in 1995, according to data from the Office of Enrollment Management.

Matriculated students of that year added to incoming freshman from that pool of high school graduations will make up the total SU undergraduate enrollment at a proposed 9,600 in a worst-case scenario.

This is down considerably from the 11,905 total SU undergraduate enrollment in 1986 and the estimated enrollment of 11,574 for 1991.

Reeling from these figures and the reduction in state and federal aid packages, the university is reeling in an age of fiscal "challenge."

SU relies on demographic data for the Northeast because it is the principal source of students and because those figures correlate more closely to the university than national information, according to the Ad Hoc committee.

U.S. forces may attack Iraq again
The United States has put thousands of troops on alert to prepare for another attack on Iraq, perhaps within days, if Saddam Hussein does not agree to full inspection of weapons sites.
President Bush did not respond to reporters who asked if he was sending troops back to Saudi Arabia.
The New York Times correspondant, Fred Francis cited unidentified Pentagon sources as saying officials "are putting the finishing touches on a plan to attack Iraq."
Francis reported that "several dozen" military units in the United States have been put on alert, including some Patriot missile batteries.
At the United Nations, diplomats who spoke on condition of anonymity said the United States, Britain and France stand ready to back U.N. weapons inspectors with military forces if Baghdad balks on inspections.
"The only thing that stops this plan ... is a full capitulation from Iraq allowing complete unfothered inspection," Francis reported.
Croatian capital attacked by Serbians
Zagreb, the capital of Croatia, was attacked by Serbians in fighting across the secessionist republic.
"This country is only days away from a state of irretrievable civil war," said EC mediator Lord Carrington.

Parasites threaten fish in Great Lakes
The parasitic sea lamprey is threatening the $4.7 billion fishing industry in the Great Lakes.
Rep. Bob Davis, D-Mich., said the federal government needs to rescue the fishing industry.
The eel-like lamprey, which migrated to the lakes from the Atlantic Ocean more than 100 million years ago, attaches itself to a fish with a sucking disk.
Lamprey kill fish by piercing scales and skin and sucking out bodily fluids.
During the 12 to 20 months of its adult parasitic stage, a lamprey can kill about 40 pounds of fish.

Sewage creates stink on city's East Side
Human waste has been detected in 23 of the 93 miles of sewer pipe between Meadowbrook Creek and the Erie Canal in DeWitt, the state Department of Environmental Conservation said.
Test results showed the sewage flows from the city into a small stream near the Erie Canal.
In Syracuse, state tests show the sewage problem exists along the length of the creek, but the worst contamination is on Madison Street.

Power failure delays flights for hours
Flights were delayed across the country today when a power failure put air traffic at New York's three major airports on hold for almost four hours.
Power outage at Madison Metropolitan long-distance telephone switching center stranded thousands of passengers at Kennedy, La Guardia and Newark airports and kept flights on the runways.
The power failure affected a major communication link between the main air traffic control centers for the three airports, a Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman said.

WEATHER
Breezy and cool
Today would be a good day for kites on the Quad. With 10 to 20 mph winds, it'll be breezy and very cool with a 60 percent chance of showers. Expect a high near 60. Tonight temperatures will drop into the 40s and we'll have periods of cloudiness.

Friday
It'll be unseasonably cool today with a high near 50. Expect partly sunny skies to bring us into the weekend.

Weekend
Saturday will be sunny and cool for our homecoming game against the Florida Gators. Expect temperatures in the 50s for your tailgating parties. Sunday will be milder and sunny.

Society provides artistic opportunities

By MICHAEL FLYNN

Contributing Writer

Despite its name, the Com- fort Society is not a therapy group for people with mattress problems, said Leslie Klecan, president of the society.

Named after George F. Com- fort, who founded the Syracuse University art department in 1874, the group started 10 years ago so people could gain firsthand art experience, she said.

"We're not a group of manic depressives, and we don't sit around in huge chairs smok- ing pipes," she said. "It's an organization that's there for people interested in the arts— it could be music, visual arts, performing arts, or whatever. Hopefully, it's a kind of social net- work."

The group is planning a trip to a 20th century museum of art in Buffalo and will continue a tradition of showing interesting movies, Klecan said.

"One of the things we're going to do is have one free film a month," she said. They're not exactly 'arty-farty' films. Last month showed a lot of David Lynch films—things that aren't necessarily your fine art films."

Small but diverse membership

Despite a usual membership of between 10 and 15 people, Klecan is quick to point out the group's diversity.

"We have people from all different majors, and anyone from freshmen to graduate stu- dents," she said. "We even had returning students older than myself."

"Last year, we had the guy who rings the bells in Crouse College."

A tradition has been the society's "Lunch and Learn" after- noons. Members bring their lunches and enjoy a stimulating talk from a guest speaker, Kle- can said.

"Last year, we had a visiting professor from England come in and speak on publishing because that's a big concern for people that are writing and taking classes in the arts," she said.

"He was very, very knowl- edgeable about everything, and he sort of sat around and had lunch... just talking to people," she said. The group often has professors hold speeches and talk to an informal basis.

"Many times you'll find them much more personable outside the classroom," she said.

"Students taking Fine Arts 205 and 206 might be particu- larly interested in joining," she said.

Art and diversity

"You can added that if students become involved in the society, they not only study the diversity of the arts in class, but also have a chance to meet people who honestly like the arts and even indulge in the arts for a living."

The group tries to accommodate members with certain in- terests or those who want to see a new movie or exhibit.

As a graduate student, Kle- can said she is conscious of the busy lifestyles of college stu- dents. She said last year the group had three formal meet- ings, and the rest of its time was spent coming in contact with art.

"The group will have four formal meetings, she said. The first meeting of each semester are important because the members decide on officers and set a tentative sched- ule for the upcoming months, she said.

Gene Plunkett, the vice-presi- dent of the society, said she is optimistic about the club's fu- ture.

"We're a small group now," she said, "but we're hoping to enlarge as much as we can. We're waiting for word on some meetings coming up that we can go to, and we want people to come to the meetings and tell us what they would like to do. We love input from our mem- bers."

The society receives a "small" amount of funding from the Graduate Student Organization, said Klecan. Recently, the soci- ety appointed its first GSMO representative, Maggie Tho- mpton, who will serve as a link between the two organizations, Klecan said.

The proposed trip to Buffalo must be approved by the art department if the group plans on having school funding, she said.

Klecan said the group has become mismanaged in the past.

Problems in the past

"She said past officers let the organization slide because of a lack of organization and consis- tency in maintaining the group's intent—which is bringing people in touch with art and those who appreciate it."

Klecan said she and Plunkett have pinpointed those faults and now have the group running smoothly.

"We're going to really get people active," she said. "Not so much that they have to work, but that they will be committed and stay interested and take it as an organization or a club, rather than something where they go once and that's it."

The society will hold its first meeting in Room 441A of the Hall of Languages today at 4:15 p.m., she said. Klecan said that people who are interested in joining the society but can't make the meeting will leave a note in the group's mailbox in the Hall of Languages, Room 441.
Caution needed in the Gulf

About a year ago, the United States was gearing up for Operation Desert Storm. Now, as the United Nations attempts to enforce the resolutions set by the cease-fire agreement, troops and ships are being sent to the Persian Gulf to seek a settlement of the region and force Saddam Hussein to disclose his country's weapon systems and holdings.

The United States and its allies must be treated with extreme caution by the United States and its allies. No American wants to see another conflict in the region, considering our ignorance of the weaponry Iraq possesses.

As one military analyst put it, Saddam is "more than just another thug." During the Persian Gulf war, Saddam seemed willing to deprive his people and aid in their destruction in an exchange for power. There is no way to ensure this will not happen again.

The American people must, like it or not, prepare for an extended United States and allied military presence in the Persian Gulf, much like we did in Vietnam. We can hope to get something similar to the UN agreement, which saved his own regime's power in Iraq.

All hope lies in the hands of the Iraqi president and his government as they try to comply with UN resolutions. However, caution and discretion are the only necessary actions at this point.

Restaurants serve 'cultured' food

Do you realize what goes on in the back of restaurants? We are not talking about the gambling, the illegal aliens and the drug trafficking. We are talking about the games people play with the food they eat.

No matter how many health regulations a restaurant swears to comply with, it is not a disinterested employee to protect your food in a restaurant.

For the last six summers we have worked as servers in a local chain in the area. One story in particular would make you shudder.

A common misconception is that the customer is the one to blame. You see these glorious bodies walking over the kitchen, but do you ever even know where they have been? Yet what the customer doesn't see is the waiter smoking in the shadows of the kitchen, the waiter who spits in their salad. And he's a nice waiter. A kitchen is like jail: mean, bitter people are there. Most of the time it is not the chef who is vile and mischievous, though one of us once saw a cook wiping his nose with his hands while working.

But beware of other employees. One of us works with a man who found it funny to take his dirty foot step on every salad in the walk-in refrigerator. This man rammaged through the pigeon feces in the walk-in kitchen with his greedy, juicy hands because the customer could not get the help. This man, who had been in a 97 degree kitchen for eight hours, rubbed a crab cake underneath his abused foot and proceeded to serve it with a smile.

This is more common than one wants to believe. From our experience in the kitchen, old seafood is revived with lemon, fish that lands on the floor is always served, rotting produce is offered incognito, and parasitic swordfish is thrown on the grill and served up hot.

But don't worry, none of this happens in clean, cultured upstate New York.

Grades don't say it all

To the editor:

I would like to respond to Gina Mazzariello's letter commenting on the Daily Orange story about my talk at Franklin Hall on September 12.

Some of the statements attributed to me by Ms. Mazzariello do not reflect my views, but the bottom line is that I think learning is more important than grades as correct.

I first developed my views from my experience as an undergraduate at Hopkins where grade-grubbing pre-meds would push curves on multiple choice tests to a point where below a 90 was a C. Those same grade-grubbers had no interest in the community and freaked out when faced with a thought question.

My experience as a professor has supported my initial view. I know many students with 3.7 to 4.0 averages who are not as knowledgeable, creative, or involved as students with lower averages.

I also know several who have had much more difficulty getting in top graduate schools with lower averages. As far as I am concerned that is a realistic world for me.

Ms. Mazzariello may be concerned that my position is giving some students who don't seem to care about academics an excuse to party more. I share that concern but am confident that students like that probably have read neither The Daily Orange nor her letter.

Mr. Mazzariello, and more importantly, many of those students may be avoiding academics because they don't feel that understanding is an end goal or grades, not learning.

Ge grant package helps future faculty

By SHERRI BROUJELLE
Contributing Writer

The General Electric Foundation donated a $330,000 grant package to provide Syracuse University doctoral degree candidates with student loans, according to Robert Jensen, dean of the Graduate School.

The loan, which will be distributed over the next three years, will be forgivable if students pursue faculty positions in academia or engineering, Jensen said.

If students decide to pursue a career in teaching, he said they will be required to repay the loan. The unpaid loans will then be given to other students.

This program is designed to encourage some of our best graduate students to pursue careers as faculty members, he said.

The forgivable loan may provide the critical extra support that graduate students and families require in order to complete several years of study, he said.

The money for graduate students is part of a GE program designed to increase the number of women and black, Hispanic and American Indian students in the faculty ranks of U.S. schools of engineering, physical and computer sciences, Jensen said.

For the underrepresented "Essentially, the loans are for under-represented groups to increase the number of female and under-represented faculty," he said. "The idea is that these forgivable loans will support these doctoral students."

The loan program may also be an incentive for someone working in the private sector to return to graduate school, he said.

In addition to graduate student loans, one-third of the GE grants will be allocated to undergraduate research, according to Richard Pilgrim, director of the Undergraduate Research Program.

Under the grant, 36 undergraduates will receive stipends for participating in research programs in science fields, such as bioengineering, chemistry and computational physics, Pilgrim said. Some programs have already received money from the grant. For more information, call 476-0845.

Students who have an interest in engineering should apply through the Undergraduate Research Program, he said.

Jensen said he hopes GE will continue its Faculty for the Future Program at SU.

"I hope the grant will be a continuing thing," he said. "Right now, it is just a three-year program."

Adam Sande, a Watson Hall resident, said, "I think it's a good idea, but they're using it the wrong way."

He said that the back doors to Watson are opened all day long.

"I hate the system. I think it's good (to have one) ... but I wish there were another way," said Sharon Kline, a transfer student from Utica.

"I don't sense a real problem," Goodwin said. "People are just getting over the initial frustration of having to bring their ID every time they go out."

Michael Broberg, director of Brewster/Boland, said that the system has definitely shown some success.

Incident reports of people who are not supposed to be in the building have been much lower since the system was installed, he said. Last year there were only two such reports in that hall.

Nice, but not flawless

Residence hall directors, SU administrators and students say that the system does have some faults.

The biggest problem cited has been students holding the door open for others, whether they know them or not.

"Who is going to shut the door in someone's face?" asked Natasha Rennie, a former Brewster/Boland resident.

"It's too bad that we have to ask people to be less polite," Broberg said.

He said the only solution would be 24-hour RSAs.

"But that would be more like a prison," he said.

RSAs are on duty from midnight until 7 a.m. in all other halls.

One RSA said that the biggest problems he has encountered with the system are those students who forget their IDs and those who have been drinking.

One Dellplain resident said that he wouldn't mind such security provisions.

"It would make me feel so much safer," he said.

There have been some technical problems with access readers, but security has been very good to respond quickly, Kohr and Goodwin agreed.

The next phase will be installation of cameras and intercoms at the loading docks of all residence halls. Kohr said this will happen within the next four to six weeks. There will be a monitor at the main desk.

The cameras will be used to monitor incoming shipments, Kohr said.

Although it is not their primary function, Goodwin said the system may be used to monitor students who try to sneak in through the loading docks with kegs or beer balls.

There are possibilities of cameras at the main entrance of residence halls in the next year or two and of a similar 24-hour security system in computer clusters, but Kohr said these are still being investigated.
Operation fetish tricks Americans

Just when Americans were being discharged from the recovery room following Operation Desert Storm, the "crash of Iraq," and the ensuing months of celebration, it's time for another operation — Operation Gutter.

The latest operation is to surgically dismantle the Iraqi military machine.

Possibly the greatest development born from the War of 1991 or Persian Gulf war was not: unprecedented unity among nations against a common enemy; Americans rallying behind "their boys"; or the possibility of world peace.

The greatest result of this war is the new military and pseudo-official classification of every action, cause or movement as "Operation."

This new lingo must have medical surgeons wallowing in self-unimportance. To think, non-doctors and military brass having the audacity to steal their thunder, thus trivializing operations, denigrating the half-decade of medical training.

With the advent of the operation classification, blase and trite actions and everyday events are invigorated and esteemed to a higher level. Of course, this upgrade of importance diminishes and obfuscates what they are really titling. This leads to a pan-continental brainwash and dupes people who do not possess the capacity to cut through the jargon.

But it's so neat! Here are some recent applications of the operation classification, military and non-military:

Maybe the last one is something a few more people should treat themselves to.

With yesterday's announcement of dispatching war planes to clean up a mess that the U.S. government should have taken care of before the massive Operation Withdrawal from Iraq, there is something to look forward to — the welcome home party that awaits this batch of war heroes.

The excitement builds — several cities have already announced that they will have the "largest welcome home ticker tape parade/party" in the history of modern celebration.

The problem may be there. Perhaps President Bush got lonely and wanted another party.

Remember the old days of war when the winner got the real spoils? In pre-historic war the winner got to eat the loser's food, wear his dead animal fur and steal his spear.

In the Middle Ages, the winner got to pillage the village and force the loser's women into a life of shame.

In the 1500s, the winner got the loser's ship, sailors and the booty.

In the 20th century, the winner got to carve up Europe like a Thanksgiving turkey.

Now, the winner gets a welcome home party with former New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner.

Times have changed. But the winner also gets to come back six months later, like the tournament of champions on the quiz show "Jeopardy."

Possibilities for this celebration are innumerable.

After surviving a summer of Operation Honor Our Troops, one can only wonder how this round will be able to top the last party.

Maybe New York City Mayor David Dinkins can top his last multi-million dollar parade. He has already put out the word inviting Saddam Hussein to be the Master of Ceremonies in the Operation Welcome Home II, the Next Day. After all, Saddam seems to be the only celebrity not welcoming home the troops.

But that would be ludicrous, the man America hated, nearly as much as Hitler, welcoming home "our" troops.

Yes, it is ludicrous. How could such a hated enemy of America take part in such a "holy and patriotic" experience? Only true patriotism.

Fifth-year senior Bryan Pelton decides on a video Saturday night at Westcott Video located at 111 Harvard Place.

Stores offer video variety

By KARA FITZSIMMONS Staff Writer

So it's a Friday night. You're still saturated with alcohol from last weekend and a party just doesn't sound appealing. Even if you didn't drink last weekend, you're tired of the bar scene.

Vegetation in the ol' residence hall room or apartment is starting to sound pretty good. Your alternative to the life of liquor? How about a relaxing evening with a rented movie?

For convenience, the video stores to know are Spectrum and Westcott Videos.

The video department of Spectrum is a part of the student-run business located in the Schine Student Center.

The prices at Spectrum are hard to beat. Monday through Thursday regular videos are $0.99 and new releases are $1.49. Friday and Saturday regular videos are $1.49 and new releases are $1.99.

Besides the new releases and other common categories, Spectrum also carries a cult section. Spectrum sells extra copies of new releases and unpopular movies after a few months. All that is required for membership is a major credit card.

The video department of Spectrum is open Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Friday 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Saturday noon to 8 p.m.

Cult classics

Westcott Videos is located only five minutes away from SU at 111 Harvard Place. Westcott offers the regular categories of movies, such as new releases, comedies and documentaries. However, they also specialize in foreign flicks, older movies and a category they call "cult classics." These movies are college cult favorites, like The Rocky Horror Picture Show.

Rental is $2.25 a night. For every 10 videos returned early, two rentals are free. Westcott also prints coupons in Money to Burn.

Membership is free with a major credit card. For the poor souls who don't own a credit card, memberships can be put on the account of another member.

Westcott Videos is open Monday through Saturday 11 a.m. to 10 p.m., and Sunday noon to 9 p.m. For other poor souls who don't have a car, Westcott delivers videos to SU on the weekends in the winter.

Within only 15 minutes driving time of the Syracuse University campus, several video stores make their unique offerings. Blockbuster Video, the "god" of video stores, has a store located at 3430 Erie Boulevard East, 10 to 15 minutes from SU. Of course, Blockbuster has thousands of titles. Of course, Blockbuster has all the new releases. Of course, Blockbuster has many videos per new release title.

The Snackatizer also came

Syracuse area satisfies various ethnic tastes

By JENNIFER CNIADY

As the search for new and exciting things to do in the Syracuse area continues, many people fall back on an old standby — dinner out on the town.

This routine is getting a little worn-out or you're looking for a new place to take family and friends, try eating out ethnic style.

So what if up till now you haven't gotten beyond Varsity Jong been a favorite in America. Mexican Kitchen at 600 Court St. opens at 9:45 p.m. every night except Thursday and 9:30 p.m. during the weekend.

One place to try is Juanita's south-of-the-border cuisine has house specialties. When Juanita prepares her fresh ingredients of interesting places to check out in the coming months.

Another option is Munjed's Middle Eastern Cafe. Located at 3220 Westcott St., Munjed's offers a popular combination platter for $7.

The platter comes with meat or vegetable selections and is perfect if you want to try a little bit of everything.

Some of the favorite foods include falafel, shish-kebabs and grape leaves. On Friday evenings, the chef prepares a special rice dish.

Just in case you're still not up to truly different dining, the best bet for international-style dining is good old Italian food.

Giovanni's Ristorante at 2065 Erie Boulevard East is open until midnight and accepts all major credit cards. Dinner runs from $5 to $14 with daily house specials.

If you get there before 6 p.m., you can take advantage of the early bird special. In addition to lots of homemade Italian pasta dishes, steak and seafood are also featured.

Reservations are recommended in order to avoid a wait.

These suggestions should help you put a new twist on your dining experiences. Whether you've exhausted the local bar and grill joints or just want a break from the dining halls, ethnic food may just be the change of pace you want.

Like mom always said: "You won't know if you like it unless you try it."

Symphony offers escape

By JENNIFER KRONSTAIN
Asst. Editorial Editor

The best-kept musical secret among Syracuse University students is not a bar, and it's not a new dance club. It's culture, and the city of Syracuse is a lucky benefactor.

The Syracuse Symphony is opening its 31st season in the city, and students have a special invitation to enjoy the music, according to Susan Kolodziejczyk, representative of the symphony.

"I think (students) will get a lot of entertainment for a little bit of money," Kolodziejczyk said.

Rush tickets, available a half-hour before the curtain rises, are sold for $5 to students with ID cards, she said.

Guest conductors this season include Peter McCoppin of Vancouver, Shunsuki Kori will be visiting Syracuse from the Tokyo symphony.

While the bulk of concerts are performed at the Civic Center in downtown Syracuse, the symphony will be playing throughout New York. Dates in Auburn, Ithaca, Watertown, and Rome are being set, Kolodziejczyk said.

The group also performs "run-out" concerts, where the ensemble plays one night only, she said.

Take a classical break

Going to the symphony is an opportunity for students to get away from campus and take a break from academic life, Kolodziejczyk said.

"Syracuse is the smallest city in the U.S. to have a professional orchestra," she said.

"We'll do themed programs for the most part," said Kolodziejczyk of the Pops Series. The featured music genres will include big band music, holiday music and show tunes among others, she said.

Casual Classics is a Sunday afternoon series featuring light classical music. The series will include shorter performances of more familiar classical music. Audience members will experience a "sampler" of musical styles and compositions, Kolodziejczyk said.

On Saturday mornings, children from five to 10 years of age are the prospective audience as the symphony performs pieces from the Family Series. The show will include visual ele-

Students croon in Saloon

By SCOTT MULLER
Staff Writer

Most Syracuse University students are well aware of the Marshall Street bar scene and everything it has to offer. But for students looking for the alcohol, music and good times with a twist, the Sing-along Saloon provides a change of scenery.

This Karaoke-style bar, which just celebrated its second anniversary, differs from other establishments in an unusual way. As its name suggests, the bar gives its customers an opportunity to showcase their singing talents in front of everyone present by singing along to the music of their choice.

According to co-owner Donna Relihan, the Saloon, located at 215 W. Manlius St., already sees a good number of SU students. "We get a nice mix of people here," Relihan said. "Everything from 21 to 71."

However, Relihan would like to see more students take advantage of the open-mike atmosphere of the bar. Saloon patrons interested in performing put their name on a sign-up sheet after selecting the song they wish to perform. The singer then receives lyrics for the song in order to rehearse.

A moment of glory

Co-owner Dan Monti, Relihan's brother, acts as the emcee and calls singers up by name for their moment in the spotlight. "We provide the amateur singer with a high-tech sound and lighting system," Relihan said. In addition, wanna-be singers have a playlist of more than 6,000 songs to choose from.

According to Relihan, performers have a wide variety of music to sing along to, including oldies, rock, country and current popular tunes. Relihan believes the concept behind the entertainment is catchy and said some patrons now have a repertoire of songs to perform. "I've even seen some improvements in some performers," she added.

She also said a few of the performances are hilarious to watch, but a gong hangs behind the stage for those performers whose performances are lacking.

mayonnaise to hold the chopped cabbage together. It created a rather dry effect, which was a pleasing change from run-of-the-mill slaw.

Another diner had shrimp and crabmeat tacos ($5.95), which featured excellent shrimp, but the crabmeat was described by the diner as “a little fishy.”

Another entree ordered was the steak and chicken fajita ($8.95), which came with a side dish of toppings. Buried beneath the toppings was soggy lettuce meant to be used in the fajita. And perhaps it was just the lighting, but one member of our party described the guacamole as “sickly colored.”

WHERE’S THE SPICE?
The final dinner ordered was a basket of Cajun shrimp ($7.95), which came with french fries. The shrimp was surprisingly mild — considering it was dipped in cajun spices.

For dessert two of us had the delicious Texas Mud Pie ($2.65), a chocolate brownie topped with vanilla ice cream and whipped cream with a cherry. Rich and filling, this was a perfect way to end the night.

Another member of our party chose fried ice cream ($2.25), which was swimming in honey. This dish is good for those who love honey, but it proves overpowering for those who don’t.

The last dessert ordered was a hot fudge taco, a wafer-shaped taco “shell” holding ice cream and covered with hot fudge. The wafer was somewhat chewy, but was a nice accompaniment to the ice cream.

Dinner for four, including appetizers and dessert, came to $57.30 plus tip.
Theaters plan busy season

By ERIC GRODE
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

Beginning next week, theater enthusiasts will suffer from an embarrassment of riches. Theaters affiliated with Syracuse University will produce more than 15 plays and musicals this semester.

When community theaters such as Salt City and touring Broadway shows are included, a new show will open every weekend of the semester.

The 1991-92 theater season begins in earnest next weekend with the opening of two local shows and a special presentation.

On Sept. 26, WNTQ-93.1-FM radio personality Bob Brown takes on the title role in Stephen Sondheim's Sweeney Todd; The Demon Barber of Fleet Street at the Salt City Center for the Performing Arts.

Brown, who has performed the title role in Salt City's Jesus Christ Superstar for several years, leads a cast of almost two dozen for four weekends.

The next day, Syracuse Stage opens its fall season with an opulent production of William Wycherley's 17th-century Restoration classic The Country Wife. In addition to a number of Broadway and TV veterans, six SU students will appear in the play. One of these students, Stephanie Seeley of last year's Oh, Calpurnia, was described by director Julianne Boyd as having "a rather substantial role."

A special presentation

Finally, on Sept. 28, the Paul Robeson Performing Arts Co. will present a special presentation of Paul Robeson: The Man and His Music at the Civic Center.

Avery Brooks, best known as "Spenser" on the television series Spenser: For Hire, will play Robeson, the acclaimed black scholar, athlete, musician and actor. The show will be held at the Civic Center. Tickets range from $15 to $30.

On Oct. 1, the touring company of A Chorus Line, the longest-running show in Broadway history and winner of the Pulitzer Prize, will come to the Civic Center for three nights.

The production, which has been featured on national TV ads, will feature more than half of the Broadway cast.

The Black Box Players, supported by the student fee, open their season Oct. 4 with their production of Edward Albee's The Zoo Story.

On Oct. 9, Famous Artists, who hosted A Chorus Line, will present a one-time performance by Les Ballets Africains, the Republic of Guinea's national ensemble.

Les Ballets Africains combine music, dance and storytelling to tell a performance that has been hailed as Africa's most accomplished. The concert will be at the Civic Center. Tickets are $10 to $21.

Just say yes!

Oct. 10 will see the opening of After Ours first production of the year, Just Say No! The play, described by author Larry Kramer as "a play about a farse," takes a critical look at the Reagan/Bush administration.

The Black Box Players will present The Returns the following week, on Oct. 16.

On Oct. 24, Foxfire, co-written by actor Hume Cronyn, will open at Salt City. The drama, which starred Cronyn and his wife, Jessica Tandy, on Broadway, should serve as a special presentation of the title role in Salt City's Jesus Christ Superstar for several years, leads a cast of almost two dozen for four weekends.

Petty performance rocks local crowd

Tom Petty has played with some pretty fine musicians (i.e. Bob Dylan, The Grateful Dead) in his time. Last night was no exception, as he brought new Columbia recording artist Chris Whitley aboard for his near sell-out show at the Onondaga War Memorial.

Whitley, a bluesy Western outsider, looked composed as he stood with his weapon — a National steel guitar.

And he used it, as well as a variety of other guitars, craftily, coupling them with his deep soulful voice, which recalls Bono in his prime.

He had competition, though, as his bassist drowned him out with overpowering chords. The bass-heavy nature of songs works on Living With The Law, but live it sounded distorted.

Set stand-outs included the escapist “Kick The Stones,” from the Thems and Louise soundtrack, the moody, ghost-town inspired title track and the gospel-like “Big Sky Country.”

About 50 percent of the crowd missed his performance. What a shame.

Petty In Wonderland

Petty, accustomed to delivering stellar performances after 15 years, turned in a typical performance.

The stage, dressed up as an Alice In Wonderland-like treehouse, indicated the playful mood of the evening. Of course, this set up “Don’t Come Around Here No More,” and during the song Petty attached a fluorescent orange peace sign to his microphone stand and fled for his life from characters dressed as former presidents Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan and the band wasn’t shabby either. Fifteen years of playing together has made them pretty tight.

Not so tight, however, that they couldn’t avoid depending too much on old tricks. In fact, Petty relied most heavily on his two most recent records, Full Moon Fever and Into The Great Wide Open.

Petty touched upon what he called one of his “best three-chord songs,” “Free-Fallin,’” which seemed, judging by the crowd response, to be the Syracuse regional anthem.

He covered the feisty “Yer So Bad,” the matter-of-fact “Love is a Long Road” and the energetic rocker “Running Down A Dream.” He also played the crowd-pleasing “I Won’t Back Down.”

Petty makes some noise

Petty drew as generously from his most recent release Into The Great Wide Open, playing off-the-cuff sarcastic wonders “Learning To Fly,” “Into The Great Wide Open,” “Out In The Cold” and the encore “Makin’ Some Noise.”

Petty knew he couldn’t deny his formative years and thus played “Listen To Her Heart,” “American Girl,” “Breakdown” and “Refugee.”

He also paid respect to “a great Irish poet,” Van Morrison, by covering one of his Irish ballads.

The encores began shakily, and, with the exception of a choppy Bob Dylan-esque version of “The Waiting,” were probably not the wisest choices to close the show.

"Having time to regroup helps take the physical beating off our legs." INJURY

The combination of Young and Conley gave the Orangemen a solid pair of inside linebackers entering the season. Conley and Young were the Orangemen’s top two tacklers last season with 126 and 111 respectively.
Thus far this season, Young has 20 tackles and Conley has 12 stops.
"The loss of Danny is going to hurt us a little bit," Young said. "We were sound coming into the year with everybody where they were. Now that he’s out, it disturbs us a little bit."
Pasqualoni said the team just needs to regroup with Conley out for the remainder of the season.
"We feel bad because Danny is such a great, unselfish kid," Pasqualoni said. "I think the team is going to be fine. I think we’ll regroup and we’ll come back out after them and do the best we can."
Regardless of whoever replaces Conley, they won’t possess as much game experience or the same type of continuity Conley shares with Young.
John Lusardi, who had 14 tackles including seven solo and an interception for a touchdown last week, will start this Saturday against the University of Florida in Conley’s spot.
Lusardi was named Big East Defensive Player of the Week for his efforts after Conley was injured.
"(John’s) catching on to things pretty quickly," Young said. "I’m out there helping him out a little bit so that helps him out a lot.
"I can go out and get him set where he’s got to go, so he doesn’t have to do it all himself."
Pasqualoni credits Young with settling down Lusardi when he first entered the game.
Lusardi said having Young working with him is a tremendous advantage.
"It gives me a little confidence boost," Lusardi said, "knowing that he’s beside me, knowing what’s going on. I’m sure (he’s) helping me if I have to know something."
Orange breathes easy
Syracuse gains early lead, holds on 3-1

The Syracuse University soccer team enjoyed a rare commodity Thursday night at the Carrier Dome — breathing room.

The Orangemen, 3-2, built up a 3-0 lead in the second half before defeating a young Long Island University squad, 3-1.

In their first four games this season, the Orangemen's largest lead had been one goal. "It felt a lot better," said SU midfielder Malcolm Grace, who scored a goal and an assist on Wednesday. "We got ahead early, but we kind of let down after we got a couple goals on them. That allowed (LIU) to get the last goal. But I think we were a lot more relaxed after we got a couple goals up on them."

Grace put SU on top early, as he scored only 2:25 into the game.

The play started with Paul Young booting the ball forward from midfield. LIU goalie Gary Gonzalez charged out to clear the ball, but he mis-kicked it right into the charging Grace's shoulder. Grace caught up with the ball 10 yards from the goal and tapped it into the empty net for his first tally of the season.

Young put the Orangemen up 2-0 at 27:42 of the first half on an assist from Grace.

Grace trapped the ball with his chest, on the right side of Gonzalez, and centered it to Young, who blasted the ball in from five yards out.

LIU couldn't muster up any offense in the first half as it didn't even have a shot on goal.

Blackbirds coach Arnold Ramirez Jr. said he wasn't surprised.

"I hate to say it, but I knew it would be very difficult to win here," Ramirez said. "The best we ever did in this place was tie, a number of years ago. Our team is very young. It's going to take a while."

The second half was played a little more evenly, as Syracuse assimilated some reserves into the lineup.

SU built a 3-0 lead as Paul Young scored his second goal of the game and third of the season 14:06 into the half.

Young's goal came on a pretty passing play, where the ball went from Nino Galich to Eric Puis and finally to Young, who placed it in from 13 yards out.

LIU finally got on the scoreboard with 17:38 left in the game on a goal by Walter Bustamante to finish the scoring.

SU defender Chris Wright said mis-communication led to LIU's goal.

"There was a loose ball on the top of the 18-yard line," Wright said. "There was one guy that wasn't marked. The ball came open. The guy found his opportunity."

Young, who now leads the Orangemen with three goals, said the victory was an important one.

"This is a big win," Young said. "We were 0-2, and now we've won three straight. We just have to keep focused and the wins will come gradually."

The Orangemen will play their next game against the University of Connecticut at Connecticut Soccer Stadium on Sunday at 1 p.m.

now," said quarterback Shane Matthews, the SEC Player of the Year last season. "If it wasn't for our defense, we might have lost the Alabama game.

The Gators' defense, which has finished ranked in the top five each of the past three seasons, has recovered six fumbles and intercepted three passes in its first two games.

"When was the last time Alabama got beat like that?" asked Syracuse coach Paul Pasqualoni. "We're in the very deep end of the pool."

The Alabama win, coupled with a 59-21 win over San Jose State, has put Florida near the top defensively again. Opposing quarterbacks have been sacked seven times and had 18 hurried passes.

"Last week was a big win for us," Culpepper said. "We had a couple breakdowns, which were mostly mental mistakes. But those can be corrected."

Leave it to the coach, however, to find something wrong with last week's film. Steve Spurrier, in his second year as the head coach, said the Gators' secondary missed assignments were covered up by a tremendous pass rush.

"I'm sure (Syracuse) is going to look at the tapes and see some holes back there," Spurrier said. "Our pass rush was so good the quarterback didn't have time to see some of the guys open downfield."

Another Florida flaw, according to the coach, was that its defensive tackles spread too wide on the field and left room up the middle.

Spurrier said the running ability of Syracuse quarterback Marvin Graves concerns him. Graves is more mobile than either the San Jose State or Alabama quarterback, and his ability to run the option presents problems, Spurrier said.

"We hope we're smart enough not to open the gates again and say, 'Go ahead, Marvin, take off through the middle,'" Spurrier said.

Graves has lost three fumbles in the first two games; but Matthews, who hit 15-of-27 passes for 251 yards against the Crimson Tide, has been aided by a deep set of wide receivers.

"We know its going to be loud," Matthews said. "But we don't think that could or should be a factor. We'd like to take the crowd out of the game."

PC debate divides schools nationwide

By ALAN PHELPS
Daily Nebraskan, U. of Nebraska

If you don't spell "women" with a y, forget to use the term "people of color" or are guilty of committing "lookism," you may not be politically correct. But don't worry — it may be PC to be anti-PC.

As political correctness, or PC, wrestles to become the hot topic at schools across the nation, the debate has campuses sharply divided.

Calling for an end to "Eurocentrism" of college courses, PC leaders advocate changing college requirements to focus more on women and minorities, while PC opponents are rising to challenge what they call a higher-education disease.

"It's extremely difficult to discuss, argue about, or even mention certain topics," said Glenn Ricketts, research director for the National Association of Scholars.

"There's a whole range of topics on which there seem to be 'correct' positions, which men of goodwill have to take.... And if you don't, you'll be denounced as a racist, sexist or fascist," he said.

PC leaders argue that these types of incidents would not happen if more PC-sensitive guidelines could be implemented into the university mainstream. Guidelines like hiring minority professors to Probe cracks down on research

By ROXANNE PATEL
Daily Pennsylvanian, U. of Pennsylvania

A federal investigation into mismanaged funds at more than 20 U.S. research institutions may force universities to absorb more of their research-related expenses and revamp federal grant guidelines.

Officials said the congressional investigation, which began last spring when federal auditors uncovered what they believe to be $200 million of unnecessary charges from Stanford U., will strictly limit the amount of government money universities receive for research-related expenses.

According to Dennis Fitzgibbons, spokesman for the congressional subcommittee heading the review, schools have uniformly misinterpreted "vague" federal guidelines, which allow administrators to misuse taxpayers' money at numerous institutions.

"As John Dingell (D-Mich., and head of the subcommittee) said, Stanford is unfortunately more the rule than the exception," Fitzgibbons said.

The congressional probe involves government support money, including administrative and maintenance costs accrued from federally funded research. These expenses make up indirect research overhead, which is money added to a research grant for sufficient research support. Indirect overhead falls into two categories — administrative expenses and maintenance expenses — and is tacked onto every federal research grant.

Administrative support money is used to pay research assistants and administrators who spend time on particular projects. The maintenance money is used for the upkeep of research buildings and helps pay for utilities, equipment and supplies.

Stanford's indirect overhead rate was 78 percent at the start of the probe, which means for every $100 a researcher received, the university got an additional $78 for support costs. Stanford's current overhead rate is 55.5 percent.

During the past decade, Stanford administrators used hundreds of thousands of taxpayers' dollars, intended to cover overhead costs, to fund the campus shopping center and for depreciation of the school's yacht.

Stanford President Donald Kennedy resigned in the wake of the Stanford investigation, saying it would be difficult to lead the university with the controversy surrounding his role as president.

But Stanford spokesman Terry Shepard said the $500 million the university may have misused is in dispute by administrators who believe Stanford should not have to pay back some of the government money already has approved toward indirect research appropriations.

The Office of Naval Research said Stanford has not proven its costs were higher than the allotted percentage provided by the government. It says Stanford should have to pay a lot of that $200 million back.

Stanford administrators disagree. Shepard said Stanford began paying back the government for misspent government appropriations this year, and $1.35 million has been paid back thus far, he said.

Tom Robertson, deputy regional inspector general for the Department of Health and Human Services, said many of the schools charged the government for "entertainment" expenses — charges he said clearly are not related to research support.

"The federal government should not have to pay for membership in country clubs... or for things like the yacht at Stanford," Robertson said.

Stanford's misspendings also included $7,000 in linen for the president's house, $2,500 to refurbish a grand piano, $3,000 for a cedar-lined chest, $2,000 a month for flowers in the president's house, and $4,000 for a professional specialty flower arrangement facility for the president's house.

The Office of Naval Research says Stanford has misspent $200 million in research appropriations, including funds for this yacht.

Lawmakers show support for ROTC

By SHANNON JACKSON
the Lantern, Ohio State U.

New legislation in Ohio and Illinois prohibiting the removal of ROTC programs from public colleges and universities has ensured that group's status on campuses nationwide.

But some activist groups see the measure as a reinforcement of discriminatory hiring policies carried out within those Army reserve units.

The Ohio measure, buried inside the state budget, passed July 11. The Illinois legislature passed a bill June 26 amending the current statutes governing Illinois higher education.

"It's a blow for those politically correct at Ohio State University," said Ohio Sen. Eugene Watts, R-Calloway, speaking of the ROTC measure.

Watts, who is also an OSU associate professor of history, said the measure ensures all students equal access to education through ROTC scholarships.

ROTC adheres to the U.S. Department of Defense policy, which states "homosexuality is incompatible with military service."

Nationally, the ROTC program has been criticized on college campuses because of the Department of Defense's anti-gay and lesbian policy. That policy often conflicts with some schools' nondiscrimination policies.

"The measure gives colleges and universities the legal authority and backbone to say, "We can't (remove the ROTC from campus)," said Ohio Rep. Robert Netzley, the chief sponsor of the measure. Netzley said he plans to bring this legislation to other states at the American Legislative Exchange Council meeting this month.

"This legislation is not a setback," said Bill Rubenstein, director of the American Civil Liberties Union Lesbian and Gay Rights Project. "The legislation, if passed, is evidence of how scared the other side is."

But the Ohio legislation could stand in the way of a U. of Cincinnati faculty and student resolution calling for the ROTC's removal by 1992 if the policy is not rescinded.

"This legislation is a setback," said Bill Rubenstein, director of the American Civil Liberties Union Lesbian and Gay Rights Project. "(The legislation) is evidence of how scared the other side is."

In order for the Department of Defense to change its policy, gay rights advocates and campus organizers say a major university needs to set the trend by removing ROTC from campus or taking a firm stand against its disciplinary policies.

But so far, no schools have stepped forward.

"A big school needs to set the precedent," said Paul Hendley, an ACLU spokesman. "All eyes are focused" on schools like the U. of Wisconsin and the U. of Minnesota where there has been a lot of progress lately, Hendley said.

Nationally, the ACLU has tracked at least 70 campuses that protested the Defense Department's policy.

The ROTC, with more than 40,000 students enrolled supplies more officers to the military than all the military academies combined, said Joe Bartley, public information officer at Fort Knox, Ky.

Last year, six ROTC scholarship students were discharged for being homosexual, said Major Doug Hart, a spokesman for the Department of Defense. In all, the military discharges about 1,000 people each year for homosexuality, he said.

Nationally, a bill introduced by Rep. Gerald Solomon, R-NY, would deny federal funds to schools that refuse access to the defense department. Solomon created the bill in response to two California school districts which banned federal recruiters.

"The Illinois and Ohio legislation is just one more roadblock we have to overcome," said Michael Verveer, co-president of the Student Association at the UW and a national campus leader in the ROTC movement. "In addition to fighting on the campus level, we are going to have to fight on the state political level as well."

No more 'Bert and Ernie' for Oregon State prodigy

By LAURI REES and KIMBERLY WHITE
Daily Barometer, Oregon State U.

Like the average kid, David Noor has been having fun with his friends this summer.

But he won't be seeing much of them this fall. David, who will be 12 when classes begin, will be busy with his freshman year at Oregon State U.

David is the youngest student ever admitted to OSU.

"I'm nervous as a college freshman would be," he said. "I don't think the other students will bother me."

"I'm not nervous about the curriculum because I've seen it before and it's at my level."

Because of state admissions requirements, David needed to take a high school equivalency test. He passed the test, which is normally given to students 16 and older, with no problem.

David's mother, Jackie Noor, said her son has been ahead of other children since an early age. She said David could count to 10 at 22 months, could say the alphabet at 2 1/2, and taught himself to read before he was 3.

"He just picked up a Bert and Ernie book and started reading it," she said.

His ability to read at an early age meant David had to grow up fast. At 4 or 5 years old, while reading from an encyclopedia, David discovered that Santa Claus wasn't real.

"He came in crying, saying (the encyclopedia) said it was a myth," his mother said.

David attended kindergarten mostly for the social interaction with other children, then skipped to the third grade. He soon finished elementary school and then had some correspondence schooling from a private school.

Last year he completed his high school education at home. Math and science are among his favorite subjects, David said.

He is studying pre-calculus, which should help him with his fall classes in electrical engineering, orientation and chemistry.

As for David's career objectives, he plans to major in electrical engineering, then study law. He also hopes to graduate from OSU by age 15, he said.

"I might not be able to work at law until later so I could work in electrical engineering," David said.

David plans to attend law school at Willamette U. in Oregon, then pursue a political career.

He is attending OSU because the school is close to home, and it is his father's alma mater.

He plans to live at home with his family without participating in extracurricular activities.

"I don't think I'd be able to relate with the older students," he said.

In his spare time David likes to play with his friends, many of whom also are gifted and home-taught.

He likes to play with his dog and cat, program computers and watch television.

But he won't be seeing much of them this fall. David, who will be 12 when classes begin, will be busy with his freshman year at Oregon State University.

David Noor, 12, will be the youngest student ever at Oregon State U. when he starts classes this fall.

He said his favorite television shows are "Quantum Leap" and "Newton's Apple."

David also enjoys playing the clarinet. He placed first in the solo and trio division of a regional music competition.

At first, his parents believed that David would attend college through his musical talents first. "We thought he might attend college on a clarinet scholarship," his mother said.

Lawmakers show support for ROTC

By SHANNON JACKSON
the Lantern, Ohio State U.

New legislation in Ohio appears to be putting an end to the removal of ROTC from public colleges and universities, ensuring that the group's status remains secure nationwide.

But some activist groups see the measure as a reinforcement of discriminatory policies carried out within the reserve units.

The Ohio measure, buried in the budget, passed July 11. The legislature passed a bill June 26 that would clarify current statutes governing ROTC higher education.

"It's a bleak day for those 'correct' at Ohio State University," Sen. Eugene Watts, R-Galloway, said of the ROTC measure.

Watts, who is also an OSU professor of history, said the measure ensures all students equal education through ROTC scholarships.

Nationwide, the ROTC program is criticized on college campuses because of Defense Department policies that often conflict with military service.

Watts, who leads the Ohio Senate Higher Education Committee, said the measure gives all students the legal authority to participate in the ROTC program.

No more 'correct' for Oregon

Like the average kid, David Norsworthy was having fun with his friends this summer.

But he won't be seeing much of them this fall. David, who will be 12 when school begins, will be busy with his freshman year at Oregon State University.

David is the youngest student admitted to OSU.

"I'm as nervous as a college student," he said. "I don't think students will bother me."

"I'm not nervous about the college because I've seen it before and level," he added.

Because of state admissions requirements, David needed to take an equivalency test. He passed the test normally given to students 16 and up with no problem.

David's mother, Jackie Norsworthy, said he has been ahead of other children of his age. She said David could read at age 22 months, could say the alphabet at age 2, and taught himself to read at age 3.

"He just picked up a Bert and I started reading it," she said.

His ability to read at an early age, she said, will help him in college.

teach minority topics and working to fight racism through so-called "hate speech" policies are all on the PC agenda.

Howard, associate dean of students at the U. of Wisconsin, Madison, sees the PC movement a bit differently. Howard contends that PC is a buzzword for those who group together a variety of issues.

"I think this PC stuff is a construction of those people who are pulling a lot of the short deals together and lumping them together," he said. "There is no PC movement."

"It's an effort to deal with a major change in this society. There are real issues to argue about, not made-up arguments like PC."

In an effort to address some of the so-called real issues, the U. of Wisconsin has made an effort to enact an official speech code.

The code, currently challenged by the American Civil Liberties Union, prohibits students from making discriminatory comments on campus. Some students find the new code vague and unconstitutional. The ACLU is awaiting a decision from a federal court judge in Milwaukee to see if the court agrees with its argument.

"The rule has a lot of ambiguities," said Greitchen Miller, ACLU's legal director for Wisconsin. "My concern is that it would inhibit free discussion that college students would engage in. For example, racial harassment. We think it is important that students be able to talk to each other about this issue. This kind of rule will inhibit this kind of discussion."

Smith College has followed UW's lead, preparing a handout that details specific "manifestations of oppression" including "preferred terms" for minorities.

But representatives at the Massachusetts women's school say the press has distorted the purpose of the handout. Debra Bradley, news director at Smith, said the pamphlet is meant as a "springboard for discussion."

"Unfortunately," she said, "it has been described as a speech code. It isn't a speech code at all. It's an informational tool.

"We try to educate people so they can be sensitive toward others. You may poke fun at the way these are phrased, but the concepts, I think, they have a lot of validity."

Stanley Fish, chairman of the Duke English department and a man often portrayed in magazine articles as being at the forefront of the PC movement, agrees that the media has a great deal to do with the PC momentum.

Duke has received large write-ups in PC articles nationwide because of a test students take during orientation workshops called "Duke's Vision."

The test, which describes the official ideology of the university as multiculturalism, has no correct or incorrect answers. Students also must attend a post-test seminar which outlines the goals of the institution.

Tonya Robinson, president of the Associated Students of Duke U., described the test as a "self-test" about institutional goals. "Overall, most folks feel a goal of multiculturalism is a good goal," she said.

"It is dangerous to begin to mandate these concepts," Fish said. "People who call this and other universities PC infiltrated "are misinformed and erroneous."

"Hate stories are endlessly circulated - most of these articles are parasitic on one another," Fish said. "We are just being written, and it is written over and over again. And it contains very few items."

"Most of these reporters have never been within 1,000 miles of the campuses they speak so freely about.

"He also said many of the articles are written with no sense of history, as if everything on campus was perfect before a few 'crazy' people showed up.

"Although Fish said some extremists exist on both sides, he expects the controversy to die down.

"When voices that have been for a long time silenced...finally get a chance to speak, they sometimes speak in ways that go to the opposite end of the spectrum which oppressed them," he said. "What happens is the urgency of these voices will lessen as they become more assimilated into the structure of university life."

But Howard, who doesn't care for the PC label either, disagreed. "We are going to struggle with this for some time."

catering at a reception for the president's new bride and $3,000 in dry-cleaning bills, according to Stanford's news office.

But government officials said misuse of research funds was revealed at all of the investigated schools, including $279,000 at Harvard University, $97,000 at Stanford University, $66,000 at Harvard Medical School, $402,000 at the University of Pennsylvania and $260,000 at the University of Pittsburgh.

At MIT, investigators revealed that the inappropriate charges include: $24,000 for functions at the president's house, $13,600 for flowers in the public meeting area below the president's residence, $27,000 for legal fees relating to federal hearings and $10,000 for various gifts.

And at Pitt, unallowable charges in 1989 included, among other things, salary and benefits for the president's driver and $2,400 for Chicago Cubs season tickets.

Some of the reported expenses are clearly inappropriate, and administrators attribute them to miscalculations or accounting errors, while university and government administrators blame Office of Management and Budget guidelines for many of the discrepancies.

"It's important to note that part of the problem that all of us have with the research contracting guidelines is that they are open to interpretation," said Jesus Mena, a U. of California, Berkeley, spokesman.

To combat the misunderstandings, OMB has begun revising the rules for judging what expenses the government considers appropriate. Stanford, meanwhile, will institute a system of checks and balances to revamp its indirect cost procedures.

Iowa State's heterosexual society...

A group of students at Iowa State U. have formed a Heterosexual Society on their campus, sparking some heated debates at their meetings. DeAnn Backes, who founded the society earlier this year, said heterosexuality is the only biological correct lifestyle. Lisa Waldner-Haugrud, a graduate student and teaching assistant in sociology, who voiced disapproval of the society, said, "The reason they're starting the group is that they don't like gay people."

Robert Schaefer, Iowa State's Lesbian/Gay Bisexual Alliance president, said he hoped the Heterosexual Society would be a support group to deal with heterosexual issues rather than just gay-bashing. "I was hoping they'd be more proactive than reactive," he said. - Jeff Ewald, Iowa State Daily, Iowa State U.

Harsch wasn't optimistic because he didn't know her last name or how to spell her first name. But his efforts paid off when he received a call from Kelley McDuffie. "Well, you found me," she told Harsch. Harsch said they talked about school and spring break when McDuffie called him. "I was pretty surprised to hear from her," he said. You pay, you say...Tinking, weeing, peeing: No matter how you say it, urination is something that should be kept behind closed doors, at least indoors. That's what the officers at Michigan State U.'s Department of Public Safety are saying. "I think they give out a couple tickets a night" for public urination, said junior Craig Appel. MSU sophomore Tobin Vager was apprehended by police for public urination. "I spent the night in jail for it," he said. "I just had come out of Dooley's, the big bar up here, and I was taking a leak. I didn't have any defenses." Public Safety Officer Ronald Weeks told the MSU officers that MSU issued two tickets per night for public urination. "I would be surprised if there were 20 arrests per year," Weeks said. "Generally when they write a citation it's under state law, and they are charged for something like indecent exposure or disorderly conduct," he added. The maximum penalty for indecent exposure is $500 or one year in jail. - Melissa Peerless and Tam Pollak, The Michigan Daily, U. of Michigan.

By LINDA LYONS
The Oklahoma Daily, U. of Oklahoma

I'm suffering from terminal weirdness this morning.

It all started last week. I was on the phone with my best bud, Margaret, doing my political incorrectness of my situation. I immediately confessed my transgression to Margaret (that being the feeling that I was playing right into the hands of this particular man's male supremacy by allowing him to fish while simultaneously getting his dishes done).

To my personal delight, Margaret pointed out that I would be doing the exact same thing if I were a lesbian and my girlfriend was the one who did all the cooking instead of my boyfriend's dishes. I was shocked. I was faced with the role of a woman's male supremacy by allowing him to fish while simultaneously getting his dishes done.

I decided to just go home and check the refrigerator. There in the freezer was a ton of venison.

Just when I had begun to accept my heterosexuality, I was confronted with the role that I was playing in the creation of the massive foreign trade deficit. Even the gas pedal beneath my foot was attached to a foreign car.

The whole issue of political correctness had been making me ponder so. Take for instance my children. My children are American! Well, that is to say that once you get past the Irish and French blood, they're pretty American. Of course, it might be more politically correct to go out and adopt some un-American children from Third World countries, but if I really wanted another face around the house, I'd just get rid of this French IUD.

Of course, that brings us to another point, which is that I would surely disregard all foreign trade deficits to use RU 486, the French abortion pill, if the American government which oppresses me would just OK it. All of this talk is really unnecessary, actually, considering that Renaldo once purchased (and still owns) a good old-fashioned American vasectomy, but oh well.

Finally, I decided to just go home and check the refrigerator. There in the freezer was a ton of venison.

Now, this is politically incorrect not only because eating meat means eating animals (excuse me, are those leather tennis shoes you're wearing?) but also because this particular animal had been alive out there in the woods until Renaldo came along.

This knowledge caused me to reflect on the frowns I would get if people knew that I have my very own hunting license in my (leather) wallet, but I don't feel so guilty, knowing as I do that hunters contribute $5 million a day to the preservation of wildlife. So there!

About this time, my lawyer called. Now there's something to be proud of, right? I have contracted the services of an American lawyer.

Of course, this is pretty common because 70 percent of the world's lawyers are American. Interestingly enough, 70 percent of the world's garbage also is generated by Americans.

About this time, I am coming to grips with the fact that I am suffering from a French disease of the soul.

Something has to be done.

My life must change, it's beginning to feel a little too Kafka-esque.

I turned on the (Sony) television, inviting thousands of American-made commercials into my field of vision. I was lighting up an American cigarette when I realized that Philip Morris put huge bucks into Jesse Helms' pocket last year. I was about to pull a Sylvia Plath when I realized that all the knives in the house were German-made.

I knew there was only one thing I could do at this point and strode over to the liquor cabinet. There, between the French and German wines was all the hard stuff.

I couldn't decide between the Russian vodka and the British gin so I just poured a little of both into a big styrofoam cup, added a little Canada Dry Ginger Ale and proceeded to tie on my old-fashioned American drunk.

Cartoonist pokes fun at PC world

By KRISTI MCDOWELL
The Lumberjock, Northern Arizona U.

Superheroes used to leap tall buildings in a single bound and drive cool cars out of caves.

But Jeff Shesol's modern-day superhero, Politically Correct Person, is more likely to combat ethnic slurs and chauvinistic catcalls than to fly an invisible jet or match wits with a penguin.

P.C. Person is one of the characters in "Thatch," a comic strip written by Shesol, a 1991 graduate of Brown U. The strip, which features J. "Thatch" Thatcher, chronicles the trials and tribulations of students at Wayland U.

"Thatch" broke into the national spotlight when a friend of Shesol's wrote an article about political correctness for the New York Times and submitted some P.C. Person cartoons with it. Shesol said he never expected to see them in the Times.

"They ran it, and they ran it big," Shesol said. "The media spin started rolling, and surprisingly it still hasn't stopped."

Shesol's PC works also were featured in The Wall Street Journal, The Boston Globe and Newsweek. He has since released "Thatch...Featuring Politically Correct Person," a compilation of strips from his work at the Brown Daily Herald, and has been a guest on several local television shows.

Shesol believes political correctness is an important issue, but said the actions of the politically correct are ridiculous.

"Tactics of the PC are divisive, counterproductive and usually pretty silly," he said.

Shesol featured P.C. Person in nonsensical situations, frequently pitting him against archenemy Insensitive Man.

One strip shows P.C. Person trying to persuade a student to choose Amazon Crunch ice cream instead of chocolate chip because it is the environmentally sound choice.

Later, P.C. Person is troubled when he discovers Insensitive Man telling a boy to call females "chicks."

"We don't call them 'chicks!' Or 'girls!' They're women," P.C. Person says. When the boy points out that females are only 9 years old, P.C. Person replies, "Well, they're pre-women."

Shesol said the issue has reached its peak in terms of media attention.

"I think PC has been overhyped -- it's not as oppressive a problem as more conservative journalists have made it out to be," he said. "I do think it's been overblown, but I don't think it should go the other way."

Margaret Smith, a Brown senior, said she agrees with Shesol.

"(Political correctness) definitely can be taken to an extent where it can be damaging by threatening cultural heritage, being insensitive or saying something that could be misinterpreted," she said.

Although Smith said she is unsure of her own view of the movement, she said Shesol's P.C. Person strips were an effective way to characterize PC.

Shesol recognizes the political incorrectness on campus as well.

"It exists," Shesol said. "It's a problem, and people need to change their behavior. It's not as if you can't discuss anything, but there are limits. There really are things you can't talk about." He listed affirmative action and a father's role in an abortion as two taboo discussion topics.

The heightened awareness of the political correctness issue combined with the P.C. Person cartoons have brought a wave of publicity for "Thatch."

The cartoons dealing with political correctness in his book make up less than 10 percent of the book but account for 99 percent of the publicity, Shesol said.

"It's good and bad to be typed as the PC cartoonist," he said. "I know my strip wouldn't have been noticed without P.C."

Zoned out: New ordinances help give students the boot

By JOHN CHEVES
The Maneater, U. of Missouri, Columbia

Forget environmental awareness and cultural diversity. The new trend on campus is zoning laws.

City councils, tired of dealing with strained relations between town residents and off-campus students, are dictating how students live.

These restrictions, which limit how many unrelated people can live in one house, will force some students out of their homes. While the total rent remains unaffected, the amount paid by each resident increases.

Zoning laws are the latest twist in the student-resident relationship, and they helped one angry neighbor throw the book at Reggie Grant, a senior at the U. of Florida in Gainesville.

Not all students are facing confrontations with reluctant neighbors.

Study charts how lonely college students stay lonely with 'dating drought'

By ALLISON LUCAS
The Daily Northwestern, Northwestern U.

Loneliness can be a major factor leading to bad dating strategies on college campuses, according to a study done by two Northwestern U. professors.

Northwestern communication studies Professor Michael Roloff and former Asst. Prof. Robert Bell examined loneliness in relation to dating strategies on campus from a sample of 178 undergraduates.

Students were asked to evaluate their loneliness level. The professors then created a loneliness scale ranging from zero to 80, according to Bell, who is now at the U. of California, Davis.

The poll then asked how students would pursue a romantic relationship and what they would write in a monologue for a college dating service, Roloff said.

The study found lonely people less likely to put themselves into situations where they would meet new people.

"They were less likely to use contrived encounters," Roloff said. "On the other hand, people who are not lonely choose situations where they could meet new people."

Sarah Young, a junior at Northwestern, agreed.

"The loneliest people are the ones who lock themselves in their rooms and don't meet people," Young said. "When you go out, you always see the same people, and it's always the outgoing, very friendly types who are there. The quiet and shy don't meet people."

Gabi Kahn, a junior at Wesleyan U., said lonely students aren't always perceived as lonely. Sometimes they are viewed as independent. The drawback, Kahn said, is that you don't really get to know people.

People at Wesleyan feel like they don't want to put themselves on the line."

In the second part of the study, students were asked to write a monologue for a hypothetical video dating service.

Lonelier people were more likely to give information such as "name, rank and serial number," Bell said. But if the information was personal, they tended to leave it out.

People who were less lonely described their personalities and the things they liked to do, Roloff said. "Non-lonely people would give more of a description of 'who I am.'"

Residents

Julio Lana, a senior at the U. of Missouri, Columbia, has lived on Bouchelle Avenue for more than a year. Her neighborhood is across the street from the UM campus, just behind a row of fraternity houses.

Although Columbia recently passed zoning laws similar to Gainesville's, the mix of residents on Bouchelle works well.

"Bouchelle is pretty quiet," Lana said. "When kids do throw parties, they try to keep the noise down. 'Our neighbors have only asked us to tell them which nights we'll throw a party so they can go out for the evening and avoid the worst of it."

"...The cars were all blocking the streets, and people were urinating in all of the neighbors' yards... I guess we didn't live up to their standards."

—Reggie Grant

Lana's neighbors, both attorneys, gave free legal advice to the students and even attended a few of their parties.

However, not all Columbia residents are as eager to share their space with the louder, more active student population. Chester Edwards, a Columbia city councilman, was recalled from office earlier this year after endorsing a student housing development near an already-established neighborhood.

Less than a month later, the Alpha Omicron Pi sorority purchased a house in a residential area, only to be chased out when their neighbors filed a lawsuit to block the women from moving into the house.

But some areas use the student-resident relationship to a mutual advantage. At the U. of Wisconsin, Madison, both sides have respect for each other.

"It's pretty good here," said Greg Larson, a junior at UW. "There's one UW student on the town council, and the mayor's a UW alumnus, so the city gets along with the students."

Bob Brennan, director of local affairs at the Madison Chamber of Commerce, said the good student-resident relations are sweetened by the money UW brings into town. A recent study by Brennan showed that $2.4 billion is pumped into the local economy each year by UW and its 45,000 students.

In larger cities, however, the college barely affects the economy. Georgetown U. and George Washington U., both in Washington, D.C., often are targets of local neighborhood associations who want students to stay on campus.

"Our relations with the residents are not that good," said Ted Goesch, a GWU student. "They don't like us. They call the police on us when we throw parties."

"Every year, they meet with the university president and yell at him."

Julian Cope could be described as a survivor of sorts. Cope fronted one of the great English bands of the late '70s, the Teardrop Explodes, and, following its demise in 1982, he went on to even greater success as a solo artist. Cope projects an unflattering view of people as a whole, not to damn them, but to warn them.

Nowhere is this more evident than on Cope's 1991 release, Peggy Suicide, an 83-minute double album that lashes out at the indifference of humanity toward the planet and nature, poll taxes in England, war and everything that goes down everyday to make life on earth more unbearable.

Cope said that Peggy Suicide "... is a vision of the world I had not known before. In that vision, Peggy Suicide was Mother Earth."

Cope said he called the album Peggy Suicide because Mother Earth is poised on the highest cliff of infinity about to leap off.

Cope said the album is his message to the world that "...I'm back. I'm rich, well-meaning, and I'm not an asshole.

Peggy Suicide excels as a concept album. It opens with "Pristeen," a Velvet Underground-type tune that's about a man who is falling in love with his ideal woman and finding out that she's not what he thought she was at all.

Cope said Peggy Suicide is a metaphor for the treatment that Mother Earth receives from people.

Cope sometimes deems it necessary to provide his audience with a subtle yet forceful aural masterpiece about the human condition, the role of religion in society or the desecrations caused by politics.

Peggy Suicide provides an eerie homespun charm that combines a garage sound with precise, rhythmic percussion. The flowing keyboards combine with guitars that sometimes break into choos. It's pure pop joy.

Cope is at once engaging and disparaging, poetic and depressing. His chaotic gloominess is apparent in the lyrics to his single "Charlotte Anne," from 1988's My Nation Underground.

"And in my room, I'm alone in my room. And in my car, I'm alone in my car, and may be in here for awhile," Cope sings in rhythmic patter, with what sounds like a slow, upbeat Celtic-like flute.

On his 1987 release, Saint Julian, Cope dives headlong into the subject of religion and tackles it with bullish tenacity.

He sings on the title track, "I met God in a car in a dreaming dreaming ankierside. And I was very unkind. I said, 'You locked us out of forest and gave us a mind.'"

Most of Cope's work sounds angry and vociferous, but different from protestations afforded listeners by other bands.

Cope's singing style hasn't changed much from his previous works. Unique rough and ragged and polished, Cope belts out his message with a ferocity that won't or can't stop.

EMF
Shubert Dip

The latest European wonderkids use the traditional 'house beats meet guitar rock' trend and inject a huge dose of dance-a-thonic bass rhythms.

Sounds like Jesus Jones, doesn't it? Maybe, but EMF's sound is more fluid and their whirlwind guitars cut through the back-beats with a little more umph, giving them more credibility than most indie/dance fusion acts.

EMF's free spirit of reckless mirth and unbridled energy comes through crisp and loud on their EMI release, Shubert Dip. The first single, "Unbelievable," has been a big success on both sides of the Atlantic, on and off the dance floor.

The album as a whole combines EMF's passion for both straight-ahead rock and groove-bound dance music. EMF may look young and fresh enough to tour with the New Kids, but their music evokes a tough, determined, self-made working class effort that bands 10 years older are still trying to produce.

Fishbone
The Reality of My Surroundings

Fishbone's new release, The Reality of My Surroundings, is the epilogue of its title. "If I Were A... I'd," which is broken up into four parts on the album, says it all: "If I believed everything I saw on television, I'd think like the Brady Bunch and eat Wendy's for lunch."

The "Parental Advisory/Explicit Lyrics" label attached to the album is fair warning to songs such as "Na-zee Man" and "Junkies Prayer." "Prayer" is supposed to be a take-off on the Lord's Prayer with lyrics that read "My pusher who art in the crack house, hallowed be thy bitches and hos... forgive us for we have no control or self-respect."

Although The Reality of My Surroundings has some unusual beats and intelligent lyrics, it doesn't compare to the band's Truth and Soul album. The Reality of My Surroundings is an eclectic mix of hard-core funk and ska. It's interesting, but a bit too hip for hip's sake.

Nellie Jane Darlington, The Daily Lobo, U. of New Mexico

Jesus Jones
Doubt

No Doubt about it: Jesus Jones is one of the most surprising bands to come along in years. Jesus Jones takes cynical, jabbing lyrics, and adds dark, savage guitars and catchy synth melodies to come up with a truly original hybrid.

Songs like "Nothing Left To Hold Me" and "I'm Burning" simmer with cold emotion waiting to explode. "International Bright Young Thing" and "Real, Real, Real," are bouncy extraterrestrial pop spiked with sarcastic lyrics. "Right Here, Right Now" is a perfect marriage between jangling guitars and soaring harmonies.

With Doubt, Jesus Jones has come up with a masterpiece of cynicism and rage, perched upon the fragile line between pop and a lush, tough, poetic, and catchy synth melodies to come up with a truly original hybrid.

With Doubt, Jesus Jones has come up with a masterpiece of cynicism and rage, perched upon the fragile line between pop and a lush, tough, poetic, and catchy synth melodies to come up with a truly original hybrid.

Although Doubt is an excellent album, Jesus Jones' first album, Liquidizer, was a better effort from the band and is probably a better investment for first-time Jesus Jones listeners.

R.E.M.
Out of Time

R.E.M. has always prided itself on the diversity of musical styles within a single album, and the band's latest Warner Bros. release, Out of Time, continues the tradition.

The only problem is a few songs that fill the "quota" of experimental rhythms and vocals are just plain bad.

"Shiny Happy People" is an annoying tune indicative of its title, saved by the back-up vocals of Kate Pierson of the B-52s.

But cuts such as the popular "Losing My Religion" and "Half a World Away" combine great lyrics, complex melodies and strong rhythms to produce true R.E.M. hits.

"Bong" is the most enthralling song, saving the album from becoming a total waste of plastic.

Although Out of Time is still signature R.E.M., with Stipe's cracking voice and lyrics that don't necessarily rhyme, it doesn't compare favorably with their previous efforts.

"Cope said that from Suicide," is advice from people.

Cope sometimes deems it necessary to provide his audience with a subtle yet forceful aural masterpiece about the human condition, the role of religion in society or the desecrations caused by politics.

EMF

Shubert Dip

The latest European wonderkids use the traditional ‘house beats meet guita rock’ trend and inject a huge dose of dance-a-thonic bass rhythms.

Sounds like Jesus Jones, doesn’t it? Maybe, but EMF’s sound is more fluid and their whirwind guitars cut through the back-beats with a little more ummph, giving them more credibility than most indie/dance fusion acts.

EMF’s free spirit of reckless mirth and unbridled energy comes through crisp and loud on their EMF release, Shubert Dip. The first single, “Unbelievable,” has been a big success on both sides of the Atlantic, on and off the dance floor.

The album as a whole combines EMF’s passion for both straight-ahead rock and groove-bound dance music. EMF may look young and fresh enough to tour with the New Kids, but their music evokes tough, determined, self-made working-class effort that bands 10 years older are still trying to produce. ■ Charley Marshall, The Daily Tar Heel, U. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill

Person, but I felt frustrated when people thought P.C. was the entire strip."

Shesol said the characters in "Thatch" portrayed typical college students, with the main character of J. "Thatch" Thatcher sometimes mirroring himself.

"Thatch is as close to an alter ego as I've got in the strip," he said.

"He is my voice in the strip more so than anyone else," Shesol added.

This fall, Shesol, a Rhodes scholar, will attend Oxford U. in London to pursue a master's of philosophy in British history.

When he returns from London, Shesol has the option of syndicating a new comic strip with Creators Syndicate.

If Shesol decides to continue cartooning, he will create a new strip, possibly featuring people in their early 20s looking for jobs and stability, he said.

Students suckered by get-rich-quick scams

By SUSAN GILES
The Ball State Daily News, Ball State U.

Faced with a recession and a gloomy job market, some college students are resorting to quick cash mail schemes.

But it may be their own cash that's going the quickest.

"Earn $1,000 for stuffing 1,000 envelopes. There has never been anything quite like this opportunity," the faceless voice on the 900 number stated.

Work-at-home schemes like this can be appealing, especially to college students. The hours sound ideal. The tasks sound simple. The money sounds outstanding.

But many organizations, like the Consumer Education Council (CEC) at Ball State U., have dealt with work-at-home schemes before.

They advise students to beware. If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is, they say.

CEC worker Catherine Howard said college students are a target audience because they can be naive about schemes and want to make easy money.

The most prevalent work-at-home schemes include stuffing envelopes, assembling toys or dollies, reading books, clipping newspaper articles, sewing at home, and raising laboratory animals.

Sometimes it's all for nothing.

Howard said the company might not buy the assembled product, even after students have invested considerable time and money, telling them it's "not acceptable quality."

Letter-stuffing seems to be the most common scheme.

Ads promise from $1,000 to $3,000 a month for stuffing envelopes, but the bureau said the plans outlined in the ad would require several hundred dollars more for advertising, postage, envelopes and printing.

Although "get rich quick" scams are common, steps are being taken to shut down some operations.

The Postal Inspection Service said it puts about 3,500 work-at-home operations out of business each year through mail stop orders, consent agreements and criminal proceedings.

An example of a complaint letter mailed to the Federal Trade Commission shows one person's bad experience with work at home jobs.

The victim called an 800 number to respond to a job offer, but the number referred the person to a 900 number.

That number told the person to leave a message or send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for more information. The charge for the 900 number was $18.

"Anytime a customer has a name and address of a company, they can call us," Howard said.

Howard added that tough financial times could contribute to even more of the questionable operations in the future. That means the scam operators will be looking harder for people who need quick cash, like college students.

"The more into a recession we get, the more people are going to want extra money," she said.

"There are other options, but the cost isn't much better. I pay upwards of $400 per semester," Stewart said.

"It's a lot of money, so instead of using money I don't have, I use what I have," she said.

Lucy Stewart uses metals in her artwork, and she pays a precious price ordering supplies from surplus companies.

"I pay upwards of $400 per semester," Stewart said.

Adrienne Walting, who also avoids the hassles of her classmates by ordering from a warehouse, spends even more money. She estimated her art expenses at $1,000 per semester.

Three years at that rate has pushed her into tremendous debt.

"Hopefully, once you graduate, you'll sell paintings to make the money back, or get a good job, or marry a rich husband," she joked.

Art student Quentin Davis, economizes by using materials he finds. Using trash and parts of discarded machinery keeps his semester total at about $100, he said.

"Time is money, so instead of using money I don't have, I spend five hours looking along the side of the road," Davis said.

After spending weeks on a project and the cash to match it, many artists have to destroy their work or pay exorbitant storage costs. A slide takes the place of the actual artwork and gets filed in a portfolio.

Sykora doesn't think the slides do her work justice.

"All this money you put in, and it comes out a two-inch square."

U. of Arizona ‘humanizes’ classes with computers

By THOMAS J. MCLEAN
Arizona Daily Wildcat, U. of Arizona

A new computer system is being used at the U. of Arizona College of Medicine that allows for more student-teacher interaction and may end the days of boring classroom lectures.

The IBM Advanced Academic System uses small keypads hooked up to a computer that allows students to respond to multiple-choice or true-false questions during a lecture, said Steve Louie, senior support systems analyst with the division of academic resources in the College of Medicine.

Student responses are collected by the computer and displayed in graph form on an overhead projection screen, Louie said.

The instructor can then see if students are understanding the material based on the number of correct or incorrect answers.

The system helps both students and professors determine their weaknesses so they can be corrected.

The system has been in use for less than two months and already has been used in a few medical classes with good results, Louie said.

The computer can handle up to 400 keypads at one time and is connected with a personal computer that displays the questions on an overhead projector. The medical college is equipped with 100 keypads.

The advantage of the system is that all students respond to the questions anonymously and no longer need to feel embarrassed if they give an incorrect response, Louie said.

Professors also are able to continually test students and no longer need to wait for an exam to see if the students learned the material, Louie said.

The system is relatively inexpensive considering the advantages, he said. Each keypad costs $94 and a large lecture hall could be set up for about $25,000, he said.

Student response has been positive so far, mostly because the system helps “humanize” lectures, Louie said.

Medical students at the U. of Arizona think the new system will help them prepare for classes, and some students like the keypads because it gives them insight as to how teachers are going to test their classes throughout the semester.

“It gave us an idea of the type of questions he would ask (on an exam),” said Kerry Schlecht, a second-year medical student who has used the system.

Schlecht said she liked using the keypads and felt they helped her get more out of the lecture. Louie said he feels that this technology will revolutionize undergraduate teaching because it is so flexible.

“The future of it is going to be great,” he said.

He belonged to Phi Beta Kappa, graduated as class marshall and worked as assistant news editor at his school's newspaper. Although he found a job, he still couldn't reach the goal he set for himself.

"I said I would aim for a salary of at least $20,000 a year and a paper with a 30,000 circulation," he said. "I had to settle for about $16,000 and a circulation of 14,500."

Eileen McGarry, career planning and placement director at the U. of Nevada-Las Vegas, said she also is seeing more underemployed students than non-employed students.

For example, she said hotels are offering gradates desk positions until they can afford to open top management positions.

But many recent graduates who don't want to wait until the job scene improves are discovering that graduate school is one way to bide time and prepare for the competitive market.

"What's been going on is some fairly substantial increases in applications over the past two years," said Peter Sverson, of the Council of Graduate Schools.

Sverson's organization maintains contact with 400 universities with graduate programs. On a nationwide average, he said most schools have seen about a 10-15 percent increase in applications during the past two years.

"For grads who are willing to work for almost nothing yet get the opportunity to help people in underprivileged parts of the world, the Peace Corps is another option," Jeff Ferry, an employee in the director's office at the Peace Corps' national headquarters in Los Angeles, said inquiries into the Peace Corps have increased, but applications have not.

"It's generally because people cannot find a job and they're willing to do whatever to occupy their time...and they have a desire to help these third world countries," he said.

Although the employment market does not look good for first semester graduates, there may be light at the end of the recession tunnel for those who can be patient. Experts expect the job market to open within a year.

"Some of the reports I've seen are saying that things will let up by the beginning of winter," McGarry said. "Often the rebound from this might take a full year."

Other college administrators and faculty agree that the economy is getting healthier.

"We're getting signs the recession is ending," said Sweeney. "But it's quite murky at the moment," Gardner said. "A college education is still one of the best buys there is, and we continue to place people. It's just taking longer."

programs scramble for conference spots

By CHRISt TALBOT
Florida Flambeau, Florida State U.

Imagine the national college football system is a jigsaw puzzle. Now take the puzzle, throw it against the wall, and you have college football for the '90s.

In less than a year, an unprecedented number of college football teams have switched conferences or abandoned their independent status in a scramble to secure spots in major conferences.

“Those were a decade when...the (independent schools) could no longer survive,” said Chris Plonsky, assistant commissioner of the revamped Big East Conference.

So in search of conferences and financial stability they went.

Penn State, Arkansas, Florida State, Miami (Fla.), South Carolina and some smaller schools joined and switched conferences in search of lucrative television packages.

Penn State began the exit in January 1990 when the school gave up its independence and joined the Big Ten Conference.

That decision for us to join the Big Ten, that triggered all these changes going on,” Penn State Athletic Director James Tarman said. “We just sat back in amazement that all (the switching) happened.”

The Nittany Lions were followed by Arkansas, which abandoned a 77-year association with the Southwest Conference to head to the nearby Southeastern Conference.

The Razorbacks were joined in the SEC by South Carolina, which traded independence for the 12-team superconference.

According to Frank Broyles, Arkansas athletic director, his school did not sever its ties with the SWC because it wanted to leave. The Razorbacks made the move out of necessity.

“We were not unhappy in the Southwest Conference,” said Broyles. “We’ve had a long and happy relationship with See CONFERENCES, Page 25 heading for a postseason playoff?

Football alliance ensures national champ — maybe

By MARK BABINECK
The Daily Texan, U. of Texas, Austin

After years of debate about a college football national championship, the major bowls and conferences agreed to settle the score once and for all.

Whether or not they succeeded depends on who you talk to.

The group created an alliance involving four bowl games (the Cotton, Fiesta, Orange, and Sugar), five athletic conferences (The Big East, Atlantic Coast, Big Eight, Southwest and Southeast) and Notre Dame. The new ground rules will begin on Jan. 1, 1993. The Pac-10 and Big Ten conferences elected not to participate.

“The whole intent of this was to create a situation which would get the selection process to a point that it wouldn’t be completed until after the season was over,” said Mickey Holmes, executive director of the Sugar Bowl.

The traditional bowl arrangements will remain the same, with the champions of the Big Eight, SWC, and SEC going to the Orange, Cotton, and Sugar bowls, respectively. The Fiesta Bowl will remain an open bowl. The remaining slots in those bowls will be filled by a five-team pool consisting of Notre Dame, the Big East and ACC champions, and two other highly ranked at-large teams.

In the new alliance, the top-ranked team will face the next highest-ranked team available. This arrangement should increase the possibility of a true national championship game between the No. 1 and No. 2 teams and eliminate the early bowl pairings of the past few years.

“Last year (the bowl selections) happened virtually in the first week of November. How in the world can you expect to have meaningful pairings if you do it that early?” Holmes said.

Holmes stressed the alliance is not a step toward national football playoff that many college fans have been calling for.

“That was never the intent, to create some sort of playofT system,” he said. “The threat... of a playoff system would lead the bowls to the same status of the dinosaur.”

bowls, conferences should wake up and smell the roses

By RICK SCHULTZ
The Daily Californian,
U. of California, Berkeley

What a joke. Over the summer, a few college football bowls got together with some conferences and formed a nice little agreement that says they will try to match up the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in a “national championship” game every year.

But it accomplishes something few thought was possible. It makes college football’s post-season even more confusing.

The agreement is nowhere near a playoff system that would determine an indisputable national champion. There is still a chance that two teams will be claiming the national title at the end of the year, as was the case in 1990. Georgia Tech finished first in the UPI poll, while Colorado was No. 1 in the Associated Press poll.

And then there’s Notre Dame, the school that became its own conference, with a guaranteed berth in a major bowl every year.

the SWC. But because of the influence of television we have been forced to make a change."

Florida State also abandoned its independent status to join the Atlantic Coast Conference for financial reasons.
"I think we were standing in a dangerous area being independent," said Florida State Athletic Director Bob Goin. "I've often said it's nice being independent, but we're not an island."

Tom Mickle, assistant commissioner of the ACC, said his conference decided to add the Seminoles in response to the moves by Penn State and Miami.
"We could see that college football was changing," Mickle said. "We had to move or become surrounded."

But Miami clearly demonstrated how football conference jumping can make for strange bedfellows.

The Hurricanes joined the newly formed Big East Conference to secure a media market that reaches 33 percent of the country. But lack of competition in the otherwise weak conference should ensure the football powerhouse lopsided victories and possibly alienate other Big East fans.

John Paquette, the director of public relations for the Big East, recognized the current gap in the talent level.
"In the beginning, Miami will dominate. But, hopefully, the competition will cause the schools to improve," Paquette said. "We felt pressure to establish a football league. Miami was the best team out there. We went for them."

ATHLETE SPOTLIGHT:
DAVID KLINGLER

Gillette shines its athlete spotlight this month on David Klingler, quarterback of the U. of Houston Cougars.

Klingler, who established himself last year as one of the most dominant quarterbacks in college football history, is everybody's favorite candidate in the race for this year's Heisman Trophy.

Although the ink is still wet on the 33 NCAA records Klingler broke or tied last year, he appears poised to completely rewrite those books this year.

Klingler threw for an amazing 5140 yards and 54 touchdowns last season, shattering previous marks held by Andre Ware and Jim McMahon, respectively.

But that should be a mere prelude to this year's action.

Klingler has the luxury of operating within head coach John Jenkins' seemingly unstoppable run-and-shoot offense. In addition, Klingler's supporting cast appears well-endowed with the talent to back him up. The Cougars, the No. 14 pick in this year's preseason U. College Football Poll, will be aiming to better last season's 10-1 record.

Of course, the Houston quarterback is still haunted by the ghost of former teammate Ware. Because he arrived on the heels of another quarterback sensation, Klingler will have to silence the critics who claim Jenkins' system, not the quarterback, is responsible for his phenomenal stats.

No doubt, he'll just let his arm do the talking.

Students cope with ‘yuppie flu’

By KIMBERLY YOUNG
Maroon, Loyola U.

You’re depressed, moody and irrational. Your short-term memory is shot. You’re fevered and weak. You’re constantly tired but can never fall asleep.

You probably think the feeling is natural – you’re a college student.

But your condition might not be natural at all. You might have Chronic Fatigue Syndrome.

CFS, for years ridiculed by the medical community as the “yuppie flu,” now is recognized as a legitimate illness, said Anna Davis, a doctor at East Jefferson General Hospital in Louisiana. A new viral illness of an unknown origin, CFS became an epidemic in the last decade, Davis said.

Similar to AIDS in some symptoms, CFS attacks the immune system, causing it to dysfunction, overreact, and enable other viruses and bacteria to attack the body.

Although the exact method of transmission is undetermined, CFS often is triggered by stress. College students, frequently stress mongers, are at a high risk of contracting the virus, Davis said.

“In a recent research study, 3,000 CFS patients were found never to experience REM sleep,” Davis said. “Symptoms can reduce one’s ability to function by 50 percent.”

For students, the disease can be devastating. Katie Woods, a junior at Tulane U., knows this all too well. Woods was diagnosed last year with Chronic Epstein-Barr Virus, a disease closely related to CFS.

“In classes, I’d get so anxious and light-headed I would have to run out,” Woods said. “I remember one time, I didn’t even have the energy to run to class.”

Woods’ demanding schedule and the emotional stress of her parents’ separation preceded the illness. Because of the disease, Woods dropped several classes and finally withdrew from her premed major.

“Some nights I would lie in bed tossing and turning, and I would cry in frustration with being unable to fall asleep,” Woods said. “The next day I couldn’t get up or I’d feel strung out — kind of a hung-over feeling.”

Woods said diagnosing the illness was half the battle. Her boyfriend believed she was having a nervous breakdown, while her friends blamed her feelings on her vegetarian diet.

“The first doctors (I visited) were so quick to slap me on antidepressants,” Woods said. “Nobody believes it; they just say you’re stressed or depressed.”

The disease is frustrating for usually ambitious, active people. Patients suffering from the disease have a suicide rate six times higher than non-patients, even though the disease has a mere 5 to 8 percent mortality rate, Davis said.

“I remember panicking and wondering ‘What’s wrong with me — am I dying’?” Woods said.

CFS is not curable but can be treated symptomatically. Even though the disease isn’t “in the mind,” therapy and emotional support has proven extremely helpful, Davis said.

Davis, a leading expert in the study of CFS, theorizes that the cause of the disease is somehow environmentally related. As the body’s immune system copes with the increased toxicity of the environment, CFS and other relatively new viruses invade humans in near-epidemic proportions, Davis said.

The disease is known to run in families, and since it is viral, it could be genetically encoded.

A recent national research program on CFS by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control reported receiving 1,000 calls per month from CFS sufferers.

CFS in its varying degrees can be active in a person for up to 14 years, but is capable of becoming dormant, according to the next. In therapy, Woods was taught to view the illness as a gift. She said she has learned to cope and is doing much better this semester.

“I realized that I’m not like everyone else. I get sad looking at children running around and playing,” she said. “My friends like going out late drinking, but I have to plan when I will go out and stick to a sleeping schedule.”

Rollerblades: Transportation trend of the ’90s

By TIM WIESENHAN
Kentucky Kernel, U. of Kentucky

College students are careening across campus, leaping over curbs and crashing into trees — and they’re loving every minute of it.

Rollerblades, a trademarked name for in-line skates, have replaced rollerskates as the preferred mode of stylish transportation and exercise on campuses across the country.

“Rollerskates are like, the ’70s,” said Arizona State U. rollerblader Tom Tubery. “Rollerblades are lighter and more maneuverable than regular skates. Rollerblading is a good aerobic nonimpact form of exercise. It is definitely going to continue to grow.”

More than 1 million pairs of in-line skates have been sold in the U.S. during the last decade, and 2 million pairs are expected to sell this year alone, according to Mary Hougen, a spokeswoman for Rollerblade, the leading manufacturer of in-line skates. Since its introduction in 1981, the Rollerblade has captured more than 50 percent of the in-line skate market.

“Last year there was barely anybody wearing them,” said William Eurego, manager of the Beach Bum skate store in Miami. “If you were rollerblading, people just thought you were weird. This year I get people from ages 10 to 50 renting rollerblades.”

The modern skates, which can cost anywhere from $90 to $300, are comprised of ankle-snug, nylon padded ski boots bolted to four or five polyurethane wheels. But bladers say the thrill is worth the cost.

“The first time I tried it I felt like I was (ice) skating on cement,” said Eric Frederickson, a blader from St. Louis. “When I first got on rollerblades, it was incredible I get the urge to go blading almost every day.”

Rob Hayslett, a sophomore at the U. of Kentucky, calls blading “ferocious.”

“You get so hyped doing it,” Hayslett said. “It's just something about picking up speed — and you're not doing anything. You're thinking, I'm going to die. You start shaking, and panic. Your knees start to buckle.”

But to those less inclined to such bursts of adrenaline, in-line skates can offer practical health benefits, like low-impact aerobic cross-training.

“If you ride all the time, you must ride all the time, you must ride all the time,” said Hayslett. “If you get on (in-line skates), it will save your knees from road shock.”

Of course, hurling your body into trees and cars isn’t very good for your health, so experienced bladers suggest beginners learn on a parking lot or other uncrowded area so they can adjust to the tricky rubber heel brake on the skates.

Hougen stressed that rollerbladers should always wear a helmet, shoulder pads and knee pads while blading.

“Climbs you slow down and hope you survive to the top; and the descents you hope you survive to the bottom without crashing,” Hayslett said.

Leslie Anderson of the State Press, Arizona State U., also contributed to this story.
Championship (continued from page 24)

The Pac-10 and the Big Ten are not part of the plan. They keep sending their champions to meet in the Rose Bowl and a major player in the agreement. The arrangement ensures the Irish an appearance in a major bowl every year.

"It's not a perfect solution to ensuring that the No. 1 and No. 2 teams meet, but it's a significant enhancement," Rosenthal said.

Texas Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds agrees with Rosenthal on one point -- it's anything but perfect. He contends that if the Longhorns were to win the SWC and Nebraska were to take the Big Eight and the teams were ranked No. 1 and No. 2, there would still be no national championship game because the teams are committed to different bowls. And countless scenarios like that could ruin the ideal championship game.

"The best thing for us would be to have an alliance with the flexibility for any possible national champion," he said. "The second best thing would be to do nothing. The worst possible thing would be to leave it (the proposed bowl alliance)."

All the bowl bosses have sounded their agreement with the plan, and Fiesta Bowl officials are particularly pleased.

That bowl, played in Tempe, Ariz., was chosen from a group of games vying for the fourth slot in the agreement, including the Citrus, Gator, Blockbuster and Holiday bowls.

Conspicuous by its absence is the Rose Bowl, the only major game whose teams are automatically determined. The Big Ten and Pac-10 send their champions to Pasadena each year. If a No. 1 or No. 2 team comes from those conferences, the Rose Bowl could render the new alliance's top matchups meaningless.

Granted, the last team to emerge from Pasadena as national champion was the U. of Southern California in 1972. However, in most of 1991's preseason polls, the Big Ten's Michigan and Pac-10's Washington are among the top three picks in the nation. Add perennial power Penn State to the Big Ten schedule in 1993, and it further damages the alliance's chances of fielding a title game.

Confused? Probably, but most agree that the arrangement takes at least a small step toward creating a national championship game.

"I think it's better than what we have ever had," said Florida State Athletic Director Bob Goin. "They went back and looked at it and found that 12 out of the last 15 years, number one would have been against number two (if this system was used)."

"It means that there is more flexibility and the bowls are going to be rewarded with the highest rankings. I think that's good."

Observatory move uproots hilltop sidewalk

A new policy banning non-students from attending events in the Syracuse University Underground met with sharp criticism and public concern Wednesday night at a public forum.

The policy went into effect last weekend sparking concern about the relationship between SU and the community.

The forum was organized by Student African-American Society President Vaughn Irons in response to community members who believe the move will prevent interaction among blacks in the area.

The policy was implemented after a fraternity gathering in The Underground erupted into a fight where several individuals were injured on Aug. 30.

The fight involved SU students and Syracuse residents.

The purpose of getting together tonight was for SAS to reach back into the community,” Irons said. “This issue was so important.”

The policy restricts non-college students who are not signed into the function by an SU student, said Director of Student Programs Peter Baigent.

Baigent said the policy would be re-evaluated Tuesday in light of the community response.

“We feel it is very important to provide social opportunities for students while assuring their safety,” said Director of the Schine and Goldstein student centers Toby Peters.

“We shouldn’t have to pretend that we want an access route for 15-year-olds to party with 19- and 20-year-olds,” said Vice President for Public Relations Robert Hill.

Peters said the policy assumed that scheduled events would not be interfered with.

There have been four or five incidents in the history of The Schine, but this has been the worst, said Baigent.

“I wanted the administrators to see the individuals involved before the policy is cut and dry,” Irons said.

“There are positive individuals here that we want to include,” he said.

Peters said he “will look for the best effect on students while being sensitive to the community.”

“We are keeping an open mind toward evaluating a policy,” he said.

Policy prevents interaction

Irons said SAS disagrees with the policy because it prevents the group from giving something back to the community and from including peers in its programs.

“Issues center around proper alternatives sensitive to the needs of 18- to 20-year-old non-students,” Hill said.

Syracuse resident Askey Presley said “If they are not in The Underground, they will be on Marshall Street. And then they won’t be fighting brothers and sisters, they will be fighting Caucasians.”

Baigent said University Union is also concerned because the policy has economic implications.

“My sense is that we have just started to talk about this issue,” said Associate Dean of Summer Sessions Horace Smith.

“The concern is how to eliminate the troublemakers and still include the community,” he said.

There were 14 members on the panel that created the policy, including six students.

Another public forum will be on Oct. 3 at an on-campus location.

The forum was held in the New Jerusalem Church of God and Christ on South Salina Street.

SU’s computer engineering ranked third

By TOM SEELEY
Contributing Writer

Syracuse University’s computer engineering program was ranked third in the nation in a recent curriculum assessment.

“Southern Methodist University was ranked third behind Purdue University and Southern Methodist University,” Stabler said.

The survey and assessment examined schools accredited by the Accreditation Board for Engineering and Technology (ABET) or the Computer Science Accreditation Board (CSAB).

The Criteria

Criteria included data on student enrollment, duties in the areas of undergraduate teaching and graduate teaching, administrative loads, computing and research, the use of undergraduate teaching and admission qualifications.

This was strictly a data-based survey, not an opinionated one,” Stabler said.

Suicide rate rises for older Americans
The suicide rate for Americans ages 65 and older rose 21 percent from 1980 through 1986. The rate rose the most for black men—42 percent. For white men it rose 23 percent.

Social isolation coupled with chronic illness may have played a role in the rise, according to Dr. Richard Sattin, an author of the study and researcher at the Federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The report states that nearly 37,000 Americans ages 65 or older killed themselves from 1980 through 1986.

Cuomo announces new school education plan
Gov. Mario Cuomo and about 300 lawmakers, business and community leaders launched a program to improve schools and education.

The educational reforms call for setting higher standards for students and giving educators at different schools more latitude to determine how to meet those standards.

The program is called the "New Compact for Learning" and its guiding principle is "All children can learn," the governor said.

State Senator's son found severely beaten
The 21-year-old son of state Senator Stephen Saland was found severely beaten in his home in Hyde Park, police said.

Judge Saland was in critical condition at Vassar Brothers Hospital in Poughkeepsie, according to Dutchess County Sheriff Frederick Scoralick.

Saldan was semi-conscious when he was discovered by his roommate early Wednesday morning.

Scoralick said that there were no motives in the case and that Saland's home showed no signs of forced entry.

The award recognizes individuals in industry, government, and the academic community who uphold quality in manufacturing.

Young, who has worked with Hewlett-Packard for 33 years and served as president and chief executive officer for the last 14 years, will receive the award from Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw at a luncheon Oct. 16 at the Hotel Syracuse.

Professor wins first place in music contest
A Syracuse University music professor took top honors in a national composers' competition sponsored by the U.S. West Foundation and the National Repertory Orchestra.

Daniel Godfrey, an associate professor of composition, won the top prize for "Celebration," an orchestral work that takes its name from a piece of the wild horses.

"This orchestral work was catalyzed by the image of horses in the wild, and by the ideas their history represents to me," Godfrey said.

The first prize of $5,000 in cash, $15,000 for the commission of a new work and $8,000 for copying fees to produce the new composition. Godfrey's new work is scheduled to be premiered by the National Repertory Orchestra in 1992 at the Keystone Music Festival in Colorado.
Joseph News Bell. Contraversial, refer to values, family Thomas may be more of a mystery now qualified or denied many of the views he’d expressed during a decade of writing and making speeches.

The New York Times said Thomas presented himself as a man “ridding himself not only of old ideas and even the desire to form new ones, but...of traits and attitudes that have formed the essence of his adult personality.”

But the Times noted that if Thomas is confirmed “it would be the first time in years that none of the justices believe the death penalty is by definition cruel and unusual punishment.”

Abortion surfaces but it was the abortion issue that caused the left wing most of its frustration. When Metzzenbaum asked Thomas to comment on whether or not a woman has a right to choose to terminate her pregnancy, he said she could not respond because to do so would “seriously compromise my ability to sit on a case of that importance.”

In 1973 the Roe vs. Wade decision established a woman’s constitutional right to abortion. Thomas was a law student at Yale University when the Supreme Court heard the case, but did not recall discussing it with any of his fellow students. The nominee to the high court maintains he has never expressed an opinion about the case, even in conversations.

At one point during the hearings, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, reprimanded his liberal colleagues for asking so many questions related to abortion.

By the Bush administration to follow a script that revealed very little,” he said. Banko said because Thomas was so prepared he was able to dodge important issues brought forward by the committee, such as abortion and Affirmative Action, and whether he would interpret the language of the Constitution broadly or narrowly.

Thomas sidestepped these issues by saying that he was obligated to make rulings based on the wording of the Constitution and that his personal beliefs had no bearing on his decisions.

In many cases, however, Thomas contradicted statements he has made in the past, leading the committee to question whether he was being truthful or simply deferring his answers to earn the confirmation.

The theory of natural law — the premise of certain fundamental freedoms that outweigh the scope of the Constitution — was brought up by pro-lifers as a defense against abortion.

But when Thomas was asked by Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., “Does a fetus have a constitutional status?” Thomas replied: “I can’t think of any cases that have held that.”

Recounting Operation Rescue activities in which he participated, Quindlen writes that no other issue “has resulted in demonstrations and mass arrests in communities across the country. None other addresses the bodily integrity of half our citizenry.”

Supreme Court nominee Judge Clarence Thomas, seen during the Confirmation Hearings last Friday, cautiously fielded questions which will help the Senate Committee determine his ability to serve as a judge on the high court.

ALL THE BEST AND A SPEEDY RECOVERY TO DAN CONLEY #49

Letter to the editor:

I am writing this letter in response to two articles that appeared in The Daily Orange on Sept. 15.

The first article I would like to speak about is Wendy Kaplan's on recycling. I would like to wholeheartedly endorse her contention that we, as college students, should be able to read. I mean, how difficult is it to read and understand "Newspapers or Cans Only!"

Last year, I spent almost half an hour in my trash room separating the trash out from the recycled goods, and putting the things that are recyclable in their proper containers. I did this because I could not stand to see the already recycled goods go to waste. I made a decision that intelligent students could not take the extra three seconds it takes to separate and place the things properly. It makes such a big difference for a minimum of effort.

The second article that I would like to address in Zev Borow's sports opinion column. On Tuesday, he wrote an article about how being football fans are in the Dome. He contends that fans at such schools as Michigan and Notre Dame get into the game that it makes the games fun to watch. He says outright that the fans in the Dome are the ones that make the games fun to watch. He says outright that the fans in the Dome are the ones that make the games fun to watch.

Dome spirit is dead at SU

Finally, someone on this campus feels the same way I do about the Dome. Thank you, Zev Borow, for crystallizing my sophomore thoughts that our major athletic facility on campus.

Don't get me wrong. The Dome and the Dome Guy are not my idea of an effective football experience. For me, it seems like the Dome is a conduit to allow those of us who are unable to attend games to be able to enjoy a pillow and a good book rather than peanuts and a Dome Dog. It seems like the Dome is conducive to allowing the student body to sleep in the stands instead of actually attending the games.

Last November, I was treated when I visited my friends at Boston College. They were playing BC in football. I was jealous of their outdoor football facilities and their team's respective playing ability. I had the best time just attending a football game at the picturesque college campus stadium and game that every football fan yearns for. There was a huge, friendly tailgating party going on. The students with their 40 yard line seats were really into the game instead of catching up on those extra three hours of sleep needed. We did not have to worry about how to get to the game more but he might get others to join in as well. If Zev, and others, did ad to bringing the marching band, of which I am a member, and the cheerleaders in cheers and singing and that is conducive to slow motion tapes. I would never do any of those things properly. The Dome is the Dome. He says that the cause of fan apathy is conducive to slow motion tapes. It makes such a big difference for a minimum of effort.

EDITORIAL

Vote or remain silent

It’s a simple fact of life that people complain about the Student Government Association. Since this has always been the case, we might as well question why students don’t itilize the system and act rather than file empty complaints that have no impact.

SGA was forced to extend its election through next week due to lack of voter turnout. This is ridiculous, as voting takes about 10 seconds and is the best way to correct errors within the organization.

Elect motivated, committed people, and we'll get things done. Fail to vote, and we might as well get a group of self-interested resume-stuffers who don't care enough about the organization to attend meetings, let alone do anything.

Fans forced to pay-per-view

Will anyone with morals please show their face at this time? Whose scheme was it to make people pay for football on cable television? If Syracuse University’s road football games? Sorry, not all of the away games, just the ones we can’t see on ABC or ESPN.

The only way they could do it is by playing on a station other than ESPN would be to have them be on the 9:30 or 10 p.m. And just our luck, the Maryland and Tulane games are just the games we don’t fit that description. Things really aren’t going our way, I guess. Oh well.

As I have said, they are doing us a favor by allowing us to pay $20 for one game and just $36 ($18 and $32 for season ticket holders) for the best five games. Why are they really looking out for us. They care about the loyal SU fans so much that they are granting paying students the gift of choice.

There is nothing but a big scam, and it’s just the beginning. Pay-per-view seems to be the future of television. In just a few years, rather than checking your local listings to see what will be shown, you will pick the game you want to see via pay-per-view.

You sit down with your grandkids one day and reflect on the “good old days” when you could just turn on the television and see Michigan against Rutgers for free. You didn’t care what game it was, you just sat there and enjoyed it. Then you will go on to say, in your day, you didn’t have to pay for the evening news, or Wheel of Fortune, and even if you did, they were just our luck, the Mary-Land and Tulane games that were going to be used to settle immigrants.

They might even ask you to tell the story about how an institution for higher learning didn’t put in crossing lights amid $2 MD in fine improvements.

Whatever the case, the pay-per-view era is here to stay, and it’s going to be snowball, so don’t take things for granted. Enjoy whatever games you can while they are still free. And let’s hope that we don’t lose some of the free things that we cherish. Somewhere down the road, couldn’t you just see SU requiring an entrance fee to walk through the Quad, needing tickets to attend your class in Watson Theater, or having to pay to view Master?.

Count your blessings.

Thursday Morning Roundtable resumes

By ANDY RYAN
Staff Writer

State governments need to work closely with local governments, New York Secretary of State Gail S. Shaffer said at yesterday's Thursday Morning Roundtable discussion.

Shaffer, who is also the chairperson of the Governor's Blue Ribbon Commission on Consolidation of Local Government, said local governments need to cater to the needs of their community members.

Shaffer said many politicians neglect the needs of their communities by following a state-wide system to govern their regions.

"One size doesn't fit all," she said. "Bigger does not always mean better," Shaffer said.

Some small governments might want to consider consolidating to gain more power and satisfy the needs of the community, Shaffer said.

The merged government might be able to achieve goals more quickly if it shared economies, Shaffer said.

The computer engineering program at SU was the second to be accredited by the ABET in 1973.

The program prides itself on the strength of the undergraduate program at the university, according to data released by the Office of Sponsored Programs.

The objective of the roundtable group is to give local residents the opportunity to discuss their views on different issues, according to a TMR pamphlet.

Doctors, lawyers, government officials, religious leaders, educators and business owners participate in the discussion group. Membership, however, is not limited to any specific profession.

Syracuse University College sponsors TMR to improve the public's understanding of policy issues through listening to and questioning elected officials and professional specialists.

Dr. Leo Jivoff will speak next week on "Confronting the Disaster — Our Troubled Children."

The computer engineering program's special asset is the integration of computer technology into a larger system, Shaffer said.

The program consists of approximately 360 graduate and undergraduate students with 13 full-time faculty members.

For the fourth year in a row, the department's faculty received more research awards than any other academic department in the university, according to data released by the Office of Sponsored Programs.

Homecoming arrives with parade, dance

By MATTHEW PALM

The Health Center may see an epidemic of sore feet on Monday after Syracuse University students spend a weekend marching, cheering and dancing.

Homecoming Week concludes this weekend with the traditional parade and a new activity, a dance.

The parade begins at 5 p.m. Friday at Sime Hall. The route winds around campus to the Quad.

In the past, fraternities and sororities have built floats and competed for prizes. This year, sororities have built floats and some non-greek organizations are exported to join them.

The cheerleaders and SU Marching Band will raise school spirit around a bonfire on the Quad.

Alpha Xi Delta and Zeta Psi participate along with several other sororities and fraternities in the first round of the "Yell Like Hell" competition Wednesday night in Goldstein Audiorium.

The Yell Like Hell finals will take place, and the Trinidad and Tobago Steel Drum Band will perform.

Other Friday night activities are the Letterwinner of Distinction Awards Banquet and the SU Band Alumni Association Cocktail Party. The banquet will be at 7 p.m. at Manley Field House, after a reception that begins at 6. For more information, call the Variety Club at 433-5924.

The cocktail party for band alumni will be on the second floor of the Faculty Center.

Hit the beach
Life's a beach at the Schine Student Center on Saturday with several different activities planned for students.

A Homecoming "Beach Party" dance will begin at 5 p.m. in The Underground.

WJFU will provide music to dance the night away. Sponsors are the Homecoming Committee and the Residence Hall Association.

Upstairs in Goldstein Auditorium, skating will be the activity of choice.

Zeta Phi Beta will hold a roller skating party from 8 to 10 p.m. Then, at 10 p.m., skaters will be exchanged for dancing shoes as a dance party continues until 1 a.m.

From 9 to 11 p.m., VIZION will perform in the Panasci Lounge, on the third floor of Schine.

VIZION specializes in a cappella singing. The group will perform soul, rhythm and blues and ballads. The concert is sponsored by the Student African-American Society.

If you don't care for music and dancing, free video games and pool will be offered in the Schine's game room.

At midnight, University Union Cinemas provides an opportunity to rest those by now tired feet.

The classic movie Grease will be shown in Gifford Auditorium. There is no admission charge.

‘America’s Funniest People’ seeks SU silliness

By ROB OWEN
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

You’ve seen them on television. Now become one of America’s Funniest People yourself when a search crew from the show comes to Syracuse University Friday as part of the Homecoming celebration.

A television crew will be set up in front of the Schine Student Center from noon to 4 p.m. looking for people “who have amusing or unusual talents.”

Some of the past skits done before the cameras include commercial parodies, funny pet antics and the playing of unusual musical instruments.

While hosts Dave Coulier and Arleen Sorkin won’t be in attendance, a camera crew will be ready to tape your wildest talents.

“Our show provides an outlet to the performer in all of us,” says executive producer Vin Di Bona. “It gives everyone a chance to showcase their talents and possibly win $10,000 in our weekly contest.”

Helpful hints

For those interested in performing, some of the tips provided by Vin Di Bona Productions include:

• The average act that airs on our series is 30 seconds to 90 seconds, so prepare accordingly.
• Make sure it’s funny — test it out on your friends first to see if they laugh.
• Don’t do anything you’ve already seen on the show; come up with something new and original.
• Think visually. Can your act use props or costumes? Employ anything that will make your act stand out. However, if you use costumes, make sure you have an act to go with it. For example, if you come dressed as a banana, tell a banana joke.
• When doing impressions, make sure the material itself is funny. An example of what we’re looking for: if you do an impression of Sylvester Stallone, do him working out with George Bush or talking with The Terminator. Make them interactive sketches.
• If you are doing physical humor, such as balancing a sailboat on your nose, please make sure it is safe.
• If you must do an impression of Erkel from ABC’s Family Matters, make it different. Some of the funny pieces we’ve gotten in the past are Elvis doing Erkel or Rodney Dangerfield doing Erkel.
• Above all, be funny, unique and outrageous.

If you miss the auditions in front of Schine, America’s Funniest People will also hold auditions Friday at Carousel Center from 6 to 9 p.m. and Sunday at Shoppingtown Mall from noon to 5 p.m.

If you are unable to attend any of these auditions, send a tape to America’s Funniest People, P.O. Box 1881, Hollywood, Ca. 90078. Enclose a $3 check if the tape is returned.

Tutors sought by Salvation Army

The Salvation Army’s Youth Enrichment Program is seeking volunteer tutors to work with youths ages 12-18 who are “at risk” of academic failure, drug or alcohol involvement or teen-age pregnancy.

The tutors are needed Monday, Wednesday or Thursday evenings from 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Volunteers work in one-on-one or small group settings to assist students with homework assignments and remedial work.

A commitment of one night each week is required.

Volunteers are also invited to participate in the recreation period that follows tutoring.

For more information, call Mary Rose McBride at 473-1321.

Study abroad stipend offered

Applications for the second annual American Institute for Foreign Study College Division Minority Scholarship for the fall of 1993 are now being accepted.

The scholarship includes tuition and room and board. It is applicable to programs in Austria, Britain, France, Germany, Canada, Spain, Italy, Mexico and Spain.

Applications for the scholarship will be accepted from blacks, Hispanics, American Indians, Asian-Americans and Pacific Islanders.

Applications and more information are available by writing:
Minority Scholarship Selection Committee, AIFS, 102 Greenwich Ave., Greenwich, Conn., 06830. Interested people may call (800) 727-2437, ext. 6106.

Russian choir seeks members

The Syracuse University Russian A Cappella Choir is looking for singers from the student body, staff and faculty.

No experience is required to join. The words to all songs are transcribed phonetically.

The choir will present its repertoire of Russian folk songs in Hendricks Chapel and at Wells and Hobart Colleges during the 1991-92 concert season.

Rehearsals are held every Monday at 7 p.m. in Room 107 of the Hall of Languages.

After four weeks back on campus, many alternative music fans may have noticed that Syracuse's outlets for new music are fewer than ever before. When Buggsy's closed at the end of this summer, Marshall Street lost its Tuesday Alternative Night. Eric Buckley's Suburban Park, which offered Alternative Night on Fridays, closed recently for renovations. And because of financial cutbacks, Spectrum Records was forced to reduce its alternative/import section.

Fortunately, some alternatives are still out there. Desert Shore Records is the university area's oasis for alternative records. University Union and UU Television will get in on the act, beginning this fall as they present Club Cerotic, an alternative dance club in The Underground on Tuesday, Sept. 24 at 7:30 p.m. Also, UU Television will be starting up fall programming which includes an alternative video show To The Batcave, available on campus TV and Community Access Channel 7.

WERW, the only alternative radio station in the area, will begin broadcasting for the first time on the 750 AM frequency. As for shows, you can catch any of the several local alternative bands at UU's Coffeehouse in the Faculty Center on Sundays and the Jabberwocky in Schine Dining on Fridays, or even at a local party (if you can find one that isn't busted).

In the meantime, you still have your album collection to tide you over, and here are four recent releases to consider picking up:
- Wonder Stuff, Never Loved Elvis
  - The Wonder Stuff never loved Elvis or any other pretentious pop star who rode out his career on the musical marketing machine. In fact, there isn't much the Wonder Stuff likes about pop — except writing their own brilliant pop songs.
  - After a two-year hiatus, a near breakup and the departure of bassist Rob "The Bass Thing" Jones, the band has come back with a fresh, new approach to its sound, incorporating Irish folk music with the wonderful pop stuff of the past.
  - This new pop-meets-the-Pogues sound comes thanks to the band's new member, multi-instrumentalist Martin Bell. His jangly banjo and raucous fiddle-playing grace every track on the album.

Despite the additions to their sound, the Wonder Stuff still follow the old punk tradition of lashing out at anyone they want. See MUSIC Page 88.

ESF Homecoming hails alumni

Staff Reports

Homecoming Weekend for the alumni of the State University College of Environmental Science and Forestry is scheduled for Friday and Saturday. Activities planned for the reunions of classes ending in "1" and "6" will include faculty receptions, a dinner/dance at the Sheraton University Inn, tours of the campus and a football game Saturday afternoon, in the Carrier Dome with Syracuse University playing nationally-ranked Florida. Dr. Harrison H. Payne, Class of 1950, and emeritus vice president of Student Affairs, said, "Homecoming has grown in popularity, and as president of the Alumni Association, it's always a pleasure to welcome alumni back to their alma mater."

Justin F. Culkowski, class of 1973 and ESF Director of Alumni Affairs, said, "Each facility will be hosting alumni from their particular academic program on Friday. This is a new feature for Homecoming and one which I think will prove very popular as alumni want to talk to faculty in their academic major."

Alumni will have an opportunity to meet the current officers of the Association and learn about the various alumni activities at the annual alumni meeting on Saturday. According to Payne, "For alumni who prefer a quiet walk in the woods, ESF alumnus and Beaver Lake Nature Center naturalist Greg Smith, class of 1974, has offered to lead alumni on a walk and canoe trip at this premier park in Central New York."

The friendships that are rekindled over these reunions are a strong drawing factor for the alumni. Culkowski said, "I think a measurement of the attractiveness of Syracuse is the great distance alumni will travel to attend Homecoming. We anticipate alumni from California and even Alaska to enjoy reunions and other Homecoming activities."

Other activities planned for the weekend include a tour of the Lorenzo Mansion in Cazenovia, a visit to the Burnett Park Zoo, salmon fishing near Pulaski, a visit to a fish hatchery in Altmar and the Anheuser-Busch Octoberfest in September on Saturday at the State Fairgrounds.

Fugazi: Steady Diet Of Nothing

Fugazi is based on non-convention. With an original musical approach and lyrics that slap society in the face, Fugazi refuses to be forced by anyone — surviving instead on a steady diet of nothing.

The band's concept of anti-commercialism becomes more apparent with every album as Fugazi's sound moves farther away from the norm.

As with the band's past albums, Steady Diet Of Nothing thrives on dramatic arrangements of minimal drums and dissonant guitar, which suddenly turn full blown and furious and recede just as suddenly.

Songs like "Long Division" and "Exit Only," however, show the band taking the album a step further with obscure guitar and bass melodies.

Lyrically, Steady Diet Of Nothing reveals the band members' punk and hardcore backgrounds. Songs like "Reclamation" demand: "We want control of our bodies. Decisions will now be ours. You carry out your noble actions, we will carry our noble scars."

The elusive and open-ended lyrics on songs like "Nice New Outfit," however, show that these post-punks are obviously keen on involving the listener. Songs like "Just Concerned" show Fugazi taking the album a step further with obscure guitar and bass melodies.

ANALYSIS

During Thomas' testimony, Metzenbaum spoke of a hearing he chaired regarding the Freedom of Choice Act. He related to the judge's testimony given by women who had been maimed by illegal abortions.

Prior to the Roe decision," Metzenbaum said, "only wealthy women could be sure of having access to safe abortions."

"The judge said that Roe's reversal would have "horrifying" consequences and asked in an appeal to the judge's "sense of compassion, whether or not you believe the Constitution protects a woman's right to an abortion."

"It's important to note that the Roe decision was, in effect, a political fandango -- that it is for me to anticipate or want to see that kind of illegal activity, I think it would undermine my ability to sit in an impartial way on an important case like that."

Thomas said he would be "very, very pained" to have a woman "subjected to an environment like that. He concluded once again, however, "...as difficult as it is for me to anticipate or want to see that kind of illegal activity, I think it would undermine my ability to sit in an impartial way on an important case like that."

"Thomas' past is well-documented. His opening statement at the hearings in which he reflected hearing his grandfather called "boy" was genuine and moving. Quindlen noted he is a man who could look out the courthouse windows "and see the buses transporting criminal defendants, adding, "I say to myself almost every day: but for the grace of God, there go I."

"Quindlen wishes she had considered those of us who feel the anxiety when we see a group of desperate women in a clinic waiting room.

"The columnists noted that it is significant that the Roe decision has been overturned by a political fandango...and a weary annoyance for a Senator who will never have to think twice about who holds jurisdiction over the territory beneath his skin..."

Her conclusion: "A man in robes who is capable of looking at men in handcuffs and seeing beneath his skin..."

"So convincing that an issue so intimate..."

"In the grace of God, there go I."

Men of Syracuse University:
Persuing academic excellence by studying at a university is perhaps the most important and wisest decision a man can make. There is more to college life, however, than simply studying. A university offers many opportunities for its students to get involved in campus activities. The finest of these is the Greek system. The Syracuse Greek system is a strong one with over 40 fraternities and sororities.

A fraternity can offer a man many experiences - social, academic, philanthropic, athletic. Fraternity can also provide a sense of belonging which otherwise would be difficult to find on a campus of this size. The Brothers of Lambda Chi Alpha believe that we offer the best of these experiences. We would like you to see for yourself during Fraternity rush.

Rush is the process by which prospective members visit fraternity houses in order to decide which one is right for them. Although the process is somewhat intimidating, you should keep one thing in mind - when you visit a fraternity you are judging them as much as they are judging you. Ask what that fraternity can do for you, what their requirements are - DO THEY HATE?

Come on in and meet us. You'll be glad you did.

Sincerely,
David Sweeney

SU opens season; wins first match

By DAVE HAUT
Staff Writer

"Usually when you can't wait to open something, it's because you don't know what is inside. Syracuse University women's tennis Coach Jesse Dwire, however, was anxious to open the season on Tuesday because he knows exactly what he has. "I'm excited to see what happens this season because we had no one graduate, and everyone returning has another year of experience," Dwire said.

SU opened with an 8-1 season-opening win over Colgate University on Tuesday.

Singles winners for the Orange were Maria Pilar Merono, Sharie Liberatore, Corrina Bode, Jennifer Agate, and Sara Dickson.

In doubles competition, Liberatore/Merono, Bode/Dickson, and Agate/Karen Garber swept all three matches.

Liberatore and Merono, both seniors, and Bode, a junior, have all been vying for the No. 1 singles spot.

According to Dwire, Tuesday's results won't influence the next match.

"The lineup will probably fluctuate from week to week, depending upon who beats who in practice or who is playing the best that week," Dwire said. "I think it is great for the team, keeping them in that competitive mode. "I like having the team play against each other because it will make them that much better come match time."

Singles
No. 1 — Merono, SU, beat Breen 6-2, 6-1
No. 2 — Liberatore, SU, beat Monajati 6-1, 4-6, 7-6

Homecoming '91
Radio Guy two back in race for case

By Dave Mager
Columbus Dispatch

And now, this week's episode of "As the Dart Flies." Here are some of the cliffhangers to be resolved in the upcoming sweeps: 1) Will the saga of "P" and his tomato sauce reach a conclusion? 2) Is the West Virginia team as dead as "Dallas?" 3) Haven't they canceled that lame Northwest campus. 20th century? 4) Will the sleepy town of Lincoln, Neb., ever make it into the 20th century? 5) Why do they play football at Columbus when no one in Gotham City seems to care? 6) Which has been more of a flop: Jim Everett or network "Premiere Week?"

Florida (8) at Syracuse

It's still early, but two of the next three games (Florida and Florida St.) could tell us whether Syracuse (5th) plays on New Year's Day or earlier in the bowl season.

State is tops in the nation -it will be tough in Tallahassee. Florida is No. 9, an upset possibility at the Dome, but Dan Conley's season-ending injury was created in a win over Maryland. But it's too good for Maryland. They're in a position to win. Maryland 21, West Virginia 10.

Washington (pick 'em) at Rutgers

These are not challenges. And the Washington-Nebraska game each year? Boring. This game comes on, it's time to flip to luge on Sportsworld.

Washington (1-0) is exactly the kind of team that can shock the Huskers. Billy Joe Hobert has been a capable QB. The defense is very capable of stopping Nebraska's Three yards and a Turf Burn offense. Washington 31, Nebraska 24.

Ivy League Game of the Week -- Columbia at Harvard (13 1/3)

Hey, Tom, your players don't fold their helmets any more. The 20th centuries, calling.

Hey, Don, your defense can't seem to adjust for big-play teams with pro passing games.

Ivy League football has arrived. Having grown up in a Columbia family, I can give you some first-hand examples of just how terrible Lions football is.

This is why every New Yorker has a case of gonorrhea. It's hard to believe a guy who used to be one of the best in the NFL is putting up worse numbers than Jeff Kemp and Tom Tupa. The Niners running game is still sick. Keith Henderson, who has about as many moves as Florence, is their leading rusher. The Rams play well in San Francisco -- they should cover. San Francisco 28, LA Rams 27.

The Syracuse -- Florida game will be on FM88 with the pregame show starting at 3 p.m.
Vols rule — even with violations

Here's a few thoughts while sleeping through the American League West pennant race...

*After witnessing the Larry Holmes-A minimum fight, I've vowed never to watch a heavyweight bout again.

This fight did have its merits, however. Instead of placing bound contenders hugging and holding each other out of the ring for 10 rounds, this had two fat, geriatric glove holding and hugging each other.

Also in the receiver rotation are Alonzo Sule: Carson, Tom Evertt, Matty Dunne and

The constant series of fresh legs will be a challenge to the SU secondary.

"They're going to put in who they can to get the job done," Sandquist said. "I feel whoever comes in, whether they're fresh or not — I'm in good condition and we're in good condition. We can handle whatever they throw at us."

Florida's speed on the perimeter also poses a problem for the Orange.

"You know what you can do to negate speed," Syracuse coach Paul Pasqualoni said. "I think it changes the game. We all know they're very, very fast." Gators cornerback Deion Sanders said.

"We try to hope for balance. Our offense."

Local residents charge police discrimination

By JEREMY FREEMAN
Contributing Writer

Syracuse residents calling for police department changes cited city police relations and Syracuse University at a community speak-out Thursday.

Some Syracuse residents said police openly discriminate against black city residents, particularly SU students.

"Tensions on Westcott Street are students' territory," said one speaker.

"As a resident of this country, I know that whites always become intimated when they see a group of black males in one place," she said.

Collins said police would line up in front of the movie theater when it was closing to intimidate the children.

She said the police were creating a situation of tension.

But while police were harassing local youth, they were ignoring internationally related students, she said.

Police intimidation

A police officer told local children Westcott Street is students' territory, said Jackie James, a resident of Syracuse's east side for seven years.

James, a candidate for the Fourth City Council District, said SU is one of the "worst divide and conquer institutions.

"SU has used its power and influence to isolate itself from the community.

Different types of justice are being dealt to different types of people, another speaker said.

Police officers tried to enter the meeting, acting as if it was going to leave so they would not discourage attendance.

"Any cop a person has, a person does it from their heart. They seem to have sympathy with peace officers," said Genevieve Arvey, Syracuse resident and mother of four.

James said police must do their city jobs, they will start to understand," she said.

Proposals for a civilian review board of police affairs to remediate the tension will come from the police department.

The police director will be也就是说, but there were no older than 15.

"I'll slap the black off you boy," an officer said to one of the children.

James said. James said police could not give a legitimate reason why her child was handcuffed and released.

There are legal rights on computer and can be identified if complainants.

Latin Americans share heritage

By KRISTINA SAUERWEIN
Asst. News Editor

Junior Jessica Martinez said she didn't feel her Latin American heritage unbalanced, "My experience here has been positive, the people are friendly and nice, she said.

"I'm from Puerto Rico, I didn't think about being Latin American because I looked like everyone else," said Martinez, president of La Gente, representing Latin American students here.

"That makes me proud to be Latin American," she added.

Rivero-Santos also said he became aware of his Latin American identity when he came to Syracuse University.

"Many people from Spanish-speaking countries realize their Latin American identities when they go abroad," Rivero-Santos said.

"We grow up in a society in which we identify ourselves as Latin American, but most of us have a hard time knowing what we mean," he said.

For example, he added, "In Argentina, you're a " gaúcho" and in Mexico, you're a "mexicolita.""

Myths surrounding rape, such as blaming the victim for wearing provocative clothing or drinking too much alcohol, can be grouped into two all-inclusive myths which must be dispelled, said Dr. Joan Gibson, director of the Syracuse University R.A.P.E. Center.

The two myths are that preventing rape is the individual's responsibility and that women should try to avoid potentially dangerous situations.

An example of rape being the woman's responsibility is the myth that the man cannot stop having sex once he has started and therefore the woman must be the one to stop any sexual activity, she said.

"As a resident of this country, I know that whites always become intimated when they see a group of black males in one place," she said.

"I think any of us will agree that if a guy and a girl are in a bed making out or making love or whatever and his mother walked in the door, he would stop like that and be up and out and chatting with his mother immediately," she said.

This myth of personal responsibility comes from the fact that it is more acceptable in American society for young boys to be more physically assertive than young girls, Gibson said.

"The United States in particular has a socialization practice where the male is taught from a bouncing baby boy that you bounce boys harder than girls," she said.

Behavior is the root

It is expected behavior in certain situations that males are more mentally, physically and sexually aggressive, Gibson said.

"In adolescence their self-worth gets tied up with how well they compete mentally, physically and sexually," she said.

The underlying message in American child rearing is that women are fragile, vulnerable and need someone to watch over them, and men are strong, masculine and can take care of themselves, she said.

This message puts women in a subordinate position to men, Gibson said.

Raising children without the attitude of the fragile girl and the tough boy will begin a change in the American societal attitude toward women, she said.

"Until then we need to take a look at our own personal needs," she said.

Community forum calls for improved relations with SU

By MARK A. BROUSSEAU
Asst. News Editor

Syracuse University and city relations are definitely strained and need to be improved, city residents and SU students agreed at a community forum Wednesday.

"The campus and community need to understand each other," said Syracuse resident Kyle Tape.

"People who go there think they are better. They think they can do no wrong," he said.

"There is a communication gap that needs to be worked out," said Syracuse resident Wendelyn White.

"Both sides need to talk or it won't be solved," she said. "The people at this forum are not the problem."

They will have another opportunity at the next public forum on Oct. 3 at an on-campus location.

"They think since they are on the hill and we are down the hill, we have nothing to offer them," Tape said.

He said the relationship is "about to explode and the people don't realize it."

"People down here don't have much to do, so they go up and bring negatives with them," he said.

Responding to policy

The forum was organized by Student African-American Society President Vaughn Irons in response to community members who believe recent university policies have hurt interaction among blacks in the area.

Relations were strained last week after SU initiated a new policy banning non-students from attending events in the underground.

"The policy sets parameters that are not supportive of cohesion," Irons said.

"There is no difference between the black community at SU and the black community in Syracuse, or Atlanta or New York," he said.

"Black people are trying to overcome so many of the same issues," Syracuse resident Carl Newton said.

"The community of Syracuse has become our community," Irons said.

"A lot of people on campus don't see themselves as a part of the Syracuse community," he said. "The hill is a factor."

"Most college students don't like to interact with the community," Newton said.

me the benefit of the doubt," said SAS member Shamee Lance.

A Syracuse resident said the university has a major role to play in a community and should develop programs to assimilate the community with the university.

"We come together like this every 10 years when something happens," another Syracuse resident said. "This is nothing new. We have to get our hands out of our pockets.

"There was a working relationship with students, but history was not left for groups to maintain it," she said. "Since 1975, it is fair to say that the university has drawn itself up on the hill and brought in its roots," city resident Butch Charles said.

"Anytime something happens, no one knows the crowd and 'the bricks' is the most popular target," Charles said. "The area is not peaceful, but you cannot blame it on 'the bricks'." he said.

"Before there was a Syracuse University, there was a Syracuse," another city resident said. "There was a working relationship with the community with the university," Charles said. "But everything has changed. We have to get our hands out of our pockets and help the community.

Syracuse residents said they would like SU students to volunteer in community programs.

It's too late. You chose SU. Transfer or make the most of it.

Use fee for students

Syracuse University issued a wise policy in banning unrepresented non-student events in the SU Underground.

Student African-American Society President Vaughn Irons expressed his displeasure with the policy, citing the policy in banning unrepresented non-student events, which, he said, among other things, bans non-students from the motto campus activity. That may sound greedy, but it's not.

In fact, the student-only policy is money-making, which, as the policy name suggests. Under the policy, students can bring non-students to events, as long as they sign them in. This results in non-student fees from student fee events. Rather, it attempts to steer clear of events like the fight which erupted after a fraternity gathering at the SU Underground on Aug. 30. The fight involved Syracuse residents and students, and resulted in several injuries.

SU has proven time and again that it cannot deal effectively with its own student organization. The administration is wise in realizing it should not enact a policy making it responsible for the policing of the community as well.

Free Speech follies, Part I

Pat Chang, with her roller-thin-throw bubble, is a type of student that I think is of the epitome of university philosophy, and the other, for that matter, is of our own by-laws. She is a type of student that I think is of the epitome of university philosophy, and the other, for that matter, is of our own by-laws.

But Chang's right to free speech is absolute. And no university plagues about "responsibility" can take that right away.

DARIN POWELL

The posters Chang alleged helped plaster around campus last spring are "fraternity graffiti," she said. "The Gang Rapes" were juvenile. They trivialized the serious issue of rape and did nothing to help solve the problem.

But just as silly, and more dangerous, is the university's attempt to muzzle Chang by punishing her for "fraternity graffiti." In a mysterious editorial on Sept. 16, The Daily Orange, editorial editor Jennifer Kronstain, wrote: "In a mystifying editorial on September 16 about the Ad Hoc Group's recent report, you suggested that some programs such as African American Studies and Women's Studies are "seriously threatened by the approach that they take in their unavoidable budget cuts."

But the Department of African American Studies and Women's Studies Program are both in the College of Arts and Sciences, not in the Humanities division. Our support for it remains constant, as it is in all of our enrollment. The Women's Studies Program is one of many in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Syracuse will have a chance to top the Florida win in an Oct. 5 game against top-ranked Florida State in Tallahassee.
But first, the Orangemen must prepare for a sorry Tulane squad, which lost to Rice on Saturday and is winless in its four games this season.

According to a police report of the incident, "Thomas was pushed up against a wall in the taxi office after resisting arrest. He was then taken down to the floor where he interlocked his hands in front of his chest area."
This prompted police to punch him in the hands in order to release his hands and cuff him, according to police witness William Conway Jr., 44, of South Beech Street.
Conway was the taxi stand dispatcher on duty the night of the incident, Conway, who has not worked at the office for the past two weeks according to the dispatcher working Sunday, could not be reached for comment.
He told police that "at no time, did I see the cops abuse him. They were trying to control him, that's all. They didn't punch him in the face; they hit his hands so they could handcuff them," according to a report in Sunday's Herald American.
Smith was arrested after he tried to intervene with the police ticketing. He was charged with obstructing governmental administration — a misdemeanor.
Kevin Neugent, of 405 Broadland St., filed a complaint Aug. 24 after he was arrested for drunk driving.
He maintains officer Munroe slammed his head six times into the patrol car, while laughing and saying, "Look he won't fit," according to the Herald American.

Freddy’s dead, but his memory lives

The Daily Orange
September 23, 1991

I thought that the movie was over. I was wrong. Freddy Krueger (Robert Englund), the demon of Elm Street, has returned in a new line of cinema. Robert Englund announced plans for a “Freddy’s Dead” series, as well as a new “Star Trek” series. He is intent on bringing the show to a new generation of fans.

The new series, set in the future, will feature the same cast as the original “Star Trek” series. The show will be produced by the same company that produced the original series, and will air on the Sci-Fi Channel. The channel has already announced that it will launch this fall in 10 million households.

The new series will include a mini-theater set up to show the original episodes, along with the new series. Trekkie fan memorabilia, fuzzy blue neckties, and the voices of the original cast will all be featured. The series will premiere on October 2 with “Everybody Dance Now,” which explores the new street-corner version of “Star Trek.”

Freddy’s “Final”

Healy is responsible for coordinating events relating to Amnesty International. He is also in charge of Amnesty’s public relations efforts. He is responsible for massive increases in enrollment in Amnesty. Heen said.

Amnesty’s current standing is 1.1 million people worldwide, 400,000 of which are Americans.

A well-rounded man

Healy is a very animated speaker, very intelligent, very knowledgeable. He got all the qualities necessary to do something like this,” Hennen said.

Also speaking will be Reza Jalali, a Kurdish former prisoner of conscience. A display of photographs and artifacts depicting Kurdish life will be on display in the Noble Room of Hendrick’s Chapel. The display is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sept. 27, 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. The photographs taken by Jalali and sent by his friend, Katerina Wlosien, are meant to raise awareness of the Kurdish people’s sentiments.

Amnesty International abides by the Declaration of Human Rights. The basic principle behind the organization is that people have the right to express themselves. Amnesty’s efforts are to protect citizens from their governments, ethnic minorities, and terrorists.

Amnesty has three mandates. The first is to afford prisoners of conscience. These are people who are imprisoned because of their political views, religious beliefs or other beliefs. Amnesty will help these people provided they have not advocated violence in any way.

Secondly, Amnesty deals with political prisoners, making sure they are given a fair and speedy trial. Often, trials are slow or even nonexistent. The third mandate is to work toward abolishing torture and the death penalty in all cases.

Hennen’s basic goal for SU’s local chapter is to increase enrollment. Although last year there were more than 50 people on campus, currently that number is down to 15 people. Participating in campus Amnesty will help to constantly gain the awareness of other students.

“You can learn what Amnesty is all about in about two minutes... it’s very basic, you know. We’re against the death penalty, we’re against torture... but the big thing for Amnesty is we are against governments resting their citizens if they can just do whatever they want with them,” Hennen said.

Amnesty International holds meetings every Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Noble Room of Hendrick’s Chapel. Students interested in hearing Jack Healy speak are invited to Maxwell Auditorium.

HUMOR FROM LA CASA

Ron HART

My father is a math teacher and he made me take calculus in high school. I even took the Advanced Placement calculus test.

You get a 1 on the AP calculus test if you have never done a single problem in your life. But if you do, you get a 0. I took the test and I didn’t do it. I knew my name — Maybe I should have left. I remember that for most of the problems I ended up writing an essay on the reason why I couldn’t or wouldn’t attempt to solve them. To me math is foreign language, and it says, “No! Nor

Say no to numbers

I thought for about two seconds and decided I would take foreign language just so that I could go through college without ever taking a math class. It never occurred to me that I would have to be fluent in a completely new form of communication. I mean, suppose reading this column can see how much trouble I have with English. What was I thinking?

So I sign up for Chinese. Good move.

On the first day the teacher asked us what languages we wanted to learn Chinese. Most of the class either wanted to do business or East. After they graduated, or had already known the language and needed an easy class. I told her that I wanted to be able to watch Godzilla movies in their original language so that I could pick up some of the nuances that I might have missed watching the dubbed version.

I know now that Godzilla is from Japan, whereas China is a completely different country.

I didn’t think it was that big of a deal. However, I guess when you’re from China, it’s a big deal.

I apologized and she started the class.

The basics

There are four tones in Chinese,” she said. “Ma, ma, ma and ma. These tones are the foundation for the entire Chinese language. If you do not learn them, you cannot learn Chinese.”

If you noticed that these tones look a lot alike you have begun to see why I dropped Chinese.

She would argue for the rest of the semester that she pronounced each “ma” with a unique and dynamic emphasis. She said, “My name is a Chinese word and I never made my own pasta from scratch, but I read a book about Mussolini when I was a kid. I figured I was set.

It wasn’t easy enough for me to just take Italian. No, I had to take it as an audition class. That means that the class meets every day of the week and I fell behind twice as quickly. I studied every night and went to class every morning (I know you don’t believe that, but I send these columns home to Mom and Dad).

Still, at the end of the year when the professor asked me what I thought the best thing was to do over the summer, all I could say was: “A glass of wine, because a telephone pole has no sleeves.”

I ruined my GPA and my tolerance for words that end in a vowel. But I did get one thing out of the language requirement—a wonderful and dynamic emphasis for saying something to the class, I could pretend to be a foreigner.

Oops, how forgetful...
Created by Joshua Brand and John Falsey, the team behind St. Elsewhere and A Year in the Life, Northern Exposure is always surprising. In one episode, Shelly's never-before-heard-of-husband came into town much to Holling's dismay. Shelly explains that she simply forgot to tell him she was married.
In another show, Fleishman received a "Dear Joel" letter from his girlfriend Elaine. He had trouble coping with being dumped and kept imagining things in black and white vignettes.
Then there's Maggie's little problem. Her boyfriends all die. The most recent casualty was Rick (Grant Goodeve), who was killed off in the May season-ending episode when a satellite fell from space and melded with his body. But Rick will be back, reincarnated as a dog sometime this season.
With Rick dead and Elaine out of Joel's life, the path is clear for Maggie and Fleishman to end their bickering and get together.
Other things to look forward to this season include the return of mountain man/Vietnam vet/gourmet chef Adam (Adam Arkin) accompanied by Eve, a hypochondriac.
Maggie will learn that Rick was unfaithful. Maurice will meet up with the tough lady cop he had a crush on last season and a flashback episode will introduce the world to the founders of Cicely, lesbians Cicely and Roslyn.
"I may not have had a child, Fleishman, but I know one when I see one," Maggie yelled at Joel in one episode. Will a romance between O'Connell and Fleishman end the successful love/hate formula that has worked for Northern Exposure?
Probably not. The producers know they have a good thing going, and they aren't about to spoil it. Besides, there are so many other intriguing storylines that a relationship between Maggie and Joel would just be a small part of the likable, offbeat world of Northern Exposure.

SU stuns Florida, 38-21
Kick return leads Orange to win

By JOSH BARNETT
Staff Writer

The way the Syracuse University football team started the game against the University of Florida was not a surprise to SU players, but it was also a surprise to SU fans.

On the opening kickoff, SU's Kirby DarDar took a handoff from Terry Richardson on the reverse and ran 66 yards to the UF 10-yard line for an SU touchdown just 14 seconds into the game. The 8th-ranked Orangemen, 3-0, took the momentum from the quick start and went on to shock the fifth-ranked Gators, 38-21, before a sellout crowd of 49,823 at the Carrier Dome.

The players did not know they would unveil the end zone play. The kickoff play, devised by assistant coaches DarDar, Richardson and Bob Casullo, had been worked out in practice, but it was also a surprise to SU fans.

"I saw all the guys shifting (to the right)," Richardson said. "I handed it off and kept running. I looked over and DarDar was down the sideline, wide open."

DarDar, a native of Tampa, Fla., is usually not a member of the kickoff team. DarDar was inserted for this play to take advantage of his speed.

"I was ecstatic," DarDar said. "I was really excited to be able to do that."

The game's tempo slowed down, but Syracuse still had the momentum from its explosive start heading into the second quarter.

The Gators ran only four plays before the Orangemen got the ball back. The series was highlighted by a sack of quarterback Shane Matthews by Kevin Mitchell and Jim Wentworth.

The sack was accompanied by hard hitting and the intensity level of the crowd appeared to charge the SU defense. The Gators lost four yards on their first offensive series despite an SU face-mask penalty and were forced to punt.

Syracuse got the ball back on Florida's 43-yard line. Six plays later, quarterback Shane Matthews was hit by an SU defender on fourth down and gave up a safety for fourth and goal on the Gators' 10-yard line.

The play's biggest play came on the first play of the game, when Florida's Ray Rooks then interrupted his teammate, shouting, "You didn't get it, bud."

Rooks is right. The victory should gain the Orangemen more national recognition for the 18th-ranked Orangemen, who are off to their best start in 10 years. Syracuse got the ball back on Florida's 13-yard line, and Florida was all set to begin a drive.

Some of the big plays Young was talking about were key interceptions by Florida native Dwayne Joseph and Tony Montgomery, as well as a strong play by Sandquist that forced Errict Rhett to lose a reception — and maybe a couple of teeth.

"Last year, we probably would have folded," Young said. "We would have bailed out. We were up by 17, and they're coming back."

"We see the maturation of our defense. We made some big plays. We just don't want to let (a touchdown) happen again. We don't want it to happen for the second year in a row."

By DAVID BUSCEMA
Ast. Sports Editor

Syracuse University free safety Tim Sandquist was discussing the magnitude of the Orangemen's 38-21 victory over the fifth-ranked University of Florida with reporters following the game on Saturday.

"I was ecstatic," DarDar said. "I was really excited to be able to do that."

"I just can't believe it," Rooks said. "I'm so excited."

Florida coach Steve Spurrier, however, was anything but exhilarated.

"We obviously got a good tail-whipping today," Spurrier said. "Today looked like No. 5 team and we looked like No. 50."

The Orangemen played like a No. 5 team and the Gators never led by less than 10 points in the second half. Florida was up only 7-0 after the first quarter and 14-0 at the half.

"We've been a second half team the last two games," Spurrier said. "I'd like to say the best team won today."

Before the game, not many people thought Syracuse would win.

Syracuse line backers Garland Hawkins (67) and Glen Young (52) haul down University of Florida fullback Kelvin Randle. Hawkins had two quarterback sacks while Young led the Orangemen with eight tackles.
Ground game chews up Gators

By KENT FISCHER
Assn. Sports Editor

Running backs Terry Richardson and David Walker have been splitting playing time since spring practice last year.

In Saturday's 38-21 upset of the University of Florida, the two backs split more than time — they split the Game defense to the tune of 166 yards rushing.

Richardson, who was held to only 36 yards rushing through the game's first three quarters, ripped off 50 of his 85 yards on seven carries, the workhorse of Syracuse's game-clinching, fourth-quarter drive.

Richardson got the call on five consecutive plays as he burst, spun and danced for three first downs on runs of seven, 14 and 12 yards. The drive went for 72 yards and took more than eight minutes off the clock.

Walker was the Orange's most effective rusher before that as he ran for 81 yards on only 10 carries. Walker also scored SU's second touchdown when he swept around the right end for a 10-yard score.

Offensive coordinator George DeLeone said Syracuse was able to chum the game out on the ground because they had the Gator defenders running laterally trying to stop the option.

"We had a chance if we could get them to run along the line of scrimmage," DeLeone said. "If we could get them moving down the line against the option, instead of moving upfield, then we thought that would open up the power game. That was a great part of our offense today."

Syracuse balanced the run with an effective passing game in the first half. Of SU's 30 first-half plays, 18 were rushes. In the second half, however, the Orangemen's backfield depth began to wear down the Gator defensive line. SU rushed 34 times in the second half.

"Every one of our backs is capable of making big plays," Richardson said. "The offensive line was opening some good holes for us. When you have the lead, why put the ball in the air?"

All in all, seven different players carried the ball for the Orange.

Sophomore back Marcus Lee saw his first pressurized action of 1991 in the second half and rumbled off 45 yards on just eight carries.

Lee's performance was crucial in that he gave Richardson and Walker some much-needed rest as the Orangemen ground it out late in the game.

"I was running as hard as I could (late in the game)," Richardson said. "We just couldn't stop him." According to DeLeone, Womack is quickly emerging as one of the nations' premiere option quarterbacks.

"Doug is as fast as any guy on the Florida team," DeLeone said. "With Marvin not as healthy we thought (our option plays) would be better with Doug in the game."

"Doug is an exceptional option quarterback. If he were at Oklahoma or Colorado right now he'd be a marquee player. He's a (Colorado quarterback) Darien Hagan type who, to his credit, is being very patient, and when he gets in the game he does a great job."

Walker said the Orangemen were prepared to play with the faster, deeper Florida team, but said he never thought the backs could run with as much success as they did.

"We thought we could play with them," Walker said. "But never in my wildest dreams did I think we could dominate them. Our offensive line made some great holes and we were able to control the ball and the second half.

The Gators defense was ranked among the best in the SEC, especially against the run.

Before Saturday's game, Florida was allowing an average of 111.5 yards per game against the rush. Florida allowed San Jose State just 83 yards on the ground in its opening win two weeks ago. Alabama fared a little better last week gaining 140 yards.

"We never really stopped (Syracuse)," Spurrier said. "I didn't think they could go up and down the field like they did."

Syracuse University running back David Walker turns the corner on University of Florida linebacker Myrick Anderson. Walker rushed for 81 yards on 10 carries, including a touchdown scamper of 10 yards.

lofted a pass into the back corner of the end zone to reserve wide receiver Antonio Johnson for a touchdown that put the Orangemen up 21-7.

A 36-yard pass from Graves to Qadry Ismail four minutes later put the Orange ahead 28-7.

Matthews rallied the UF offense with 1:19 left in the half and hit Aubrey Hill for a 36-yard touchdown to cut the halftime deficit to 28-14.

The SU defense was intent on stopping the Florida running game and making the Gators pass, which opened up some short passes over the middle.

Matthews was able to take advantage of the SU defense scheme, tallying 18 completions for 220 yards in the first half.

But, the UF running game had -3 yards rushing in the first half.

"I think they're a team that's an excellent passing team," Pasqualoni said. "But, they do a lot with the draw. I thought our kids reacted very well to the draw. We felt we had to stop the draw and that opened up some underneath passes at times."

"I initiated the philosophy — keep them all back and allow them to run or react back to the pass. That's what we were trying to do, stop the run."

The Gators fared no better in the second half and finished with -17 yards for the game.

Knowing Matthews had to pass, the SU defense sacked him three times for 51 yards.

"I don't know how many games (Matthews) has been in where he has felt as much pressure throwing the football consistently during the course of the game," SU defensive coordinator Kevin Coyle said. "I think our guys did a good job up front when we rushed four. We came after his butt quite a bit. We did come with some heat and mixed up our coverages."

A botched handoff from Graves to Richardson late in the third quarter — SU's only turnover of the game — gave the Gators the ball at the 7-yard line.

Two plays later, Matthews hit Willie Jackson in the end zone from four yards out to cut the SU lead 28-21 with 4:56 left in the quarter.

The Orangemen had committed eight turnovers in their previous two games, but the fumble was their only turnover against the Gators.

"We knew one play couldn't stop the way we were executing all day," Graves said. "We just said to ourselves: the points we have on the board wasn't going to win the game. We needed more."

"That's what we did. We went down and got more."

Syracuse rebounded from the turnover-turned-touchdown and put together an 11-play, 80-yard drive to rebuild its lead to 14 points.

Doug Womack capped the drive with a 3-yard touchdown run. Womack leapt over a defender on the right side for the touchdown 48 seconds into the fourth quarter.

When the Orangemen got the ball again with 13:23 remaining in the game, Syracuse put together an 11-play, 72-yard drive, running 8:09 off the clock. John Bockup capped the drive with a 28-yard field goal.

"I think the (8:09) was more important than the three points," Pasqualoni said. "That was key."

Florida coach Steve Spurrier said the Orangemen beat his team in all areas.

"We had a bad game plan and they had a better game plan," Spurrier said. "I give Coach Pasqualoni all the credit in the world. We were out-coached all the way."

would have said Syracuse was the better team. Florida was acknowledged as having the greater team speed, greater personnel, and thus, the greater team.

"People said that," Sandquist said. "People's not us."
Richardson, a Florida native who had 85 yards rushing, also said the win will silence critics.

"When I came to Syracuse, a lot of people back home said,
'Why go up North?'' Richardson said. "This is the reason why."

Rooks said this win will serve as a reason for the Orangemen to remain undaunted by high-ranked foes in the future.

"We had no fright in us," Rooks said. "I know we're not intimidated by anyone anymore."

"People said a lot of positive things about Florida this week," Sandquist said. "We knew they were a dangerous team."

Following the game, however, it was Spurrier who was intimidated and acknowledged the Orangemen's explosiveness.

"They outplayed us up and down the line," Spurrier said.
"I'm glad we don't have to play them again. We couldn't stop them."

The Carrier Dome ticket office reported on Sept. 5 that 20 sets of SU season football tickets were missing, the report stated.
Wilson, an employee at Upstate Medical Center, allegedly sold the tickets to another hospital employee, Angelo Emmi, the report stated. Emmi told police that he purchased 14 season tickets for $1,050 from Wilson. Emmi then identified Wilson, who was questioned by police and arrested.

The True Gentleman

The True Gentleman is the man whose conduct proceeds from good will and an acute sense of propriety, and whose self-control is equal to all emergencies; who does not make the poor man conscious of his poverty, the obscure man of his obscurity, or any man of his inferiority or deformity; who is himself humbled if necessity compels him to humble another; who does not flatter wealth, cringe before power, or boast of his own possessions or achievements; who speaks with frankness but always with sincerity and sympathy; whose deed follows his word; who think of the rights and feelings of others, rather than his own; and who appears well in any company, a man with whom honor is sacred and virtue safe.

Granados, a native Costa Rican, said underdevelopment unites the countries of Latin America.

"Most people living in these underdeveloped countries want to become developed," he said. "But that does not mean they want to live like the people in the countries that are presently developed."

A general lack of identity about being Latin American contributes to underdevelopment, Granados said.

"We share no common culture or history," he said. "That's a risky statement, but it's true. "Latin America is characterized by tremendous diversity."

all reinforcing the myths about rape, she said.

"The issue that arises with pornography is the message it conveys that a woman will have sex with anything that's around," Gibson said.

"It's part and parcel in porn that aggressive sex, any kind of sex with men, women, animals or anything, is good for women," she said.

Desensitizing rape
According to Gibson, men and women who view porn about violent sex look at instances of rape and will question whether a rape actually occurred.

"Pornography can desensitize one to the violence of rape," she said. "It conveys a right that men can put women in such a demeaning position.""Using force to intervene is not the acceptance or denial of interpersonal violence, she said.

"Violence is man's way of controlling women and there is an acceptance of using force to get what you want in our society," Gibson said.

"The third signal is expressions of hostility and anger, especially hostility toward women by men, she said.

"Hostility or anger?"

The third signal is expressions of hostility and anger, especially hostility toward women by men, she said.

"We share no common culture or history," he said. "That's a risky statement, but it's true. "Latin America is characterized by tremendous diversity."

There are many cultural differences between the countries and there is also no single history unifying the countries. But Granados said he believes Latin Americans have to realize their identities to improve their countries. "Latin America will be forced to come together and make a future," he said. "We will share a common history."

"We are Latin American now because we share a common identity. We identify ourselves as Latin American and we are identified by others as Latin American. A Latin American identity does exist."

DEPUTY POLICE CHIEF EXPLAINS USE OF FORCE

BY ROBERT SHIELDS
ASS. NEWS EDITOR

Unlike other Syracuse University students, Vaughn Irons does not have time to relax and sit on the Quad. That is because Irons, a 21-year-old public policy major from Syracuse, is the new president of the Student African-American Society.

SAS is the oldest and largest organization for minority students on campus. The office has seen a strong growth in its membership, which is now about 600 members strong. The increase is due in part to the efforts of the Student Affairs Office in recruiting students for the organization.

Irons said he does not want to have to turn away people who do not want to be involved in the organization. "I want to make sure that everyone knows that they can be involved in the organization in their own way," he said.

Irons said he often brings guests to the office to speak about spirituality and race issues. "I want to make sure that everyone knows that they can be involved in the organization in their own way," he said.

Newly elected SAS president plans to implement policy changes

Irons, a junior, began his work with SAS during his freshman year. He said that he "fell in love with the idea of helping others." He met Irons at the Student Affairs Office and was impressed with his work ethic.

Students don’t know

Irons said that the students’ perception of what the police do on Marshall Street is not always in line with what the police actually do. "The police are there to deter individuals from harming themselves or others," he said.

The police said there were two problems in the SU hill that needed more attention. One problem is the increase of theft from student housing during school breaks. "Year after year, the same thing happens," he said. "We have a lack of security due to the cutback," he said. "Our assignments are fluid in nature. We assign personnel where we need them." The police said that SU students believe police are making underage drinking checks more often on the SU hill than on other parts of the city.

U.N. team discovers nuclear evidence

The U.N. team searching for weapons yesterday discovered documents in a trade labor union office detailing Iraq's nuclear weapon production.

The team was held in the office for five hours and was forced to return the documents. The team said they would obtain the documents today.

President Bush told the U.N. General Assembly yesterday "the mission must not be compromised."

The information would prove Iraq is defying the cease-fire against producing all weapons of mass destruction and their delivery.

Iraq's response to a U.N. ultimatum is said to offer less than the unconditional freedom to use helicopters to hunt for weapons in Iraq that the U.N. was seeking, diplomats said.

U.S. aid to Israel may top $77 billion

American aid to Israel has totaled at least $77 billion since 1967 and consists of not only grants and loans but also transfers of surplus military equipment.

The aid is being watched more carefully because of the controversy over Israel's request for $10 billion in loan guarantees.

Egyptians sell organs for money, goods

Poor Egyptians sell their kidneys as part of an underground industry that matches donors and patients.

The kidney sales can bring a donor $20,000 to $50,000, apartments or television sets.

Experts estimate at least 60 million Americans between the ages of 18 and 64 will experience a mental disorder during their lifetime.

Lifestyle of AIDS plaintiff investigated

An insurance company that referred patients to a doctor who later died of AIDS has hired investigators to dig deep into the lifestyle of an infected former patient to determine if he was responsible for the spread of the disease.

A judge last week ordered plaintiff Richard Driskill, 31, to submit a new blood sample for analysis by CIGNA Dental Health Plan of Florida.

CIGNA had assigned Driskill to Dr. David Acer, a dentist who continued practicing after developing AIDS. The doctors dated a year ago.

Judge Robert Makemson ordered the new blood sample after CIGNA attorneys said Driskill had sex with a consenting prostitute who carries the AIDS virus. CIGNA officials said Driskill may have contracted the virus somewhere besides Acer's office.

David Eaton, Driskill's attorney, complained the insurance company is trying to get "every prostitute, crack addict and delinquent" in Driskill's home city, Indian-town.

Graham preaches love, hope to New Yorkers

During his Centennial Farewell, the Rev. Billy Graham described the city as "a place of desperate spiritual need."

The evangelist, speaking to 250,000 New Yorkers Sunday, said he intended to spread a message of love and redemption to a city burdened by crime, drugs, AIDS, homelessness and other troubles.

The cheering crowd was the largest ever to see Graham in the United States, exceeding the 134,000 who attended a 1963 event at the Los Angeles Coliseum.

Graham's speech was also one of the park's largest crowds, topped in the past decade only by the concerts of Paul Simon, Art Garfunkel and Diana Ross, and by gatherings for Liberty Weekend in 1986 and Earth Day last year.

State proposes to take over Medicaid cost

Government officials in Albany are expected to support a state proposal to pick up Medicaid costs from local governments in return for a share of the county sales taxes, according to a spokesman for Gov. Mario Cuomo.

Cuomo will announce the proposal Tuesday in New York City at a breakfast sponsored by the New York Publishers Association.

The idea for the state to take over all Medicaid payments in return for a percentage of county sales tax revenues has the support of officials at the county level, he said.

Farmers postpone milk strike

A national dairy strike that called for farmers to dump their milk on Oct. 1 has been postponed with no new date set.

A proposal by 200 strike leaders and farmers from all the major dairy states, held in Derby Line, Vt., Monday, was approved.

Farmers said the October deadline could leave New York dairy farmers dumping their milk while other farmers are going to market with theirs.

Colleges assail white supremacist stickers

White supremacist stickers have been found on the Hobart and William Smith campuses.

The stickers were put up as a response to the fight against racism on campus, school officials said.

Five small, orange racist stickers were found in three residence halls, one academic and one administration building, according to a campus-wide bulletin released by Jerry Sullivan, director of the Department of Security and Safety.

White supremacist stickers, found Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, read: "Earth's most endangered species: The white race. Help preserve it."

The sticker lists a Virginia address and telephone number for the National Alliance. The number is a recorded message offering white supremacist literature for $6.

The five confiscated stickers are in the custody of the security and safety department.

Student gay rights groups disrupt meeting

More than 20 members of student gay rights organizations disrupted the Sept. 24 meeting of the University of Wisconsin Board of Regents in a protest against the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

Members of the Ten Percent Society, a student lesbian, gay and bisexual organization from the university's Madison campus, protested to convince the board of Regents to end the school's ROTC program. Members said the program is discriminatory.

The UW at Madison ROTC program follows the Department of Defense policy that prohibits homosexuals from holding scholarships or becoming commissioned officers.

Demonstrators said the goal of the protest was to put the ROTC issue back on the Regents' agenda.

Federal law expands job rights for mentally ill

The federal law that takes effect in July will prohibit businesses asking whether job applicants have a history of mental illness.

Once hired, employees with mental problems will be entitled to extra support and accommodation so long as they can perform essential job requirements.

The law, however, does not protect workers who cannot perform the fundamental duties of their jobs.

Psychologists and government officials said they expect the law to diminish the stigma of mental illness and reduce discrimination involving millions of Americans.

Experts estimate at least 60 million Americans between the ages of 18 and 64 will experience a mental disorder during their lifetime.

Nuclear evidence seized in Iraq

Security and Safety officials said the documents seized in the Iranian trade labor union office yesterday were "incredible and dangerous.

The inserts were made by a group of engineers working with nuclear technology and their findings were 'invaluable and dangerous."

The inserts were also found in three residence halls, one academic and one administration building, according to a campus-wide bulletin released by Jerry Sullivan, director of the Department of Security and Safety.

The University at Hobart and William Smith is located in Geneva, N.Y.

"I wish that people would form a neighborhood watch for their street or dorm," he said. "When someone observes individuals they don't recognize, they should call the cops immediately."

His other concern is the problem of rape on campus. He said he hopes that all females would attend programs that teach them self-defense safety.

"They should never walk alone at night and avoid Thornden Park, and be conscious of what is going on around them," he said.

To avoid being a victim of crime, Thompson said to be aware that students are not encapsulated on campus.

"The university area is basically downtown," he said. "It's a transient area. There's movement of people from east to west and north to south," he said.

Thompson said the relationship between city police and SU Security was outstanding.

"It's good to know that we can pick up the phone and call each other anytime. We have open lines of communication," he said.

"Other campus cities have had a problem with communication and that has hindered accomplishing anything," he said.

Thompson said that if students have legitimate concerns about police relations, they should write a letter or call SU Security, who will contact the city police.

"We are more than happy to let our purpose be known and to hear the student's side," he said. "We want to hear about them."

BRUTAL

"Someone who is arrested for disorderly conduct might tell their lawyer that they were brutalized and then look to have their charge dropped," he said. Two officers were recently cleared by the Internal Affairs department of the police of brutality charges stemming from an incident in the Marshall Street area on Aug. 30. One of the officers involved had been accused of brutality one week before the Marshall Street incident.

He was cleared of that charge and was cleared of another brutality charge in November 1990 by Internal Affairs.

Thompson said that no matter what the decision of a case may be, the charges alone cause a reaction.

"If we see the same name coming up again and again, we look at that individual and decide whether it's him or the situation that he is in," he said. "An officer might be placed in a situation where he faces suspects with multiple offender status, situations involving alcohol and people resisting arrest every time he is on that beat."

"It may not be the officer's fault, he might just be in the wrong place at the wrong time," he said.

SAS

Irons decided to run for SAS president because he did not agree with the way policies were being made.

"A lot of things that have happened with SAS were personal motives," he said. "My leadership is different. I try not to horde power and I delegate to other members.

"If you see a problem or something you don't like and you don't do something, you're part of the problem," he said.

Irons, who began his term as president July 1, said one of his goals for SAS has already been achieved.

After controversy for two years over the organization's closed membership, SAS held a membership drive at the beginning of the year to test the waters.

"We tried to open the door for those who were genuinely interested," Irons said, "but none of those people came out."

The drive was advertised as open to the public in The Daily Orange and also at the Student Organizations Fair, he said.

People only want to be involved when the organization is doing something they do not like, Irons said.

Little kid with ice cream

"It's like a little kid with ice cream," he said. "He doesn't want it until he can't have it."

Irons said he is frustrated because people say they want to help blacks, but they do not use another vehicle, such as the NAACP.

Irons said he wants to see SAS increase the quantity and quality of its programming so that more blacks can be reached, both on campus and in the community.

Irons also said he wants the organization to get back to its original purposes.

The group started in 1967 when some black students decided that services available for them were not adequate.

Irons said more needs to be done with the surrounding community. SAS members used to visit local high schools, but the group has not done much community work in the past years, he said.

"We always say come in and be with us," he said. "We're still saying come in, but we're also going out."

Irons grew up on the south side of Syracuse and graduated in 1988 from Corcoran High School.

In 1987 he founded Black United Students (BUS), a black student organization, at Corcoran. He was also president of the Shanti Amani Dance Troupe for two years.
Too late for testimony

It seems the observations of the local law enforcement bureaucracy outweigh the testimonies of seven eyewitnesses. Syracuse Police officers were cleared of brutality charges filed against them by seven Syracuse University students, eyewitnesses to the events of Aug. 30 near Marshall Street. The testimony of four area employees was also cited and used as proof of the officers' innocence.

Police officers should not have the right to use "any physical force necessary" to arrest someone. Seven individuals filed civil complaints that night describing the two youths being beaten and bruised unjustly. Their testimonies to the horrible treatment by the officers were essentially overruled by the voice of a few local residents.

Note that the policy we've found their witnesses and note that the case has been determined, the seven students get to plead their cases.

On Wednesday, the witnesses will meet for the first time with officers to discuss what they saw.

By allowing the information to be examined and ruled upon before the students' testimony is heard, the S.F.D. blatantly discriminating against the seven students to testify, making their opinions unnecessary and circumstantial in the department's eyes.

Too late for testimony.

Peace for Middle East

To the editor:

In the wake of the events that followed the Gulf War, an opportunity for peace in the Middle East has opened up. President Bush has been trying to convene a peace conference this October in the Arab-Israeli conflict. These are the suggestions of the General Union of Palestinian Students and the Arab Student Association:

2. Recognize the "land for peace" proposal based on all U.N. Security Council Resolutions, especially 242 and 336, as the only basis for negotiations.
3. Reaffirm the human, political and national rights of the Palestinian people to the State of Palestine.
4. Recognize that the PLO is the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and thus must play a major role in any peace talks.
5. Demand that the right of selection of the Palestinian delegation be solely reserved to the Palestinian people and no other party, since this is an "intrinsic and independent Palestinian decision."
6. Request that the United States grant the $10 billion loan guarantee to Israel, especially since Mr. Shamin arrogantly put this as a precondition for attending the peace conference. This money will be used for more illegal settlements on the West Bank and Golan Strip.
7. Call upon all democratic and peace-seeking forces to assist in convening a peace conference based on the above principles.

Help bring about peace, security and justice to the Middle East.

Cover SU club sports

To the editor:

Entering my second year as captain of the SU Ultimate Team, I would greatly appreciate it if the Daily Orange would devote more coverage to on-campus athletic events. As an editorial staff member last year and a reader for the past four years, I am dismayed by the paper's consistent lack of coverage of SU Club Sports. Far too much room is given for professional and varsity sports, and even opposing college football teams' quarterbacks get more space than our own student athletes.

The on-campus publication serving the SU community, the Daily Orange would do well to give preference to campus events over off-campus activities. I encourage you and your staff to lend greater space to the Club Sports program. After all, we're more accessible than the pros and we're more likely to read a page that relates to us and our interests than one that covers unrecognizable sports figures from other schools.

Thank you for your consideration.

Fair offers students career opportunities

By GENARO C. ARMAS
Contributing Writer

The Syracuse University Career Fair is like a one-stop shopping center for employment needs, according to Mary Jones, assistant director of the SU Placement Center.

"It is a must on the calendar to help chart your career course and investigate potential opportunities, whether you are a freshman or someone about to graduate," said Jean Keough, Career Fair publicity committee member.

The fair will be in Goldstein Auditorium next Thursday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

"Once you experience our fair, you'll be prepared for the future," said Cathy Speach, assistant director of the SU Placement Center.

"The fair eases the student's mind about the job search and the ensuing interviews," Speach said.

The fair, in its sixth year, is a joint venture between the Placement Center and each SU college and SUNY Environmental Science and Forestry.

According to the fair's guide, recruiters from more than 55 companies will be sent, offering employment opportunities to all students, ranging from permanent full-time positions to summer internships and volunteer work.

Browsing the auditorium. Each employer will have its own booth. Students are free to browse through the auditorium and talk with representatives. IBM, NBC and Price-Waterhouse are examples of companies that send recruiters to the fair, Jones said.

"The key word here is diversity," she said.

Students are advised to arrive at the fair prepared, she said.

"This is not an event you just want to browse through in 15 minutes," Jones said. "Students sometimes arrive at the fair unprepared, such as without resumes."

The Placement Center recommends that graduating students should plan on bringing multiple copies of their resumes.

Non-graduating students are encouraged too, though it is not essential.

According to the guide, employers will not expect students to be dressed for an interview. However, it is recommended that students look their best upon meeting potential supervisors.

Following the fair, students should do more research on the organizations of interest to them, according to the Placement Center.

They also recommended sending follow-up letters reminding employers of student contact and interest in them.

Additionally, the Placement Center has also set up Career Fair Workshops to further prepare students. "The workshops are designed to answer students' questions about how everything works," Speach said.

Sixty minutes of workshop.

The workshops last about an hour. For more information contact the Placement Center at 443-3616.

The establishment of the workshop was spurred in response to student evaluations solicited at last year's fair, Jones said.

Other moves include curtailing the fair from two days to one, while increasing the actual length of the fair to nine hours, she said.

"We did not find the two-day event to be profitable," she said.

"Furthermore, there is more of a need after 4 p.m. (the fair's ending time last year)," Jones said she hopes the new schedule will work out for all students.

"In one day, all time segments will be covered, so that if students don't have enough time between classes, they can come back after dinner," Jones said.

"This is especially profitable for University College students," she added.

SU's Career Fair is one of the largest of its kind, Jones said.

"People are surprised we could bring in so many companies," she said.

This year's fair will see a 10 percent decline in employer attendance from last year, even though the number of companies...

CIRs offer free counseling

By DON SCHWARTZ
Contributing Writer.

The Counselors in Residence is a free counseling service that offers therapy for students with wide-ranging problems, such as drug abuse or roommate conflicts, said Kathleen Deters, administrative supervisor for the CIR program.

"Syracuse University is one of the few college campuses in the nation that has a program like this to help students," Counselor Steve Harris said.

"We have a unique program because we have offices in the residence halls," Deters said.

Seven CIRs work about 20 hours a week on both long- and short-term therapy, Deters said.

She said the therapy is for students who live in the residence halls.

"The counselors are there to assist students that have issues with family, or that are homesick, or who might have an eating disorder, or who have an alcohol or drug problem," Deters said. "We also work with students who are depressed and students whose roommate conflict or relationship issues with a significant other.

SU graduate students

"All the Counselors in Residence are Syracuse University graduate students," CIR Marta Carlson said.

Three counselors are graduate students in the marriage and therapy program, two are in the counselor education program, one is in the masters in social work program and another is in the clinical psychology program, she said.

Of the seven counselors, four are male and three are female, so students can talk with a counselor of a particular sex if they feel more comfortable doing so, she said.

Students can talk with a counselor usually for up to an hour, or longer if necessary, by calling for an appointment or by walking in, Carlson said.

Privacy is very important to the CIR program, Deters said. All sessions between the counselor and the student are kept completely confidential, she said.

The CIR program also presents residence hall programs, Deters said. A resident adviser can contact the program and a counselor will come and talk with the floor on such subjects as AIDS, education, suicide prevention, rape awareness and promoting multi-cultural awareness, Harris said.

Not an indication of 'sick'

Deters said she wants to stress getting counseling help does not mean that a student is "sick."

"Everybody experiences all kinds of stress when they first come to college, especially first-year students," Deters said. "One thing that we try to encourage people to do is, when they feel any kind of sadness, depression, stress, or anxiety, to try to seek out one of the CIRs in the beginning so they don't have to feel afraid that they are sick," she said.

"Some people think, 'Oh, I'm sick if I have to see a counselor,' and that's just not true," she said.

Harris said students should seek help from one of the counselors as soon as a problem arises.

"We would like to help students before things get to crisis proportion; however, we are prepared to deal with a crisis if it should occur," Harris said.

CIR offices are located in eight residence halls: Brewster/Boland, Haven, Day, Flint, Watson, Delaplaine, Shaw and Sadler; and the Goldstein Student Center at South Campus. Office hours for the CIR program are posted at each location.

FAIR

Hundreds attending the fair had been steadily rising since it began, Jones said.

"This is due to the present state of the economy," she said. "Most of those who decline invitations want to reserve spaces at future fairs when the economy starts rolling again."

"Companies keep coming back because they realize the high quality of the programs and graduates here at Syracuse," Jones said.

"In comparison to the beating we have taken in the media recently, this promotes a positive image for the university as well," she said.

Busch seeks beer merger

Rumors have it that Anheuser, which is responsible for 44 percent of the beer sold in America, is planning to acquire a large international brewing company in the United States, is reportedly looking to increase its share.

While Anheuser denies any specific information, shares of Canadian brewer Labatt rose last month as rumors circulate that Anheuser was willing to invest $1 billion in an effort to counter the falling amount of domestic beer consumption.

A new look for Pepsi

Beginning this December, Pepsi will unveil a new logo and package design.

The red, white and blue swirl will remain, but the product name itself will be featured more prominently next to the logo.

The logo has a more streamlined look and is more modern, but now, with the real Dead on the road, many of the tried and true Dead night regulars are migrating with the masses of other Deadheads.

"We're one of the busiest bars in Syracuse on Monday night in part because of the band," Hamel said.

On other nights, like the popular Thursday night showing with the Mexican Mud Band, the live music also helps draw a large crowd that spends a lot of money at the bar.

Upcoming events tonight Sutter's features the 1-Tations, a roots reggae band for a $3 cover with 21-and-over identification and $5 without.

Most bands are paid on a contractual basis, Hamel said. Regular bands usually make the entire door profits or a percentage of it.

But the amount a band is paid varies with the type of music, crowd and even advertising.

Hamel said he would never go more than $1500 for any band to play Sutter's. In fact, even popular acts, like Led Zeppelin tribute band Physical Graffiti, have proven to be let-downs just eight weeks after packing the house.

The premier Pink Floyd cover band, The Machines, will play at Sutter's Thursday night. With a Syracuse University ID the cover is $5 for 21 and over and $5 for under. The cover is $8 without SU ID.

Bands mean money for bars

By ERIN NEFF Managing Editor

There may be some truth to the notion of drowning your sorrows in a beer. Despite the staggering economic conditions resulting from the current recession, people are still coming out to local bars — especially when there's live music offered.

Monday night at Hungry Charlie's, 727 S. Crouse Ave., the Albany-based Ommnisound Senspods performed a Grateful Dead-like rock beat to the mellow crowd.

Manager Doug Erickson said Chuck's will bring in a band on a traditionally slower night to try to bring in business. But that business doesn't necessarily mean that more drinks are sold or that employees get more tip money.

"People don't drink more," Erickson said. "Business is better but per person they don't buy more beer."

Beth Chambers, a Syracuse University senior, sat in a graffiti-strewn booth in the corner of Chuck's playing hearts with a few friends. She said the band is a nice addition, "but it wasn't why I came out."

Senior Melissa Danz agreed, adding she sometimes goes to go out to other bars like the Orange Grove at 505 Westcott St. for a local band, the Mind's Eye.

Mingling with the Mud

Bands are a big draw at some other bars near campus. In fact, Danz said she was hired by the band on stage at Chuck's, "the only reason I go to Sutter's is to see Mexican Mud."

Chuck's pays the bands a salary up front, since the cover charge usually takes care of their fee, Erickson said. But bands at Chuck's are rare because the bar is located in the basement and lugging heavy sound equipment downstairs is a regular basis is difficult.

Sutter's Mill and Mining Co., 729 S. Crouse Ave, has bands about three nights a week with average cover charges of $2 to $7. The bands play an important role in luring people in, and once they're in they usually buy a lot of drinks, said Jack Hamel, general manager.

"People go out on weekends just to go out," Hamel said. "But on Monday or Tuesday nights we do a better business because we have bands. People go out on those nights more if they have a reason to go out."

Every Monday night for the past five years the Hamel-Alaniz band, offering Grateful Dead tribute music, has played at Sutter's. Their popularity swings with the fluctuations in the real band's touring dates and locations.

At times during the summer, 500 people packed inside to hear the tribute band, but now, with the real Dead on the road, many of the tried and true Dead fans at Sutter's are loyal to their original heroes.

Volunteer service aids national parks

By ANGELA RAMSAY
Contribution Writer

The Student Conservation Association (SCA), founded by Elizabeth Titus in 1957, runs a volunteer service that allows greater involvement of students in America’s national parks.

Since the inception of SCA, it has worked in collaboration with the National Park Service in the management and preservation of national parks, according to an SCA pamphlet.

SCA initiated two programs: the Resource Assistant Program that runs for 12 weeks and is for men and women 18 years and older, and the High School Work Group Program which spans a four- to five-week period and is for students age 16 to 18.

How can a student get involved in this program and what exactly do students do at the parks?

Remi Wicklund, a junior at Syracuse University, took part in the Resource Assistant Program this year.

Wicklund said she underwent an application process. She applied to Padre Island National Park off the coast of Texas. Her application was then reviewed by the park and she was chosen to work there.

No experience required.

"Qualifications vary by park; however, half of them don't require prior experience," she said.

She gave some insight as to what she did at the park. "I was assigned to Padre Island National Park, which is 80 miles off the coast of Texas in the Gulf of Mexico," she said. "I worked with the rangers and also at the visitors center as a translator.

"The parks give out informational pamphlets and site bulletins and these I had to translate from English to German for the visitors," Wicklund said.

She said she did not have to work in a group throughout the program. "(I) worked for the public where I had to walk with them on the beaches, I worked alone," she said.

However, she said, "Seine, which involves throwing the net in order to catch fish, then letting out the water and showing the people, needs two individuals.

She said that as a student having gone through this program, she has benefited a great deal. "I gained experience working outdoors all summer. I went through first aid training and CPR training. I also met people from all over the world," Wicklund said.

"Qualifications vary by park; however, half of them don't require any experience," she said.

Students who are interested in SCA should send in their applications by March 1. Applications for positions from January through February 1992 should be sent to SCA by Nov. 15. Applications for the March through April positions should be sent by Jan. 15, 1992.

According to Lesley Sullivan, SCA recruitment director, "Taking part in this program is an asset, as individuals will gain a vast amount of experience, meet people, learn about living outdoors in tents, see a part of the country (they) had never visited before, and also it is a good network in obtaining a job."

Job opportunities won't always wait

By VINCEN SALISBURY
Staff Writer

National Procrastination Day was celebrated on Sept. 5 this year. The purpose of this day is to honor everyone who lives up to the adage "Put off to tomorrow what you can do today."

Many of last year's graduating students procrastinated their job search and, as a result, they missed opportunities to participate in job interviews.

If a senior was stopped in the Schine Student Center and asked how his job search was going, he would likely be in one of several phases.

The first phase is self-assessment and involves learning what makes you different from everyone else.

What are your interests, skills, activities, studies and work experiences? What is your personality like, what kind of people do you socialize with, what patterns can you see in your life? These are all important things to consider.

In interviews, recruiters will often ask: "Why should I hire you? What makes you so different from the other candidates?" The time you spend doing a self-assessment can provide answers to these questions.

The dating game

The next phase of the job search is analogous to the dating game. One of your desires is to find a partner you can spend enjoyable time with. Job seekers need to obtain information about job opportunities in their fields of interest.

Unfortunately, it's not like high school, where you filled out a career interest survey and received dozens of college catalogs that featured programs for your interests.

In reality, you will have to seek out company information from articles, books, faculty, database or by getting in touch with professionals in the field. Once you have information on organizations or companies to apply to, a resume will be needed. It should be a concise, easily read summary of your education and experiences.

There are many books that provide sample resumes for you to use when drafting your own. In addition, there are staff members at your home college and the Syracuse University Placement Center in Room 235 who can help.

The hope that all job seekers have once they send out their resumes is to arrange an interview with a company representative. The interview is crucial to getting hired at most companies, and there are a number of things you can do to prepare for it.

Study for interviews

Obtain a list of common interview questions from one of the books on interviewing available from your home college or the Placement Center. Read through the questions and try to prepare an answer for each of them. Participate in a mock interview with a friend, faculty member or staff member here at the university. If a video camera is added to these mock interviews, you can be aware of the way you present yourself to the interviewer.

After an interview, follow up with a thank you letter or a card to express your appreciation. In future weeks, this column will look at the different phases of the job search in more detail. No matter what phase you are in, stop procrastinating and set aside time each week for job hunting.

Then when National Procrastination Day comes next fall, you won't be numbered with those who missed great job interview opportunities because they waited too long.

Vince Salisbury is a graduate student who works at the SU Placement Center. The Job Connection is published each Tuesday in The Lifestyle section of The Daily Orange.

remained of the game, but were unable to get by the Huskies' stingy defense. Goalie Kyle Muncy was credited with four saves.
"We were getting like 30 yards away from the net," Galich said. "We were building good, then once we'd get like 20, 25 yards away, it just kind of broke down. They had their whole team back there. Once we got it that far, it was hard to get a shot off."
Foti said UConn's defensive style was no secret.
"All they did was fall back and kick the ball out, to try to get out of there with a win," Foti said.

"I made a good play on a punt return to put them in a hole," Wooden said.

That may seem like a minor achievement, but as a special teams player, plays like those help to earn promotions.

Wooden made All-State in football at Farmington High School in Hartford, Conn.

"We won eight games in my three years playing varsity and tied two," Wooden said. "We were a soccer school."

The Wooden brothers played on the same field only once during their high school careers. One play stands out in Jo Jo's mind.

"(Terry) was a senior and I was a freshman," Jo Jo said. "It was a halfback option play and I was playing tight end. The pass was supposed to be to me, but Terry threw an interception. I never got off the line."

Huskies edge Syracuse, 2-1

By JEFF ELBAUM
Staff Writer

If you want to know who was the better soccer team in the University of Connecticut's 2-1 victory over Syracuse University on Sunday, the answer will depend on who you ask.

"We definitely shut their offense down," UConn defender Adam Linker said. "They didn't have any golden opportunities whatsoever. That one goal was probably their best chance. They didn't have any decent shots on goal."

SU coach Dom Foti told a different story.

"We dominated the game," Foti said. "I think that's the best game we've played to date. The ball was in their half of the field the majority of the game. No matter who's telling the true story, one thing's for certain. UConn, 3-3-1, 2-1 Big East, won the game."

The Huskies opened the scoring with a goal by Corey Turnage only 3:26 into the game.

The goal came on a transition play, after the Orangemen, 3-3-1, 1-1, attacked for the first three minutes.

Foti said the early goal riled up the 5,037 people on hand at Connecticut Soccer Stadium and hurt the Orangemen's momentum.

"We needed to get through the first 10 minutes of the game to get acclimated to the crowd, the atmosphere," Foti said. "There's certainly an intimidation factor that comes along with playing at Connecticut."

"The ball was in their half of the field the first four minutes. Then, their first time down the field, they scored. That's not really getting off on the right foot." UConn's Tim Bachic scored 7:48 of the second half to give the Huskies a 2-0 lead.

"The ball was crossed and deflected off one of our players' foot and into our net," SU defender Lee Davison said. "It was just a really unlucky goal, and we couldn't believe it."

"You work on dominating, and then you give up a goal like that, it's kind of frustrating," said forward Nino Garritano.

SU was finally able to strike with 15:08 left in the game on a goal by Paul Pasqualoni on an unassisted goal by Paul Young. Young, who took seven of SU's twelve shots on the game, now leads the Orangemen with five goals and 10 points.

The Orangemen pressured for the rest of the game but couldn't get another goal. See UCONN Page 17

SU digs into bag of tricks

By JOSH BARNETT
Staff Writer

Syracuse University offensive coordinator George DeLeone didn't have a blueprint and a magic wand, he called some trick plays against the University of Florida.

"The Orangemen, 3-0, utilized the halfback option and the reverse in their 38-0 win over the Gators on Saturday."

SU coach Paul Pasqualoni said the plays on offense weren't really tricks, just the coach's way of keeping the players in the game plan.

"I don't know if they're tricks," Pasqualoni said. "I think it's a game plan, not really getting off on the right foot." We've seen him hacking on the cover of a Wheaties box have a field day.

Arkansas and UCLA were too far away and not really something we needed to say.

"I think the good thing about it is that they're magical plays. I think we go in very hard. We haven't shown a misdirection kickoff return again soon, if we did that. It just so happened to work against us."

The Orangemen may not use the misdirection kickoff return again soon, but it will give teams something to think about.

It's hard work that may soon make Jo Jo, not Edward, a household name in Syracuse. After three games this season, Wooden has 17 tackles and one interception.

Wooden was recruited by Boston College, Maryland, Miami, Nebraska, and UCLA in addition to Syracuse.

"Nebraska and UCLA were too far away," Wooden said. "Maryland wasn't good at the time like they are now, and I didn't have to go to South Carolina."

"I wanted to be a part of a winning program and knew people in Syracuse because of my brother. That's where I felt the most comfortable." Wooden's most memorable experience as an Orangeman occurred during last year's 28-0 blowout of Arizona in the Aloha Bowl.

SGA results in after slow vote

By ERIN NEFF
Managing Editor

After extending deadlines two times, the Syracuse University Student Government Association has finally received and tallied the votes from its Fall 1991 Assembly election.

The first Assembly meeting, which will be held on Monday at 7 p.m. in Maxcy Auditorium, will introduce the new assemblymen to the governmental process.

After the original two-day election period, the votes were brought in on only 700 votes, SGA initially extended the voting to Thursday and Friday of last week.

Ten percent of undergraduate students need to cast ballots to legitimize the election. At present enrollment figures, 1,157 students constitutes 10 percent of the undergraduate enrollment.

After the first days of voting, only 700 votes had been cast.

However, due to Homecoming events, the elections did not take place on Friday and were pushed back to Monday and Tuesday.

A total of 1,277 votes, constituting 12 percent of the enrollment, were cast during the elections — something with which SGA officials were not pleased.

“We're disappointed with the turnout of the student body,” said Brian Rubenstein, SGA executive assistant.

With five days of voting available in the Schine Student Center and four nights at various dining halls, Rubenstein said, “We still got that little amount. I'm sorry they didn't come out and vote after we made it that easy for them.”

Emily Zenick, SGA president, said a large number of those elected were write-in candidates, but she did not have the actual count. Many of those write-ins took the seats, Rubenstein said.

A total of 114 seats were available and 86 were filled.

Despite leaving 28 positions open, Zenick said there were some unexpected write-ins, like those in Marion and Shaw halls and Greek housing, and the off-campus housing race brought in more Assemblymen than in the past.

The following students were elected to serve on an advisory board:

Booth: Brian Apple, Timothy Bowe and Heather Sook.

Brewster: Chetonne Cole, Millicent King, Jen Nyez and Meghan O'Brien.

Day: Natanya Leviof, Ruby Lopez, Eileen Romana and Erik Thoresen.

DellPlain: Jason Shniderson and Eric Tihander.

Flint: Daniel Deleon, Daniel Igersheim, Daniel Kogas, Steve Lowenthal and Leslie Pankowski.

Haven: Mariah Bradford, Grace Evans, Jeannine Poitier and Theresa Sgroi.

Kimmel: David Waters.

Lawrison: John Adriel, Scott Herbert, Keith Kleiner, Andrea Marshall, Michael Sauvier and Darrell Williams.

Marion: Tina Stoklosa and Neil Sutter.

Shaw: Chad Brooks, Shereyly Donald, Jacqueline Greene, Karimia Longford and Jeremy Marin.

South Campus: Angela Burgin, Jeff Carman, Matthew Elefant, Tricia Jeffers, Sonya Lambert, David Schrand and Steven Weidenkopf.

Village Housing: Garry Depieri, Bonnie Kasdorff and Julie Tizzaro.

Watson: Gil Pagovich.

Discussion group probes creativity

By KATE FLATLEY
Contributing Writer

Creativity has numerous roots and just as many shapes and forms. In English and Textual Studies Professor John Adriel, the listening to the “In the Workplace” to kick off Empowerment Week, he said, “I believe that these sources can be categorized as internal or personal, and external.”

Internal power

Simkins said internal power is really influential by an individual's own actions. External power, in the form of laws, organizational policies, promotion or hiring practices, she said.

Since the empowerment battle is difficult for women and minorities, the College of Nursing holds Empowerment Week annually to encourage students to overcome difficulties.

Simkins said if for us to realize that the struggle for empowerment, especially for minorities and women, is not easy and must be a struggle where learned, she said.

In relation to her speech, Simkins reflected on the empowerment forces in her own life and career that enabled her to reach a position of authority.

Growing up in the south

“I grew up in a southern town in the time when our country was experiencing many changes — changes that dealt with the empowerment of women and minorities,” Simkins said.

She said that she now believes there are as many kinds of creativity as there are kinds of people.

She teaches her students that creativity is not only acceptable, but desirable. “Once we put a definition on the word 'creativity,' someone wants to quantify it — to test it,” she said. She said she does not believe in this method. “Accept ‘encourage weirdos.’”

“The creator instills in us the power to create, and we, from there, become a co-creator,” he said.

Taylor said he made the tongue-in-cheek remark to encourage weirdos.

“I may not like what someone writes or paints, but I am at least happy that they are using their creativity,” he said.

Society doesn’t understand the urge to create.

Amy Komar, an audience member, asked about the notion of change and the element of risk in creativity. Scott said that “fashions come and go because of historical patterns,” he said.

He said that “fashions come and go because of historical patterns.”

Power gained by women and minorities through the civil rights movement has helped them develop their own sense of individuality.

Simkins, who described her own empowerment to her position as director of health services, addressed about 60 students in the College of Nursing lounge Monday night.

Simkins’ advice to students and faculty is to take risks, to be open-minded and experiment. She said that “innovate, create, and explore.”

Hostage Jack Mann Released in Lebanon
Lebanese kidnappers freed British citizen Jack Mann Tuesday afternoon. Israeli Radio and the Iranian News Agency reported the release. The British Foreign Office confirmed the release.

It is likely Mann is on his way to Damascus, where freed hostages are usually taken.

Mann is 77 and had been held hostage for more than two years.

Iraq detains United Nations search team
Iraq detained about 40 United Nations nuclear inspectors for 12 hours Monday after the inspectors discovered Iraqi plans for making nuclear weapons.

After a long standoff, the inspectors were allowed to depart the building, but had to leave the documents behind.

The Security Council met Tuesday to take up the issue again, American officials said.

Officials said it was likely additional warplanes would be sent to Saudi Arabia for use in either escort or combat missions over Iraq.

President Bush again urged the ousting of Saddam Hussein in his annual address to the General Assembly.

Arafat tries to strike P.L.O. balance
Yasser Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, expressed support Monday for a Middle East Peace Conference, but offered no concessions for Palestinian attendance.

Arafat addressed 450 delegates at the opening of a meeting of the Palestine National Council, the P.L.O.'s parliament.

Arafat tried to strike a balance between moderates within his organization who want compromise with the United States on the peace talks and the hard-liners opposed to any concessions to Israel.

P.L.O. officials said there was a consensus among the delegates in favor of participation in the conference.

Nation
Electricity costs drop in Northeast, Southeast
Consumers are paying less for electricity in the Northeast and Southwest.

The declining prices are due to lower oil prices and the collapse in the price of natural gas. Officials warn, however, that these factors are temporary.

More efficient use of electricity, spurred in part by utility subsidies for new light bulbs and electric motors, has caused the cost of electricity to shrink.

For residential customers, the lines on their monthly bill where utilities adjust rates for changes in fuel costs have shown a small or negative number.

"It's a buyer's market," Barry Abramson, an analyst at Prudential Securities, said.

Baby boomers not born-again savers
The nation's savings rate is sliding again, despite the common view that the baby boomers would become thriftier in middle age.

They are not only do baby boomers save less than experts had hoped, but the number of retired people is growing, and they spend more than they earn.

Crack hits Chicago with active killing wave
The arrival of crack in Chicago has caused turf wars that are making 1991 the deadliest year in the city's history.

By the end of August, Chicago had recorded 632 murders, compared to 593 by that date in 1974, the previous record year.

The city declared last month the death toll with 120 killings, more than the previous record of 117 in November 1971.

The killings have touched off neighborhood marches and candlelight vigils. Out of frustration, Mayor Richard M. Daley likened Chicago to Columbia.

The record also surpasses the rate during the bloody years of the Al Capone era.

State
Cuomo announces plan to revitalize NYC
Gov. Mario Cuomo announced a plan to revitalize New York City "from the ground up" at a dinner Monday. He described plans for new housing developments, new rail and ferry lines, and the world's largest conference and business library.

The light-rail system would link Kennedy and LaGuardia airports with each other and mass transit lines. The cost would be funded by a fee charged to passengers departing from New York airports.

Guests attending the dinner said the plans could be pursued even in bad times. "Maybe when you didn't have as much trouble, there was less willingness by the system to inquire this deep into possibilities," Cuomo said. "The mind grows in capacity as the challenge grows," he said.

The plan also calls for the state to take over the city's Medicare costs.

Board of Regents to fix discipline system
The Board of Regents said Tuesday it will call for revamping the process of disciplining of 500,000 professionals.

The new scheme responding to criticism that bad nurses, dentists, architects and members of 77 professions the board regulates are not punished quickly, said Christopher Carpenter, spokesman for the state Education Department.

Ferry fares being collected again
Passengers on the Staten Island Ferry began paying a 50 cent fare again Wednesday after two weeks free rides. The fares had been collected again before the Manhattan terminal of the ferry was destroyed on Sept. 8.

The fare is now being collected at the Staten Island terminal, the first time fares have been collected there since October 1972.

The tour will be conducted by Chris Capella Peters, an urban planner and designer.

A reunion reception and photo exhibit will be held on Sept. 29 from 2:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the business library.

The exhibit will feature 50 photos with subjects ranging from the construction of the Thurnerd Park amphitheater to a trolley car on Euclid Avenue. The exhibit will be on display through October 6.

UJB fields more student complaints

By KRISTINA SAUERWEIN
Asst. News Editor

More complaints were filed against students and organizations in the 1990-91 school year than the previous year, according to a recently released University Judicial System report.

This year, 280 complaints were filed compared to last year's 228. Judicial Adviser Benjamin Baez said there is an increase because more students and faculty are aware of filing procedures.

"It's a sign that more people are aware of what to do," he said. "I expect next year the number will be higher."

"It's important that students and the community know how the judicial system works." The Syracuse University Judicial System hears cases of alleged violations of the Code of Student Conduct, Baez said.

"Some students come to SU thinking that everything is going to be rosy, but the university is like a mini-community," he said. "Bad things as well as good things happen, which is why we need a judicial system."

After a complaint is filed against a student or organization, the Office of Student Affairs works informally with both parties to resolve the problem, Baez said.

Friendly resolutions "We try to resolve the situation in a friendly manner," he said. "Most students who have a complaint filed against them agree that something bad happened. They are usually very sorry.

"If an accused student or organization denies the allegation or does not agree to an informal resolution, Baez said the matter will go before the SU Judicial System, which is composed of universities, residence hall and academic judicial systems.

"It is every student's and organization’s right to an impartial hearing if they don't agree with the complaint," he said.

Baez also said he is pleased to see more students filing complaints against other students.

The report reveals that 61 students filed complaints compared to the 34 complaints filed in the previous year. Other complaints against students or organizations were filed by faculty and university officials.

Students unaware of codes "Most students have a pretty hard time understanding complaints against other students," he said. "One is to find out that the person is reporting.

"It is usually a serious problem if a student files a complaint, because that means they weren't able to settle the problem among themselves.

Students unaware of codes Freshmen and sophomores have more complaints filed against them because they are not familiar with the Student Code of Conduct, Baez said.

"Students unaware of codes freshmen and sophomores have more complaints filed against them because they are not familiar with the Student Code of Conduct," Baez said.

University Judicial System The Syracuse University Judicial System is composed of four boards which are administered by the Dean of Student Relations in cooperation with the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and the dean of the students of the schools and colleges.

Academic Judicial Board The Academic Judicial Board is composed of nine members appointed annually by the Dean of Student Relations and selected by the universities, residence hall and academic judicial systems.

The board is comprised of at least one undergraduate student, five faculty members, and three staff members.

The board may impose sanctions up to and including expulsion from the school and may design sanctions that are educational or remedial.

Residence Hall Judicial Board This board is composed of nine residence hall advisors selected by the Office of Residence Life. The board consists of nine students appointed annually by the Dean of Student Relations and selected by the universities, residence hall and academic judicial system.

The board may impose sanctions up to and including expulsion from the university and may design sanctions that are educational or remedial.

Bush is right, crazy

George Bush may be right. He may also be crazy. He may be right in trying to get Israel not to expand any further into the West Bank. He may be right for suggesting that it stop building settlements because they are an obstacle to peace. He says settlements will anger Palestinians who will then not want to negotiate toward peace.

This may be sound advice, but it may also be crazy, and easier said than done.

The United States has proven in the past that it expands to meet its internal needs. We stole land from the American Indians for the same reasons Israel wishes to expand — land and security. But Israel's not as big or powerful as we were. So, we tell them to sit tight. This is hypocritical stuff.

Israel needs $10 billion to build housing for immigrant Soviet Jews. For a country as small as Israel to borrow money, it needs a cosigner. It won't take the United States to be that cosigner. President Bush says it would cost the American taxpayer $1,000 if Israel defaulted on its loan. So, he suggested these people wait four months and see.

Since Bush makes it sound as if this money is coming out of taxpayers' pockets, does that mean if we don't cosign Israel's loan that money will go towards homeless people? Of course not; it will go toward military defense. Israel's request may be of pressing humanitarian importance.

Now, Israel faces a fundamental dilemma. Should it trade land for the promise of security? We say it should, but it's easy for the United States to advise Israel along those lines. That's because our perspective is off.

If Israel were to give up the West Bank, it would remain only nine miles wide. It would take approximately 15 seconds to fly a jet from one side to the other.

How many of you would feel secure on a similar plot of land, surrounded by your enemies?

Israelis will have to wait until Bush makes a decision. But, the decision is, if the United States considers them an important enough of asset to protect.

Of diners, soul and marionettes

Here are my perspectives on the entire world this week.

It looks like Clarence Thomas will be confirmed soon. His eloquent statements indicate one of two things. Either he is a liar or he really has an open mind about many of today's hot legal issues. Although the skeptic in me believes in the former scenario, let's hope he's willing to listen to the facts before making his decisions.

Something is strange at Syracuse University. The administration raises tuition because of declining enrollment. Enrollment is declining because students can no longer afford tuition. What would happen if, say, tuition were decreased. Ahh... forget about it. That will never happen.

The Godfather of Soul, James Brown, is still alive. His new studio album is pretty damn good. My roommate Howie has always wanted to meet one of two things. Either he is a liar or confirmation soon. His elusive statements indicate he may be right in trying to get cosigner Israel's loan that money will go towards humanitarian importance.

This may be sound advice, but it may also be crazy. Again, I strongly encourage discussion to cover themselves.

The timetable is cleverly designed to give the least possible opportunity for negative feedback and protests. The administration of SU has to be made to understand that the faculty and students are the University and must have a voice in its decisions. I especially encourage the parents of students to call and write the Chancellor and professors.

Let Chancellor Shaw know that we are intelligent enough to think for ourselves and do not need the administration to play God. Matthew R. Broderick

University Appeals Board
The University Appeals Board is composed of five faculty/staff members and four students and has jurisdiction to hear appeals of decisions of any lower non-academic judicial body of the Dean of Student Relations for reasons of particular complexity.

Three faculty and two staff, one of whom must be a graduate student, are needed for quorum. The appeals board is recommended by the lower judicial boards and appointed by the Dean of Student Relations. The board is chaired by a member selected by the board on a case-by-case basis.

The board may accept requests by any complainant or accused student to assume primary jurisdiction over any non-academic case for reasons of unnecessary delay, unfairness or any other reason.

The board is empowered to change lower judicial decisions, alter sanctions or return cases. It can also impose sanctions up to and including expulsion.

These decisions must be confirmed by the Vice President for Student Affairs.

Simkins said it is necessary for individuals to identify a way to gain empowerment.
In order to attain power it is first necessary to select a mentor.
“We need someone to assist us in making those tough decisions,” she said. “They can help you person carefully.”

It is also essential to recognize a need for additional educational preparation in order to advance in an organization. Simkins said.

Erie, Indiana scores while it's here

Erie, Indiana has been called "Twin Peaks for middle-aged, squeaky-clean fans who could only exist on TV."

That description alone is the kiss of death for this innovative, histrionically all-too-different NBC Sunday night series.

And if that's not bad enough, the show's panel of average American viewers hated Erie. One respondent said he'd wash his dishes before he'd watch the show again.

While this is not the kind of response NBC hoped for, the network should at least take pride in the fact that it has brought to the airwaves a show that is not another stupid sitcom.

In Erie, Indiana 13-year-old Marshall Teller (Omri Katz) has "moved to a place where Elvis can be seen getting the morning paper, and a suburban housewife hams a straight-jacket on the clothesline to dry. Yes, as Marshall said, "Statistically speaking, it's the most normal place in the country."

Collecting weirdness

With the help of his younger friend Simon (Justin Shenkarow), Marshall intends to collect the town's weirdness and store it in an Erie Museum of Horror.

In the pilot episode, Marshall and Simon discovered a Foreverware and used by a housewife's neighbor who was also used to keep her twin sons Bert and Ernie looking like 13-year-olds, even though they're actually 40-something. To accomplish this, mom vacuum-sealed the twins in giant bed-sheets.

It was the neighbor who also served: The Machine, a 12-piece Pink Floyd imitator.

While this is not the biggest hit the Machine has, it has been called the "American Pink Floyd."

The Machine is a four-piece act consisting of original member Sarah Gardener, who left the act to pursue her solo career, and then joined by guitarist Joe Pascarell, realized they received the biggest response from the Floyd songs.

As they continued to play, band members, notably guitarist Joe Pascarell, realized they received the biggest response from the Floyd songs.

The band got its start playing in bars around Spring Valley, N.Y., Mauch said. Currently, they have been touring the north-eastern United States, including Virginia Beach and a few stops in Massachusetts.

Welcome to ... 'The Machine'

By SCOTT MULLER

Not just any cover band is coming to Sutter's on Thursday night.

But The Machine, Erie's premier Pink Floyd imitator, offers a little bit more.

Most tribute bands simply play the music of the act they are imitating.

Some, such as Physical Graffiti, even go so far as copying the stage set.

But The Machine is more than a tribute band, according to band's co-manager Jack Hamel.

"Not only do they play Floyd's music perfectly," he said, "but they expand on the songs into something totally different."

Hamel described how they would play Floyd's "Money" and then segue into "I Shot the Sheriff" as an example of their musicianship.

"From that, they could go into 'Scarlet Begonias' by the Dead or 'Better Than Dead.'"

The Machine's set consists of such popular Pink Floyd songs as "Comfortably Numb," "Run Like Hell," "Wish You Were Here," and "Time."

Obscure Floyd

In addition, more obscure, epic-length songs are played from all of Floyd's albums, from Meddle to The Wall.

While many fans and hardcore Floyd fans shouldn't be surprised to hear "Echoes" or the entire eight-part "Shine on You Crazy Diamond" during the show.

According to publicist Molly Mauch, The Machine has been together as a Pink Floyd show for about two years. Also, the band's popularity is increasing with every show.

"They have been playing about four to five nights a week recently," she said. Once the band plays at a certain venue, more people tend to come and check the band out the next time they come around.

Mauch said the band's crowd average from 500 to 1,000 people, but the band drew a personal best of more than 5,000 fans in Agawam, Mass., this past July.

"They usually draw a big crowd at Sutter's," Mauch said, "so anyone coming out Thursday night should be in good company."

According to an article that appeared in the Allentown Express, before becoming a Floyd act, The Machine was just an everyday cover band.

As they continued to play, band members, notably guitarist Joe Pascarell, realized they received the biggest response from the Floyd songs.

The band got its start playing in bars around Spring Valley, N.Y., Mauch said. Currently, they have been touring the north-eastern United States, including Virginia Beach and a few stops in Massachusetts.

A four-piece machine

The Machine is a four-piece act consisting of Pascarell on vocals, Adam Price on bass, Todd Cohen on drums and Eric Sasse on keyboards.

The Machine will also be performing some of its own songs.

Fan will remember Gardener for her vocals on the band's "Time," and will remember her for her contribution to the song "Comfortably Numb."

NBC's Eerie, Indiana airs Thursday at 7:30 p.m. on Channel 3.

'Hoodoo' addresses feminism

Alison Moyet has a big mouth. She doesn’t hesitate to use it, either. She grew up a punk rock kid in an area of England she calls “not conducive to kids,” and now she sings the blues—but always with an edge.

If it were said that Alison Moyet deflects classification, it would be because she herself speaks out against it. But, like any true punk, she’s got an answer for everything.

Her hometown was a place where young women were encouraged to marry a local and “have kiddies by 17.” But, like any true punk, she’s got an answer for that, too. And, like any true punk, her answer is “loud, dirty and uncomfortable.”

Moyet railed against that ethic, however, turning to punk music, which allowed her to be “a little less servile.”

Her hometown was a place of young women being “oppressed by men,” and now she sings the blues

Punk also let her be androgynous, which is still a big part of Moyet’s persona. “I want my sex to be irrelevant. I want my sexuality to be irrelevant,” Moyet says.

Moyet believes her sexuality and her appearance are relevant in America, where her two solo albums have had only limited success. “Working out quite a lot would be helpful,” she quips.

“(England) is not so keen on feminism, it were said that Alison Moyet would ‘think I was a bastard.”

Moyet believes that women’s roles have grown wise with age and says she now has “more to offer” than she did when she was 16 or 18. And what she offers to women listeners and performers is some characteristically straightforward advice. “Find who you are and realize your attractiveness or fuckability are not the only assets you have.”

See DISCO Page 12

Alison Moyet says that her next album will be produced more quickly than her latest, 'Hoodoo.'

Alison Moyet’s new release confronts male oppression

With the release of her third LP, Hoodoo Alison Moyet delivers a punchy, bitchy record of female empowerment that confronts anyone who would oppress women.

In an interview Monday, Moyet expressed her satisfaction with Hoodoo, her first effort in 4 years. Unlike her past two efforts, Moyet says this album has true conviction. It also succeeds due to its “dirtier and more organic” band, she said.

Moyet, an admitted agoraphobe, called Hoodoo her most personal record, as she arranged the back-up vocals and wrote from the heart. “The most important thing is soul music in the true sense of the word,” she said.

Moyet encapsulates the essence of soul on songs like “Footsteps” where she addresses her lover: “Don’t let your footsteps fail me/You’re gonna get sunk if you slip on the way/When I say the time is right/Gonna walk this mother out of sight.”

Equally scathing is “Rise,” a cut employing harmonica, a meaty double bass and drums. Despite the music, the song is vocally driven and encourages women’s liberation from domestic slavery.

Moyet sings, “Baby lose that friggin’ pan/You don’t live to feed that man/Nothing’s gained through self-denial/Coz you weren’t born to be servile.” See MOYET Page 14

Moyet doubts women who think they're liberated but are really perpetuating old stereotypes, like Madonna. Madonna, Moyet says, was nothing more than "one in a line of pin-ups" and a typical pop icon. "There is nothing confrontational about Madonna." The star's efforts to use sexuality to sell are age-old and tired, Moyet says.

However, Moyet admits Madonna has some smarts. "She is a smart business woman. And it is nice to see a woman in control of her destiny, but not when her destiny is limited by her physicality."

Moyet's destiny may be about to change with the release of Hoodoo, her third album, and first release in four years.

Her first albums met with great success in the U.K., but listeners in the States might be more familiar with Moyet as half of the synthesizer duo Yaz (the other half being Vince Clarke, who went on to form Depeche Mode and Erasure).

But Moyet's experience with success has led her to realize that the success isn't what really counts — it's the progress she's made during her career.

Commercial success pushed her toward the center where media expect women to be "warm and accommodating." So she had to depart from the scene for a few years because she said she "needed to reassess what was happening in my life."

The success part of it isn't a concern to Moyet — it's the progress, not the result of it. As it is, the British press have waffled a bit choosing a stance on Moyet's music, Moyet says. English critics are fickle and too easily swayed by public opinion, she says. The British music weekly Melody Maker gave her "real shit reviews." And then, she says, they turned about-face and called her new single brilliant.

Moyet says for a while, she had to walk down the street shaking her fists at mainstreamers who called her too leftist and radicals who criticized her for being too mainstream.

Moyet said she's pleased with Hoodoo because it has become a directive for her and proves that age is irrelevant if you've still got something to say. She said her only fear is trying to live down, not up to, her debut record.

"History hasn't been particularly representative of me," Moyet said. But if she quit now, it would leave her in good repute.

Rush exhibits variety on unique new album

The Canadian power music trio Rush has spent almost two decades crossing musical boundaries—and succeeding.

The group succeeds again with its latest offering, Roll the Bones. From the release of their first album in 1974, the members of Rush, Geddy Lee, Alex Lifeson and John Rustey (replaced by Neil Peart in 1976), made it a priority that musical integrity and purity would come before commercial exposure and hype.

On Roll the Bones, Rush has shown that the music's substance should come before the commercialism of much of today's rock/pop scene.

Rush, a band probably most noted for the classic rock staples "Tom Sawyer" and "Limelight" from the 1981 release Moving Pictures, has ventured into many areas throughout the rock music scene. See RUSH Page 14.

sic spectrum over the years. With Roll the Bones, the group has melded different styles and musical influences to create a sound that is truly unique in the rock industry.

Classic and progressive rock
Roll the Bones combines styles ranging from classic hard rock and progressive rock to modern funk. Examples of all these styles can be heard on the new album's title track.

The album fuses the charging classic rock guitar of Lifeson, the dreamy and melodic keyboards of Lee, and the lead singer, and hard-driving funk beat supplied by the rock industry.

City (Fla) High School, said Joseph made a smart choice in choosing SU.
"He was smart enough to select a school that's doing things that can utilize his abilities," Frazier said. "The university itself (did) a good job at finding kids that will fit into their program and do things they need to do.
"It was a perfect marriage. With both people doing the intelligent thing."

Joseph had 47 tackles, including 35 solo, and three pass breakups his freshman year.
"I didn't put any pressure on myself." Joseph said. "I didn't think I was under pressure. Basically, last year I was trying to fit in. (The other defensive backs) helped along a lot."

Joseph credits co-captain Tim Sandquist with helping him adjust last season.
"He made me feel like I was a part (of the team)," Joseph said. "It wasn't like I was just the young guy. I was Dwayne."

Sandquist said Joseph's level of play didn't indicate he was a freshman.
"I was surprised the first couple of games," Sandquist said. "Then we just settled in and it wasn't like he was a freshman out on the field. He's just another ballplayer, just like everybody else."

Being a young player surrounded by experienced players, you might think Joseph would be a favorite target for opposing offenses. Joseph, however, said he doesn't think the opposition singles him out.
"At this level, I don't think anyone goes out and picks on one person," Joseph said. "I guess I happened to be in the area where teams throw the ball."

Joseph broke his right hand in the pre-season and played the first two games with a cast. He credits SU trainer Don Lowe with speeding the recovery. Joseph said the injury also had a positive effect: it made him concentrate more.

Orange defensive backs coach Phil Elmassian said Joseph brought many of the intangibles with him to Syracuse, but has since expanded on his skills.
"He's a great kid." Glmassian said. "He's a lot of fun to coach. He's really improved tremendously as far as our expectations. He has a lot of ability. I think he really just loves the game."

"Great players have great instincts, great work habits and great desires." Frazier said. "I think Dwayne possesses all these qualities. He doesn't mind rolling up his sleeves and going to work."

Unbeaten streak ends for Syracuse

By ZEV BOROW
Staff Writer

The yellow brick road to national prominence turned into a dead end for the Syracuse University volleyball team last weekend.

The Orangewomen lost both their matches at the Buckeye Classic to a couple of wicked teams from the west.

The weekend tournament was to be a proving ground for the Orangewomen, but the competition posed by No. 14 Ohio State as well as the Loyola Marymount Lions was too much for the Orangewomen.

SU was shut out in three games by the Buckeyes in the tournament's opening match on Friday night, and managed to win only one game in a 3-1 loss on Saturday to the Lions.

The Orangewomen had hoped that a successful weekend would vault them into the top 20. "It was a very disappointing weekend," coach Dan Schulte said. "However, we have to remember that we were up against some of the toughest competition in the country.

"We did do some things well, but we are not yet at that level yet, and we have to work and improve on some things.

Syracuse junior frontliners Andrea Carson and Annie Parisien, as well as senior middle blocker Jessica Paarlberg, turned in outstanding efforts.

"Loyola is another very talented team," Schulte said. "Everyone was focusing on Ohio State but I think that Loyola is a definite top 20 team.

"The losses over the weekend are very disappointing to us," Paarlberg said. "We thought that we could go out there and do better. But we know that those teams are very good and that we are still a good team, with a lot of games left to play.

"Carson agreed with Paarlberg, and said she still has confidence in the team.

"Losing is always tough, but I don't think we played as well as we could have," Carson said. "We will try to learn from this and become a better team."
Orange not judging Niagara

By JEFF ELBAUM
Staff Writer

Syracuse University soccer coach Dean Foti said it clear at the beginning of the season that he didn't want people to judge the Orangemen after the team's first six games. The schedule included two Top-10 teams on the road, two Big East games in traditionally tough places to play, and two home games against teams with career winning records over the Orangemen.

Syracuse came out of those six games with a 3-3 record.

Now, Foti says the Orangemen lived up to the challenge of the tough stretch.

"We went through the first six games, four of them being on the road, and all four of those games were very, very difficult places to come away with wins," Foti said. "And I'm happy with the way the team is playing."

The Orangemen will try to continue getting positive results as the weekend night against Niagara University, at 7:30, in the Carrier Dome.

Niagara, 0-4, is the first of four straight home games for SU.

Last season, the Orangemen crushed the Purple Eagles 7-1. Foti said the Orangemen must not take Niagara too lightly.

"No matter what their record is or how they play, we still have to play the way we know how," Foti said. "We still have to play to our potential. We're not that good that we can look past an opponent."

Foti said that the Niagara game should be a building block for the rest of the season.

"Whether the opponent you play is better or worse, it doesn't make a difference," Foti said. "If we go out and play to our potential good things would happen.

"That's how you ensure that at the end of the season, you're going to be a good team. If you can learn from every game, and build on that, then you come out a lot better at the end of the season."
Deion stay out of Braves’ race

Deion Sanders announced yesterday, defiantly, that he will rejoin the Atlanta Braves for the last week of the season.

Sanders said what he does in his spare time is "my business," as far as his football contract with the Atlanta Falcons goes.

Well, gee, start waving those Tomahawks, Atlanta, because Deion is coming back!

* Sanders said he is returning to aid the Braves in their pennant run.

SPORTS OPINION

Sanders played for the Braves until July 31, and hit a monstrous .193 with four home runs and 13 RBIs. Now, if those numbers aren’t a major factor in the Braves’ pennant chase, I don’t know what is.

Deion, Marge Schott’s decision being that a bigger influence on the pennant race than you did.

Deion, if you really want to help the Braves, maybe you should just stick to punt returns and interceptions.

Granted, with the suspension of Ozzie Nixon and Sanders’ speed, the Braves could utilize the outfielder in a limited role.

It’s this, ‘I’m coming along with the calvary,’ attitude Sanders has that annoys me.

The Braves are now 1 1/2 games behind the Dodgers with 12 games to go. The team should be concentrating on maintaining consistency through the stretch run, not embracing the return of a marginal at best, player.

Atlanta has competed for its first divisional title since 1983 for many reasons. None of them have anything to do with the new publicity bandwagon.

To list a few reasons: Terry Pendleton, Ron Gant, Dave Justice, Nixon, the pitching staff, including Tom Glavine, Steve Avery and Charlie Leibrandt, manager Bobby Cox and the tremendous resurgence in fan support...

Well, you get the idea.

Sanders, once again, is trying to steal a piece of spotlight he doesn’t deserve. Maybe I’m wrong, maybe he really thinks he can make a contribution to the Braves and is simply going to help them out of good sportsmanship and teamwork.

I don’t think so.

Sanders’ baseball career has been nothing but a way of seeking additional attention from the beginning anyway.

Sanders started with the New York Yankees, and was signed to a ridiculous amount of money for a minor leaguer. This is not surprising, however, because that was during the George Steinbrenner years. Low talent, high profile players were a trademark of the owner’s era.

When Steinbrenner was ousted from the Yankees, so was Sanders. Unfortunately for the baseball world, he was picked up by the Braves.

Sure, he was the only man to hit a homer and score a touchdown in the same week, but what does that prove? Nothing, except he has extremely fortunate timing. He just doesn’t belong in two sports.

So know wannabes.

Deion, back off and leave the Braves alone to capture their own title.

Dickson wins fifth flight singles

By DAVE HAUT

After two exhausting days of hard hitting on the hard courts, the Syracuse University women’s tennis team finished second in the 10th annual SUNY Life Tennis Classic this past weekend.

Coach Jessie Dwire said he was pleased with the Orangewomen’s second place finish to Williams and Mary, which is an NCAA Top-Team.

William and Mary was a tough team, Dwire said. "The girls played well beating teams like Virginia and Brown, who were ranked ahead of us in the preseason rankings."

The tournament, held at the Skytop tennis courts, may have marked the beginning of a great college career for freshman Sara Dickson and the coming of age of senior Shari Liberatore and junior Jennifer Agate.

Dickson won the fifth flight singles title, defeating Brown University’s Le Elgie, 6-2, 6-3. She is the first Orangewoman to win a SUNY flight singles championship since 1983.

Since this level of competition is much better than high school, I just have to keep improving," Dickson said. "Helping the team is what matters.

I thought Sara played real well this weekend," Dwire said. "It goes to show that hard work pays off."

Dickson also teamed up with junior Corrina Bode to place second in the flight.

The tandem took on Penn State University’s team of Ann Harrington and Slocomb, 6-3, 6-0.

Liberatore finished second in the flight, losing to Williams and Mary’s Karen Van der Merwe, 6-2, 7-5.

Agate finished second in flight four singles, losing to William and Mary’s Deb Hering, 6-2, 6-2.

According to Dwire, the team did have some weaknesses and made some mistakes in several doubles.

"I thought Sara played well in her singles," Dwire said. "I thought our doubles teams could have played better.

Joseph a hit right from start

By JOSH BARNET

Syracuse University sophomore cornerback Dwayne Joseph made an impact on collegiate wide receivers before he ever played a down.

The trouble was they were on his own team.

In one of his first practices as an Orangemen’s last year, Joseph was able to hold SU receiver Shelby Hill and former wideout Rob Carpenter on the line and disrupt their routes. Joseph used a bump-and-run technique he learned in high school.

"I guess I was just having a good day that day," Joseph said. "Shelby and Rob, especially Rob Carpenter are great receivers.

Several of the coaches thought Joseph was holding the receivers, but the film showed otherwise. "Most receivers, like our receivers, are faster than me," Joseph said. "I got to have the edge on them."

"I learned the bump-and-run technique from my high school coach, at a bump-and-run technique, but I can’t tell you (about it), I don’t want anybody else to do it."

According to Joseph played in his first game, he channeled his skills toward the opposition.

"It was one of only four SU freshmen not to be redshirted. Joseph started the final nine games last year."

This season Joseph has gotten off to a quick start. He has had an interception in each of SU’s first three games to go along with 14 tackles, including nine solo.

His first career interception came this season with 27 seconds left in the first half of the first game, he was able to jump right into the Orangemen’s defensive scheme because of similarities between his high school defense and the SU defense.

Walt Frazier, Joseph’s coach at Carver, was very excited," Joseph said. "I’m going to remember that forever because it was like, ‘Finally, I got an interception in a college football game! I just ran for it. Luckily, I got it.’"

Assistant police chief faces Maxwell class

By MARK A. BROUSSEAU

The assistant chief of the Syracuse Police Department defended police activity on the hill Wednesday afternoon to a public affairs class in Maxwell Auditorium.

Students criticized Deputy Chief Steven Thompson for a perceived increase in the police presence in the university area, which he said was spurred by an increase in illegal activity.

"Either there are more complaints or he’s lying," said public affairs Professor William Coplin, as he moderated the discussion.

"The first couple of weeks, there have been a number of calls in the fraternity area," Thompson said.

A student asked why police closed several parties, and he said that the campus is responsible for that activity. Thompson said, "The increased activity is based on complaints."

"If we don’t get a complaint, we won’t end someone’s fun," he said. "The perception that we are doing more on the hill is because of more complaints."

"It’s not that we are going out looking for parties to shut down," he said.

"We will go if we receive a call, if SU Security can’t handle it or if SU Security doesn’t handle it," he said.

Thompson said that there are degrees of noise that residents have to keep, and police do not necessarily need to issue a warning to close a party.

"Students questioned why police are quick to shut down parties."

"We would rather take care of a problem with three to five officers before it gets out of hand and takes 10 officers," he said.

"If we don’t address a noise violation, it could lead to assaults, shootings," he said.

"Officers can go in and ask people to leave and even take the stereo, but they cannot go through your belongings," he said.

"Caterers have called us and said they want to end the parties if things get out of control," Thompson said. "They are afraid of losing their catering license."

More people, more police

"Students taking regarding a noise violation depends on the time of the evening, the number of complaints, the number of officers involved, and the number of officers in the area.

The arrest of four underage drinkers at a bar also received student criticism.

"We do Alcohol Beverage Control checks at the bars because we have a mixed group that ends up in the bars," he said.

"This happens in all bars," he said. "This is not unique."

Troops, missiles sent to Saudi Arabia

The United States deployed Tuesday and Wednesday about 100 Patriot anti-ballistic missiles and 1,300 soldiers to Saudi Arabia.

President Bush said although there have not been any U.S. troop movements, he is not ruling out the possibility of military force.

Saudi officials said they welcome the U.S. shipment of Patriot anti-ballistic missiles.

Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said that if Bush decided to order air strikes against Iraqi military force.

Joint Chiefs of Staff said that if Bush decided to order air strikes against Iraqi nuclear facilities, the U.S. military could not guarantee that every bit of Saddam Hussein's nuclear materials could be destroyed.

But Powell said he is "reasonably confident" that strikes could destroy Iraq's nuclear program.

El Salvador takes steps to end civil war

The end of an 11-year-old civil war in El Salvador is near.

The rightist government allowed to agree to allow leftist guerrillas to join a new police force distinct from the military.

The agreement, reached after eight days of U.N.-mediated negotiations, represents a compromise for both sides.

The rebels had demanded incorporation into the armed forces as a way to ensure their safety and that of their families, and to secure an active role in the security forces, which was rejected by the government.

Study reveals women more prone to AIDS

Heterosexual men infected with the AIDS virus are at least 17.5 times more likely to transmit the infection to women during sex than vice versa, according to a study published Wednesday.

Researchers who conducted the study tested 72 male partners of infected women and 207 female partners of infected men to determine the rates of HIV transmission between heterosexual couples.

The imbalance in transmission rates seems to result from the physical differences between the sexes.

Scientists believe the proportion of heterosexually transmitted AIDS cases will double in the next decade.

Hazardous ice floe loose in Arctic Ocean deputy commissioner. "We do not function as policy setters. We are administrators," she said.

"We are just following the law," she said. "If it changes we will be more than willing to go along with it."

Kiggins said the board uses the form to determine where students consider their main residence to be.

"College students can't have it both ways," she said. "If they pay taxes or are still dependent on their parents in one location, then they can't consider themselves a resident of an alternate location."

One of four counties

Onondaga County is one of four counties in the state that requires an additional questionnaire for students.

"We register many students on their way to class or in between classes," he said.

"Everybody has time to take 30 seconds to fill out the registration card, but there are not many students who have the time to spend five minutes filling out the extra questionnaire," he said.

Political Science Professor Jeffrey M. Stonecash offered a different possibility.

"It is possible that everybody is scared that students will register in great numbers and it would have a big impact on local elections," he said.

"The county doesn't want students to be an effective political voice," Merli said. Surveys conducted by the Marist Institute for Public Opinion for the period of January 1990 to February 1991, found that college-age students in New York voted almost identically as the general population, Merli said.

Stonecash said that voting was more relaxed several years ago.

He "relentlessly speculates" that the election of Democratic state Senator Nancy Lorraine Hoffman, who many said was put over the top by votes from the university area, may have sparked the stricter policy.

Recent Assembly bill

Recently, in reaction to pressure from NYPIRG, a bill was introduced into the New York Assembly that would amend the state election law by establishing one statewide voting standard, Merli said. The bill is still pending.

Last month, the Board of Elections Democratic commissioner, Dick Romeo, resigned. Ed Szczesniak, Syracuse Democratic Party chairman, was named to take his place.

If confirmed at an Oct. 7 hearing, he has indicated he may abolish the questionnaire, several sources said.

Szczesniak could not be reached for comment.

Political representation is apportioned based on that, yet students aren't being given a political voice," he said.
Elderly ailments addressed

By LAKSHMI SINGH
Staff Writer

People can learn about health issues this fall by attending free Healthtalk sessions, according to Lisa Lambiase, community services representative for Crouse Irving Memorial Hospital.

The health lectures will focus on issues concerning the elderly, Lambiase said.

"Healthtalks is definitely a commitment to the community," she said.

The hospital will sponsor a two-week program scheduled for fall and spring, Lambiase said. The program will touch on cancer, kidney disease and sleeping disorders, she said.

Because the topics are of great concern to much of the public, Lambiase said space is limited, and pre-registration is a good idea.

"Enrollment for Healthtalks is limited," she said, "it has been a popular program for the last few years."

Persons who do not pre-register may still be able to attend the sessions, Lambiase said.

"Occasionally we're booked because the rooms have a limited capacity," she said. "However, in the past we've repeated the presentations to accommodate people who were placed on the waiting list," she said.

To interest everyone, Lambiase said she realizes not all topics will be of interest to everyone.

"Last year we focused on adolescents, said Bob Allen, senior marketing communications associate at the hospital. "We probably did about 10 to 15 presentations on chemical dependency."

Allen said the hospital's anti-drug programs last year reached many students.

"The programs have a good possibility of returning this year," he said.

But if the programs were to return in the spring, Allen said it would be a promotion of health services at CIMH. So far, the hospital has not scheduled any programs for the spring.

CIMH began Healthtalks in 1984, prior to the American Hospital Association recommendation that all hospitals encourage more community service programs, Lambiase said.

Before the Healthtalk sessions began, the hospital founded the Speakers Bureau, a group of health care professionals who gave community talks, Lambiase said.

"If a community organization wants a speaker to discuss a health topic, they could call the hospital and ask for a health care professional," Lambiase said. "It's designed for nonprofit organizations and it's free."

Lambiase said she encourages students to inquire about speakers presented on campus, whether it be in classes or dorm rooms.

Students interested in other health programs such as CPR and baby-sitting training may call if you have questions at CIMH during the weekdays between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m., Lambiase said.

"We probably did about 10 to 15 presentations for the fall and spring. Allen said, "the Healthtalk presentation will be Monday, Oct. 14, in Community Room 208 of the Marley Education Center."

"All other sessions, which run from 3 to 8 p.m., will be held in Community Room 208 of the Marley Education Center."

The topics are of limited, and pre-registration is accepted. If a community organization wants to be held, call Reinaldo A. De Palma at 443-9000.

Safe roads saving lives

If drunk driving offenders do not lose their lives on the highways, they will, at least, lose their licenses.

Onondaga County has proposed a law designed to impound cars owned by DWI offenders after the person's license has been revoked, taking drunk drivers off the road and sitting them down on the curb.

if, as the law is designed to impound cars owned by DWI offenders, they will, by Wednesday night, be taken drunk drivers off the road and sitting them down on the curb.

In order to develop and implement the law, the strict nature and consequences show the county's sincere interest in knowing about the safe conditions on the local roads around Syracuse.

Every year die each day in the United States alone from drunk driving. Public service announcements remind the public every day of the horrors associated with drunk driving. The Daily Orange publishes advertisements discouraging people from drinking and driving, saying "friends don't let friends drive drunk." And awareness groups, like Students Against Drunk Driving, are in existence to increase knowledge about the problem around this campus and across the nation.

It seems inconceivable, when considering the number of national awareness campaigns and the local efforts taking place, that accidents involving drunk drivers still take place. But the fact is that which makes laws like this necessary.

If national campaigns are unsuccessful, then taking the issue to a local level may be the answer. Onondaga County should be applauded for its efforts to end drunk driving, no matter how drastic.

Make peace a lasting condition

To the editor:

I wish to say something in reply to Jeremy Marin's letter that appeared in The Daily Orange on Friday, Sept. 20.

Yes, I do find it necessary to bring to the attention of the public what happened in the Sabra and Shantilla camps nine years ago because of two major reasons.

The first is that the massacres that took place are not part of "old wars" (events that can easily be overlooked). The other massacre, which took place in February of 1982, is so recent that it can still be viewed as a war, nor are they mere "acts of aggression" in terms of the Middle East and who went on which their country is the aggressor. Perhaps the history is not familiar to you, but it is not too much to say that those participating in the peace process, the more lasting the peace will be.

Blame SGA for poor turnout

To the editor:

This letter was written in response to the editorial "Vote or remain silent" that appeared in The Daily Orange on Friday, Sept. 20.

I ran for Assembly for the Student Government Association. As part of this process, I was instructed to turn in a paper with the required 30 signatures last Friday. When I didn't hear from SGA regarding the next step, I naively assumed there would be some sort of attempt to campaign, or at least give the voting public an idea of who was running for office.

However, by Tuesday night, I still had not been contacted, so I intended to speak with the SGA myself on Wednesday morning. I received a call from SG l telling me that elections were to begin again on Thursday due to poor voter turnout. I told the woman on the phone that I hadn't been made aware of the first election, and how could they possibly expect students to vote when they don't know who they're voting for? She asked me to ask someone else.

The editorial requests that students "elect motivated, committed people" and states that "qualified people should be involved in this process." On what information are voters supposed to base their judgment? Is one expected to discern which candidate is qualified by the spelling of their last name on the ballot? That is exactly what students have no say in terms of who is booking security facilities and to book security, that this university causes problems for SGA. Finally, they have no say in the making of the SGA policy.

The role of SU Security is to ensure the safety of students and the student fee. As you stated in your editorial, this is not a problem of student Affairs but rather the main social outlet on campus.

SADD exists on SU campus

To the editor:

A lot of people are not aware of all the organizations on this campus. One of them deserves special attention is SADD: Students Against Drunk Driving.

The Syracuse University chapter was started in the fall of 1988 when Denise Falkner, a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, died in a drunk driving accident. SADD tries to increase the SU community's awareness of the dangers of drinking and driving through various events such as Alcohol Awareness Week.

During Alcohol Awareness Week, Oct. 14-19, SADD will have a table at Schine and offer general information about the organization to interested students. Please stop by the table if you are interested in getting involved, or if you want information.

In addition, our weekly meeting is every Thursday at 7 p.m. in Room 111 of the Hall of Languages.

We need your help to prevent tragedies like Denise's from happening again.

Don't set campus apart

To the editor:

Obviously, there are many misconceptions The Daily Orange had to correct. The Orange County should be applauded for its successful, then taking the issue to a local level may be the answer. Onondaga County should be applauded for its efforts to end drunk driving, no matter how drastic.

This is also in reference to the Sept. 23 editorial. Under the new policy banning non-students from the Underground in the Schine Student Center.

The policy was brought about stemming from an incident that occurred at the Underground Aug. 31 between SU students and Syracuse residents.

The policy was drafted to assure the safety of students attending the party, but with this policy, more problems arise. Unfortunately, because of a few bad apples, Syracuse residents are not allowed to attend the Schine Student Center. This then further alienates and isolates the relationship between SU students and Syracuse residents, a problem that has been going on for years, but ignored by the SU administration.

Sponsor organizations within BPH currently paying a large sum of money to use the facilities and to book security, have no say in the policy. It is to enter the parties. African-American alumni of SU and members of students' families have not been allowed to enter parties since the new policy has been enforced.

 Ни defer to the Senate on any major problem," Serbin said.

He said the senators are selected by graduate students within academic units. If the number of students running for an academic seat exceeds the number of seats available, the interested students can fill a long position in the Senate or join a campus committee, he said.

"We try to involve as many interested GSO students as we can," Serbin said. "Usually, students are satisfied to get involved just by filling a committee."

The GSO receives $34.50 per full-time graduate student each semester, which is collected by the university in April, Rupprecht said. The process of funding organizations is similar to the SGA budget hearings, although many of GSO's contributions are optional gifts given freely to organizations, the group said.

A student accused the police department of age discrimination in the enforcement of the open container law.

He said officers should arrest people drinking at tailgate parties.

"We made 20 open container arrests over the past week and a half," Thompson said.

"We have to be selective in what we want to do," he said. "If officers observe people drinking, they are to arrest them."

Some students said officers are eager to use their power.

"Police officers are rude, overzealous and want to kick some ass," one student said.

"If you weren't breaking the law, you wouldn't be arrested or humiliated," another student said.

"You are being unfair when you say Syracuse police officers are rude or overzealous when you only have two to eight officers in the area," Thompson said.

"We never justify brutality, and we criminally prosecute it," he said.

As deputy chief of the uniform bureau, Thompson said anyone who wears a police uniform indirectly reports to him.

Thompson said students should do their part by being sensible at parties or bars.

"If an officer has to come back two or three times, they are naturally going to get pissed," he said. "They thought it was a trust."

"If you go to bars underage, you take the chance of getting caught and going to jail," he said.

"If you see an officer effecting an arrest, don't get in his face," he said. "There is a lot of adrenaline pumping and the officer is trying to take care of this incident."

Thompson said students can get information once the officer has effected the arrest.

Night vision goggles enlighten those left in dark

By ROB OWEN
Asst. Lifestyle Editor

In the hit film Silence of the Lambs, serial killer Buffalo Bill stalks rookie agent Clarice Starling in the darkened dungeon beneath his home with a distinct advantage: the killer can see in the dark.

But the goggles worn by the murderous madman are not a new technology, according to Dr. Clarence Walters, a research psychologist at the Center for Vision and Electro-optics in Fort Belvoir, Va.

Walters says the Night Vision Lab was originally called the Signal and Warfare Lab and worked on the first type of night vision device, the searchlight. Powerful lights were used during World War II to spot Nazi bombers flying over London.

The lab then became solely a research and development lab, investigating devices that could see things invisible to the human eye, but visible to machines. The machine would then convert what it saw into an image that could be identified by a person looking through a telescope.

"They were shadowy, snowy kinds of pictures," Walters said. "They look a lot like a really noisy television.

A problem with pink

The problem with this initial night vision device was the pink light spectrum, which is similar to radar in that it sends a signal out to receive a signal back. Since this was an analog system, it was eventually developed that could determine the pink light beam's origin, thus giving away the sending machine's location.

The next generation of devices were passive, enabling covert activities to remain hidden until they were hit because our equipment was equipped with devices that could see much farther than their own devices could," Walters said.

Image intensifiers and thermal imagers were also used for various buddy-buddy and buddy-bad runs that were shown on American television.

The Night Vision Lab continues to do basic research to make imagers with greater sensitivity and greater resolution.

Non-defense applications are also being explored. The Drug Enforcement Agency uses night vision devices for drug interdiction, and the Forest Service uses thermal imagers for forest fires as well as locating missing people.

Also, the Department of Transportation is exploring the possibility of using the devices for regulating traffic flow.

But could an average Bill like the killer in Silence of the Lambs easily buy one of these image intensifiers?

"A few years ago they were the Christmas gift," Walters says. "Nieman Marcus sold them for $75,000."

Caution aids exercise enthusiasts

By MARY JO KUSS
Asst. Production Manager

What gets you hot, wet, out of breath and ready to collapse? Warm weather exercise. What else?

Take Emmitt Smith, running back for the Dallas Cowboys. Just a few weeks ago, Smith, overcome with heat exhaustion, didn't come to work out and was found by a solutions fed him through his veins.

Even in the Carrier Dome, a big lineman can lose between three and 10 pounds of water weight in a game — without Slimfast.

But these are extreme examples of the effects of heat on amateur and professional athletes.

The average fitness freak gets tired, dehydrated and hopefully gets smart fast enough not to stop exercising. Otherwise, he might be fed lunch through a vein. Steve Kravez, a personal trainer and fitness consultant for Fine Grove Country Club in Camillus, said people who exercise in the heat are prone to dangers of dehydration, salt-loss, dizziness, cramps and heatstroke.

Vitamin P

Kravez, who brought Nautilus weight-training facilities to Syracuse 17 years ago, is also owner of Syracuse Sports Conditioners.

Keep blood in balance

According to Kravez, a series of stages lead up to the most serious form of heat illness, heatstroke.

Intense exercise in humidity results in profuse sweating, a drop in blood pressure and a loss in electrolytes and salt.

When electrolytes and salt are lost, an imbalance in the blood is created. This gives rise to what most people experience as heat cramps. Next comes the stage most common to workout fanatics, heat exhaustion.

Keep your workouts in humid weather safe, Kravez advises. "You must cool off during the cooler hours of the day, such as the early morning or at night.

But if you have to work out in the heat, drink lots of water, watch your heart rate and pace yourself by cutting down on the intensity of the exercise.

Cut down on internal heat

Cutting down on the intensity of the exercises you do and the amount of internal heat the muscles will generate, Kravez advises. By wearing lightweight, loose clothing that allows air to flow and is skin-to-shirt.

Drinking enough water allows your body to cool itself through sweating.

Fruit juice is good, too, Kravez said, but the sugar in it brings your energy up.

Dogs and owners shirking duties

The outdoors — sun beats on exposed skin, a warm breeze rustles hair, and free time abounds. To many this may be the ideal free time to enjoy a lazy day in a public park. Few pleasures are more relaxing and enjoyable than a free day in the sun, walking barefoot through the finely-mowed grass.

Shirking duties... a steam-treated chlorophyll'.

Imagine the total shock in Sauntering across the field with a care in mind, and suddenly stepping in... a steam-treatment of digested dog doo. Many others work hard and diligently to develop this skill.

Administrations concoct bogus problems and fabricate phonetic solutions. The results obscure issues, but for those involved, saving face.

Dick Clark, alumni donate funds for new DEKE home

BY ALL BENNETT
Staff Writer

TV host Dick Clark recently donated money to Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity to buy a new house, but members and alumni of the fraternity said there are more people who also deserve credit.

The Syracuse University DEKE chapter was dissolved in 1986 after being found guilty of violating SU alcohol policies, according to Carmen Davoli, president of the alumni association for central New York’s DEKE chapters.

The chapter was reinstated in 1990 after being found guilty of violating SU alcohol policies, according to Carmen Davoli, president of the alumni association for central New York’s DEKE chapters. Davoli said Cal Fearon, of Syracuse Suburban Gas, Bill Eberhardt, owner of Phoebe’s Cafe, and Jay Wayson, a lawyer with the Mackenzie Law Firm, were all major organizers in the fraternity’s reinstatement.

However, Davoli said he initiated the project.

Major financial DEKE contributors include Richard Pietrafesa, owner of Learbury Creche; Lewis Bantel, chairman of the board of U.S. Tobacco; Fred Knapp, division leader of Fidelity Investments; and Roy Simmons Sr. and Roy Simmons Jr., SU’s past and present lacrosse coaches.

Much of the media attention, however, has been focused on Clark’s contribution, Davoli said. “I think Dick Clark deserves attention as an alumnus, but there are other alumni who contributed and deserve attention as well,” said one DEKE member.

Davoli refused to comment on either the amount of Clark’s contribution or on the cost of the new house.

“We’re real pleased to be back,” said David Easlic, executive director of DEKE at the national headquarters in Michigan.

“We really want to be a positive part of the community — not just seen as poor little rich boys,” he said.

Both Davoli and Easlic expressed anger at a recent article in The Post Standard which stated SU DEKE members had found “a classy place to drink.”

“The intent of this was not to revive a ‘classy place to drink,’” Davoli said. “The purpose was to revive the first frat at SU.”

“We learned our lesson the hard way,” he said.
The Forestry Club's Woodsman Team participated at the fall festival in Jordan, NY, Saturday, and began a new year with promise. Three teams of woodsmen in the State University College of Environmental Science and Forestry competed in six events, taking more than 10 trophies.

The Woodsman Team has existed since the 1920s and is the oldest club at ESF.

"The main purpose of our club is to make sure the old practices of our profession are not forgotten," said Forestry Club President Mike Hundeke.

The members practice three times a week year-round, concentrating on such lumberjack traditions as logrolling, ax throwing and fire building.

"Members get an appreciation for the forestry and logging profession the way it used to be," Hundeke said.

The six events at Saturday's meet in Jordan were the cross cut, the pulp toss, the horizontal chop, the quarter split, fire building and bow sawing. Most events are team efforts, which provide for a "very close-knit group," as described by several members.

Chopping in competitions

The three states see six meets a year. The three biggest events are the November meet in Ontario, the interstate meet in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and ESF, and the spring intercollegiate championship, which will be held this year at Dartmouth College.

The Woodsman Team provides for more than just competition. Although most members claim they joined because it seemed fun, it also offers an outlet for stress. The traveling and skills acquired were also incentives to join.

"I joined because it interested me to see what the people before us did — before modern equipment," said member Jay Westfall, who grew up on a farm in Otto, NY.

The members do not need to know the skills of the trade before they join. Rather, they learn the techniques on their own by reading, attending seminars and visiting logging operations.

"It is the job of the experienced members to teach the newer members," Hundeke explained.

"The Woodsman Team provides for students interested in the field," Hundeke said. The Forestry Club is not exclusive to students interested in logging, although they must graduate from at least one forestry major.

People interested in joining the Forestry Club are welcome to attend practices Monday and Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon at the Lafayette Road Experiment Station.
The Fisher King and Deceived are two films opening tomorrow, but only one succeeds in its attempts.

While The Fisher King nobly tries to be commercially viable artistic fare, it ultimately fails. Yet Deceived, which panders to the mass audience, achieves its shallow goal.

Director Terry Gilliam (Brazil, The Adventures of Baron Munchausen) returns with The Fisher King, a schizophrenic film that just doesn’t work. Jeff Bridges stars as New York shock disc jockey Jack Lucas, whose on-air antics cause a lonely man to go on a shooting spree. After this tragedy, Bridges goes into seclusion, searching for redemption. He meets Parry (Robin Williams), a former medieval history professor who has more in common with Jack than either one originally realizes.

The first hour of The Fisher King is mired in depression, with Jack being guilt-ridden and Parry being psychotic. "You ever get the feeling that sometimes you’re being punished for your sins?" Jack says to his girlfriend Anne (Mercedes Ruehl) just before he attempts to kill himself.

From depression to bliss
But then Parry the street person saves him and they go cavorting through Central Park in the nude. Their follies are cut short, however, when Parry sees...

the Red Knight, a vision he continues to see, symbolising the grief he feels over his murdered wife.

Yes, this film is rife with symbolism — at least in the first hour.

During the second hour, Gilliam switches styles and The Fisher King becomes an offbeat, multi-layered romantic comedy as Jack and Anne set Parry up with Lydia (Amanda Plummer), the idealized woman of his dreams whom he has been following around New York City for weeks.

Soon Parry and Lydia, two freaks of nature obviously made for one another, are attempting to eat Chinese food, but keep dropping their dumplings.

Bliss is interrupted when the Red Knight returns in the last half hour along with liberal doses of comedy and a sitcom-style ending that is just plain dumb.

It’s too much. Gilliam tries to be conventional, yet he can’t let go of his tendencies to weirdness. Plummer is excellent in her role as Williams’ mousy love interest. An all-too-obscure actress, Plummer’s performance here proves she deserves more work.

The rest of the cast turns in the expected performances. Bridges is sour, Williams is crazy, and Ruhl is a caring sexpot.

It’s too bad The Fisher King becomes such a hodge-podge of artistic, savviness and lowest-common-denominator laughs that don’t amount to anything meaningful.

Gilliam does use some great camera angles and the Grand Central Station waltz scene is beautifully orchestrated, but these few glimpses of genius do not make for an entertaining film.

Deception and deceit

In Deceived, Goldie Hawn may or may not be sleeping with the enemy.

Hawn stars as Adrienne Saunders, whose marriage to Jack (John Heard) is cut short when his car slams into a cliff. But then strange occurrences lead Adrienne to investigate Jack’s past, and what she discovers leads to a suspenseful chase through the Saunders’ maze-like apartment complex.

While Deceived is a sometimes intense thriller, director Damian Harris throws in everything possible to stir the audience into a tizzy.

If it’s not a never-before-seen Saunders pet leaping out of the shadows, it’s a flock of birds flying into the kitchen window to scare the audience into screaming their heads off.

Hawn does a better-than-expected job playing the deceived Saunders. While her recent films have been comedies, Hawn returns to her dramatic roots and turns in a decent performance considering the material she’s been given.

The script for Deceived was written by Mary Agnes Donoghue, who also wrote and directed next week’s cops-film Paradise.

Donoghue manages to frighten the audience, but she doesn’t really give the characters enough background to make the film’s plot entirely believable.

Like last season’s L.A. Law episode that sent Diana Muldaur plunging down an elevator shaft, Deceived also does a public service by warning the audience against this fate. Likewise, the movie demonstrates why plastic bags should be kept away from children — they can be used as murder weapons.

Deceived may not be an intelligent suspense-film on par with Silence of the Lambs, but it’s not as predictable as Sleeping With the Enemy either.

Through sleight of hand, Deceived manages to fall somewhere in between.

When something goes wrong, such as misconduct or alleged abuse at a greek event, those involved seem more incensed that the incident will receive front page news coverage than contrite over the incident itself.

Shifting the blame and passing the buck go hand-in-hand with where people walk the dog. After all, someone else will have to deal with the consequences, far from their origins. The damage is done and there is little or no accountability.

Dogs lack the ability to judge, thus they usually do whatever they want. In time someone will catch up with the dog or its owner, or it may get hit by a car.

On the other hand, people have means and reason to control their lives. Maybe pooper scooper laws should be applied to other realms, or people should act more like the dogs they are. But after evolving to silverware, napkins and private indoor bathrooms, it is doubtful people will turn to lapping slop out of bowls and using fields as bathrooms.

Think of the possibilities: “The Hartz Two-in-One Presidential Pooper Scooper” or “The All-Purpose SU Pooper Scooper.”

Instead of wasting time and money manufacturing human pooper scoopers or shirking responsibility, it would be more efficient for people to confront those dogs face-to-face and walk them in their own backyards, not the public park.

Dimeo stays on the run

By TOM DOWD
Contributing Writer

As center midfielder on the Syracuse University field hockey team, Traci Dimeo is required to play both offense and defense. She distributes the ball to the offense and runs along in transition.

If her off-the-field activities are any indication, midfield is a position she is well-suited for. Dimeo, a senior co-captain, likes to keep just as active off the field as she is on.

She was raised in Bridgeton, N.J., and grew up on the beach at nearby Ocean City, where she picked up most of her hobbies, such as jet-skiing, surfing, and water-skiing. When the beach weather fades, she loves to go snow-skiing as well.

Dimeo, a senior co-captain, is not on the field for fun, though. Being voted as a captain is something she takes very seriously. "It's an honor," she said. "It makes you feel like they believe in you."

Coach Kathleen Parker said the Orangewomen picked a captain who leads by example. "She's just a hard worker," Parker said. "It doesn't matter if it's a practice or a game against Penn State. She's the type of person that, when she says something, people will listen."

Height: 5-foot-4
Age: 22
Hometown: Bridgeton, N.J.
Major: Retailing
Favorite food: Lasagna
Favorite TV show: The Wonder Years
Favorite movie: Silence of the Lambs
Favorite music: "Anything but country."

Best field hockey memory: "When we beat Providence last year because they were ranked above us and nobody thought we would win."

Biggest field hockey disappointment: "When we lost to Villanova last year."

Goals for this year: "Win the Big East Tournament and hopefully make it to the NCAA's."

would be forced to mark me or Eric, or push up and mark the guy coming through with the ball. They had to make a decision. That's when they got caught."

Frank said the Orangemen won because they were the better team, not because his Purple Eagles played a bad game.

"We did our best out there," Frank said. "We had four or five subs. They had a whole other team they could've subbed in. They're the best team we've played this year. We're happy with a 5-0 score."

and 20 players made their first collegiate start.

The young team is now a year older, but the injuries continue. Defensive starters Leroy Axem, Darrick Wiley and Boris Graham are among eight battered Mountaineers, but none of the injuries are serious.

"We've got some momentum right now," Nehlen said. "I almost wish we had a game this week, except for the injuries."

The momentum comes in large part from an impressive performance last week at Maryland. The Mountaineers stomped out 334 yards rushing in their 37-7 victory.

Leading the WVU ground attack was junior Adrian Murrell, who pounded the Terrapin defense for 141 yards on 20 carries.

"That's our game, we're a running team," said Nehlen. "The win was a great victory for us. For the most part, our team stayed focused and did a good job."

Murrell, the Big East's leading rusher, has been the key for the Mountaineers this season. After four contests, Murrell is averaging five yards per carry and 108 yards per game.

Big matchups

Big East members Pittsburgh, Boston College and Virginia Tech will defend the conference name as they visit Big Ten members Minnesota and Penn State and Big 8 member Oklahoma this weekend.

Undefeated Pitt visits the Metrodome Saturday for a nationally-televised contest with Minnesota. The Golden Gophers were pummeled 58-0 by Colorado last weekend.

Boston College, 0-3, will look for its first victory of the season at Penn State Saturday. The No. 10 Nittany Lions, 2-1, are the third consecutive nationally-ranked team on the Eagles' murderous schedule.

According to BC coach Tom Coughlin, the Eagles must stop Penn State's offense from controlling the clock.

"Penn State is playing the way they want to play, with ball control," Coughlin said. "We're going to have to get the ball back if we're going to want to win."

No. 6 Oklahoma, 2-0, hosts Virginia Tech, 1-2.

Hokies coach Frank Beamer has nothing but praise for Oklahoma.

"Oklahoma is a great, great football team," Beamer said.

"Their defense, I think, is their real strength. It is one of the most aggressive defenses I have ever seen. They just fly to the ball and get there in an angry mood."

According to Pittsburgh coach Paul Hackett, more is at stake than simply a win.

"I think some very big issues are at stake here," Hackett said. "We have a lot of pride in the Big East and in Pittsburgh football. Yes, there is a clear-cut clash between Big Ten and Big East football here."

Orange blast Niagara, 5-0

By JEFF ELBAUM
Staff Writer

Usually, when a soccer goalie gives up five goals, he gets pulled out of the game. On Wednesday night in the Carrier Dome, Niagara University goalie Jason Frank gave up five goals and he was named the player of the game. Frank faced 27 shots, as Syracuse goalie Steve Pollnow and Frank gave up five goals, he gets pulled out of the game.

"I thought the keeper played an excellent game," SU coach Dean Foti said. Frank said he felt like he was the recipient of a lunching pad. "Each time we cleared the ball down the field, they were right back down on us," Frank said. "It was like a rubber band snapping back at you. They were coming right down the field, one after another.

The Orangemen's early play was highlighted by near misses. Two minutes into the game, Paul Young connected on an Eric Puis cross from the corner. Frank barely deflected the ball over the net.

At 3:00, Doug Prouty, a freshman making his first SU start, had a goal disallowed due to an offside call.

However, the Orangemen did finally get on the scoreboard at 11:29 on Galich's first goal of the season.

Galich nailed a Puis rebound under the crossbar to give the Orangemen the 1-0 lead.

The Orangemen made the score 2-0 at 34:19 when Puis struck on a pass from Prouty.

Prouty, a walk-on with only one other appearance this season, filled in well for the injured Malcolm Grace. He consistently won the man-to-man battles against the Purple Eagles players.

"I thought he played very well," Foti said. "He's a good player. He's someone who walked on to the team. I made a mistake in not inviting him to preseason. He should have been here."

The Orangemen's next two goals, which were almost identical, occurred only 1:44 apart.

A university's 100th anniversary of college football is meant to be a time of celebration.

So when West Virginia began its second century being mauled by Pittsburgh 34-3 at home, Mountaineer fans thought they had reason to end the party before it started.

But since the opening day disappointment, the squad has turned the season around. WVU heads into an open weekend with a 3-1 record, and more importantly, momentum.

According to head coach Don Nehlen, the Mountaineers have shaken off the loss to the Panthers.

"In our Pittsburgh game, the only people down on us after that game were the media," Nehlen said. "Our guys have tried to get better every week and I think they have."
Children's advocate blasts nation's educational system

By STEVE DALY
Staff Writer

Government officials need to make significant changes in the educational system, a doctor and children's advocate has said.

Speaking in front of the Thursday Morning Roundtable at University College, Dr. Leo Jivoff addressed the bleak future of children and the educational system.

"Every year I hear some official saying we are turning the corner or next year will be better," he said. "But we never seem to get there. It just gets worse around every corner."

Too much government bureaucracy and poor planning are responsible for the current educational system's failure, Jivoff said.

"Rooting out the bureaucracy is a fundamental necessity. Everybody is so tied up dealing with today's problems that no one is preparing for the future." (Snip)

Jivoff said he advocates a state cabinet department devoted to children's issues.

He also founded Syracuse's first hospice, a place for the terminally ill. TMR is a weekly community discussion group. Although it is not open to the public, it may be heard on WCNY-FM Sundays at 4 p.m. and may be seen on WSYT-TV Saturdays at midnight.

Meeting performance merit goals will allow utility companies to increase their utility bill, "Rates are based on cost but also based on various types of incentive merits." The Criteria

"Utility companies have certain performance indicators that are negotiated between the utility and the Public Service Commission," he said. If the utilities achieve those merits they receive extra money from the customers, he said. It is similar to performance bonuses.

He said bills also go up depending on how cold the winter is. "If the year before was a warmer one, we may not have a rate increase," he said. See NIMO Page A4

BGSA looks to form bond between SU, community

By MARK A. BROUSSEAU
Asst. News Editor

Although the Black Graduate Student Association is striving for recognition on campus, the group is active in the community and on campus.

The BGSA gives academic, professional and social support by maintaining ties with the Syracuse community and with campus organizations, BGSA President Bill Durant said.

The 50-member group is comprised of black graduate students, international students and students from SUNY Upstate Medical Center.

He said one of the group's activities is working with members of the Hilltop Housing Project on Fayette Street on Saturday afternoons.

"We spend time with kids and act as role models, giving them things to do," he said.

Durant said the BGSA organizes sporting events and takes the kids to campus to get them interested in college.

"They do not have an opportunity to realistically think they can attend a school like SU," he said.

Working with undergraduates

Durant said the BGSA sponsors panel discussions for undergraduates, encouraging them to attend graduate school.

"We want undergraduates to use us as a resource," he said.

"We try to attract undergraduates to apply and enroll in graduate schools," Durant said.

The main issue is making the general population aware of scholarships for graduate school, he said.

"We want to find the profile of black undergraduate students and what kind of assistance they need," he said.

"We measure our success rate in terms of the amount of accepted students that go here," he said. See BGSA Page A6

Niagara Mohawk among 50 most expensive electric utilities

By JACK CHAN
Staff Writer

The Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation is reported to be among the 50 most expensive electric utilities in the country this year, due primarily to an approved three-year rate increase, according to Bill Romano, communications administrator.

The approved plan from the Public Service Commission will help NIMO increase its financial stability after it suffered a 2 1/2-year-long earnings warning, according to a Thomson Financial Network report.

Residential customers who have already experienced a rate increase this year, Romano said. "There may be another rate increase in July, he added. "The rate increase will strengthen the utility company, in return, it will benefit the customers, Romano said."

"Before customers get a return if the utility is healthy financially," he said. "It pays for the utility customer to have a healthy utility." See NIMO Page A4

Troops in Soviet Georgia attack dissidents

Assailants attacked armed opponents of Zviad Gamsakhurdia, the president of Soviet Republic of Georgia, in the embattled southern republic yesterday, opposition leaders said.

Tengiz Kitovani, commander of the rebel national guardsmen who have broken with the president, said at least two of the attackers were wounded and may have died.

The Tass news agency, however, reported four Interior Ministry troops died and "many" were wounded.

The Georgian government had no comment on the reported attack, and the Soviet Interior Ministry in Georgia reported no incidents involving its forces overnight.

U.N. votes for arms embargo on Yugoslavia

The United States and 14 other countries on the United Nations Security Council Wednesday broadened a European arms embargo on warring Yugoslavia to a worldwide action.

The United States blamed Serbia and the often-allied Yugoslav military for much of the bloodshed.

The vote did not specify provisions for enforcing the embargo. There was no call to dispatch a U.N. force to halt the fighting, which has claimed at least 500 lives since Croatia and Slovenia declared independence in June.

Canada, Australia and other U.N. members have said they would support sending U.N. troops on grounds that the fighting threatens international peace.

The council, giving its full support to European Community peace efforts, called on Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to consult with the Yugoslav government and parties on how the United Nations can help.

Wage gap narrows between the sexes

The wage gap between males and females has narrowed to its lowest point in history, the Labor Department recently reported.

Women's hourly wages now total 78 percent of men's, and average weekly earnings 76 percent.

Similar wages between the sexes can be attributed to a downturn in men's wages.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, men's median annual earnings were three percent lower in 1989 than in 1988. Women's earnings during the same period increased 10 percent.

"There's been a change in the attitude of employers," said Barbara Bergmann, an American University professor who specializes in women's wages. "The barriers are breaking down."

A representative from the National Organization for Women said despite the rise in women's hourly and weekly wages, their annual earnings have remained relatively lower because women tend to work fewer hours over a year's time.

Committee puts final touches on crime bill

The House Crime Committee is completing an anti-crime bill that would ban some assault-style weapons and expand the federal death penalty.

The plan panels to debate death penalty issues before completing action on the $1.1 billion package, which contains several important differences from the version the Senate passed in July.

The bill is expected to expand the federal death penalty to cover 46 federal crimes. The Senate, which is supported by President Bush and opposed by civil libertarians, allows executions without requiring prosecutors to prove that defendant committed an act that killed his victims.

The House bill would ban 13 types of assault-style weapons.

Farmer claims Army helicopter scared cows

A Belfort farmer said repeated flyovers over his farm by a low-flying Army helicopter caused his cows to bewilder and reduce their milk production.

Told Lynda said the helicopter flew over his farm on Aug. 22 and again last week only 50 to 60 feet above the ground.

He said his 50-cow herd ran for cover. The helicopter was searching for marijuana.

Rabbi sues Cardinal over remarks

Weiss said Glemp told a group of Jewish protesters near Auschwitz in Poland that Jews wanted to kill nuns and destroy a convent near the former Nazi death camp.

"Cardinal Glemp knew it was a lie," said Alan Dershowitz, Weiss' lawyer, whose clients also include Claus von Bulow and Leon Leonidowsky. "Clearly, he was fanning the flames of anti-Semitism," Dershowitz said.

Glemp was served a summons notifying him of the suit Wednesday from a process server acting for Weiss. He is on a tour of more than a dozen cities over his papal visit.

Study probes stress related to caregiving

Two Syracuse University faculty members are examining determinants of good mental and physical health among spouse caregivers. Husbands and wives caring for a spouse with Alzheimer's disease or other dementing illnesses are being studied for the project.

Karen Hooker, assistant professor of psychology, and Deborah Monahan, assistant professor of social work, are examining the stress and strain of caregivers and how some deal with the problem better than others.

"Numerous studies have shown that caring for a spouse who suffers from dementia or memory loss, such as that accompanying Alzheimer's disease, is viewed as helpless and may affect the health of the caregiver," Hooker said. "However, few studies have directly compared caregivers of patients with different disease processes," she said.

Hooker said the disease symptoms are quite different. "Alzheimer's disease patients show primarily cognitive impairments, whereas Parkinson's disease patients show primarily physical impairments," she said.

The study is currently funded by the National Institute of Mental Health. Participation in the project involves a brief interview which can be done in the person's home or at the university. Participants will be reimbursed $25 for their time.

For more information contact Karen Hooker at 443-5737.

Absolut Chicago

—It'll be as brisk as the Windy City in Syracuse today. Just be thankful we're not in Orlando where 55 mph winds hit Disneyworld. Expect cloudy periods with a possibility of showers. Winds will be from the west at around 20 mph, but will pick up this evening with a chill factor back and could drop us to as low as 20.

Saturday

We'll have a partly cloudy day with very cool temperatures. Lows will be in the 30s and there's a 30 percent chance of showers. Good thing the football game is at the Superdome.

Sunday

The weekend will brighten up Sunday, with sunny periods and highs around 55. We'll be back to the old grind Monday with expected showers and temperatures in the upper 40s.

Recyclable notebooks receive mixed response

By LAKSHMI SINGH
Staff Writer

Using recycled paper for new notebooks may be a trend in the future, but for local bookstores the current trend seems to be paying off.

Recyclable notebooks are more popular on campus this year than last, and are expected to gain more popularity in the near future, according to Syracuse University Bookstore manager Mareah Porter.

The environmentally-friendly notebooks sold more this fall than non-recyclable notebooks even though they cost more, Porter said.

“They were the first ones to sell out,” Porter said. “We’re selling them very fast, and they’re not just the environmentally-conscious students on campus.”

“We’ve gradually increased quantities and selections to recyclable books and pads to meet the demand,” Porter said. “Price has not been much of a consideration...”

At the Orange Student Bookstore in Marshall Square Mall, however, recyclable notebook sales have not been high, said Steve Stevens, general merchandising manager of the store.

Stevens said that even though this year’s sales were better than last year, the bookstores still did not sell as quickly as the non-recyclable notebooks.

Both the University Bookstore and Orange Student Bookstore sell Ampad and Denison recyclable single-subject and writing pad notebooks.

“The Ampad notebook pads that sell at 89 cents sold just as quickly as the Denison standard notebook pads (which also cost 89 cents),” Stevens said.

But, non-recyclable or “standard” single-subject notebooks, retailed at 99 cents, are being sold much more quickly than the recyclable notebooks, retailed at $1.99.

While the University Bookstore had done equally as well on sales of both kinds of notebooks, the Orange Student Bookstore’s standard notebooks were more popular than the recyclable ones.

Iraq, U.N. struggle for arms documents

United Nations inspectors reported Monday that they had found documents detailing Saddam Hussein’s clandestine nuclear weapons program. Baghdad seized the documents after a 12-hour standoff in which the inspectors were not allowed to leave the site while they surrounded the material.

A spokesman for the International Atomic Energy Agency confirmed that the inspectors were allowed to leave the site with papers and equipment, in violation of the terms of the U.N. cease-fire agreement. Th¬ e U.N. Commission on Iraqi Disarmament has accepted the terms and said U.N. inspectors would be allowed to leave the site with papers and equipment.

On June 28, a U.N. team seeking entry to an Iraqi military base was turned back when Iraqi soldiers fired their weapons into the air. The soldiers tried to prevent the team from photographing trucks loaded with equipment leaving the site.

The United Nations condemned Iraq’s actions and Baghdad said they would grant the inspectors the access they needed.

Uncovered 48 sites

So far U.S. intelligence has uncovered 48 sites where Iraq has stored nuclear parts. Speaking on “The McLaughlin Group,” Clarence Page, of The Chicago Tribune, said the current situation in Iraq “is a reminder that we haven’t gotten the big prize, which is Saddam Hussein himself.” He is still there and capable of mischief.

Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., noted the Iraqi leader has consistently broken the U.N. cease-fire agreement. Gore said although the United Nations told Saddam not to fly his helicopters against the Kurds, “we explicitly allowed him to do that and did not watch and while the Kurds were being slaughtered. The same with the Shiites in the south.”

Speaking on CNN’s “NewsRoom Saturday,” Gore said after initiating the rebellion of the Kurds, Washington should have followed through with actual support. Gore asserted, because “Saudi Arabia and Syria believed that the best way to keep Iraq in the war was with a brutal and repressive regime there... that policy just had to be changed to get rid of Saddam and his regime.”

Gore maintains that U.S. policy should support the people in Iraq who want self-determination...not this cynical policy of propping up Saddam. That’s why he’s slow-walking us now and we’ll continue to have this trouble until we change our basic policy.”

Detention

On Wednesday, the U.N. team was once again detained by Iraqi soldiers, this time in the parking lot of a Baghdad office building. The inspectors were surrounded by the soldiers as they tried to leave the site with papers and video¬ taping equipment.

David Kay, leader of the U.N. team, said the documents provide information on Iraqi weapons programs and “information on procure¬ ment of equipment and resources for the purposes of the all round disarming facilities, that up until now have claimed no relationship to3 Saddam Hussein’s nuclear program, directly to that program.”

Iraq’s Ambassador to the United Na¬ tions, Abdul Amir Al-Ahmadik, said “As far as the inspectors are concerned, they are helped and given access to everything as long as they behave in accordance to the resolutions of the Security Council... if they go after anything which is illegal or endangers the life of Iraqi scientists, as they have done today... we believe this is quite improper.”

Nuclear proliferation expert Gary Mil¬ hollin concludes that the team has apparently found “proof that Iraq is in the process of designing a nuclear war¬ head and also... the documents showing the supplier network.”

Iraq’s Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz has called David Kay a CIA agent.

Aziz said, “This is an espionage matter. This has nothing to do with U.N. business, it is CIA business and this man (David Kay) wants to collect information about the people who work in this project, not for purposes of the U.N., but for his own personal benefit.”

Iraq has offered a proposal to the United Nations which it hopes will end the sit¬ in nuclear weapons program. Iraq and the inspection team. On Wednesday afternoon CNN reported that a diplomatic mission of the Iraqi government will refuse to acknowledge any material that has not been cata¬ loged. Baghdad is also refusing to permit the actions of the inspectors and complaining that too many of them are from the United States.

The incident in the Baghdad parking lot is the most recent in a series of episodes that has confronted the United Nations in its effort to deny Saddam Hussein access to biological and nuclear weapons. The New York Times has noted that the existing tension does not represent a “permanent peace but a continuation of a tenuous truce.”
It remains the least expensive of the seven New York-based electric utilities in the recent monthly utility rate comparison by the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissions (NARUC).

Romano pointed out that this month's bill increase was attributed to the increased cost of fuel.

A NiMo report said the average bill per customer in August was $48.70 with $10.14 directly attributed to fuel costs. The average bill for September increased to $49.83.

Compared to those increases, Romano said that the study began, bill figures rose 6.6 percent — about $7.37. "Rates are based on a lot of things," he said. "You take all your costs to run the business and you put a baseline. That baseline is going to be about the same for all the utilities."

"What differs one utility from another is that a great deal to do with what type of fuel it uses," Romano said.

NiMo uses what he called a good fuel mix of natural gas, coal, hydropower, and oil.

Long Island Lighting or Con Edison have a high charge added to their baseline cost because they have to buy large quantities of oil to make their electricity, he said.

NiMo does not use as much oil; therefore, its electricity is cheaper, Romano said.

NARUC reports the yearly rates of all the utilities. NiMo may be in the top 50 most expensive utilities in the nation. But said, "Like any other economic picture, it's a snapshot in time."

However, it depends when that snapshot is taken.

"If Niagara Mohawk gets rated during this window when they were looking at all the numbers and Con Edison gets a rate increase, it seems as if all the other utilities are below Niagara's," he said.

Getting up in two months

"If you waited two months and took that picture again, maybe other utilities get their rates up," he said. If the picture is taken over a progression of years, he said, "It tends to average out.

NiMo serves most of upstate New York from Albany to Buffalo.

Spending or saving?

Downsizing seems to be contagious in Syracuse.

County Executive Nicholas Pirro, who is up for election in November, is proposing an increase in spending of 5.7 percent in the next year, claiming money saved after 150 county workers retire in the next five years will finance the set. The county legislature continues to fight the request.

While it is true the proposal would save the county millions of dollars, Pirro’s proposed spending venture would cost Onondaga $674.8 million. This amount seems exorbitant considering the cuts would effect committees like the Water Quality Management Agency and Emergency Service, both of which are critical to residents and students alike.

Mr. Pirro must rethink his proposed spending plan. If consolidation and layoffs are the only answers Pirro can find to the county’s bureaucratic woes, he is not looking hard enough.

SU priorities mixed up

About two weeks ago, I printed a column about the rigmarole of the Archbold free-weight gymnasium.

Well ladies and gentlemen, now I’ve seen it all. I just know who is this school here for anyone? Now before you call me a troublemaker, I want you to really think about this. I want you to think about who pays the tuition and who is lowest on the totem pole of respect. I want you to think about the fact that the faculty gets a high tech-styled, brand new looking, super overweight room while I am still trying to wake up early enough to work out in the steel factory, where we call a gym. The teachers are paid to teach us, not box us. A high caliber gym like the one they have really isn’t necessary. If you really believe that the budget is in line, take a look on the lower level of the gym.

And while you’re checking out that, think about all of the different construction companies that are getting rich off of this school. Never mind the fact that many students won’t even be here next year because of high tuition.

That really isn’t important, as long as we keep building, I thought about this.

I thought about how I walked into Brockway on the second floor, I was coming to eat with the RAs. I asked myself, why the ropes? I guess I’m just one of the few people at SU that don’t want his autograph. Think about it.

Think about how all the honors students got to sit Mr. Shaw and what he said. I was just like, oh no. I swear, if you want to focus on the problems of SU, the honors students are the wrong people to talk to. Chances are, if you have a 3.8 GPA, you’re living in the biblical city of Hebron only a stone’s throw away.

I was coming to eat with the RAs. I asked myself, why the ropes? I guess I’m just one of the few people at SU that don’t want his autograph. Think about it.

The biggest crime this woman committed was exorbitant drinking and underage drinking. I fully agree that this was not a smart idea, that it should have no influence whether or not she is ever in a position of responsibility but a man does not? Let’s not perpetuate this double standard.

"We have been successful in attracting black graduate students," he said.

"The majority are in the law program," he said. "Now we want to focus on specialized graduate programs such as English and history." BGSA is working in conjunction with the Black Law School Association to sponsor a voter registration drive at the Hilltop Housing Project, he said.

"We are doing a mentoring program with the kids in the housing project to get them interested in professional careers," he said.

BGSA will hold a Black Expo on campus to form cohesion between students and the community, he said. He said students will get to sample products from local black businesses.

The Graduate Student Organization has allocated about $4,000 to the association for this academic year, he said.

Durant said he wants to emphasize that the BGSA is an on-campus organization and there are not many major graduate student organizations on campus.

Durant said anyone interested in joining BGSA can call 832-0524, or drop a note in the BGSA mailbox in the GSO office.

The BGSA meets every other week, alternating between Thursdays at 4 p.m. and Wednesdays at 4:30 p.m. in the Schine Student Center Room 128.

The next BGSA meeting will be Oct. 3.
When William Wycherley's The Country Wife opens tonight at Syracuse Stage, audiences might be surprised at what they see, according to director Julianne Boyd.

Boyd, whose credits include extensive work on and off Broadway, said that while the play was written more than 300 years ago, "it isn't a museum piece. "It really speaks to the people of today," Boyd said. "And it does it in a funny, sexy way."

Written in 1675 after England's brief experience with Puritanism, Wycherley wrote The Country Wife, part of this week's Art Struck activities, as a satire of the degenerate society under Charles II that followed.

When asked to give a synopsis, Boyd laughed and described it as "love and sex in Restoration England."

The central plot revolves around Mr. Horner, who spreads the rumor that he is impotent upon moving into town. As a result, the husbands have no qualms about leaving him to "watch over" their wives. One of the couples is pictured here, as Mr. Pinchwife shares a tender moment with his wife, Margery (Susan Wands), the title character.

Various romantic and sexual complications ensue.

Six Syracuse University students have roles in The Country Wife. Student Stephanie Seeley plays Dainty Fidget, a leading role. All the SU performers received high marks from Boyd, who said Seeley was "wonderful" in her demanding role.

Boyd also praised the emphasis within the SU Drama Department on the classics, something she feels many university programs neglect. "All too often, students will come from some of the top schools without being trained in classical theater," said Boyd, who has a doctorate in theater history and has served as an adjunct professor at New York University since 1987.

The Country Wife will run through October 20 at Syracuse Stage, 820 E. Genesee St. For more information, call the box office at 443-3275.

Art festival begins today

By KELLY HARTLEY Contributing Writer

Syracuseans know Orangeemen, basketball's Ernie Davis and the Carrier Dome.

But Frank Malfitano, executive director of the Landmark Theatre, maintains: "The city that lives by the jump shot, dies by the jump shot."

Three years ago, Malfitano, along with Rose Bernthal, Jim Clark and Randy Russell, founded Art Struck, an annual festival highlighting the arts in Greater Syracuse.

According to Bernthal, president of the Art Struck Board of Directors, an incredible amount of cultural opportunities exist for local residents and out-of-towners to enjoy.

"It seemed only natural that we should have an arts festival," she said.

The 1991 celebration begins today and continues through Sunday. Oct. 6. An estimated 150 events will be held through-out the 10-day period.

On campus, a faculty exhibition will be on display at the Lowe Art Gallery, and "Searching For The Good Light," photographs from Asia by Ed Graulo, will be open to the public daily in the Robert B. Menschel Photography Gallery, located in the Schine Student Center.

Concert in the Dome: Santana will be performing with Rod Stewart at the Dome on Saturday. Showtime is 7:30 p.m.

Also helping to kick-off Art Struck, Syracuse Stage will open its fall season tonight at 8:30 with William Wycherley's Restoration comedy, The Country Wife.

Moving from the 18th to the 20th century, Famous Artists Limited, founded nearly a half century ago to bring Broadway performances to Syracuse, will present A Chorus Line Oct. 1 to 5 at 8 p.m. in the Civic Center.

Despite the variety of Art Struck offerings, the Walk of Stars induction ceremony promises to be the grand finale, according to creator Malfitano.

Modeled after Hollywood's Walk of Fame, Syracuse's Walk of Stars will honor notable Syracuseans in an attempt to bring pride and distinction to the entire community.

Celebrities being recognized include Grace Jones, Bob Goldthwait and The Shubert Brothers. The ceremony will take place Oct. 6 at 5 p.m. The public is welcome.

More information on Art Struck events can be obtained by calling the Downtown Committee at 422-8284.

Said Malfitano: "We want to give the stars of Syracuse an opportunity to shine."

Orange take another shot at ranked team

By KENT FISCHER
Asst. Sports Editor

According to Syracuse University middle blocker Aimee Mask, the women's volleyball team is hoping two games against winless opponents will bring them to .500, which is respectable.

The Orangewomen, 9-2, will have their third and fourth shots of the season at such a team this weekend. SU hosts the University of Rhode Island, York University and Akron University at the Women's Building.

Last weekend, SU was defeated by No. 14 Ohio State 3-0 and highly regarded Loyola-Marymount 3-1.

Coach Dan Schulte said that although Rhode Island is not the calibre of team Syracuse faced last week, the Lady Rams will, however, pose a tough challenge for the Orangewomen.

"Rhode Island is a very good, scrappy team," Schulte said. "They've beaten Iowa State and Western Michigan already this year. We struggled with them last year. They are very persistent and will not be an easy match."

SU gained its first win against the Lady Rams last year with a 3-1 win in November. SU was 0-12 against RPI before that meeting.

Although SU's Saturday morning game against York (Ontario) University is billed as an exhibition match, a few of the Orangewomen are hoping to put the Yeowomen away early.

"A bunch of my friends play for them and are from York," Mask, who hails from Mississauga, Ontario, said. "We've lost recruits to them and the Canadians on our team really want to win."

Schulte said the match with York will be an opportunity for him to get a look at a few of the younger Orangewomen.

"Hopefully we'll win the first two games so we can get more players some experience in the third game," Schulte said.

York finished ranked No. 3 in Canada last year and should move up to No. 1 or 2 this season, according to Schulte.

Syracuse will also play Akron University at 7 p.m. Saturday.

SU at Long Island

The Syracuse University women's field hockey team is hoping two games against winless opponents will bring them a little credibility.

The Orangewomen, 1-3, will head to Long Island for a weekend matchup with C.W. Post, 0-3-2, and Hofstra University, 0-4-1.

"These two games are very important," senior Kelly Larkin said. "I think we're ready. We haven't had a game in two weeks. We have to win these two games to bring us to .500, which is respectable."

SU shut out both Hofstra and C.W. Post. The Orangewomen toppled the Pioneers 6-0, and defeated the Flying Dutch 3-0.

Coach Kathleen Parker said that although Rhode Island is not the calibre of team Syracuse faced last week, the Lady Rams will, however, pose a tough challenge for the Orangewomen.

"Rhode Island is a very good, scrappy team," Schulte said. "They've beaten Iowa State and Western Michigan already this year. We struggled with them last year. They are very persistent and will not be an easy match."

Random thoughts from the Syracuse win over Florida at the Carrier Dome on Saturday:

1) Keith Smart and Indiana University beat SU for the 1987 Hoop title. The 1989-90 team had its season end in a Sugar Bowl kiss. In the 1990 NCAA's, the basketball team lost to Minnesota as Derrick Coleman went on firing basketball at opposing players.

The Cajun Jim came north last year. As terrible Tulane tripped Mac and the kids at the Dome.

Not this year — Syracuse (3-0) returns to the bayou on a roll, while the Green Wave (0-4) hit the season saddened Tulane struck rock bottom last week with a home loss to Rice.

We'll be in the press box wondering where to get some really red gumbo after the ballgame.

2) Not to jump on the Coach Calm bandwagon, but the Syracuse inanity game plan was well executed. Not only did the staff take worthwhile gambles, it rotated players perfectly: Ismail, Wollin, Dongen, Lee and Womack fit subs. I still claim he had inside information.

3) As Qadry Ismail so gleefully pointed out to me, all of the Race for the Case entrants selected Florida to cover the spread. I was happily (and completely) surprised.

Laimbeer is right but still an idiot

Some random thoughts jotted down on the way to Bourbon Street.

• I'm a New Orleans guy. The rain these words bring is real: Hooray for Big Easy.

• Laimbeer, the biggest crybaby, cheap-shot artist, overrated, no good, sucker-punching, O.J.'s-era NBA, finally did something noble. He stuck up for the little guy.

KENT FISCHER

• The NBA, a game that's big in the U.S., is big in China too.

• Legal action to force the selection committee to hold open tryouts.

• He's right. It's America's team, and we citizens should all be allowed to try.

• At least we should be able to try.

• I'm right behind you Bill, I just have to say it.

• It's showtime for the Falcons.

• That's right, my second favorite collegiate football team, the Air Force Falcons, plays at Brigham Young University tomorrow.

• It'll be Perez against Detmer. The undefeated against the defeated. Superstar quarterback duels armed with bazookas on stage.

• No contest: Falcons 21, Cougars 10.

• Why aren't the Red Sox folding?

The last time this happened they went ahead and won the whole damn thing. Somebody stop them.

• What's this I hear about a Jimmy Connors-Monica Seles tennis match?

The context of the event have laid out a million dollars in cash to the winner. They've also amended the rules: Connors would get only one service and Monica would get to play on any and all other shots.

• What would that prove? I say put them on the courts in Throndon Park at dawn. Give them two hours on a chilly, windy September evening. Put the money in a basket in plain sight on the sidelines.

• The winner must win the match, grab the money, and make it out of the park alive. I'd pay to see that.

• Connors is the biggest grunter on the men's tour. Select double fist has been heard and analyzed by millions. Get the game. Let's just listen to them grunt. What does a trifle-grunt sound like? I'd pay to hear it.

• Since ABC picked up the rights to televise the US-Florida State game next weekend, the Seminoles will be on national TV five times this season.

• BYU on Aug. 29, Michigan on Sept. 28, SU on Oct. 5, Miami on Nov. 16 and Florida on Nov. 30. Talk about hype.

• The question now is: does SU want to face an angry Seminoles team after losing a lot in the regular season?

• SU is coming off a second place in the nation. TV Five times this season. BYU, SU, Miami and Florida are all in the game.

• The game with SU could be a 'must-win' for the Orangemen.

• Last season, the defense lost leads late in the game, the offense suffered from inconsistent play, and the Seminoles were able to come away with a victory.

• This year, the Orangemen have been much more aggressive and have held opposing defenses to 35 points per game. The team is much stronger this year, and they are coming off a victory against a tough Villanova team.

• The Orangemen are lead in scoring and have a strong defense. They are well prepared for the game against the Seminoles.

• The game will be a great opportunity for the Orangemen to show their potential and prove themselves against a tough opponent.

• Big East foe Villanova a 'must win' for Orange

By JEFF ELBAUM

In Big East soccer play, the top four teams make it to the tournament at the end of the regular season.

• This is why Syracuse University head coach Dean Foti said Saturday's game at Coney Field against Villanova at 2 p.m. would be considered a must-win for the Orangemen, 4-3-1 in the Big East.

• "This is an important game," Foti said. "It's a league game and it's a home game. It's definitely a game we need to win. Anything less than that is not good.

• Villanova head coach Larry Sullivan wasn't as optimistic as Foti. In fact, Sullivan said the Wildcats, 4-2-1, were suffering from inconsistent play this season.

• "We have individuals taking turns," Sullivan said. "We're not getting two good games in a row from one guy.

• Villanova's top scorer is Joe Roy with five goals and an assist. Rich Muna (3 goals, 2 assists) and Scott Alimetti (1, 4) are also important parts of the Wildcat offense.

• For Foti, the game with Villanova could be a 'must win' if the Orangemen are to advance to the Big East tournament.

• The Orangemen are currently in fourth place in the Big East standings with 11 points, while Villanova is in second place with 14 points.

• A win for SU would keep them in the playoff conversation, while a loss would likely end their hopes of making the tournament.

• SU expects tough weekend at Princeton

By DAVE HAIGHT

The Syracuse University women's tennis team will be playing in the Eastern Collegiate Tennis Tournament this weekend.

• This is the first time in more than four years that the Orangemen women's tennis team will be participating in a collegiate tournament.

• "This is the first year in a while that our schedule has been successful," Foti said. "This is a great opportunity to play in one of these tournaments."

• Tri-captain Shari Liberto said the Orangemen are ready to play and have the necessary attributes.

• The game will be a great opportunity for the Orangemen to show their potential and prove themselves against a tough opponent.

• SU is off to a strong start this season and will be looking to build on their successful performance.

• SU expects tough competition at Princeton and will need to play their best to advance to the next round.

• SU is coming off a 3-0 victory over Notre Dame and is ready to face the challenges ahead.

• The Orangemen will be looking to prove themselves and show that they are a strong team in the Big East conference.
The projected 20 percent drop in enrollment will necessitate heavy reductions in most Syracuse University support units and academic auxiliaries, the Chancellor's Ad Hoc Advisory Group reports.

The advisory group's second report, released today, targets cuts from the academic support units' and academic auxiliaries' $77.3 million 1991-92 budgets — with $42.2 million of that reducible. The reducible bases weigh revenue and grant income with fixed expenses for the units.

The academic support services and auxiliaries' budgets include the University College, Summer Sessions, the graduate and research programs, the Division of Information Systems and Computing as well as the University Art Collection and the Honors Program.

On Sept. 11, Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw outlined the three-phase plan to slash $28 million from the university's budget over the next four years.

An overall national drop in high-school-age students will force the university — along with most other public and private schools and colleges — to downsize. SU expects its undergraduate population to drop to 9,600 students by 1995.

Shaw said The Daily Orange on Sept. 11 that the university "will undergo a grieving period."

"We must focus our resources on our highest-priority activities," he said.

Library and computer services, and research programs which "enhance the professional development and research" and are "vital to the academic mission of Syracuse University" may be targets of further cuts in staffs, purchasing and overall budgets, the report states. They may also be targets for consolidation.

One area that the university board, financial aid, "should be held harmless," the committee states. The $23 million — of which $17.4 million is allocated to the athletic scholarships — distributed by Enrollment Management should be maintained so SU remains attractive to potential students.

Due to the specific and delicate nature of future cuts, Shaw said, all students, faculty and administrators will have opportunities to provide input before official cuts are determined.

The University Senate Agenda Committee has appointed an Ad Hoc Coordinating Committee to facilitate Senate discussion of "restructuring," today's report states.

Various Senate committees will hold three open forums at 4:15 p.m. on Oct. 14 in Maxwell Auditorium, Oct. 21 in Grant Auditorium and Oct. 23 in Maxwell Auditorium.

"The concerns of students, faculty and staff will be addressed at each forum," the report states.

The Senate will receive committee reports at its Nov. 13 meeting. A special meeting will be scheduled for Nov. 20, if it is needed.

"Two activists urged Americans to become more active in the human rights movement Thursday night in Hendricks Chapel.

John Healey, the executive director for Amnesty International, who was named "Mr. Human Rights" by U.S. News and World Report three weeks ago, discussed his organization's 30-year fight for human rights.

"It's a bit embarrassing, flattering," he said. "However, this is a people's movement and I'm one of the people."

"There's an inherent obligation to humanity to improve in your lifetime," Healey said.

He said Americans should do something.

"If the Constitution and our founding fathers do so well, wouldn't we want it for the rest of the world?" he said.

"I think we need to look as Americans at what we do," he said.

Healey, addressing the idea that one person cannot make a difference, said, "It is the moral imperative of a courageous heart, that doesn't always know what their doing."

Sociologist delivers speech on urban change

By TOM SEELEY
Staff Writer

The situation in today's ghettos screams for attention, said Elijah Anderson, an urban sociologist from the University of Pennsylvania.

Anderson spoke to about 75 students and faculty at the School of Management Thursday on his book Streetwise.

He said many conservatives suggest that the United States needs to install police in its cities.

"We need to pull ourselves up by our bootstraps," Anderson said. "But they don't understand that many in this country's urban centers no longer possess these bootstraps."

The book completed a 10-year ethnographic study of cultural life on big city streets.

As the economy is changing, people in the ghettos are not capable of adapting or changing because the government is cutting the funds that would help people adapt, he said.

"This is an urgent time," he said.

"Many people, especially young men, are at risk of dying in the ghettos."

With the new U.S. economy, the only jobs available to young men entering the job market are low-paying part-time service jobs with no benefits, Anderson said.

Drug selling entrepreneurs young men engage in illegal activities by selling drugs and see themselves on the preferred nation list.

"Amnesty reported that hundreds of thousands are being detained and tortured, if not millions," he said.

"We've given them a green light," he said.

"We will let off those damn colonels in Chile while those people are tortured for the rest of their lives," Healey said.

Most human activists face massive odds in their lives, he said. Advancements in human rights are felt on the backs of those who suffered the most, he added.

Healey also addressed what it takes to be an Amnesty member.

"Whoever the governments hate we love," he said. "All of that prejudice must be overcome to join a human rights movement."

"We must try to observe a single standard of human rights."

He urged youth to travel in the world and see people of different countries and colors.

"Make yourself into a bridge maker in this world," he said.

Tennessee museum opens at hotel where King slain
After 10 years of planning, the National Civil Rights Museum opened Saturday at the Tennessee motel where civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. was slain.

The dilapidated Lorraine Motel, where King was shot in 1968, was bought at a foreclosure auction in 1982 by citizens who assembled it into a museum as a reminder of civil rights history.

Focused on the 1950s and 1960s, the museum features displays tracing the struggle for black civil rights from the days of slavery. Historic photographs, drawings, and written sketches are placed throughout the museum.

The $2.2 million museum was financed by state and local taxpayers and private contributors.

General Motors killed animals in auto safety tests
Animal rights activists in Dallas demonstrated Saturday outside the State Fair to call attention to General Motors Corp.'s use of animals in automobile safety tests.

The Detroit-based automaker has acknowledged that about 19,000 dogs, rats, monkeys, birds and mice have been killed in its laboratories during the past decade.

"People have a lot of options when buying a car, and we're helping them cross GM off their lists," said Dan Mathews, a member of the group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals which has called for a boycott of GM products.

One of the group's signs read, "Deathbeat of America," a reference to the automaker's "Heartbeat of America" slogan.

Contaminated oil spills in Cortland sewer
About three gallons of contaminated oil spilled into the Cortland storm system Friday after a Niagara Mohawk electrical transformer was struck by a car and burst open.

Police said David H. Rogers, 20, a SUNY Cortland student, was driving while intoxicated when he struck a utility pole.

The transformer on top of the pole burst open and released 30 gallons of oil containing polychlorinated biphenyls, or PCBs.

PCBs have been linked to cancer in laboratory animals. A NiMo spokesman said that PCBs are commonly used in transformers, but that some older transformers have not been replaced yet.

The spill was declared cleaned up yesterday morning. A NiMo spokesman said three gallons of oil went down the drain before the spill could be contained.

Legislator runs for re-election despite cancer
Patrick Malone, an Onondaga legislator, will seek re-election to his fourth term despite a battle with cancer.

"I've got to," he said. "The people have put faith in me. What I feel bad about is that I can't go door-to-door and provide one-on-one contact that people like." He returned home last week after spending the last four months in Seattle for a bone-marrow transplant for leukemia.

The marrow was donated by Malone's 21-year-old son. The marrow has taken partially but has left Malone without an immune system.

"I always thought I had a good life before - but when you're lying on the floor and you say, I want to go home. There's so many things I want to do," he said.

U.N. team to continue search for Iraqi Scuds
United Nations weapons inspectors will travel to Baghdad on Thursday to search for Iraqi Scud missile launchers and equipment, officials said Saturday.

The 20-member ballistic weapons team was assembled by the U.N. Special Commission, which destroyed Iraq's weapons and superguns, officials said Saturday.

Both Bush and Major called on the Soviets to match the United States' plan. Bush offered to open negotiations to eliminate all long-range ballistic missiles with multiple warheads.

Britain follows U.S. lead to cut nuclear arms
Following the United States' lead, Britain announced Saturday it would cut its nuclear arms.

Britain agreed to withdraw its short-range and battlefield nuclear weapons in Europe and stop carrying tactical nuclear bombs on warships.

Prime Minister John Major praised President Bush's speech declaring sweeping reductions in the U.S. nuclear arsenal.

Bush, in a speech from the White House on Friday, announced the United States will unilaterally eliminate its land-based tactical nuclear weapons and remove all short-range atomic arms from U.S. submarines and ships.

Information for the following article was derived from the Chancellor's Ad Hoc Advisory Group Report on Academic Support Services and Academic Auxiliaries released today.

In the first phase of its report released September 11, the Chancellor's Ad Hoc Advisory Group provided an overview of the university's fiscal challenge and a report on the schools and colleges.

The Ad Hoc Advisory Group's report presents Academic Support Units under seven headings: Undergraduate Studies, Research, the Graduate School, Information Systems and Computing, Enrollment Management, the Library, and the Office of Academic Affairs.

Undergraduate Studies

As Syracuse competes for the best and most well-rounded student population it can attract and retain, it would seem counterproductive to cut the Honors Program or such support programs as the Higher Education Opportunity Program or Gateway.

The Advisory Group believes such programs are central to the educational mission, targeted directly at students, and are strategically essential; they should be held harmless budgetarily. The Community Internship Program provides a valuable student service at little cost. Any meaningful cuts would snuff out its life.

The Advisory Group believes, therefore, that the least-damaging areas for cost-cutting are Audio and Visual Support Services and the Center for Instructional Development/Testing Services, which combined employ 59 persons; the Registrar's Office; and the Office of the Vice President, which includes the discretionary equipment fund he dispenses.

Most schools and colleges, however, are pressing the university to recognize the need for an integrated information technology environment at SU.

Thus, AVSS together with Information Systems and Computing, has made considerable progress in ways to deliver these services more efficiently to more students, with significant cost savings.

In sum, approximately $2.9 million of the reducible base in this budget should be subjected to the average base budget reduction plan.

Graduate School

Rational decisions about the value of this unit to the university cannot be made without determining which functions in the system are best handled or coordinated centrally by the Graduate School, and which are best dealt with by the schools, colleges and departments.

The Teaching Assistant Orientation program is clearly the one undertaking with the greatest potential impact on graduate education. It has won national visibility for SU and has great potential for attracting outside funds.

If increasing the number of tuition-paying graduate students becomes an important goal for the next decade, then it makes sense to nurture the Graduate School and permit it to take the lead. But if this is not a goal, or if it is concluded that these functions could be performed by the schools and colleges, the Graduate School bureaucracy could be trimmed.

Another important variable is the number of doctoral programs to be eliminated in the near-term as the size of the faculty decreases. In sum, an articulation of the vision for graduate education at SU is necessary before one can address the magnitude of the budget cut.

Information Systems and Computing

The reducible base budget of this group is large. Application of the average cost reduction target of 16 percent would yield a savings of nearly $1.1 million.

The unit is so large and complex, and touches so many aspects of university life, that it is possible to hear widely varying views on the quality of service provided and the degree to which Information Systems and Computing is integrated into classroom instruction and faculty research.

The Advisory Group identified a number of possible budget-cutting opportunities. These include deleting mainframes, reducing the number of operating systems supported in the university, limiting the number of supported software programs in use, setting clear priorities for the use of time in ACS and providing fewer and more selective services and consultation to faculty, reexamining the allocation of research computing funds, merging budgets of the various sub-units and eliminating administrative lines, and promoting the further use of computing resources at other institutions.

Budget-cutting suggestions cannot be addressed overnight, nor should they. However, until the issue of leadership has been resolved and a clearer, more focused vision is articulated, the unit should be subject to cuts at least as large as the university average, if not larger.

Enrollment Management

The Advisory Group recommends that the university study whether it is possible or wise to begin meeting the full financial need of all admitted students. Some of our competitors already do this.

Unfortunately, the average percentage discount offered on our tuition is at present far less than that offered by more prestigious competitors, and substantially less than is offered by our peer institutions.

The reducible base budget of this group is large. Application of the average cost reduction target of 16 percent would yield a savings of nearly $3.7 million.

POLICE BRIEFS

A 20-year-old Syracuse University student reported her purse stolen Saturday from the living room of a house on the 700 block of Livingston Avenue, police said.

She said she left her purse containing credit cards, personal papers, a checkbook and $8 in cash on a couch at 10 p.m.

She said that she went into the kitchen of the house with about nine friends. When she returned to the living room at 10:30 p.m., the purse was gone.

Police said that the front door of the house was unlocked and open. The police questioned neighbors who said they did not see or hear anything.

There are no suspects or witnesses, police said.

A Syracuse University student reported items stolen from his apartment at 500 block of University Avenue early Sunday morning, a police report stated.

The student returned home at 1:25 a.m. and found his window open and screen pushed in, police said.

He said his trench coat, wallet, credit cards, driver's license, social security and health insurance cards were missing.

The student told police that he forgot to lock his window when he went out but he locked his door. He said the door was locked when he returned home.

AMNESTY

"I am someone whose life was saved by Amnesty International," Jalali said.

"I am here as a testimony to what Amnesty International can do," he said.

"I was born a Kurd in Iran and was treated like a second-class citizen in my own country," he said.

"All I wanted in life was to remain a Kurd, so my children would know what it is like to be a Kurd," he said.

"My country asked me to leave when I was 16," he said.

"I was a stateless person," he said.

Earlier this year, Jalali traveled to Turkey to view the current situation and talk to Kurdish refugees.

"I was followed and my phone was tapped," he said.

"I was an innocent American citizen in Turkey," he said.

"They wanted to know why I was meeting with human rights activists.

"All we are asking you is to be concerned citizens," Jalali said. "Life does not end at the U.S. borders," he said. "All of us must take a tougher stand and send a message to Washington, D.C., that we care."

Jalali said "all countries are part of an international community."

Amnesty has more than 1.1 million members in more than 150 countries. In central New York, there are 48 Amnesty groups.

The speeches were complemented by a photo and artifact exhibition in the Noble Room of Hendricks Chapel.

Process is mind numbing

The process of evaluating Supreme Court nominees has become a charade. We'll begin with the President, who following the tradition of Ronald Reagan, systematically makes suggestions to nominate the best and brightest of the lower courts. He'd rather seat someone who will pledge allegiance to his views — even if they won't publicly.

Then we watch the nominees. They dodge tricky questions and claim ignorance about issues every thinking person has mulled over countless times.

At the next level of game playing, there's the Senate Judiciary Committee. In the current case, its members reached a split decision on whether to send forth a recommendation to reject recent nominee Clarence Thomas. Then, because the committee is wary of supporting him, they may represent the least of all Republicans until all they can do is close their ears.

Bush supporters just hope Thomas is hiding his conservative agenda to vote 5-4. Thomas now awaits a seal of approval or dismissal. He has no indication on the outcome and nor do we.

The Thomas nomination reflects the outcome and nor do we. This is because there's no exchange of a book.

And what of culture's distant cousin, once removed, tradition? Many people consider Homecoming Weekend the height of tradition. But when no one else on campus is reading that book, the cultural experience becomes less than it could be. This is because there's no exchange of a book.

One reason that both sides are not reading a book is reading that book, the cultural experience becomes less than it could be. This is because there's no exchange of a book.

At the next level of game playing, we are an intellectual conversation. But when 'no one else on campus is reading that book, the cultural experience becomes less than it could be. This is because there's no exchange of a book.

I do not think anyone would disagree with this; however, many students do not know much about us due to a lack of adequate media coverage. The football team is an important part of SU but so is the marching band also an important part of each game. The football team receives unlimited coverage in our school paper, The Daily Orange, yet only once have we seen even a glimpse of the band: a picture but no article. The DQ is not fully to blame. It is a shame that we put so much time and energy into preparing for every game and the television networks do not have the courtesy to show the halftime performance over the air.

I want to let others know that we exist and that we deserve acknowledgment for our efforts. Since this is unlikely to happen, students should at least come to the games to cheer us on as well as the football players. We deserve and much respect as they receive.

Speaker urges women to learn self-defense

By LAURA HARDING
Staff Writer

Syracuse University attempts to prevent sexual attacks and violence with blue lights, marches, the R.A.P.E. Crisis Center and increased education, but it is still lacking, said Elaine Cleeton at the Women's Lecture Series on Friday.

"I see the blue lights as an after-the-fact thing," she said. "I see it as I'm barely alive and dragging myself to it."

Many people have become involved in precautions and recovery and are missing an important middle step, Cleeton said.

"This step is taking a self-defense course to prepare yourself," she said.

Cleeton is a graduate of the Fight-back program, formerly Model Mugging, "which uses realistic assault scenarios to teach women how to knock out single, unarmed assailants (the type that most often attacks women)," according to an article in the July 1991 issue of Glamour.

Methods of attack

"If you have both hands free, put your fingers together so they're all on the same plane and poke at the attacker's arm," she said.

Women have never been taught that a man is vulnerable, she said. "You can knock a man out if you hit him hard enough in the groin.

"Legs are our most powerful weapon and I hate it in movies when a woman is pinned up against a wall and doing anything," she said. "She could use her quadriceps, and pull it up right into his groin and get away."

The aim is always to knock out the attacker in order to get away and get help, Cleeton said.

The Fight-back program is unique because everyone goes through real fights and finds out they actually can ward off an attack, she said.

Graduates of the program always have a sense of their class with them, she said.

"There was a woman from a class who was attacked eight years after she graduated and could hear her class yelling 'No,' 'Kick' and 'Eyes' as she went through each motion," she said.

About 100 graduates of the program have been attacked in 10 years with 50 stopping the attack by shouting, 48 stopping..."
All ages run in Freihofer's race

By LISA GOSSELIN
Contributing Writer

The Syracuse Chargers Track Club hosted the eighth annual Freihofer's Run For Women Sunday at Manley Field House.

For the first time, the Syracuse Run For Women was designated as the Women's National Five Kilometer 4K Road Race Championship.

The Syracuse Run For Women began eight years ago as the Women's Northeastern 10 kilometer championship.

There were four race categories in the race including an eight kilometer (8K) race open to men and women and a three kilometer "Fun and Fitness" run. For kids, there were 100, 200 and 400 meter runs, while the youngest 5K championship race also took place.

The Syracuse Chargers Track Club provided more than 200 volunteers as well as technical expertise in timing the race. The road race was sponsored by Freihofer's Baking Company as well as the University Area Holiday Inn, WYHY 99FM, and WTVP Channel 2.

About 2,000 people from all over the country and Canada competed in the four events Sunday, including nearly 300 Syracuse University students and faculty.

Pros and amateurs

Top runners as well as everyday joggers participated in the 5K championship race.

"In running you can line up with some of the best in the world," said race director David Olgren. "This is what a lot of people love about this sport."

Janis Klecker of Minnetonka, Minn., finished first in the 8K with a time of 39 minutes and 16 seconds. Klecker was the top woman in the 1990 Associated Press Road Racing Athletes, Mary Knisely, gold medalist in the 1997 Pan American Games, took second place just five seconds behind Klecker.

First place in the 8K race was taken by Fred Flintstone, N.Y., with a finishing time of 25 minutes.

For Women was designated as the 4K National Championship with the eventual winner, Janis Klecker and Anne Marie Letko, left, close behind.

We've all heard it before. They say that if your roommate dies during the course of the semester you are pretty much guaranteed to get a 4.0 out of sympathy from your professors. If you are like me, you may have a somewhat mixed response every day when big losers are in the hopes of making them suicidal.

My first roommate was Kevin, and he probably could have been an economics major. One day Kevin drove to the mall just to buy a six-foot inflatable Gumby doll. I'm not sure why Kevin bought a six-foot inflatable Gumby doll, I mean, I wanted Fred Flintstone.

The interesting fact is that Kevin couldn't afford the doll. This was a concept Kevin never did grasp. For example, a bunch of us would be hanging out in the room. Kevin would suggest that we get a pizza. Of course, at two in the morning we all wanted to get a pizza, but being rational and occasionally mature college students, we also knew we couldn't afford one.

"No problem," Kevin would say. "I'll pay for it with a check."

The check will bounce. Free pizza.

A future in politics

Sometimes I just can't argue with good logic. Like Kevin's excuse for not paying his credit card bills. "I got the card when I was 17. I'm not legally eligible until I'm 18. Therefore I'm not legally obligated to pay," Kevin should be a senator.

Kevin was a 25-year-old, white, male and a native of Idaho. He had lived in the building for three years and had never been late on his rent. In fact, Kevin always paid in full and in advance. This was a major plus for the building management. In the past, many other tenants had been late or had not paid at all. Kevin was a model tenant, and his behavior was a model for others in the building.

As Kevin moved into his new apartment on the second floor of the building, he was happy to have a new place to live. He was excited about the new neighborhood and the possibilities that it held. He was eager to meet his neighbors and become part of the community.

As Kevin settled into his new home, he couldn't help but notice the beautiful view of the city from his window. He was always drawn to the city and its vibrant energy. He loved the way the lights twinkled at night and the way the buildings looked so much more dramatic in the darkness. It was a beautiful sight, and Kevin felt grateful to be able to call it his own.

With his new apartment, Kevin was ready to start a new chapter in his life. He was excited about the opportunities that lay ahead and was determined to make the most of this exciting new chapter. As he settled into his new home, he knew that he was ready for whatever the future held.

The Spin Doctors will be rolling into The Underground tonight to cure those campus doldrums with their unique blend of funk, rock and blues.

Tonight’s performance, starting at 8 p.m. with funk/metal foursome Lucy Brown, will be the band’s first appearance in Syracuse, according to drummer Aaron Comess.

“We played a club in Syracuse about two years ago,” he recalls, “but only about three people showed up. It will be funny coming back after bombing the last time.”

Such a scenario is unlikely this time though, as the release of the band’s debut LP, Pocket Full Of Kryptonite, has shot the Doctors from New York City buzzword to national recognition in only a few months.

Comess says that since the band’s formation in 1988, the release of their debut LP has shot the Doctors from New York City buzzword to national recognition in only a few months.

SU blows Bayou with jumbo first half

By KENT FISCHER

NEW ORLEANS — The Syracuse University Orangemen didn’t score a point in the second half of their 24-0 victory over Tulane University on Saturday night. It didn’t matter, though, because a strong SU defense and a sputtering Green Wave offense signaled the game was over by then.

Orange wide receiver Qadry Ismail scored two touchdowns in the last four minutes of the second quarter to erase any thoughts Tulane, 0-5, might have had of a comeback.

Ismail first found the end zone on a 45-yard reverse with 2:42 left in the half giving SU a 17-0 lead. Ismail took a pitch from quarterback Marvin Graves and followed fullback Al Wooten around the left end. Wooten provided a key block and Ismail headed down the sideline for the score.

It was the third time this season the 10th-ranked Orangemen, 4-0, have run the reverse to Ismail, and he’s scored on four of his last six carries. "It’s the way we run the option," Ismail said. "A lot of teams are overaggressive in trying to stop that. But we fell into that mistake."

Ismail, who ended the game with 136 yards of total offense, added the final touch just three minutes later when he hauled in a Graves pass near Tulane 45-yard line. The junior shook off one tackler and then outran the Green Wave secondary for a 64-yard touchdown, giving the Orangemen a 24-0 lead.

Tulane quarterback Billy Duncan started the game, but after completing just two of his 10 passes, he was replaced by senior Jerome Woods late in the second quarter.

Woods hit on 23 of 34 attempts. Despite throwing for 226 yards in a little over two quarters, Woods was unable to engineer a sustained drive. Tulane, in fact, didn’t even mount an attack into SU territory in their final drive of the game. Senior Greg Walker then stepped up and picked off an errant pass at the SU 1-yard line to thwart the threat and preserve the shutout.

"Last year they came right down the field to get the victory," Walker, who also blocked a punt, said. "We wanted to concentrate in shutting them down and we did that. They had a couple of opportunities but we tried harder and more fumbles not costly yet

By ROB GUYYETTE and KENT FISCHER

NEW ORLEANS — Syracuse continued its fumbling ways Saturday despite the secure 24-0 victory margin.

The Orangemen dropped the ball six times but lost only one. Many of the miscues came on botched handoffs and each quarterback — Marvin Graves, Doug Womack and Mark McDonald — was guilty for at least one fumble.

A couple of fumbles happened when the backs went the wrong way or we missed a couple of snaps," Graves said. "I got hit on my right side off a blitz that I couldn’t see. We have to take care of the ball."

SU has fumbled 13 times in its four games.

Graves lost his fifth fumble of the season when he was hit on a scramble in the second quarter, Tulane could not take advantage of Mike Wood’s recovery at the 33-yard line as it lost one yard on three plays. Gary Butler then missed a 41-yard field goal.

Three of Graves’ last fumbles have come within the SU 30-yard line.

"It didn’t affect us today, but it will if we do something like that in the next few weeks," said tailback David Walker, who fumbled twice. "I really don’t know what it is, we just have to worry about our ball security."

The Orangemen have turned the ball over 11 times this season (6 fumbles, 5 interceptions). Opponents have also committed 11 turnovers (9).

Empty seats

The official attendance count at the Superdome was 19,381, but only because Tulane records tickets sold, not turnstile count.

A sparse crowd of no more than 10,000 attended the game in the spacious dome, which seats 75,000.

The attendance was quite a turnaround from last weekend, when the Orangemen beat Florida in front of a loud, sellout crowd in the Carrier Dome. "I'm glad there's nobody here rooting for them," Walker said. "It'd just be harder on us. When we go back to the Dome, that's when we like to see the fans."

Tulane averaged 25,490 in six games last year and hasn’t averaged more than 40,000 since 1981. Tulane hasn’t had a winning record since 1981, either.

Offensive fizzle

For the second consecutive road game, the SU offense sparkled in the first half and faded in the second.

On Saturday’s game, SU had 24 points and gained 356 yards in the first half while producing just 94 yards and no points in the second half. Two weeks ago against Maryland, the Orangemen racked up 311 yards in the first half and then had minus-four for the entire third quarter.

Injury report

The Orangemen report no serious injuries from Saturday’s game.

Cornerback Darrell Mayes, who collided with free safety Tim Sandquist late in the fourth quarter as both went for an interception, was listed as OK.

Wide receiver Shelby Hill suffered bruised ribs but should be ready for Florida State.

Hot start

Syracuse’s 4-0 start is its third such streak to start the year since its national championship season of 1959.

The Orangemen are 2-0 in the ACC and are the only team in the conference to finish 7-2, and the 1987 team finished 11-1 after tying Auburn in the Sugar Bowl.

Not quite enough

Despite scoring two touchdowns and having over 90 yards receiving for the third time this season, Qadry Ismail said Saturday’s game wasn’t very satisfying.

"I guess I’m used to just being so excited," Ismail said. "Tonight it was like, ‘Oh well, I had two touchdowns,’ but then it’s kind of an empty, weird feeling."

NEW ORLEANS — Syracuse University Orangemen didn't score a point in the first half, but they didn't need to.

The Orangemen grabbed the ball off a kickoff and spent the entire first quarter driving down the field. By the time they had scored, they had scored twice, gained 200 yards and held the ball for 11 minutes.

The Orangemen have used the three games to establish a strong running attack. They have scored 20 touchdowns in the first half of games this season, with eight of them coming on the road.

Offensively, the Orangemen have averaged 152 yards per game in the first half, with 88 yards coming on the ground and 64 yards passing.

Defensively, the Orangemen have held their opponents to 11 points per first half, with four shutouts.

Syracuse is 5-0 in the first half of games this season, with wins over Temple, Houston, Tulane and Florida State.

The Orangemen have scored at least 10 points in all five first halves. They have scored 19 touchdowns and 31 field goals in the first half.

In the last three games, the Orangemen have averaged 187 yards per game in the first half, with 99 yards coming on the ground and 88 yards passing.

With the victory, the Orangemen have clinched a spot in the NCAA playoffs.

Special and all of a sudden he wasn't in there anymore."

Instead, backup Jerome Woods entered the game and threw for 226 yards. The Green Wave, however, never mounted a lengthy drive until its last possession of the game.

For the second consecutive week, the SU defense stifled the running game of its opponent. Tulane rushed 30 times for 65 yards. Last week, Florida's rushing total was minus-17 yards. Syracuse is allowing 62.8 yards rushing through four games.

"It was collective group effort," Coyle said. "Each unit came up with the plays we had to have."

Tulane's best chance to score came in the second quarter when Mike Staid recovered a Marvin Graves fumble at the SU 23-yard line. In three plays, the Green Wave lost one yard and Gary Butler's 41-yard field goal sailed wide left.

"It's a good defensive accomplishment," said Mitchell, who tied for the team lead with seven tackles. "We shut them out. No matter who you play, to hold them to no points is very hard and we feel good about it."

The shutout was Syracuse's third in its last 11 games. The Orange blanked Rutgers 42-0 last Oct. 20 in the Carrier Dome and beat Arizona 28-0 in the Aloha Bowl on Christmas Day.

"It takes a lot of things to right for you to (get the shutout)," Coyle said. "It's never easy getting a shutout and it wasn't easy tonight."

The SU defense, which has bailed out a turnover-prone offense much of the season, has allowed 48 points in four games, a 12.0 average.
Tulane's best chance to avoid the shutout came early in the second quarter when freshman safety Mike Staid recovered a Marvin Graves fumble on SU's 23-yard line.

After two incompletions and a loss of a yard on a draw play, Tulane kicker Gary Butler attempted a 41-yard field goal, but missed wide to the left.

Syracuse was leading 3-0 late in the first quarter before it mounted what would be the Orangemen's only sustained scoring drive of the night.

Starting on their own 23, SU marched downfield in nine plays before David Walker, who rushed for 72 yards on 18 carries, twisted and spun in from three yards out for the touchdown.

The score was set up by a 40-yard pass completion to Shelby Hill on a 3-and-10 play from SU's 42-yard line. Hill ended the game with 75 yards receiving on only four catches. That catch-and-run play took the ball to the Tulane 18. After two runs and a Tulane offsides penalty moved the ball to the three, Walker scored for a 10-0 SU lead.

Head coach Paul Pasqualoni said there were a lot of obstacles SU had to overcome in winning Saturday. Despite having to travel 2,000 miles, fight off the Bourbon Street distractions of New Orleans, face a winless Green Wave team and not think about next week's game at No. 1 Florida State, the Orangemen refused to look past Tulane.

"Our kids have a lot of respect for Tulane," Pasqualoni said. "They beat us very, very legitimately last year. A year ago they were the better team so our kids had that as a motivator. Coming into the Superdome we knew we'd be the better team."

Young said it wasn't easy to stay focused on Tulane, but he managed it by using his imagination.

"You figure a game like this sandwiched between two big games, that we might have a letdown," he said. "We concentrated on not having that letdown and thinking of Tulane as a top-10 team."

diligent Doctors have been working nonstop, playing five gigs a week and writing more than 60 songs. In the past year alone, the band has toured this country and Europe, as well as recording their debut LP and an EP.

More than fun and funky

While the band's EP Up For Grabs... Live captured the fun and funky fury of the Spin Doctors' live show, Pocket Full Of Kryptonite shows a wider variety of the band's musical abilities.

Songs range in diversity from the comic "Jimmy Olsen's Blues" to the jazz fusion of "Forty To Fifty" to the heavy groove of "Refrigerator Car" to the acoustic elegance of "How Could You Want Him (When You Know You Could Have Me?)."

Lyrically, the band also shows diversity, ranging from the humorous to the serious.

"One of the cool things about the band," says Comess, "is that songs like 'Shinbone Alley' can make you sit down and really think about what is going on out there and at the same time, songs like 'Big Fat Funky Booty' can make you forget about those problems."

The assembly of a sound

The Spin Doctors first began to formulate their diverse sound at Manhattan's New School of Jazz, where Comess matched his Texas-bred rock/jazz style with the funk/blues of guitarist Eric Schenckman.

Vocalist Chris Barron's soulful style originated in Princeton, N.J., where he grew up with members of Blues Traveller John Popper's blazing harmonica on the Doctors' "More Than She Knows" and "Off My Line."

After going through numerous bass players and even experimenting with a horn section, Spin Doctors met up with Mark White, whose fiery funk bass style added the perfect punch to round out the group's sound.

While that sound originally had a definitive New York flavor, Comess says that he feels the band is expanding. "I've always admired bands and artists like Miles Davis whose music is constantly changing. He's been making records for about 50 years and his sound is always changing. Although now he may not sound like he did back when he started, you can still tell it's Miles. That's the same thing I'd like to see from the Spin Doctors in the future."

LEVY

She said having deaf friends helps her to understand and overcome some of the difficulties that having a handicap can cause.

According to Levy, it is helpful to share her experiences with other hearing-impaired people who might feel different from "normal" people.

When Levy's day is over, she removes the magnetic headpiece she wears behind her ear.

She wraps the wire around the box and places it on the night table next to her bed.

She gets into bed and falls asleep to silence. And while, technically, she is deaf, her spirit says otherwise.

"I don't feel like a deaf person," she says. "I can hear."

Breaking the silence

By LISA CATTO
Contributing Writer

At first, you might think Karena Levy is just another student at Syracuse University. She drives her car to campus, she attends classes and she socializes on the weekends. But as you talk with her, you might wonder why her eyes focus intensely on her lips. Her voice sounds muffled, as if you are talking to her on a telephone with a bad connection.

That wire runs underneath her blouse and down her back to a little black box hidden in her jeans. This box brings the sounds of life to Karena Levy. Without it, she hears silence.

Levy is a profoundly deaf student at Syracuse University. You can't quite put your hand to her face when you talk to her on the telephone with her lip-reading aid. You might wonder if she has an accent. You can't quite put your finger on it.

Her sentences are fragmented, and her grammar is sometimes incorrect. You might not notice a wire carefully tucked under her long, curly blond hair.

You might think Karena Levy is just another student at Syracuse University. But as you talk with her, you might wonder why her eyes focus intensely on your lips. Her voice sounds muffled, as if you are talking to her on a telephone with a bad connection.

That wire runs underneath her blouse and down her back to a little black box hidden in her jeans. This box brings the sounds of life to Karena Levy. Without it, she hears silence.

Levy is profoundly deaf. Levy recently underwent a cochlear implant, a revolutionary surgical technique which had only been introduced three years ago.

In the summer of 1990, a magnetic plate was surgically inserted behind her ear. The plate transmits sound waves to the box.

The first deaf adult to undergo the surgery, Levy said the implant enabled her to hear higher sound frequencies, like birds singing and traffic going by.

Taking sound for granted

"People take these sounds for granted," Levy said. "They can hear. They can talk. They can read lips."

Within about five years, she will be able to understand human speech without lip reading.

Levy said her implant is turned up every six months. She compared the process to having braces.

"You can't have your teeth straight overnight," she said. Since the surgery, her speech has become clearer.

Levy has never let her handicap interfere with leading a full life.

\"I remember crying every day because I was so sad,\" she said. \"But I had a wonderful speech therapist who pushed me very hard.\"

Her mother had a high fever while she was pregnant, causing Levy's deafness.

"Siera Levy, her mother, did not even know she was pregnant when she was ill, according to Karena.\"

Mrs. Levy didn't realize her daughter was deaf until Karena was two years old.

"Karena was such a bright, lovely baby,\" Mrs. Levy said. \"She smiled a lot and seemed very responsive to things around her.\"

Levy began her speech therapy at the age of two, she began a difficult task that would take eight years — learning to talk.

"I want to be able to live on my own when I graduate,\" she said. \"I want to be able to do things on my own and not have to depend on my parents.\"

Levy is a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority and holds a position as the "big sister, little sister." She is active in the Alexander Graham Bell Organization, a national organization for the deaf. This gives her the chance to meet other deaf people.

Extra work

Levy is a full-time student and spends 20 hours a week with her private tutor. "I work so hard,\" she said.

"It takes hard work and, most of all, courage to be where I am today.\"

When Levy is with a group of people, she sometimes feels ignored. "People forget to face me, so I can't see their lips," she said. "It's very difficult to follow conversation when a group of people are talking."

She feels that sometimes people don't want to make the extra effort or they get apprehensive when they hear her speak.

OCTOBER
Local police brutality case to be reviewed

By ERIN NEFF
Managing Editor

Capt. John Galvin, who is heading the Internal Affairs investigation, recently closed the Internal Affairs investigation originally discredited by the police department. Galvin told the students that "no investigation is ever totally closed." Galvin also said that "because this is an internal investigation, there is no double jeopardy."

No original witness accounts were found. Lindy Crescitelli, an SU senior, said she was upset when police officers were cleared because she had not been able to give her account. Galvin also met with four of the students last Wednesday to discuss the report on Academic Support Units and Academic Advising Centers. Galvin also said he will work more closely with the Finance Board to cut down on overspending.

Employees from the financial aid office, Michelle Liquori-Martin, left, and Gwen Knecht, admitted they enjoyed a photograph of what Syracuse looked like in the past. The pictures are part of an exhibit in the Shaffer building.

SGA seeks opinions on budget

Assembly members encouraged to hear concerns

By KRISTINA SAUERWEIN
Asst. News Editor

Finding out student opinion about the university's plan to cut $85 million from its budget will be one of the biggest challenges facing the Student Government Association, according to SU President Emily Zenick.

Zenick, speaking at SGA's first Assembly meeting Monday night, said Syracuse University administrators rely on SGA to convey student concerns. She said that as a member of the Assembly, you must be able to convey what the students feel, she said. "The university is going through massive downsizing and the administration looks to SGA to see how it can affect students."

Zenick, a member of the Chancellor's Ad Hoc Advisory Group, recommended that the Assembly vote to extend the date Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw plans to announce where the budget cuts will be made. The Jan. 15 deadline should be pushed back two weeks because it interferes with winter break and does not give students and faculty enough time to give their input, she said.

Assembly members to be aware

Need more time

"With the holiday schedule, not very many students will be around to give feedback," she said. "We need more time to assemble feedback." The Assembly will vote on the recommendation at next Monday's meeting.

Zenick also addressed improvements made during the summer that will help SGA function more efficiently. For instance, she said SGA updated files on all student organizations that receive funding. "We now have on file the constitutions and budget allocations for all student groups," she said.

Chris Loggans, SGA comptroller, said the comptroller's office will keep SU from being a "black hole."

"The computer system will help SGA keep better records of the budget," he said. "In the past, things were lax. Loggans also said he will work more closely with the Finance Board to cut down on overspending.

Student groups requesting funds will have to fill out a revised form that requires them to specify what the money will be used for. This year there will be stricter enforcement of SGA's financial codes and bylaws," he said. "Things will be much easier."

Leaders of different committee members said other SGA goals include improving SU's competitiveness with peer institutions and administrative staffing, Shaw said. SU also plans to increase student involvement in the university's revenue generation, Shaw said.

Soviet gold holding far below estimates

Soviet gold reserves are far smaller than Western experts had estimated, a Soviet official said Friday. With food supplies declining and inflation skyrocketing, the announcement may prompt increased debt relief and food aid from the West.

The lower reserves would mean the government has a far smaller cushion to help make payments for its $70 billion in foreign debt and to provide for emergency imports.

The announcement was made by the architect of plans to move the country toward a market economy.

Despite early support, governor vetoes gay bill

A reversal of his early tentative support for the measure, which he had said during a session in April he would "likely sign,"

Recently Wilson backed off his early support and seemed to be cautiously neutral.

Blacks make up 40 percent of death row

While Congress figures out how to impose the death penalty to a series of new crimes, the Justice Department said that blacks still make up a much larger share of death row inmates than of the nation's population.

The department's Bureau of Justice Statistics reported Sunday that as of Dec. 31, 1990, blacks made up 40 percent of prisoners awaiting execution.

California Gov. Pete Williams vetoed a gay rights bill which many conservative and church groups opposed bitterly.

The bill would have outlawed job discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

The veto by Wilson, a Republican, was a reversal of his early tentative support for the measure, which he had said during a session in April he would "likely sign."

Students in Ohio run for local office

Four students at Bowling Green University in Ohio are running for local office, including mayor, due primarily to a new conflict between local police and students.

However, the university was hurting student enrollment by prohibiting political canvassing and student registration in residence halls, according to James Tinker, a 33-year-old journalism major and candidate for mayor.

The university has changed its student conduct code to allow door-to-door registration from 1 to 9 p.m., but still prohibits canvassing until three weeks before the election, according to Robert Aronowitz, associate vice president of student affairs.

"This is really giving us a shot in the arm as far as the mayor's case is concerned," Tinker said. "Students are really beginning to realize their strength."

Fraternity accepts women as full members

The Alpha Delta Phi fraternity chapter at Bowdoin College in Maine became the last Greek campus to admit women as full-fledged members this month, and as a result, the fraternity loses its letter.

The university has had a policy of integrating women into campus life, including the Greek system, since 1968. Three of the college's eight fraternities had recognized women as full members for several years.

Dear Students, Faculty and Staff:

You are cordially invited to the second convocation honoring the Remembrance Scholarship for 1991-1992 at Syracuse University on Tuesday evening, October 1, at 7:30 PM in Hendricks Chapel.

A Remembrance Scholarship is one of the highest awards a Syracuse University student can receive. These 35 outstanding seniors have been chosen for their distinguished scholarship, citizenship and service to the community. Their achievements honor the memory of our students tragically lost on December 21, 1988, over Lockerbie, Scotland.

I hope you will find it possible to join me on this important occasion.

Sincerely,

Kenneth A. Shaw
Advisory group reports on academic auxiliaries

The Advisory Group on Academic Auxiliaries reports on their Ad Hoc Advisory Group's suggestions for the academic support units. This is a look at the Division of International Programs ranging from such financially large units as University College, the Division of International Programs and Computing to the budgetarily modest Honors Program and University Art Collection.

For the academic auxiliaries, an anticipated cash return is built into their budgets. This revenue return, General Administrative Service, is the intra-university charge levied to reimburse the administrative demand for fringe benefits and indirect costs not borne directly by the auxiliary.

The same rules that apply to the schools and colleges might not be applied to the auxiliaries so the reduced base without lowering the net cash return to the university achieved in previous years.

Summer Sessions

The net return from Summer Sessions to the university is already substantial. Further efforts to increase the GAS might prove counterproductive, particularly in light of the diminishing student population.

In addition, the high tuition rate at SU, in comparison with that charged by other institutions in Central New York, may make it increasingly difficult to attract students.

The Advisory Group recommends, therefore, that the focus here should be on ways to increase enrollment in Summer Sessions. This might require a modest add-on to permit development of new courses and programs with good enrollment potential.

Fiscal incentives might be provided to encourage schools and colleges with potentially attractive summer programs to take part. It might also be worth exploring adoption of a somewhat lower summer tuition rate to make SU more competitive.

DIPA

DIPA is, without question, an educational asset for SU students. It provides the university with a strong international perspective.

DIPA could be made more profitable if fewer full-time faculty were sent abroad to teach, but the Advisory Group thinks this was educationally unwise. Rather, an even larger percentage of those persons teaching in DIPA programs should be full-time members of the SU faculty.

The administrators of DIPA should conduct a thorough review of the economics of each foreign site and determine if any are candidates for elimination.

DIPA should determine if all its staff members are needed, given the reduced student demand. (DIPA employs 27 persons, 18 in Syracuse and nine abroad.)

It might be worth considering lower fee charges to attract more students, particularly from other institutions. This might boost revenue.

In sum, the Advisory Group does not believe that DIPA is a likely candidate for deep budget cuts. It should be asked to bear a smaller share of the burden than the standard reduction of approximately 16 percent.

Project Advance

This project introduces SU courses into the curricula of more than 90 high schools in New York state, Maine, Michigan, Massachusetts and New Jersey. High school students who complete Project Advance courses receive an SU transcript.

While Project Advance is physically removed from the classroom experience at SU, many of the teaching techniques developed in the high school program are used by the faculty involved to improve the university experience.

It provides income for the SU faculty members who participate in the schools. It brings...
Multi-cultural education ignored at SU

An entire generation of American women and men in space age started. Many more were entranced by Neil Armstrong's words from the moon... "One small step for man, one giant leap for mankind." Yet, the great leap for mankind was the space age started. Many more have reached their tribal elders and other personnel, would be of assistance.

This issue deals with greater multi-cultural knowledge area that is present from the Viking probes. This is a spring semester course offered once every three years by Professor Stephen Webb of the department of History.

From that point on my life changed. I...
A badly-aimed budget

If downsizing is the latest trend, tuition and scholarship offerings are not following suit, leaving many students out in the cold.

SU's tuition scholarship fund is expected to add $1 million to the pile of available money by 1993, according to a recent budget report. The university is planning to rely on tuition increases to generate the money, since it is unlikely to be raised any other way.

SU must offer scholarships to more students, enabling them to attend SU. A recent study indicates the average private institution's tuition to be just high as SU's: around $12,000.

The university is coming dangerously close to that mark. Next year's private institution's tuition to be just higher than SU's: around $13,000.

What we have been told time and time again, the number of students at SU is decreasing at a prospective rate of 18 to 22 percent, which translates into a downturn in total funds available for distribution throughout the entire university.

While it is true scholarships are necessary in order to maintain a high level of academic respect in the nation, they are not available to everyone who needs them, i.e. people who have the brains but not the cash.

SU must offer more scholarships and smaller increments, as the report requested, in addition to the extra thousand dollars or so off someone's tuition may be the difference between gaining a client for four years and losing a prospective student.

TA's can be valuable resources

One of the most maligned institutions at many large universities is the teaching assistant program. I, for one, have not had a bad experience. Most are probably teaching their first or second semesters. They have not had time to develop a teaching style which would serve their students most effectively. If you think about it, most of the best teachers in high school and college have had at least five years in the classroom.

If we are unhappy with a particular TA, we cannot just sit on our hands and complain. We must inform the right people that the TA isn't performing up to expectations. Similarly, we should give positive reviews at course evaluation time for those TAs who did well.

The TA program can train the students to help us in our academic pursuits. Most of the time, if we use them correctly, can prove to be valuable resources.

Conflict alienates Dome-goer

To the editor:

Homecoming, Florida Gators, 50,000 fans; what more could a sports fan ask for? That is what I was thinking to myself. The student section was packed. It was incredible. Then it happened. There was a conflict at the Dome.

Let me tell you the scenario. We were winning 14-0. The stands were electrified and the atmosphere was incredible. It was exciting to watch a football game in a mausoleum.

Mr. Borow, while I was in attendance at the SU-Florida game at the Dome, I started to think about your article in yesterday's Daily Orange. At first, I was saddened because you told your students that you wouldn't be attending the game, but rather you were going to watch the Notre Dame-Michigan State game. This was how you were going to get your weekend excitement.

What was the final score of the game anyway? Oh yes, it was Notre Dame 49, Michigan State 10. Wow! What a thrilling afternoon.

I can imagine how much excitement there is in the air for you as Notre Dame scored its final touchdown to put the game out of reach. I am truly jealous I missed it.

My reason for missing this classic was that I was attending the SU game. From your article, I gathered the Dome was a peaceful environment where one might be able to escape from the noise and the crush of the crowd. It is true that SU offers a better atmosphere than Michigan State, but I have attended games in both places.

What is more evident than when one sees the members of the football team raising their hands to signal for a time out, or when they shout in frustration. An athlete does not need to fear, not excitement. You already told us about the excitement.

When the game ended I think Syracuse won, but I'm not sure. I put down your article. I watched as the SU players walked onto the field. This is how I was confused. You wrote in your article that the Dome has helped foster the apathetic attitude that most students have toward the football team.

It appeared to me, but I may be wrong, that the fans were giving the team a standing ovation. Either way, the game was a good one and I'm sure many students will make a mass exodus out of the Carrier Dome.

Well, like I stated earlier, Mr. Borow, I was going to call you but my hearing was not bad enough. I was going to call you but my hearing was not bad enough. I was going to call you but my hearing was not bad enough.

version of the incident as a woman was Thomas's sister.

The man was later identified by police as Adrian Thomas, a member of the Syracuse
University basketball team.

Mayor Tim Cowin said he did not see any evidence of brutality. "I don't have a
Los Angeles Police Chief Darryl Gates here, so I can't make any decision," he said.

Young has also made statements supporting Cowin's findings in the original Internal Affairs investigation. However,
Young said he has not made any recommendations.

Crescitelli suspects the conflicting accounts by those witnesses are driven by the nature of the investigation and discounted brutality allegations.

"If you work down there (in a business in the alley), it's really important to have good said.

The students are pushing for a civilian review board to enable civilians to provide information for future Internal Affairs investigations. Currently, no civilians are involved in any aspect of the process.

Easing the future
Crescitelli said this would help future witnesses reporting acts of brutality because it would make them feel more at ease.

For his part, Crescitelli said he felt there were attempts to bias his testimony and he felt threatened when Galvin suggested he handcuff Crescitelli to demonstrate what constitutes brutality.

Another question of what constitutes brutality arose about a picture printed in the Sept. 22 edition of The Herald-American depicting the two arrested men in jail after the charges of brutality.

Cowin pointed to the picture and said there was no brutality because there was no evidence of such action in the picture.

"That's like looking at a rape saying she wasn't raped," Crescitelli said. "You don't need blood and bruises to have brutality."

Recessioi not over, New Yorkers say

According to a recent poll on New York's economic status, 48 percent of state residents say we are in a recession, and almost 60 percent say it will continue for at least a year.

The Fleet/Norstar New York Poll, the first in a series of quarterly polls to be conducted on the state of New York's economy, revealed that three-quarters of those polled had cut back personal spending.

Nearly half of the state residents polled said New York is in worse financial shape than the rest of the country, and more than 60 percent listed New York City as the area most affected by the recession.

Fuel efficiency drops for fifth straight year

A recent Environmental Protection Agency report said 1992 model cars will get an average of 0.3 fewer miles to the gallon than last year's models.

This marks the fifth consecutive year that fuel efficiency has dropped from the previous year. In 1992, model cars will average 27.5 miles to the gallon, as compared to 27.8 miles in 1991.

At the same time, Congress is preparing to implement a law that would increase fuel efficiency 40 percent in the next 10 years.

One of the main reasons for the drop in efficiency is the resurgence of large cars. As gas prices have dropped, the traditional "gas-guzzlers" have regained popularity since 1986, when gas was at a low of 90 cents a gallon.

The 1992 Geo Metro XFI was named the most fuel-efficient car for the fourth straight year with 53 miles per gallon in the city and 58 on the highway.

Citcorp to attack credit card fraud

Citcorp, the largest issuer of credit cards in the country, is expected to announce the test use of a technological breakthrough that would cut down on credit card fraud.

A computer system would store the signatures of customers. From that point on, customers would write on the screen rather than a paper slip. The computer would be able to measure the movements and inflections of the signer, and forgery would become easier to detect.

Citcorp reportedly plans to put these computer systems in several Gap stores around the country. Experts say all stores might be using this system within 10 years.

Area Burger Kings accept credit cards

By LISA GUIDONE

Contributing Writer

The scenario: it's lunchtime, your stomach is growling, your mouth is watering. You open your wallet and find no money.

Don't fret—there is another alternative.

Burger King now offers more than hamburgers, fries and soft drinks to its customers. Clients in the Syracuse area now have the option to use credit cards when purchasing fast food at the Burger King chain.

The franchise has been accepting Mastercard, Visa and Discover since Aug. 19.

All 20 Burger King restaurants in the Syracuse area, owned by the Carroll Corp., offer the credit card service. A new system called Instaprovve allows customers to use credit cards with the speed of cash.

The Instaprovve system gives instantaneous credit approval. A signature is required for purchases under $25, and no minimum purchase is required to charge.

The transactions are checked via satellite. Each night, a reading of lost or stolen charge cards appears in each store via the Instaprovve system.

AtmoDt to capture sales

"The preference for customers choosing their form of payment serves their needs and also captures sales," said Paul Drotar, vice president of the Carroll Corp.

The Burger King chain is the first fast food restaurant in the Syracuse area to accept major credit cards.

Drotar said that the franchise never accepted credit cards before because the credit approval system wasn't quick enough.

It is still too early to notice whether credit card acceptance has caused an increase in sales, area officials said.

But Piper Girvin, manager of the Burger King at 3340 Erie Blvd. East, said, "The system has brought in more people and given them an alternative use of payment."

The Carroll Corp. plans major promotions in the early stages of the fall to encourage use of credit cards at Burger King.

Remembrance Scholars to be honored

By KEN ALDRICH
Staff Writer

Syracuse University's 1992 class of Remembrance Scholars will be recognized tonight at 7:30 in Hendricks Chapel.

Thirty-five students received $5,000 scholarships to contribute to their senior year of study. They were created in memory of the 35 SU students killed in the terrorist bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 on Dec. 21, 1988.

Students on the flight were returning from a semester spent in England.

"The students chosen were of high academic achievement, personal promise and extraordinary involvement," said Robert McClure, assistant dean of the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, and member of the scholarship selection committee.

The scholarship is funded from a $3 million endowment supported by alumni, friends and parents of the victims and corporations.

More than 260 students applied for the scholarships. The Remembrance Scholarship is one of the highest accolades that SU gives to students, McClure said.

Pleased with the excellence "The selection committee was impressed and quite moved by the degree of seriousness and academic excellence shown by the applicants," said David C. Smith, dean of admissions and financial aid, and chairman of the selection committee.

Applicants were requested to submit highlights of their university and community activities as well as an essay on the Flight 103 tragedy.

"The students selected are high achievers not only in the classroom, but also within the university community," Smith said.

Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw will address the Remembrance Scholars. Shaw will also recognize the 1991-92 Lockerbie Scholars, Colin W. Combe and John C. Wallace.

The Lockerbie Scholarship allows two students from the Scottish town where Flight 103 crashed to study at SU for one year.

The students came to the United States as a part of an exchange program with Lockerbie Academy.

Gershon Vincow, vice chancellor for academic affairs, will preside over the ceremony.

Richard Phillips, dean of Hendricks Chapel, will give this evening's invocation.

McClure, also a political science professor, will deliver a message from the faculty.

A Remembrance Scholar will also speak.

The Hendricks Chapel Choir will perform under the direction of Katharine Pardee.

The 11 members of the selection committee were chosen from a wide variety of schools and administrative positions.

Seniors need interview skills

By VINCE SALISBURY
Staff Writer

This past week I considered starting a television show called America's Funniest Video Interviews. Each episode would feature excerpts of a graduating senior's practice interview.

There are about 5,000 seniors at Syracuse University and plenty of video cameras so it seems likely the show could last a few seasons.

Practicing for interviews is a required assignment for all seniors because much of their job-hunting success relies on acing the interview. Most books on the subject focus on how to answer tough interview questions, but there is another important aspect to interviewing success. This is a student's delivery style, which Webster's Dictionary defines as "the act or manner of giving a speech."

The delivery style of interviewees refers to their posture, eye contact, tone of voice, use of language and body movements. The interviewer will evaluate your skills in these areas as well as answers to the questions.

Sit up straight
You should be conscious of your posture from the minute you sit down in the lobby to await your interview. Maintain a straight posture during the whole time you are interviewing. Some students feel they should lean back in their chair or slouch a little to show they are relaxed.

Unfortunately, most interviewers view this as a sign you are not really that interested in this meeting.

In addition to maintaining good posture, you need to keep good eye contact with your interviewer.

Some cultures teach that to look a person directly in the eye is rude; this is especially true if the person is your elder. However, this is not true in American interviews. If your eye contact is not good, the interviewer may think that you are lying, unassertive or afraid.

This is not what you want to communicate to an interviewer. Of course you don't want to stare down an interviewer, but more eye contact is better than less.

The tone of voice that you use in an interview is just as important as eye contact. An instant turn-off for many recruiters is to listen to a student with a monotone or whispering voice. This communicates a lack of interest in the position and a boring or passive personality.

The other extreme is someone with a very loud voice or someone who speaks so fast that the meaning of their words is lost.

Watch out for whiners
There are also the whiny voices that were made famous by the Saturday Night Live couple known as "Doug and Wendy Whiner."

A cousin of the whiners is the mumbler. After watching a videotape of his mock interview a senior said to me, "My mother always told me that I mumbled, and now I believe her."

Another issue related to the voice is the overuse and abuse of verbal "fillers." The top seven "fillers" that I hear are as follows:

• "you know"
• "like"
• "um"
• "uhh"
• "basically"
• "stuff"
• "sort of"

Students are amazed and amused at how much they use certain fillers throughout their interview. It really takes a lot of practice to break this habit.

The use of hand gestures and body movements is another amusing thing to watch on video. Many students use their hands when talking in order to emphasize their points. This is fine as long as it remains somewhat controlled. One woman was so enthusiastic during her interview that she actually leaned forward, tapped the interviewer's knee to make her point. She was extremely embarrassed when she reviewed the tape.

Another student would cross his legs, grab his ankle and rock back and forth during the interview. This was visibly distracting for the interviewer and communicated a lot more than the answers to his questions.

All of the errors made during interviews can be corrected by first learning what your patterns are and then practicing to remove them.

Set up your own video studio and practice interviewing with your friends or come to the SU Placement Center in Room 235 of the Schine Student Center to set up an interview appointment.

There are certain days set up each month for doing mock interviews. And there is no chance that you will appear on America's Funniest Videos — the Placement Center records over each mock interview.

Salisbury works at the SU Placement Center. The Job Connection is published each Tuesday in the Lifestyle section of The Daily Orange.
Restoration comedy reaches modern audience

The Country Wife, currently playing at Syracuse Stage, refuses to acknowledge the fact that it was written in 1675. Director Julianne Boyd, along with the cast and crew, has infused a potential museum piece with as much energy and creativity as possible.

One costume is more outrageous than the next. The staggery abounds, and the play even includes full nudity. For the most part, this staging is sufficient to make William Wycherley's Restoration classic accessible to today's audience.

Ultimately, however, this becomes a small weakness. Rather than trust the power of Wycherley's words, the production occasionally seems to overcompensate, forcing the humor. The Country Wife tells three stories simultaneously. By the end, all three threads join together.

Get up or get out

The first story involves Mr. Horner (Grant Albrecht), a Don Juan type who spreads the rumor that he is impotent in order to gain the trust of the local husbands and, subsequently, access to their wives.

The second plot follows Mr. Pinchwife (Ken Kilban) and his new wife, Margery (Susan Wands). Pinchwife is violently possessive of his country bride, which results in Margery's rebellion.

Finally, a love triangle of sorts forms between Alithea (Kathleen McCall), Pinchwife's sister; Sparkish (Davis Hall), her intended husband and village squire; and young, passionate Harcourt (Michael Ellich).

The three plots work with varying success. The first two are the bawdier of the three, and the cast clearly shows more enthusiasm during these passages.

The third, more romantic subplot, however, is problematic. It seems that Wycherley enjoyed this subplot less than the others.

Because of this, much of the writing in this portion lacks the sharpness of the other passages, with a lot of the exposition given in asides to the audience.

While the ensemble cast is solid, they occasionally seem to be overdirected. Boyd does a fine job of staging the more ribald passages, but it seems as if she doesn't trust the strength of Wycherley's words.

Passages that could stand on their own are filled with incidental pieces of business, often for no apparent reason.

Dominating actor

The chief example of this is Grant Albrecht's performance as Horner, the ladies' man around which the subplots revolve.

Albrecht is a fine actor, and he dominates most of the scenes he appears in.

Unfortunately, however, Albrecht and Boyd stretch the point at times by having him mug and grimace even when he is not the central figure on stage.

As Albrecht makes such a strong central figure, most of the other characters never get to rise above supporting status.

The prime exception to this is Davis Hall, who gives a fantastically over-the-top performance as the utterly witless Sparkish, sniffing some sort of powder out of his cane and wearing blue bows in his orange hair.

Also worthy of mention is James Youman's evocative set design. As the play progresses, the set begins crumbling to represent the decaying society of the time.

did. “There’s not too much you can say about them except they’re awesome.”

We have our work cut out for us,” wide receiver Qadry Ismail said. “After watching the Michigan-State game, we know that. They’re just tremendous.”

Florida State scored the most points against Michigan in Ann Arbor since Northwestern scored 55 points in 1958.

Florida State was able to dominate the game despite playing in front of 105,600 fans at Michigan.

Against SU, the Seminoles will have the advantage of playing before a capacity crowd of 60,000 at Doak S. Campbell Stadium in Tallahassee.

“I think it will be a factor,” Pascualini said. “They’re obviously very, very good on the road and tougher at home. It’s going to be a big factor in the game.”

Another part of the Seminole ritual is the throwing of a burning spear by FSU mascot Chief Osceola as he rides to the center of the field on his horse Renegade.

Despite the ritual, Reagan said SU won’t be distracted. “At Florida State, they’ve got great fans,” he said. “They’ve got the spear. They’ve got the fire. They’ve got it all, but I think it’s something we were not going to worry about. It’s not something we can control. We’re just going to disregard that.”

For the players, however, being able to say they beat the Lady Rams, 8-5, is a plus.

“There’s always satisfaction in beating a great East Coast team,” Paarlberg said. “It gives us the right to say we’re the best in the East.”

The Orangewomen concluded the weekend with an easy victory over Akron 3-0. The Lady Zips, 11-5, only managed 22 points in the entire match.

“I didn’t think that Akron would give us a problem,” Schulte said. “They don’t have the same kind of ball control. They don’t serve tough enough and they don’t block tough enough.”

Akron coach Mike Sweitzer was pleased with the way his team played or with the surroundings.

“I don’t think (Syracuse is) that strong a team,” he said. “Coming in here is getting to you more than playing in a pit of snakes.”

“We’re trying to develop depth,” Schulte said. “I think that’s helping the team chemistry. It’s helping the team chemistry.”

could have been Chris (Wright). Any of the defensive guys were going to get up any time they had a chance.”

Paul, who had a shot stopped on a spectacular diving save by Guarino with 7:00 left in the game, said it was not much more than a plus as to why the Orangemen played their best soccer in the last twenty minutes of the game.

“That always happens late in a game,” Puls said. “It’s an emotional goal. Obviously, the score was going to fall back. And we’re going to be in their half. Opportunities are going to come.”

Sullivan said he was surprised the Wildcats held on to their victory.

“I thought it was going to be a draw in overtime,” Sullivan said. “I really did. When they needed the goal, they played better. They tried to play their whole game in 20 minutes instead of 90, and I think that hurt them.”

Syracuse will host Cornell University tomorrow night at 7:30 in the Carrier Dome.

Orange improve at Princeton meet

By DAVE HAUT

After the completion of Saturday's matches, the Syracuse University women's tennis team did something no other team in the Eastern Collegiate Tennis Tournament was able to do. It was the only team to have all of its players still eligible to play on Sunday.

The Orangewomen played an additional seven matches that day, 36 overall, to finish third in the tournament held in Princeton, N.J.

"It's a great turnaround," said Jesse Dwire, the team's 27-9 overall record. "Sara Dickson got off to a great start in her college career," Dwire said. "Sara Dickson defeated the number one opponent in Boston University, ""I am not disappointed in the two girls' play,"" Dwire said. "They still have to learn their limitations as partners, but that will come with practice." Sara Dickson was defeated by Princeton's Epstein, 6-3, 6-4. Andrea did a great job this weekend," Dwire said. "After months of various injuries, she was able to beat the number one seed in her bracket." The third doubles team of Jennifer Agate and Karen Garber placed second in the flight C doubles bracket, defeating the Colgate team of Chen/Desney, 6-4, 6-7, 6-3.

"We definitely flip-flopped from doubles to singles," Dwire said. "I felt the doubles play was better, concentration-wise." The third doubles team of Jennifer Agate and Karen Garber placed second in the flight C doubles bracket, defeating the Colgate team of Chen/Desney, 6-4, 6-7, 6-3.

Coach takes blame for Orangemen's 1-0 loss

By JEFF ELBAUM
Staff Writer

When Syracuse University dropped a 1-0 decision to Villanova on a Rich Maue shot with 22.22 left in the game, SU head soccer coach Dean Foti said he should be the one to blame.

"This is no good," Foti said. "I think the team was entirely unprepared mentally. We accepted responsibility for it. That's all I want to say."

Playing a Big East team at home, Foti had been calling the game against the Wildcats a "must win" for the Orangemen. The SU players didn't practice like the game was that important.

The Orangemen, 4-4-1, 2-1 Big East, failed to test Stitched & Stripes. I never knew the Ryder Cup was? And did anybody the stars and stripes ever lose it. the Ryder Cup, is probably more upper class of Europe and proclaiming patriotism.

Foti said there were signs in the practices leading up to Saturday that the game might not go so well.

"I could see it coming in the previous days in practice," Foti said. "Practice was flat. We came out flat. Sometimes it is an irreversible thing you try and change, but it makes it that much harder to take when you can see it coming."

Villanova coach Larry Sullivan attributed the Orangemen's poor start to playing on Coyne Field. SU usually plays at home in the Carrier Dome, but was moved to Coyne due to the field's poor condition.

"I thought that (the Orangemen) were unhappy that they had to play on this field," Sullivan said. "In fact, that's what I told the troops at halftime. I said, don't want to play on this field. We play on a field worse than this. Let's really take it to them."

SU goalie Steve Pollnow played a strong first half, making four saves.

At 10:20 Pollnow made a diving save on a Maue shot. Joe Roy, who led Villanova with three shots on goal, went in for the rebound but Pollnow covered it up.

Pollnow made another diving save at 20:30, on a Roy shot from fifteen yards out.

Syracuse did have one strong scoring opportunity in the first half.

Mike Britton had a break away at 17:30 and forced Guarino to make a kick save.

Sullivan said that Villanova was trying to closely guard SU's leading scorer Paul Young, who has 13 points. He said the Wildcats should be pleased with

SU got a glimpse of Seminoles' romp

Too much television is bad for your eyes.

But the Syracuse University football team, watching only a few of the Florida State-Michigan game on Saturday was enough to do the trick.

Since the game's begun, the University of Florida, and Florida State fans have been forced to watch Florida State dismantle the Wolverines, 51-31. Syracuse head coach Paul Pasqualoni said: "We had a bad day afternoons. What do you say to the kids? Do you say to them, 'Don't watch the game?'

We had mid-think that they watched the game. I think that our kids are very mature and understand why we were there and they were watching us at hand."

The 10th-ranked Orangemen, 4-0, beat the Green Wave (0-5) 24-0 on Saturday night. Pasqualoni said he was only able to watch the end of the game while the players were getting taped in the training room.

The Orangemen scored all 24 of their points in the first half. Pasqualoni said he didn't know if the earlier Seminoles victory was a factor in the quick start.

"We didn't talk about Florida State last week," Pasqualoni said. "We were very, very concerned with Tulane."

Outside linebacker Jo Jo Wooden said once game time came the Orangemen weren't thinking about all the Seminoles.

"We kind of wanted to keep that out of our mind," Wooden said. "We knew we had to go to New Orleans to get a rally to save weekend sweep

This year’s graduates to compete in market with unemployed of 1991

By PAULA CHRISTIAN
Staff writer

As many college seniors embark on their job search for next year, they will not only be competing with their own class, but also with a great number of 1991 graduates who are still unemployed, according to Mary Jones, director of the Syracuse University Placement Center.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, job offers to 1991 graduating seniors at Northeast campuses decreased by one-third. The outlook for New England is worst it has been since the early 1980s, the report stated.

“The Northeast has been hit hardest by this recession than in the past and it will take longer to recover,” Jones said.

“Many students look to the nationwide companies for employment and there is no way that these companies can hire the number of people who are applying,” said Jones.

Recruitment at SU by major companies in 1991 was down 10 to 15 percent, Jones said. This year a 20 percent decrease in campus recruitment is expected, she said.

First choice...not

The job shortage has resulted in many popular altered citizens who work with community leaders, students and businesses to improve the quality of living in the neighborhood, said Diane Harrison, WENA co-president.

WENA members voiced community concerns and debated possible solutions Monday night in the Petit Library.

“We remind Syracuse University residents to be mindful of city codes and regulations that keep the neighborhood safe,” she said.

“Our basic gripe is with the owners of student housing,” she said. “Although the worst tend to be absentee landlords, there are some bad ones that live in and around Syracuse.”

“The city has never enforced the housing violations in these dwellings,” she said. “We suspect a gentleman’s agreement.”

Virtual reality humanizes computers

By ROBERT SHIELDS
Staff News Editor

Virtual reality is the first step in the humanization of computers, according to David Lankes, coordinator of the VR laboratory at Syracuse University.

“People have said that computers and human beings have a de-humanizing effect,” Lankes said. “With VR, people can grab an object with their hand and move it around.”

The lab portion of the Advanced Graphic Research lab is in the basement of the Heroe Geology Building. The VR program is backed by the Center for Advanced Software Engineering Centers.

Lankes said that VR is possible at SU using a Mattel Power Glove and a pair of 3-D glasses.

The equipment was donated by Christopher Gentile, a 1981 graduate of the College of Engineering, Lankes said.

Gentile is a partner in the New York-based firm Abrams/Gentile Entertainment. The glove was created by Gentile for use with the Nintendo game system.

Lankes said. “He worked out a deal with the Center for Advanced Software Engineering Center here where he would donate old equipment and we would develop applications and market them through him,” Lankes said.

Sensors and ultrasound

Three sensors attached to the monitor pick up ultrasound signals from the glove that the computer calculates to locate the location of the glove in space, he said.

A wire attached to the glove from the computer sends information about four of five fingers. “There is no more than a pinkie in VR,” he said.

By moving fingers or making a fist, a user can make freehand sketches in 3-D and use the trigger finger to fire targets on the screen.

The 3-D effect is achieved with a pair of liquid crystal glasses and a flickering screen.

“If you ever went to a 3-D movie, you used those red and green glasses,” he said. “There were actually two projectors running the same movie, one with a red filter and one with a green.”

Your brain combines the two different pictures to create 3-D.

Lankes said by flickering two slightly different images on the computer screen and by interposing red and dark lenses on the glasses, 3-D is simulated on the screen.

The lab also has a $10,000 Data Glove, Lankes said. It looks like a gardener’s glove on the outside but contains a web of electrical wires inside, he said.

American students making progress
American elementary and secondary school students are inadequately prepared for the complex world of the 21st century, according to a federal report issued yesterday. The overall trends in the four subjects considered in the report—mathematics, science, reading and writing—indicate that American students improved their performance from 1980 to 1990, making up for a decline in the 1970s.

The Education Department's report, which is based on test scores from 1,611,000 students in grades 4 and 8, shows that American students are doing better in mathematics, science and writing but worse in reading.

Stricter rules on car emissions ignite debate
Representatives of the automobile and oil industries and environmentalists and state officials are set to meet today to discuss whether New York should adopt California's stringent emission rules on cars.

The auto and oil industries have already appeared before legislators to argue against state laws that would adoption California rules.

New York intends to adopt California standards, an option that Congress gave each state in the 1990 Clean Air Act, after three more administrative hearings and a vote in both houses of the state legislature.

New York has 22 counties that do not meet current federal clean air rules.

Task force recommends tolls to pay for Thruway
The New York State Thruway Authority Transition Advisory Council announced today that highway tolls should be maintained beyond their scheduled expiration in 1996.

In its final report to Gov. Mario Cuomo and the state legislature, the task force said tolls on the 670-mile Thruway brought in $23 billion in 1995 last year. About one-third of the revenue came from non-New Yorkers, according to the panel.

The panel said that the alternative to keeping the tolls would be to raise state taxes, which would be too high for the state to come up with about $200 million in tax revenue to maintain the Thruway at its current level.

There was no immediate comment on the report from Cuomo, who is on a one-week trade mission to Japan.

Report surveys administrative services

Staff reports

An informational report on administrative services and general auxiliaries was released Monday as part of the Chancellor E. Al Haefer Advisory Group's second report. The following information came from that report.

The purpose of the report is to disseminate information to members of the university community faculty, staff and students — and to provide a basis for comments and suggestions.

Administrative services is the collective term for the various units that provide the services and functions necessary to support the academic enterprises of the university. These services are grouped into three functional areas: student affairs, university relations and the chancellor's area.

Business and Finance

This division is responsible primarily for the fiscal matters of the university and is composed of 13 departments, including the Office of Business and Finance headed by Senior Vice President Louis Marcocci.

The Treasurer's Department manages the university's endowment and cash accounts. A 10-member Trustee Endowment Committee reviews the performance of the investment managers and determines investment policies.

The Comptroller's Department establishes and monitors financial accounting procedures and policies to control and safeguard university assets.

The Risk Management Department manages both self-insured and carrier-insured property and liability programs. It is responsible for collecting litigation information and processing claims.

The Environmental Health Office performs random drug tests to determine that proper precautions are being used.

The Athletic Department employs approximately 80 graduate and 800 undergraduate students to work in the university's 11 men's and nine women's varsity teams, composed of about 550 intercollegiate athletes.

The Food Services Department prepares and serves food for students, faculty and staff through residential dining in six dining centers serving approximately 6,400 students for a total of 4.3 million meals per year.

This division is responsible for the planning and maintenance of university physical resources, campus security, telecommunications, transportation and parking, recreation, maintenance of facilities, a plant and chilled water distribution system.

The Women's Budget and Financial Affairs staff advises the senior vice president and directors of facilities administration on financial planning, prepares and monitors the annual Physical Plant budget, and advises and assists in the development and modification of data systems.

Human Resources

This division serves approximately 4,000 faculty and staff and 4,000 student employees and is responsible for recommending and implementing university-wide human resource policies and consulting with deans and directors about individual personnel matters and interpreting university policies and legal issues relative to personal matters.

It also acts as mediator or arbitrator of internal grievances and represents the university in external actions. This division also oversees the functions of the Human Resources office, including the university's responsibility for affirmative action.

Student Affairs

This division serves the university's student community with a variety of programs designed to enhance student development and the university's mission. It is directed by Vice President for Student Affairs and Dean of Student Relations Edward Golden.

The Office of Student Affairs is the central administrative office of the division. It coordinates and administers the student's judicial system and publishes the Code of Student Conduct.

The Office of Student Programs provides services, leadership and direction for the co-curricular needs of the campus community.

The SU Counseling Center addresses students' counseling and mental health needs through evaluation, counseling and psychotherapy. The university uses the judicial system's judgment and provides counseling and referrals for rape and sexual assault survivors.

The following unit of Student Affairs is being treated separately in the budget reduction process. This division is responsible for the planning and maintenance of university physical resources, campus security, telecommunications, transportation and parking, recreation, maintenance of facilities, a plant and chilled water distribution system.

Women's Budget and Financial Affairs staff advises the senior vice president and directors of facilities administration on financial planning, prepares and monitors the annual Physical Plant budget, and advises and assists in the development and modification of data systems.

Women addresses sex crimes

By SHEILA DOUGHERTY
Staff Writer

Survivors of rape and sexual abuse can find help in Syracuse University's Women for Women groups, according to coordinator and co-facilitator Diane Dodge-Couillard.

"They're support groups for people who have been sexually assaulted...in college, survivors of rape and sexual assault victims," Couillard said.

"The groups meet once a week during the academic year and there are 90 minutes and extremely confidential," Couillard said.

"They're very confidential," she said.

"The meeting places and times of the groups are not public knowledge, just for safety and confidence," she said.

Women for Women groups are open to students, faculty and staff and are free. Individual groups are comprised of about eight members.

"The Women started in 1989 when three students realized that there was a need for such a group," she said.

"The first group got underway in spring 1990," she said.

"The R.A.P.E. Center took it over in the fall of 1990," she said. The center currently receives funds from the university for Women for Women groups, Couillard said.

There are several different Women for Women groups, Couillard said. There are currently groups for survivors of childhood sexual abuse and for survivors of rape or sexual assault.

"Couillard said groups for male survivors of sexual assault and survivors of lesbian assault are now in the planning stages."

Each group focuses on issues specific to a certain type of abuse, she said.

"The reason that they have broken down is that an incest survivor has different issues than somebody who's been raped," she said. "Sometimes it's just easier to connect in support with people who have similar issues."

Certain issues, such as trust, overlap in both the childhood survivors and rape survivors groups, she said.
