Big East preps for postseason

Panthers need strong second half to impress scouts

By MIKE BUSH

College football is approaching the time of year that coaches hate and speculating fans love - the bowl-game selection period.
The next few weeks will be interesting in the Big East conference. since tive teams are legitimate contenders for bowl invitations.
From this point on, every game is crucial and every loss could result in a team's exclusion from post-season action. Three conference teams with good possibilities for post-season play are Miami, Syracuse and Pittsburgh
The No. 2 Hurricanes are guaranteed a New Year's Day bowl bid and are eyeing their Nov. 16 confrontation with No. 1-ranked Florida State in the Orange Bowl.
Last week's Syracuse-Pittsburgh thriller left the Orangemen in prime contention for a Jan. 1 invite and the 5-2 Panthers with many questions.
SU, also 5-2, has Rutgers and West Virginia as their only remaining opponents over .500 , while Pittsburgh must face No. 20 East Carolina this week and 11 th-ranked Penn State on Thanksgiving.
According to Panther coach Paul Hackett, his squad must play well against the Pirates this week.
${ }^{1}$ I think this is a very. very critical game for us," Hackett said. "We've had an excellent start and we feel we're an excellent football team. You measure a football team on how strong they finish and this is where the finishing begins."

Rutgers and West Virginia enter this weekend's action with identical 5-2 records and similarly tough remaining contests.

The Mountaineers travel to Penn State Saturday, and they also have games with Miami and Syracuse left. The surprising Scarlet Knights finish their season with four.weeks According to West Virginia coach Don Nehlen, the Mountaineers are taking things one week at a time.
"Penn State may have the best defense that I've seen this year." Nehlen said. Whe're just getting ready to play Penn State, we're not concentrating on any bowls."

One interesting note concerning these two squads on the bubble - WVU hosts Rutgers on Nov. 2 in a contest that could determine which of these squads receives a bid.

And don't count Frank Beamer's Virginia Tech squad, $3-4$, out of the bowl picture just yet.

Last year, the Hokies finished the season strong, with three victories over bowl squads in the final four weeks. A similar effort this year could vault them into contention.
Things will be tough for the Hokies, but not impossible, as they have Louisville, Akron, East Carolina and Virginia remaining.
"People talk about letdowns, we can't have a letdown," Beamer said. "One more loss and we're out of bowl consideration Bamburmers

You can't say the Big East conference has been short on thrills in its initial season.

In the first seven conference games this season, five have been decided in the final minute.
Two of the five thrillers happened last week, as Syracuse nudged Pittsburgh, 31-27, on David Walker's run with nine seconds left and West Virginia stopped BC's Michael Camphell on the one-foot BC's Michael Camphell on the Miami coach Dennis Erickson said he is impressed with the performance of the is impressed with the perform

Amidst the volatile nature of college campuses and student aversion to institutions during che Vietnam War era, an inde pendent newspaper was born.
It was Tuesday. Oct. 26, 1971 and vol. 1.1 of The Daily Orange made its debut on the Syracuse University campus after a triad of newspapers collaborated.

The Daily Orange had been a major supporter of the student strike of 1970 that shut down the campus.

Editor-In-ChierSam Hemming way recalled the support of the strike inan interview conducted in 1971
"We knew we were risking the paper by our strong suppor of last spring's strike." Hemmingway said. "But we had to be honest - we were on strike oo.

happy with support for the strike and did not defend the DO when it was sued for libel in a separate incident.
The paper argued that if the administration had the right to censor the paper by withholding funds for special sections, then it had the responsibility to back the paper in the case, which was eventually settled out of court.

Familiar funding struggle
At this time. The Daily Orange competed with the The Promethean and Dialog every week. The Student Government Association (at that time it was called SA) decided it could not afford to fund all three and urged the formation of one daily paper

Originally the administration named Larry Kramer, editor of The Promethean, to be editor of the new paper.

Then editor of The Daily Orange, Paula Fabian, fought for her installation as editor and the parties involved reached an impasse.
At this time the staff of The Daily Orange selected junior Robert Heisler as editor in chief and junior Barbara Beck as managing editor. Following one hectic weekend in October 1971 the new Daily Orange hit the campus.

The editorial in that first issue presented a final explanation of the whys and wherefores of The Daily Orange.

Volume one, number one means simply that this truly is a new morning. No ties to the past journalism this space ever contained."

New method aids autistic children

BY WENDY SIMARD
Asst. Design Editor
"i intelligent idont have just inteligent $i$ odi only just intelligent inside it is hard to not talk," 4-year-old Julie typed into her special communication machine Thursday at Jowonio School in Syracuse.

Jutie is autistic.
Children with autism are now able to let the world know they are creative, intelligent people through a method of facilitated communication, Syracuse University Professor Douglas Biklen said.
Biklen, who introduced facilitated communication to the United States last August, learned of the method, which has been use in Australia since 1989 .
Facilitated communication involves the aid of a teacher, parent or speech therapist who help children to coordinate their motor functions so they can type. The aid supports an arm, shoulder or hand.

Biklen headed a conference on facilitated communication Monday and Tuesday in the Schine Student Center. Another conference will be held in January.

Support at school

Ellen Barnes, Jowonio School principal, said the facilitator's physical support helpa to calm the handicapped child's body.
Some people question whether it is the child or facilitator typing because the support given at the wrist or hand makes who is in control unclear, Bikien said.
Barnes said people at Jowonio are optimistic about facilitated communication.

Preschool teacher Carla Berrigan helps a 4-year-old autistic student, Julie, communicate on a Cannon communicator at Jowonio school.
"We don't come in contact with skeptics," she said "My staff has become believers."
Jowonio, along with the Ed Smith School in Syracuse, are pioneer schools using facilitated communication to reach out to handicapped children, Barnes said.

PBS needs funding to challenge cable

BY THOMAS SEEEEY
Staff Writer
The Public Broadcasting Service needs more funding to provide the public with quality programming in the age of cable television, said Bruce Christensen, president and chief executive officer of PBS.

Christensen spokeat the Thurs day Morning Roundtable about day Morning Roun Public broadcasting began in the 1950 s , when people started buying televisions, he said.

Many people felt the educational values and quality of radio programming could not be found on television.
Disssatisfied viewers applied for funding from the Federal Communications Commission to set aside space on the airwaves dio broadcasting, he said.
-These people envisioned that public television would use airwaves to educate and enrich the human experience," he said.
He said the public benefits most from PBS because the decisions for programming are based on what viewers want rather than on commercial profit.

Changing the face of TV
Other services will always respond to what the market needs." he said. "But with pub lic television, the people have access to control the airwaves."
PBS will face a major chalenge in the next three to five years as the technological hori zons of television expand, Chrisensen said.
He said he expects these advances will replace the existing 40 cable channels with about 200 cable chanmels. Cable services will be attempting to grab their share of the video rmarket by offering all the top movies and broadcasting with the highestaudioand video quality available, he said.

PBS needs to create new ways for the public to see the benefits of public television in the advancing market.

He said they intend to do this by expanding theirservices, such as offering a 24 -hour children's network, and other 24 -hour educational networks which would be available by subscription, he said.

Help clean Congress

A recent New York Times/CBS Poll found that "members of Congress are widely perceived by the public to be corrupt, pampered by perquisites and arrogant about their power.'

Now it's time to do something about it.

Rep. Sam Gejdenson (D-Ct.) has proposed a comprehensive campaign finance reform bill to be considered by the House of Representatives next year. It will complement a similar bill already passed by the Senate.

Gejdenson's bill would make clean campaign resources available to House candidates who agree to spend no more than $$ 600,000$ per election cycle. Then candidates could receive as much as $$ 200,000$ in federal matching funds. The funds would come from eliminating tax breaks currently enjoyed by political and business pressure groups.

House Republicans have resisted such reforms for too long. Now, at a time when public confidence in Congress is low, the House should be concerned with regaining public trust. The House would take a wise ap-

Think for a while. Since I have been in college, three of my very good friends have been buried. I conld bave been one of them but Ilike to think that God is keeping me safe. I'm not proach to that end by passing Gejdenson's bill.

Presently, challengers suffer great disadvantages in House elections. Challengers cannot compete with incumbents who, financed by powerful lobbies, spend megabucks on slick advertising. It's almost impossible for challengers to engage their opponents on key issues. The Gejdenson bill could change that situation.

Incumbents would benefit too. Members of Congress, no longer beholden to lobbyist dollars, could be free to vote their consciences on the pressing problems America faces.

If the House proposal passes and President Bush signs both the House and Senate bills, America will be one step closer to clean, responsible government. No longer will members of Congress have to lick the boots of powerful interests. No more Keating Five savings and loan scandals.

Campaign finance reform is an idea worth fighting for. Let your representative know.

I have become very confused as to the current policy of The Daily Orange. The paper has boldly taken a stand on such issues as racism, rape and sexual harassment. However, a recent cartoon depicting a crucified Jesus Christ foppishly joking on the cross appears not only to be hypocritical but a departure from a policy that champions just causes.

It does not require an religion to understand that Jesus' crucifixion has a special symbolic meaning to

"It was entirely a blur," said Heisler, who is currently editor of special projects for New York's Newsday, where he directs new product development.
"We were working entirely on in-tinct," he said. "We had no formal stinct," he said. "We had no formal guidance except our gut feeling on how a newspaper should be."
Heisler and Barbara Beck, who was selected managing editor, went to work selected managing editor, went to work producing vol. 1.1 the first independent issue 26.1971.
With a collaborated staff from The Daily Orange. Dialog and The Promethean listed alphabetically on the masthead, the newspaper was run by a collective with no hierarchy, Heisler said.

Orange you glad

During that first weekend of production a new name for the newspaper was to make its debut.
"The reason it's still called The Daily Orange is because we couldn't think of a better name." Heisler said of the hectic a better name, Heisle irst weekend of work.

According to Heisler, vol. 1.1 of the paper was "a terrible piece of journalism," The staff was more concerned about getting the paper off the ground and stabilizing the advertising base.
"Once we got out of the burlap bag, it was easy to swim," he said.
The job might have become more stable, but as one of the staff members of that first venture pointed out, the society in which the students were immersed was very unstable.

Larry Kramer, who is now executive editor of The San Francisco Examiner, was the editor of The Promethean at the time of the collaboration

After graduating from SU and attend ing Harvard University, Kramer followed many of his colleagues at the paper and went into the journalism field. He was a reporter for The Examiner and later The Washington Post before he went to the Post-owned The Trentonian Times as an editor.

This one of the DO's stronges points. We have the privilege of saying we rely solely on our writers and editors for stories and editorials.
Long editorial hours
The Daily Orange provides the SU community with the most extensive cam editors, many of whom are dual majors in the Newhouse School of Public Com munications and another school, usually put in 40 to 50 hours a week without any on-staff faculty advisers, professional input or university interference.
The independence, however, brings its share of responsibility. The DO is not without fanlts. We make mistakes that, if we had a faculty or professional adviser on staff. we might not make. While we do our best to maintain accurate and do our best to maintain accurate and complete coverage of the SU campus, sometimes we screw up and then do our best to rectify the problem.
Often times, letters and criticisms are taken into account in the day-to-day operation of the paper. For example, the DO could use more investigative reporting about the university, as one letter recently commented. If someone reading this column agrees. come in and make yourself known. No one is turned away. Just don't sit and complain without taking action.

assistant at the Post before becoming that paper's metro editor. He then returned to The Examiner.

From his office in California he recalled the trends around the country for taking school newspapers independent during the early 1970s.

Political problems

The politics of the DO got it in trouble With the advertisers," Kramer said in reference to the stance editors took on Vietnam War era issues. "After a disastrous year the school was losing money on it and we used The Promethean Still. Kramer said, the new product wasn't "conservative by any means ... It wasn't "conservative by any means

One other staff member from the 1971 independent DO had a different point of view about the politics of the day which gives him a different perspective of that ontroversial time.
Robert Herzog, who is currently a sports editor for Newsday, was sports editor of the new venture and found his editor of the new venture and found his sports page relegated to the inside of the paper in lieu of protest coverage,
"I was sort of a conservative guy at a liberal campus in a time of turmoil." Herzog said.
Along with keeping a short haircut, Herzog said he was worried about the politics of the newspaper because The Daily Orange "devoted more time to the Seattie iberation front than to issues in But this coms.
But this combination of polities and the turmoil involved made it a very interesting time to go independent, he

Freedom to clunk around

A professional crew at Manlius Publishing (where the DO is still printed) used to paste up the paper before the staff took it independent. But this newfound freedom presented the staff with all the duties of autonomous paste-up.

For a time he said the staff lost sight of being a school newspaper as it took on a new brand of journalism and promoted advocacy of causes.

Revolutionaries protested everything and for a time being there was an anti-sports backlash." Herzog said refer ring to people who thought sports were not important during a time of national not im

But, he added, "The paper was always a big voice on campus. With independence it became a bigger voice.

Herzog said The Daily Orange as an expressive independent newspaper in an emotional era was surely "a product of the times.

SU not pressing against Pittsburgh

By ZEV BOROW

The Syracuse University volleyball team heads to the University of Pittsburgh for what some feel is a pressure game.

The weekend match between the Orangewormen, $18-3$ and 6 - 1 Big East, and the Panthers, 15-6, 4-0, pits the two top teams in the Big East conference standings, as well as the two highest regionally-ranked teams in the East, against one another.

At stake is a shot at the regular season Big East championship, the No. 1 seed in the Big East tourmament and the claim to being the top team in clam Ent.

All this, however, is not enough for coach Dan Schulte enough for coach Dan Schulte to call this weekend's face-on with the Panthers a pressure game.
"We can't focus on winning," Schulte said. "We need to play hard and stay with them and see where the chips fall.
"We can't make winning the total emphasis. That's when we have mental lapses and focus too much on the score and not enough on the tame.

The Orangewamen opened the season with nine consecutive wins and proceeded to surpass the pre-season expectations of many. Schulte said Syracuse's success placed an undo amount of pressure on the Orangeof pres women.
"Our success in the beginning of the year made everybody notice us," Schulte said. "And everybody started to say. 'You've got to win, win, win. I think it got to us."

With that in mind. Schulte has made playing hard and having fun the focus for this weekend.
"It is an important game and they are a very talented team." Schulte said, "But we just want to play hard and have a little more fun and stay loose."
Don't let Schulte's newfound laid-back, easygoing attitude fool you. The Orangewamen will be fired up for Friday night's matehup with Pitt, according to junior Andrea Carson.
"We will definitely be intense for Pitt." Carson said. "We're just trying not to put too much pressure on ourselves."
"Do I want to win? Hell yes! Does (the team) want to win? Absolutely," Schulte said.

SU will have to do more than want to win if it intends to challenge the Panthers on their home court.
The Orangewomen will be facing the talents of Pitt sophomore Annamarie Mernagh, who is among the top five conference leaders in hitting, kills, assises and defense in the Big East.
"We feel we can beat thern," Schulte said. "Right now it is anybody's game."

This weekend's women's field hockey game against 18 thranked Providence College might serve as a post-season preview. According to midfielder Denine Groff, Saturday's matchup will be a preview of the first round of the Big East Championships on Nov, 9 .

"If Connecticut does okay for he remainder of the season we wouldn't get the top seed ahead of them, because of Connecticut's strength of schedule," she said.

The Orangewomen will play a second game on Sunday against the University of Rhode against Island.

With so much attention being paid to the conference game. Parker fears a letdown against U's non-conference foc.
"The fatigue factor is some-Because of the meaning attached to these games, Groff said the level of competition will be a helpful hint for the future. It's going to be a very aggressive hard-fought game," Groff said. "I'm really looking forward to it. I would say that this is probably our tought-st weekend."

According to Groff, if the Orangewomen can prevail in their game against the Friars, they will gain an edge in the upcoming tournament.
"I feel if we beat them now it will give us an edge when it really counts," she said.

It's rip on East Carolina week.
Some band-wagoners (Letters, Oct. 23) wrote the DO this week criticizing my selection of Syracuse over East Carolina. Hey, buddy, the only people to pick the Pirates in that game were you, two cheerleaders and the team mascot.

Teams share record, nothing else

By JOSH BARNETT Assf. Sports Editor
Syracuse University and Rutgers University enter this weekend's game with identical 5-2 records, but that may be all the two teams have in common.
SU faces Rutgers on Saturday at noon in Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J.

The 18th-ranked Orangemen, 7 - 0 Big East, have played four ranked teams and are in contention for a major bowl.
On the other hand, the Scarlet Knights, 1-0, have had a roller coaster season featuring a 20 - point loss to Duke University and a seven-point victory over Michigan State University.
"We're not a great football team or anything close to it," Rutgers coach Doug Graber said. "We haven't overwhelmed anybody,. we've simply hung in there with people."
Despite the apparent differences, the Orangemen are not underestimating the Scarlet Knights, according to tailback Sarlet Knight Underestimating an opponent cost SU a 23-20 loss two weeks ago to East Carolina University.
"The ECU loss) is the motivational tool," said Walker, who ran for a carcerhigh 138 yards last week against Pittsburgh. "We're out in practice saying we're not going to have another game

"The easiest way to explain it is $2-5$ "The easiest way to explain it is $2-5$ to 5-2," SU coach Paul Pasqualoni said "And they have their quarterback."
The Scarlet Knights' quarterback is Tom Tarver, who missed last season's game with a knee injury.

Tarver has started 11 consecutive games since missing the SU game. This season, the senior quarterback has completed 122-of-226 passes for 1,396 yards and seven touchdowns.
"He's a great athlete," said SU inside linebacker Glen Young, who leads the team with 86 tackles. "He's going to stay there and wait and wait for his receivers, there and wait and wait for his receivers, but we think we can razzle him a little but we think we can razzle

Graber said he attributes the Rutgers turnaround to a solid defense and a relatively soft schedule, but he hasn't forgotten last season's Eame.

In last season's shutout, the SU defense held Rutgers to 33 yards rushing and 78 yards passing while running up 503 yards in total offense.
"Syracuse was the one team that thoroughly dominated us last year," Graber said. "They really physically embarrassed us last year. It's a good embarrassed us last year. Tts a good measure of our progress. They re best team we will have played so far."

This season, the Scarlet Knights' of fense has been hurt by a struggling offensive line which has short-circuited their rushing attack.

Galich powers streaking Syracuse attack

By JEFF ELBAUM

Staff Writer
The Syracuse University soccer team peppered 15 shots at Hartwick College goalie Scott Vanderwall on Wednesday, but only one crossed the goal line.
SU forward Nino Galich scored the only goal of the game at 64:08 to give the Orangemen, 8-7, 2-4 Big East, a 1-0 victory.
"(Lee Davison) crossed the ball from the right side," Galich said. "It went over everyone, and I was over on the left side. I got the ball and had one guy to beat. I beat him, and just shot it from the top of the 18 (yard-line)."

The win over Hartwick, 8-6-2, has given the Orangemen two victories in the last three games, and SU coach Dean Foti said Galich has been a big reason Foti said Galich has been a for the team's recent success.
"Nino's been playing well," Foti said. "Nino's part of the reason I think we're doing as well as we're doing. His last three games probably have been his best games to date."

For the second straight road game, SU defender Chris Wright and goalie Steve Pollnow didn't start because of disciplinary reasons. Foti refused to specify why the two were punished, but said it was unrelated to their benehing on Oct. 13 against St. John's.

Both Wright and Pollnow played in Both Wright

Davison said Pollnow came up big in recording four saves, when Hartwick stepped up their attack:.
"Hartwick was really pressing," Davison said. "They pushed their sweeper forward for the whole second half. Pollnow played really well."

Davison said the Orangemen's recent success could be attributed to some late-season lineup changes made by Foti.
"It seems like everyone's settling down," Davison said. "Michael (Britton) is playing more in the midfield than on the wing. Chris (Wright) moved up a bit, and wichard (Alexander) is back at sweeper now, where I think he might have been better off at the beginning of the year."

Syracuse University defenseman Richard Alexander, shown in action earlier this season, and the Orangemen host the University of Pittsburgh at 2 p.m. on Sunday at Coyne Field.

The Orangemen have a pivotal conference match-up against the University of Pittsburgh on Saturday at 2 p.m. at Coyne Field.

For the Orangemen to make the Big East tournament they have to beat Pitt and then Georgetown on Nov. 3. If Villanova gets more than one point in their final three Big East games, SU theill be eliminated.

Villanova the first time out and not took them so lightly, we wouldn't be waiting around to see what their results are, Foti said. "It's our own fault, and that's the beauty of playing head-to-head with teams. If you beat them, they're behind you, and if you don't beat them, they're ahead of you."
The game on Saturday is at Coyne Field due to the NBA game in the Field due to Carrier Dome.

Galich said that playing at Coyne Field gives Pittsburgh more of an advantage against SU.
"If we were playing at the Dome, it would be a lot easier," Galich said. "Like I thought with Villanova, if we played them in the Dome, we would have beat them. It's tough playing at Coyne. It gets windy there. During the day it's just so fast that it's hard to string any passes fast that ${ }^{1}$

Memorial service honors Little  By ROBERT SHIELDS

Asst. News Editor
A large gold cross, a framed picture and a single red rose were the only things on the altar at Hendricks Chapel Friday.
Next to the altar was a collage of pictures of Jessica J. Little and her friends, many of whom were at the emotional memorial service Friday held in memory of the Syracuse University junior who died Oct. 1 I.

Little's family sat surrounded by her closest friends. Her roommate, Monica Georgi, cried as she spoke about Little.
"I know she's watching us and she's happy and she loves us all," said Georgi, a junior international relations major.
"She looked past my faults and always supported me," she said. "She was the most important person in my life.
Little, 20, a psychology major, died of a blood clot in her lungs.
The Rev. Thomas V. Wolfe, Protestant chaplain at SU, presided over the service which was attended by about 150 people.

Wolfe likened the effect of Little's death to a pond.

A pond in the morning is still and calm." he said. "If a rock drops into the middle, it causes a disturbance that makes waves all the way to the shore."
"The void is greatest felt at the center "The void is greatest felt at the center, the closest point to the disturbance." he said. "But then, the waves rush back from the shore and fill the void."
"If the hurting is not exposed, the healing cannot begin," he said.

"We made a sacrifice for her to go to SU ... and she spent the last few years doing things she really wanted to do." she said.
Georgi said the service was an opportunity for the SU community to pay their last respects to Little and let her family see her friends.

They missed out on her life here so this was an opportunity for them to see her friends and the impact she had on them," she said.
"Jessie said she used to feel tike just a social security number at Syracuse, Panelists examineThe media and its representation of the news has changed dramatically over the years, and not necessarily for the better, panelists said at a seminar Thursday night.

The Museum of Television & Radio in New York City has brought a traveling "time machine" called "Witness to History" to Syracuse University.
It consists of 16 audio and videotaped segments of news coverage beginning with the Munich Crisis of 1938 and concluding with the Persian Gulf war and the beating of Rodney King by Los Angeles police.

A panel of five and the museum's curator, Ron Simon, led a seminar that summarized the thrust of the exhibition with an 18 -minute clip of some highlights.

The panel consisted of David French, news anchor/correspondent for CNN; Marlene Sanders, former network news correspondent for ABC and CBS; Scott Ackinson, news reporter for WTUH-TV; Jay Rosen, professor at New York University and media critic; and Lois Bianchi,SU professor and television producer.

GSO revenue woes to force spending cuts

By THOMAS SEELEY

Staill Writer
The Graduate Student Organization of Syracuse University passed a proposal to reduce funding to campus-wide services by 2.78 percent at its monthly senate meeting Thursday night.
Campus-wide services include groups like University Union, SU Ambulance and The Daily Orange.

GSO President Mark Rupprecht said he had hoped to avoid these cuts, but recent budget meetings showed that recent budget meetings showed that GSO revenues are well behind

He proposed to return the cuts to the groups if the GSO is in a better financial position next spring.
Rupprecht also discussed a proposal for a cooperative day care center for children of graduate students and the creation of an on-campus graduate housing complex using vacant residence space on campus.

Vice President Joe Serbin announced alterations to the status of academic units in the senate.

New additions

Law and public policy and human resources management have been added to the senate, while organization and management has been deleted as a subunit.
Army comptrollership is not now recognized as a distinct degree program, but is being considered as a subunit of management.
There are now 66 recognized senators, which is more than there have been in recent years, he said.
Bruce Kirby, senate comptroller, questioned how much money should be allocated to each academic unit.

State  Minority activist slain on Queens street

A labor organizer for a group that pressured construction companies to hire black and Hispanic workers was shot to death near his Queens home Friday.

Police said Saturday that they were investigating the possibility that he was slain because of his work for minorities.

Detectives said the victim. Earl Hicks, an organizer for the Minority Coalition, was shot by someone waiting for him.

Hicks, who was going to work at nearby office used by the coalition. was shot five times in the head and body.

Police said they had no suspects and that the motive for the murder was unclear, although its execution style appeared to rule out a random killing.

Detectives said they are investigating a possible link between his murder and a possible link between his murder and involvement with the Queens Minority Coalition.

Hicks' work as a labor organizer sometimes entailed picketing and led to rough confrontationsat construction site with workers on the job or with rival groups seeking work for minorities.

Speaker addresses forms of oppression

By LAURA HARDING
Staff Writer
Racism, sexism, mentalism, able-bodyism and other forms of oppression stem from physical appearances, peer counseling instructor Deborah Williams said at Friday's Women's Lecture Series.

Oppression comes in many ways and we tend to think of it in terms of a pecking order of white men, white women, black men, black women and then children." she said.

The oppression against a person is multiplied if that person is also physically or mentally chalthat person is also $p$
"One thing people don't realize about people who are physically challenged is that it takes more effort for them to do things." she said. "They also have to rest more because it takes so much more effort."

According to Williams, there are visible and non-visible disabilities.
"It's sometimes easier to recognize the visible disabilities of a wheelchair, crutches or cane." she said.
Invisible disabilities include environmental sensitivities, diabetes and back problems, Williams said.

Oppressive sociely

"Our society is so oppressive in the way in which it deals with tiredness and pain,", she said. "We arent supposed to recognize that weve got pain.

Although society tries to avoid acknowledging pain, there is a billion-dollar pharmaceuticalindus try which deals

The medical community, according to Williams, also makes money trying to get women to conform to a certain body size and weight.
"Medication only makes you believe that the pain doesn't matter - the pain itself is still there," she said

Many accommodations, such as wheelchair ramps for the disabled, are not helpful to them, she said. When people are trying to accommodate the disabled ... they just assume what their needs are,"
Williams said.

Many people who want to help are worried that a disabled person won't accept that help." she said. Likewise those who struggle with a disability must also ask if they really want help, how to go must also ask if they really want help, how to go about asking for help and what the response will be Williams said.

Building allies
People wanting to help anyone should make sure they are not helping out of a need to help, but because they choose to do so, she said.
"One way in which oppression can be stopped is to build allies," Williams said "To be a true ally you have to do it, not when it"s easy, most popular or most comfortable for you, but do it when it's hard and not easy for you or the oppressed person," she said.

Isolation of disabled people can be directly linked to sending children into a corner when they are bad, Williams said.
"You weren't supposed to be looked at, heard from or given attention to, if you were bad," she said. Children and people with disabilities therefore have a feeling of not being in charge or in control, she said.
"Many people also have a fear of those with disabilities like 'My God, I might get it too," Williams said.

In fighting and dealing with disabilities, Williams suggests "walking a mile in the other person's shoes."
"In order to know what it's like to be disabled, think of yourself when you were a baby," she said.
"You couldn't talk or move and were totally dependent on someone else for your survival and your quality of life," Williams said.

Cuomo for president

New York State Governor Mario Cuomo absolutely should run for president in 1992.

Why?

George Herbert Walker Bush.
Since Cuomo is probably the only Democratic candidate, or non-candidate, as the situation now stands, with a prayer to win the presidential race, he should run for president and take a stab at Bush's obsession with foreign policies.

If he does run, it will be necessary to hit Bush where it hurts - on domestic issues and policies. As Republican foes search for loopholes in his platform, Cuomo will have to vindicate many of his actions during his term as governor, like a clemency order given to a man convicted of killing a sheriff.

While his track record in New York State is less than stellar with frequent tax increases on record, new blood in the White House may prove advantageous in the long run. Bush has been raising taxes, even after hundreds of assurances to do the contrary. Cuomo has been raising taxes in New York, which he claims is a result of Bush's budgetary ignorance. Bush has vetoed numerous civil rights legislation and crime bills. Cuomo has allowed crime and discrimination to run rampant in one of the largest cities in the world - New York City, which is small potatoes compared to the entire United States.
So, in essence, what is the difference between a spend-thrift Republican and a tax-all Democrat? Nothing, as long as unemployment continues to skyrocket and budgets remain unbalanced.

Run, Mario, run. You may save us from another four years of domestic disregard.

But that is a big "maybe."

Downsizing trend hits Spectrum

Store must restructure to remain in business

By IUSTINE CIOVACCO
Contributing writer
Amidadrop insales revenues, studentowned and operated store Spectram plans to downsize some of its departments.
"Spectrum's not in danger of poing under," Eric Duenwald, Spectrum's general manager. said. "It will continue to exist, though it will need restructuring. The retail sections could definitely be resitructured."
"The type of products may change, but not their quality, Ritu Angerwale, business manager. added.

Spectrum. located in the Schine Student Center, includes four sections: flowers. 1 ravel, music and video rentals.

Even with all four sections cornhined. the company barely manages to keep it: divisions are low or non-existent.

Duenwald and Aggerwale estimate the florist and the Blinker snack bar in Huntington Beard Crouse bring in the most returns, while the video section ultimately loses money.

Spectrum Travel makes a mere 2 percent on the airplane tickets it sells and only 7 percent from most other tickets. The company also pays for its phone service and the salaries of its head workers.

One measure the store vows not to take is cutting itt-work force:

There will definitely benp letting go of employees. The whole point of Spectrum is to let the students run their own business. Our most important job, besides ofering campus retall. is to give them experience." Duenwald said.
Try to avoid price hikes
Likewise, the company does not want to raise its prices.
"Spectrum has goods at the towest possible cost to the customers. If we raised the prices of the products, we wouldn't be competitive with other area stores. especially in the muxic soles," Duenwald said.

Instead, the store is trying to increase sales with specials, like the Midnight Madness Sales.
The sales consist of selling new music releases at the carliest possible time before their street dates, usually at 12:01 a.m.

Two recent sales. for Guns $\mathrm{N}^{\mathbf{N}}$ Roses Use Your Illusion I \& II and Prince's Diamonds and Pearls with Public Enemy's Apocalypse gI .... The Enemy $^{2}$ Strikes Black; attracted large crowds.
$-$
An estimated 600 to 700 people attended the Guns N' Roses sale, while the more recent Prince/Public Enemy sale brought roughly 250 people into the store.
Sales help out
The company hopes the sales will improve the music section's business by encouraging people to buy other products as well as the new releases.
"The sales do help us." Aggerwale said. "Pcople come and it's a lot of fun for them. Plus, they get their music ... often at a sale price. They come down and crank up their music and enjoy themselves.
Most who have attended the sales think they are a good idea.
"The great thing about the sales is that everyone there has the same interest in music and you know that," said freshman Jeanene Fowler after the Prince' Publit Enemy aale. "I'd go again. It's worth it, if you really like the band, to get the CD first ... before your friends."

Regardless of how much money the store has made in the past. it always loses some due to thefts. Therefore, this semester the company has taken new security measures.

Last year we had significant losses due to thefts." Duenwald said. "This year we're in the process of training the employees on how to handle the customcrs. The new system intimidates people. and that's important because the fewer people who steal from the company, the more profits come into the store.'

Robinson also hosted several public affairs programs and re placed Maury Povich when he left WTTG's daytime talk show, Panorama, to begin hosting Fox's syndicated A Current Aftair. Robinson has been co-anchor of The 10 OClock News since June 1990.

Robinson is clearly happy to be a part of the broadcast news business.
"This is an industry with so much (economic) trouble that I'm happy to be working and very fortunate to be part of the team that is the No. 1 independent news broadcast in the country. We just got our rating numbers and we are kicking butt. if I do say so myself," she added.

It is also clear that Robinson has great admiration for her Fox employer.

I love the challenging notions and options that Fox will throw at you from time to time," Robinson said.

When she's not at the studio, Robinson spends time each year as a volunteer at the Broadcast Wash Journalists that attempts to involve primarily minority high school students in the media.

Although she enjoys the opportunity to volunteer at the Broadcast Factory, Robinson said she probably won't be teaching any college courses anytime soon.
"There's too much extra paperwork dealing with an ad ministration and schools and rules and regulations," Robinson said. "I'm here to tell you managers of television stations are enough rules and regulations."

Breaking in is hard to do
Before she faced living with management's rules and regulations, Robinson first had to get into "the business."
broadcasting is difficult for anyone to break into, Robinson feels minorities have an especially dificult time finding work because of the tone of society.
"We (need to) get managers, who are primarily white males, to understand that there are talented minorities, and it's not just African-Americans, and that it's not a bad thing to hire us," Robinson said. "As a matter of fact, it's good business because society is packed with all kinds of shades and backgrounds and beliefs, and I think a manager should want their shop to reflect as much of that community as possible.
"It would be nice that it would be a thought, not an afterthought, to hire a minority," Robinson said. "We've got to get that message across."

As she got ready to head into the studio to tape a news up date, Robinson gave a few words of wisdom to current Newhouse students.
*Samuel 1. Newhouse School of Communications almost wore my little fanny out, but I loved the challenge of it," Robinson said. "If you do not love it do not waste your time, your en ergy or your precious parents dellars. Do not put yourself through the misery of those snowstorms up there because so not going to benefit you in t's not going to benefit you in "Ye long run.

Youll come into this indus try as a bitter, angry person. and weve got enough twisted bitterness in this business as it s, we don't need that attitude. Robinson warned. "We need the positive, progressive attitude that's going to serve our community and our society.
The now familiar smile again worked its way across Robinson's face as she remembered Syracuse winters. "You've just got to work hard, and pray it doesn't snow all year."

on long drives rather than hoping for the big play.

WWe still have got to be able to move the chains," Pasqualoni said. "Sometimes you liveby the big play. you die by the big play.

Syracuse came out of intermission and put together an 11-play, 37-yard drive in the first 5 :34 seconds of the second half exsminating in a John Biskup 40-yard field goal.

The Orangemen assembled another scoring drive culminat. ing in a siskup 29-yard field goal 10 seconds into the fourth quarter to extend the lead to six points at 13-7.

The Orangemen's ability to make the big plays turned out to be the difference in the defensive game.
"They had big plays." Rutgers defensive back Keith Price said.

After alternating four play series. the Scarlet Knights were forced to punt on their next possessiun. A 10-yard shank by David Dunne gave SU the ball at the Rutgers 35 -yard line.

"We couldn't capitalize when we had the opportuaities." The Oramgemen's abilities left their mark on the Scarlet Knights. according to linebucker Elnardo Webster.
"Normal guys get stopped, maybe even tackled for a loss and you line up again." said Webster, who had two sacks. *Great players make great plays and they rmade plavs to help their team win.

on people. It was just running to the ball."

When Tarver got the ball he was under heavy pressure from a strong Syracuse pass rush. If he was not sacked. he was forced to get rid of the ball in a hurry.
'The kids played hard and were very disruptive up front," WU coach Paul Pasqualoni said. "We combined a good pass rush with decent coverage so Tarver with decent coverage so tarver couldn"t settle in. read the defense and throw where he wanted to.

The lack of protection did not allow Tarver to hit the receivers who were open, said Rutgers wideout Jim Guarantano. Guarantano led the Big East with 41 receptions corning into the game.
"We were open and I felt I was oper a lot," he said. "All I know is Tarver was on his back a low."

Tarver was hit especially hard on one of the Knight's few scoring threats.

Early in the fourth quarter with Rutgers trailing 13-7, the Knights moved the ball to the SU 41-yard line.

On the next four plays, the Orangemen drove Rutgers back yards including a 35 -yarder which made him the all-time leading punt returner in Rutgers history.

Place kicker John Biskup was responsible for seven points in the 21-7 victory with feeld goals of 40 and 29 -yards and an extra point.

Biskup is now 11 -for- 15 on field goal attempts and perfect on 25 point afters.

Both SU kickers also had to battle the tricky wind in Giants Stadium.
"They just ignored everything and kicked the football," Pasqualoni said. "They got us out of a hole so many times." Reverse curse

The Orangemen's reverse of the fake option has become one of their most successful offen-

29 yards
On first down, Bill Banley rushed for a three yard loss. On second down, George Rooks dropped Tarver for a nine yard sack. Rooks forced a fumble and, in addition to the sack, had three other tackles for losses.
On third down. Mitchell sacked Tarver for a 17 -yard loss, leaving the Scarlet Knights with a 4 th-and-33 from their own 35 -yard line.
"George Rooks and Kevin Mitchell are so athletic," Pasqualoni said. "Their timing was great because we anticipated the pass and so we were sble to come off the ball very. very hard. That was key to the game."
Even though the Orangemen's dominating defensive effort was much needed. Pasqualoni said. they must still continue to improve as the team heads toward the final stage of the season.
"You are never as good as you think, and you are never as bad as you think," Pasqualoni said. "We played a pretty perfect game on defense, but the reality is we weren't perfect. There's still things we need to improve upon.'

Sports Editor Kent Fischer contributed to the writing of this story.

sive plays.

Syracuse hats used the reverse at least once in six of their seven games and each time it has gained yardage. Saturday's game against Rutgers was no exception.

Both wide receivers Qadry Ismail and Shelby Hill ran the reverse and led the Orangemen's rushing attack with one carry each.

Ismail broke a 65-yard reverse to the right and then cut across the field for SU's first touchdown

Hill took his turn at the reverse and went down the left sideline for a 45 -yard gain. which set upSU's decisive touch:down in the fourth quarter.
"When we run that play they have to respect it," Pasqualoni said. "They have to respect the option. The illusion of the option is always there."

Private companies aid student job hunt

By TED GLANZER
Contributing writer
Given the status of the economy and the competitiveness of today's job markets, it is becoming increasingly difficult for recent graduates to find employment in their respective fields.

While students sceking career counseling and job information qenerally work with Syracuse University Career Placement Service. several private ment service. several private Companies such as KiNexus and Job Link are being formed to aid students and alumni to alleviate the stress that accompanies a job search.

"KiNexus has been around for three years and provides a service which links prospective candidates to companies," said eastern manager Scoti Thomas-

Students and alumni may subscribe to KiNexus through their university's career placement center or may enter their ment center or may enter their name on the KiNexus data base name on the on their own.

When candidates place their names on the database, they list specifications such as which region of the country they wish to work in and their desired field of employment.

Companies such as IBM, AT&T and Hertz pay a fee to gain access to the database and match desired cundidates to the job they wish to fill.

50,000 job-seekers
KiNexuscurrently has 50.000 names in its database.
"It's important to realize that we aren't a headhunter," Thomas said. "We are not the middle man. Instead, we place the company in direct contact with the prospective candidate via the database.

If a school's career center does not subscribe to KiNexus, undergraduates may independently gain access to the service for $$ 20$ and alumni for $$ 30$ for one year.

If a university's placement center has KiNexus installed. it is usually frec of charge.

With the reduction of oncampus recruiters. the service is an easy, low-risk way to give information to companies. At the same time, companies don't have to deal with want ads. Thomas said.

Job Link is another company that provides employment information to students and compamatio.
"KiNexus is a resume database, Job Link is just the opposite," said Paul Jones, president of Job Link. "Instead of the company looking for the candicate, the candiate looks for jobs on our system.

Spreading nationally
Originally based in the West. Job Link went national in July, with subscribers such as Stanford and Georgia Tech.

Like KiNexus. Job Link operates with the career centers of universities. "Employers tell us the schools they wish to subsidize and we offer those schools our service," Jones said.

Students who are looking for employment use the Job Link database in their school's placement center. The candidate may use a computer to call up a menu that lists openings.

The candidates may choose what type of industry, where they wish to work and specific jobs they wish to perform.

Cathy Speach, assistant director of recruiting at SU. said the university does not sub the university does n
"Six services have contacted us," Speach said. "We evaluated them and came to the conclusion that the Career Placement Service offers the same things."

Speach said services such: as Job Link andid KiNexus group candidates together. This makes competition greater if students from SU have to compete with Harvard and Columbia graduates.

The Career Placement Service took the position not to get involved at all with services like KiNexus and Job Link.
-People I have spoken to are not satisfied with the services. There is a lot of advertising and publicity but they do not offer information on how many students have been hired as a result of their services," Speach said.

\section*{Center provides career information}

By VINCENT SALISBURY Staff Writer

When people think of Washington, D.C., the word "red tape" often comes to mind. This is the last thing you want to run into when job hunting in Washington.

Fortunately, if you are seeking work in the area, there are a number of people and resources available to help you cut through job search red tape.
If you are going to be in Washington, make a trip to the Greenberg House at 2301 Calvert St. NW near Woodley Park. This is Syracuse University's home base in the capital and a key source of career information.

Dugald Guilles, director of development at Greenberg House, said that students can call the Greenberg Job Hothine at 202-797-5945 to learn of openings he has received.
In addition, the Greenberg House has four binders of importance to SU students looking for work.

The first one includes job openings that are sent and called into the staff at the Greenberg House.

The second one has a few hundred names of alumni who are willing to speak with students looking for internships or full-time positions.

The third binder includes resumes of individuals looking for work in Washington that alumni can look through.

The fourth binder contains a publication called Opportunities in Public Affairs that is published bi-weekly and lists more than 200 current jobs in the area for many different majors.

\section*{An alumni network}

Gilles said that students can also get the names of three alumni groups in the region known as the SU Club of Washington, the Maxwell D.C.

Alumni Association and the Newhouse D.C. Alumni Association.

The alumni clubs serve as a way to make friends and network with others who have shared similar experiences while studying at SU.

Closer to home, there are resources on campus that can help you find out about organizations and job opportunities in the eity.

Bird Library and the Newhouse Resource Center both subscribe to The Washington Post. In addition, Bird Library has the Washington. D.C., area phone books available for finding organizations' addresses and phone numbers.

If you are interested in gov-ernment-related positions or directories go to the Maxwell School Placement Office in Room 214. Anne Stewart, the director, can show you the resources her office has and can provide advice to aid you in your job search.

The Placement Center also has resources on job searching in Washington, D.C. One of the publications is the June 1991 edition of Syracuse University Magazine. This issue featured interviews with dozens of alumni in Washington working in various organizations.
If you are interested in working in an international environment. Washington, D.C.. can satisfy this desire.

Every country and most international organizations have offices in Washington.
One SU alumni's first job was working in the Japanese embassy as an administrative assistant. She was able to meet many key leaders and to learn more about the culture

Job hunting anywhere is not an easy process. but the resources available to SU students looking for work in Washington. D.C., help to make it more manageable.
Salisbury is a graduate stu dent emploved at the SU Placement Center. The Job Connection" is published each Monday in the Lifestyle section of The Daily Orange.

\section*{National Park Service celebrates anniversary}

\section*{Changing role brings difficulties}

\section*{By IIM HORTON}

Staill bviter
In 1916 the National Park Service Act brought the National Park Service into being with the aim of conserving "the scenery and the natural and historic objects and the wildife therein and to provide for the enjoyment of the same."

Now celebrating its 75th anniversary, the number of Park Service attractions has ballooned from the orifinal 36 to 358 . covering more than 80 million acres.

When most people think of the National Park Service, they conjure up images of the Grand Canyon or Old Faithful, but that is just the tip of the iceberg. The NPS also preserves and protects historical artifacts. sites. monuments, battlefields and more.

As it has grown, the NPS has had to adapt and face constantly changing roles.

One of the roles that is becoming more prominent has been law enforcement. Duncan Morrow, a spokesman for the NPS in Washington. D.C.. said crime is a growing concern because of the everinereasing number of park visitors.
"Your typical ranger didn't join the force to be a cop," he said.

Morrow suggested that a possible alternative might be the establishment of a park police force separate from rangers. This has already been done at sites in metropolitan areas such as New York City and Washington, D.C., and may be expanded to other parks in the future.

Too many cars spoil the park
Another problem that stems from overcrowding is increased traffic. At many parks the number of automobiles is overwhelming.
"Some parks have reached their saturation points," Morrow said, "not with people, but with what brings people.

In Yosemite, rangers must often deny entry to some tourists in automobiles until others have left.

Morrow said the bus systems have helped relieve some of the pressure, but more must be done in many areas. New tramsportation alternativessuch as monorails have been proposed; however, all must be researched carefully to minimize environmental impact as well as cost.

Another responsibility that the NPS has had to take on is that of scientific research. Again, this is a function of population growth.
"Originally there really weren't any population centers threatening the borders of the more remote parks." Morrow said. "Now they're on the doorstep.

This has led to an increase in air. water and noise pollution. Scientific research is now a must for the parks system, which is responsible for restricting such pollution. New ways to measure and combat pollution are being developed.

Historical and environmental research are also important functions. Morrow said.

Deapite these changing roles, the NPS has managed to endure and forge ahead. Morrow suggested this might be because the National Parks hold "an emotional significance for most A mericans.'

We are living in one of the most rapidly changing societies ever. Morrow said, where the difference between generations is enormous. Amid all this, Morrow said, the national parks "give continuity not only to our own lives but to generations of Americans."

\section*{Information studies professors receive grant to improve system \\ \section*{BY CHRISTOPHER CLAY}}

\section*{Contributing Writer}

Making the process of information gathering more efficient is the ultimate goal of a study being conducted by two Syracuse University assistant professors.
Current document retrieval systems are relatively poor in terms of precision, said Elizabeth Liddy, an assistant professor in the School of Information Studies.

A person who puts out a query for information may receive thousands of documents pertaining to some aspect of the query," she said. "But many of those documents will not provide the individual with exactly the information he or she with exacty is seeking."
The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) recently awarded a two-year, \($ 689,000\) grant to Liddy and assistant professor Sung Myaeng

At a kickoff meeting this fall. DARPA announced IST as one of six contractors chosen to improve the state of computer information-retrieval systems for DARPA's \($ 8\) million TIPSTER project. The project is aimed at creating intelligent computer workstations to improve access to information.

\section*{Similar to SUlirs}

The SULIRS system utilized by SU's Bird Library was an example of an inadequate information systern, Myaeng said. It has been replaced by the Surnmit system.
"Let us say that we're looking for articles on information retrieval," he said. "Mpically, what the system would do is look for all the documents that actually have the terms information and retrieval in the document.
"So it has nothing to do with the relationship between the two terms." he said.

\section*{Hare speaks on language of racism}

\section*{BY LAKSHMI SINGH}

Staff Writer

\section*{Exploring the proper use of language} will help people become more aware of racism in their communities and on college campuses, according to Dr. Bruce Hare, chairman of Syracuse University's African-AmericanStudies department.

Educating people about proper ethnic identification can make them more sensitive to the proper use of language, Hare said.
"The choice of language informs (people), often unintentionally, as to who is an insider or outsider ... enfranchised or cursed," Hare said.

Hare's speech on racism was part of a conference sponsored by the InterReligious Council of Central New York on Saturday and Sunday.

The council invited religious groups of all denominations to unite in the battle against racism, Craig Burgdoff, the assistant conference coordinator, said.

\section*{Growing ideas}
"We're trying to get people together with their own ideas about what they can do in their own communities (to fight racism)," Burgdoff said.
People do not pay enough attention to the university's choice of labels in representing its multicultural citizenry, Hare said.
"It is important to stress the need for change in the terminology used to refer to culturally differentiated groups of people," he said. "For example, the term 'minority' fosters expectations' of inabil'minority' fosters \({ }^{\text {ity }}\) and pathology."

Hare said he advocates changes in the language that would encourage more sensitivity to ethnic identification.
"Students should be informed that (SU) is a universal place ... there are no outsiders here," he said. "If you come here acting sexist, racist, elitist or here acting sexist, racist, elitist or homophobic,

Hare said he believes the university should place more effort in emphasizing the importance of proper language use.
"I haven't seen (SU) move ... the way rve seen other universities move in an attempt to deracialize and make students more sensitive to use of language," he said.

Deracializing is knowing that whiteness and blackness are ideologies, not ethnicities. Hare said.

For example, he said the term AfricanAmerican would be more specific and appropriate than the term black.
"In a multiethnic and multicultural university, there are no minorities," he said. "And there is only one race, the human race."

Assailants opened fire Monday on a bus carrying Jewish settlers of the occupied West Bank. The settlers were traveling to a demonstration to urge Israel not to trade land for peace at the Middle East peace conference, which will begin Wednesday in Madrid, Spain.

Seven people were reported wounded. It was not known who attacked the bus or what their motives were. Radical Arab and Jewish groups have vowed to disrupt the conference.

Also on Monday, Israel rejected a freeze on settlements in occupied lands, and an Iranian radical called for suicide attacks on Israel

In Turkey, a Muslim terrorist group opposed to the conference killed an American and seriously wounded an Egyptian diplomat in two bombings.

Meanwhile, a Berlin newspaper said in a report attributed to unidentified intelligence sources that seven Arab terrorists were in Madrid and planned to attack the sewer system under the conference site.

Student editor guilty of misuse of power

The editor of the student newspaper at George Mason University was found guilty of misusing newspaper funds and of not following procedure by a student judiciary panel.
The panel held a six-hour hearing Oct. 5 to discuss charges against Ray Everett, 22 , editor of Broadside.

They said Everett misused funds when he purchased two framed prints for his office and created a paid position executive editor - held by Wendy Gould.

Everett was told to eliminate the position. However, he was not asked to resign.

Everett, a homosexual, was accused earlier this year when he and Gould, a lesbian, accused the newspaper faculty adviser of warning students of a "gay conspiracy" at the newspaper. The adviser was found innocent of all charges.

Former Broadside employees John Rutledge and Kathy Downes claimed this summer that Everett failed to publish the paper as required by the Media Board Constitution.

Rutledge said he was satisfied with the panel's decision.
"We felt vindicated in the end," he said.

Home sweet Dome
With SU finishing a stretch in which it played four out of five games on the road, the Orangemen will play the remainder of their 1991 contests in the Carrier Dome.

According to Pasqualoni, Syracuse was lucky to emerge from the road stretch with three wins and the remaining home garnes should prove to be a boost for the Orangemen.
"It's really, really important to have the Friday before a game with no travel," he said. "We'll get to rest up a bit and play three great games in the Dome. Being at home should pick us up and the hometown support should be big for us.

It doesn't hurt that only one team left on the schedule over .500: West Virginia University is 5-3, while both Temple University and Boston College stand at 2-5.

Since SU began play in the Carrier Dome in 1980 its overall record is 42-21-2.

People have less control over eating habits when they are hungry.

\section*{SYRACUSE BASKETBALL STUDENT TICKETS}

S.U. students participating in the basketball season ticket lottery may pick up their season tickets and Villanova ticket (if purchased) beginning Thursday, October 31 at the Carrier Dome Box Office at Gate B. Students must bring their S.U. I.D. card with them for verification purposes. Students who haven't used their I.D. cards for some time should stop by the I.D. Card Office in Steele Hall to have the magnetic encoding on their I.D. card checked.

The first of the 12 basketball games in the student package is the game against Marathon Oil on Tuesday, November 12. Please pick up your tickets early to avoid the last minute lines.

Beginning October 31, students who have not yet purchased season basketball tickets may do so at the Box Office at Gate B in the Carrier Dome. The 12 game package is available to fulltime S.U., Forestry, and Utica College students for \($ 67\), payable in cash. Season tickets will be sold up to the first game on November 12.

Students who have not yet purchased Villanova game tickets (the game is March 8, during Spring Break), can do so while ordering season tickets. If purchased with season tickets the Villanova game is \($ 6\) to S.U. students and the seat will be located in the student section. If the Villanova game is not purchased with season tickets, the price is \($ 8\) and will be best available seating (probably long-range view).

Syracuse University students who now share off-campus neighborhoods with area residents may soon find themselves in a world of their own.
A new proposal by the Syracuse Planning Commission is trying to outline a "special neighborhood district" in the area around Ostrom Avenue, East Colvin and East Genesee streets.

A euphemism on par with Special Neighborhood District hasn't been heard since "friendly fire" exploded in the Persian Gulf.

In the proposed area, 37 percent of the homes are rented by landlords who don't live in these homes. Under the commission's proposal, landlords would be required to apply for a certificate of suitability to ensure their rental contracts live up to city ordinances.

The proposed certificate would raise landlords' costs and drive down the prices of houses in the neighborhood. All this at a time of decreasing enrollment and higher rates for taxes and insurance.

The proposal by the Planning Commission is just one more attempt to widen the rift between town and gown and upset the balance between students and community members. The commission which proposed the famed "no more than five non-related adults in the same house" ordinance is now threatening the diversity of unique student/resident neighborhood relationships.

All this to cut down on noise and garbage problems. Imagine setting this commission loose on New York City.

\section*{Civil rights: better late then never}

It finally happened this week. After nearly two years of shameless politicking, President implies he's never been the victim of discrimination) has agreed to sign the latest compromise of the civil rights bill.

The new legislation, expected to be passed by both the House and Senate, will make it easier for victims of racial discrimination to sue for damages. This has always been the main focus of all the proposed bills.
\begin{tabular}{ll}
\hline BARRY & Furthermore, the bill lays \\ STARK & burden of proof on em- \\ ployers. ft forces them to \\ TRUTH & show that their practices \\ are a business necessity \end{tabular} Sexual discrimination is also included in the legislation. It permits women who have been unfairly excluded from a job to seek monetary damages. In the past, they were only allowed to seek back pay.
to seek back pay finally, this bill bans the adjustment of employment-related test scores to benefit certain groups of people. This practice is commonly known as race-norming.

This bill was long overdue in coming to fruition. President Bush has claimed that every other version of the bill would force employers to adopt hiring quotas. Most experts agree that there was no truth to this assertion. Once again, Bush has proved to be an incompetent buffoon when it comes to domestic issues.

But, as the saying goes, better late than never. A civil rights bill was desperately needed to counter the recent Supreme Court decisions which rolled back the hands of the decisions which rolied back the hands of the difficult for minorities to win discrimination cases. This legislation is something for minorities to lean back on when they have been discriminated against.

I also support the sexual discrimination clause, as well as the banning of race-norming. Race-norming is an example of reverse discrimination. Not only does this inherently make a business less productive - it also creates intensified racial polarization. Racenorming sends out the wrong message to the groups it is supposed to help.

The 1991 Civil Rights Bill, while it should have been the 1990 Civil Rights Bill, will definitely prove to be an effective measure to combat racial improprieties.

\section*{Pepper SU with baseball team}

\section*{To the editor:}

Syracuse baseball? They've got to have it up there." This was the general comment I research. My parents told research. My parents told me a college should be strictly a college should be strictly academic. I followed their instructions and hoped for the best. Unfortunately, the best best. Unfortunately, the best satisfied only 50 percent of my hopes.
Acceptance for enrollment in the L.C. Smith College of Engineering was the greatest moment of my educational life. Finding out that Syracuse University didn't even have an NCAA-ranked baseball team was the most disappointing moment of my athletic life.

As large as \(S U\) is, it should be ashamed that baseball isn't part of our great legacy of sports. Our Great American Pastime deserves a representation in a great university.

Why? Why wasn't the Dome constructed for accommodation of both sports? Even if they didn't expect to have baseball, they could have planned for future possibilities. Money seems to have been the motive. as it is with most university decisions.

I'm the kind of guy that not only loves to watch baseball but has played it all of his life. Hopefully, minor league ball is a possibility for me next summer. People who know me know that I'm insane about baseball. I go everywhere with my bat before a game. (Yep, even sleep with it.) The aesthetic part of baseball has a place in my heart as well. Fogerty's "Centerfield" song chokes me up. The closing hymn of "This Week in hamn oll" gives me goose bumps. The picture-perfect bumps. The picture-perfect home run swing, sun, dirt, grass and a diving stop are grass and a diving stop are what guys in the baseball club live for. Denying an athlete the opportunity to play his sport at a competitive level is a form of torture and SU's dollar signs are swinging the whips.

With all the money going to football, basketball. crew, gymnastics and track, most of which are not even heard of to a large extent, baseball and America are getting bad raps by SU. Club baseball has zero financial backing by the university. Luckily, baseball isn't all that expensive a sport, and we all supply our own equipment. A field is needed to play the game, however.

Come on, SU. Baseball has given sports and America some of its greatest moments. All we ask for is a home field to build the dreams that we spel "NCAA Division One."

The study also showed the average age for boys and girls to lose their virginity is 15.

\section*{Company computes on campus}

\section*{By JENNIFER MOSHER \\ Contributing Writer}

If you have been looking for a full-service organization that supports all aspects of computing technology, look no further Thanks to Computing Support Team (CSTeam) President George Boyce and his senior partners, Don E. Hewitt, John F. Kastler and Rebecea A. Snedden, a solution has arrived.

According to Boyce, the CSTeam specializes in "providing support to the UNIX community (an operating system for computers), from desktop workstations to department highdata servers to high-performance computing centers and the networks which interconnect them."

The CSTeam operates out of Room 3-230 in the Center for Science and Technology on the Syracuse University campus. Though the company has an on-campus location and all four partners have had connections to SU in some way, the CSTeam is not directly related to the university.

According to Boyce, the university is simply company enough space to run the start-up company.
"Without their aid, it would have been much more challenging for us to get started," he said.
Helps companies of all sizes
The CSTeam supports Macintosh and MS-DOS personal computers as well as other proprietary operating systems. The company will deliver support services to companies of all sizes, ranging from one-person operations to large corporations.

Consulting and training programs are key elements on the company's list of services since they span a broad range of services and can be tailored to the client's needs.

Boyce believes a major strength to the CSTeam is the amount of experience he and his partners have had with It's nice to have him back on the team and playing well. He's a tolented player.

The Orangemen didn't score again until 65:36, when Paul Young scored his 14 th goal of the season from 18 yards out.

Yound had gained control of the ball around twenty yards from the goal, and then called out forward Nino Gamish shame-
This froze the Pittsburgh defender and allowed Young to fire the ball to the right of an outstretched Sobelman.

When you put that team under the kind of pressure we put them under, they're going to end up cracking sooner or later," Foti said. "Today, it was struck for a few more in the first half.'

Consistent ball conerol played a big part in the SU victory. There were many well-executed plays in the Pitt half of the field, which led to 14 Orangemen shots.

Thirty minutes into the game, SU defender Lce Davison broke down the wing and crossed the ball over the Pittsburgh defenders' heads to Eric Puls, who shot the ball just wide.

At 43:00, Fichard Alexander received a pass and fired the ball on goal, forcing Sobelman to make a diving save.

With three minutes left in the game, Puls brought the ball down the wing and passed the ball to Malcolm Grace, who was breaking through the middle.

Grace hit the goalpost.
"In order for us to play well, we need to keep possession of the ball." Foti said. "When you have akillful players and you comes into the play unless you have possession of the ball. The better job we do of that, the better chance we have at getting a good result."

We pretty much controlled the whole game today," Pollinow said. "We really didn't want to give them a chance to get the ball because they play a run-andgo game.

Puls fmalized the \(3-0\) victory for the Orangemen at 76:28 with his sixth goal of the season.

The victory was the Orangemen's third in their last four games.
"The effort all the way around has been good." Foti sais. "I think our kids are starting to realize that when you put effort, combined with talent. you get good results. You do that, and Iook what happens - you get a win and a shutour."

The magical "P-word" seems to follow an athlete's career who doesn't follow an athletes caree

He is a typical example of a collegiate player with plenty of "potential" whose NBA career wasn't what was whose NBA

Sampson was the No. 1 pick in the 1984 NBA draft out of the University of Virginia. He was the Collegiate Player of the Year and the Houston Rockets thought he was a franchise player.
The 7 -foot-4, lean center enjoyed his greatest success when the Houston Rockets took Hakeem Olaujuwon the following year and formed the the following year and

The "Twin Towers" led the Rockets to the NBA finals. And who could forget Sampson getting ejected from Garne 6 because of a scuffle with Boston Celtics guard Jerry Sichting? Boston Celtics guard Jerry Sichting?
Sampson was an All-Star game Sampson was an All-Star game
MVP and racked up other honors but found himselfin Olaujuwon's shadow. Sampson was traded to the Kings for not a heck of a lot for a guy supposed to be the franchise player.
A knee injury turned Sampson from the top dog to the hound at the end of the bench. end of the bench.
Sampson was the highest-paid twelfth man in the league. The Kings tried to buy out Sampson and make him a coach, but he was convinced he could still play.

Now, Sampson finds himself without a job.
Sampson's career ends with a bum knee and a heap of wasted potential.
Something just went wrong for Sampson. Whether it was a poor work ethic or more likely a poor attitude, his career ends as no more than a footnote.
What lies ahead for Sampson is anybody's guess, but for the man who used to be the top Rocket, he's now no more than a bottle rocket.

He said he wants to try and continue his career as a player or possibly take a job as an assistant coach.

Sampson might make a good coach, but it wouldn't be a good idea for any other team to pick up Sampson.

He won't bring veteran leadership, but he will add a mopey face at the end of the bench - something all good NBA teams need
For the Kings, releasing Sampson was both a business and a practical decision. The Kings can use Sampson's spot under the salary cap to sign first round pick Billy Owens.
The Kings will also be unloading a player who proved unproductive in his tenure in Sacramento.

Sampson's story seems a sad one. A highly touted college player makes it to the big time with all the hoopla and after a few good years fizzles.

But, then again, maybe a bad attitude and bad wheels just could carry Sampson far enough to live up to the dreaded "P-word.

\section*{Orangemen still in hunt} Pollnow blanks Pitt to keep tourney hopes alive

Syracuse University leading scorer Paul Young, shown in action earlier in the season, tallied his 14th goal to lead the Orangemen to a \(3-0\) victory over the University of Pittsburgh on Saturday.

\section*{Injury bug continues to nip SU's bud}

By KENT FISCHER
Sports Editor
Depth and resiliency were some of the pre-season virtues that the Syracuse University Orangemen had in their favor.
But since a win over the University of Maryland in the second game of the year. the Orangemen have been cut down by a series of nagging injuries.
Ten more Orangemen added their names to the injury list after Saturday's 21-7 win over Rutgers University.

According to trainer Don Lowe, only two of the injuries were serious.

Sophomore defensive back Bob Grosvenor suffered a chest injury early in the second quarter and was hospitalized Saturday night for observation at the Hackensack Medical Center in New Jersey.

Grosvenor was scheduled to be released Sunday afternoon and will be out indefinitely.

\section*{(in SyTacuse}

Center John Reagan suffered a concussion and will be limited in practice early this week. He is expected to play against Temple University on Saturday.

Also injured in the win over Rutgers were: Garland Hawkins (lower leg), Glen Young (left shoulder), Jim Wentworth (shin), Kevin Mitchell (shin/ankle), Andrew Dees (lower leg), John Nilsen (forearm), Qadry Ismail (sprained fingerl, and John Lusardi (shoulder toe).
"Are we banged up or are we banged up?" SU coach Paul Pasqualoni asked. "I mean, God only knows wholl be able to play against Temple this week. "The question is who is hurt and who is injured. If you're hurt you play, if you're injured then that's another question."
The injuries from Saturday's game only added to a long list of already hobbled Orangemen:
- Fullback Al Wooten injured an ankle in SU's 31-27 win over Pittsburgh on Oct. 19 and did not play last Saturday. -Linebacker Jo Jo Wooden injured a knee in the loss to East Carolina University three weeks ago. Initial reports said Wooden would be out for the remainder of the season.

OSophomore linebacker Dan Conley has been out since the season's second game when he tore ligaments in right knee. -Wide receiver Shelby Hill has been hampered by a rib injury suffered against Tulane University. See NOTES Page 13

The Syracuse University volleyball team headed to the University of Pittsburgh over the weekend, prepared to face just about anything the Panthers could throw at them.
The Orangewomen, 18-5 overall, 5-2 Big East, however, were not prepared to face what coach Dan prepared to face what coach Dan Schulte called an "illegal offense."
The Panthers. 18-6, 5-0, offensive strategy in question, led Pitt to a \(\mathbf{3 - 0}\) win on Friday night.

Saturday, SU fared no better against West Virginia University, losing three consecutive games to the Mountaineers, to complete only the second losing weekend of the year for the Orangewomen.
According to Schulte, the Panthers employed an offense that focused on the technique of "power-tipping," the act of catching the volleyball in midair and throwing it back across the net to score

Pittsburgh, down 14-10 in Friday night's opening match, called a timeout and came out using a power-tip offense. The change rattled the Orangewomen and the Panthers reeled off three consecutive points to win the Syracuse was unable to bounce back and the Panthers went on to take the next two games en route to the three game sweep.

"We thought (the power tip) was "Wree game swep. illegal this year," Schulte said. "That offense let them control the ball, and it took us out of our game and out of the match."
"We've been playing with officials that would call power-tipping in stantly," Schulte said. "We stopped them from hitting the ball, we dug them well, we outplayed them. Then they started power-tipping and it was allowed. It caught us off guard and took us out of our game.
Pittsburgh's offense was allowed despite the protests of Schulte, and despite the protests of Schulte, and the Orangewomen were not prepared to face it.
Schulte explained that powertipping was ruled illegal in the Big East conference this year, but that it is a judgment call by the referee and one that cannot be disputed.
For most of the opening game SU outplayed a Pitt team that entered the match on top of the Big East standings and as the highest regionallyranked volleyball team in the East.

\section*{Student ID now illegal as age proof}

Come Friday, New York state residents buying alcohol will have to present only official driver's licenses, valid passport and military identification.

A new New York State law which goes into effect Friday invalidates the use of student Ds as proof for people buying stadent

The law is in response to what the state legislature called the "haphazard" approach of restaurants and bars toward checking IDs.

Local Assemblyman Michael Bragman, who voted for the bill, took a strong stand on it as the bill's sponsor, according to his aide.
Assemblywoman Joan Christensen also voted for the bill.
She said she is aware of the common procedures at many bars and restaurants in the Syracuse University area, and that they are already good at handling the problem of keeping out underage students, and do not fall into underage students, and do "College ID's are just too easy to forge," she said.
Another local Assemblyman, Harold Brown, voted against the bill.
He said the system has worked well for a long time, and it is unrealistic to expect all college students to have a driver's license or a passport.
The law, which will be implemented statewide, will not have much of an effect on many of the bars frequented by SU students, according to a survey of local managers.

There are so many kinds of fake college IDs that they have already have been unacceptable as proof, they said.

Tim Stineford, day manager of Hungry Charley's, said they use college IDs as a secondary form of identification, in order to keep 19-year-old high school students out, but not for the purchase of alcohol.

\section*{Area residents meet to stabilize student habitation}

\section*{By KATHERINE DROUIN}

The university hill residential area is a neighborhood where families with children have long battled against oud, carefree Syracuse University students.

But the Syracuse Planning Commission claimed it has a plan to stabilize the balance between students and permanent residents.

About 50 people attended a hearing Monday night to gauge public opinion about designating a special neighborhood district.
The designation would require landlords within the area to apply for a certificate of suitability within the next two years, said Zoning Administrator Bob Rohde.
The certificate would ensure that landlords' properties meet certain requirements. Property owners would have to provide floor plans of houses and apartments and allow city officials to inspect properties. Rohde said.

\section*{Meeting requirements}

The certificates would ensure that property owners meet requirements already made law last February by the Common Council. The laws include:
- no more than five unrelated people living in a ousehold:
- at least 35 percent of floor space designated for common space:
- nn more than 30 percent of a lot used for parking.

- High tenant occupancy (as opposed to high owner occupancy);
- Constraints on parking because of lack of off-street parking and overutilization of curb space; - Street widths which present potential limitations to emergency access; - High reports of nuisance violations such as noise and litter.
* Architectural styles which are conducive to a high number of tenants (such as houses with large square footage and houses easily converted to multi-tenant uge)
- Proximity to institutions (Syracuse University, State University of New York College of Environmental Science and Forestry, medical institutions) with a high intensity of use, resulting in traffic, noise and other impacts;
- Atypical real estate dynamics.

Dinkins to revive needle-sharing program
New York City Mayor David R. Dink ins is moving to reestablish a needle exchange program for intravenous drug users to help slow the spread of AIDS.

Administration officials said Monday a group of New York City commissioners, headed by Acting Health Commissioner Margaret A. The Mayor had asked for the commissioner's view last August after reports that a similar program in New Haven had reduced the number of people infected with the HIV virus.

Dinkins scrapped a program that gave needles in exchange for old ones shortly after taking office last year because he feared it would encourage drug use.

Edwards minimizes such comments saying, "Mr. Duke is making the same kind of statements that Biddiy Roemer was saying four years ago when you about. I know what it is to be governor."

Duke's past is worth examining. Jim Amoss, editor of The Times-Picayume in New Orleans, noted that his paper "revealed that Mr. Duke celebrated 1980s."
The newspaper published excerpts of 1985 and 1986 interviews with Duke that detailed. "Mr. Duke's preposterous assertion ... that the Nazi death camps were erected not to exterminate Jews but rather to kill lice infesting them."

Differences on civil rights
For more, than a year the Democrats have been advancing their version of a civil rights bill and President Bush has been speaking against it. Bush has insisted, "I want to sign a civil rights bill."
Democrats such as Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., have charged, "This is not a resident who wants a civil rights bill.
Yale law Professor Stephen L. Carter puts the political/racial issue into perspective: "Conservative is a dirty word in the black community ... because it is far better at explaining what is wrong with civil rights than what is right with them; civil rights than what is right with them; because it seems ... more comfortable because it seems ... more comfortable standing against black people when it standing against black people when it thinks they are wrong than standing with black people when it thinks they are right; and because it willingly accepts as members people who are racist and ... hostile.

The manner in which certain GOP candidates have conducted recent cam paigns makes it feasible for David Duke to allgn himself with that party. Should this rest uneasily on their shoulders, Republicans would be advised to review their 30 second sound bites.

Abandon your holier-than-thou attitude. Abandon your holier-than-thou attitud around. During the confirmation hearings a few weeks ago, the nation was presented with not one but two very credible people. It was the "man vs. woman" battle of the century and the referees were entirely male.

Who had the most to lose during the hearing, Mr. Reigrut? Certainly not Clarence Thomas. Anita Hill. on the other hand, did not have the stature or recognition that Thomasenjoyed. She put her job on the line. If her claims were not accepted by the Judicial Committee, her career would most likely never take off. But she knew this, Mr. Reigrut. She felt that as a female in the workplace sh had been violated and humiliated. She felt that the behavior of Thomas had been inappropriate for a Supreme Court nominee. She fulfitled a moral obligation nominee. She fulntied a moral of the wnited States by deciding that others should judge the appropriateness of his actions. The American System of Justice did prevail when it gave her the chance to bring the issue to the committee. It failed when Thomas was confirmed.

I will agree that the hearings resembled

The Thomas hearings brought the issue of sexual harassment to the surface but only for a fleeting moment - it will be forgotten by the 1992 Presidential election and that, Mr. Reigrut, is a problem. The confirmation of Thomas did nothing more than reafirm beliefs that the government cares very little about women. The actions of our nation's politicat leaders are based on party politics. Since politicians control the process of Supreme Court justice selection, the process shoul be looked at critically. First, we must not be too scornful of the hearings we saw in recent weeks. They showed that a president cannot place just any lackey on the court and that sexual haras should not be taken lightly. the president nominates only one person to go before Congress, the eflectivenes of checks and balances is dijuted by politics. Perhaps, the president can nominate a handful of people for the Senate to choose from. Or even better, le the Supreme Court members themselves nominate a few people whom they feel have the necessary experience and expertise and let both the president and Congress confirm one.
This is not a criticism of Judge Thomas as a man. Obviously, through hard work and intellect he overcarne obstacles both Reigrut and myselfcannot understand. This is to tell Kevin that by placing his value laden ideas in writing. he reveals himself as the misguided idealogue that he is.

To the editor:
I care and I'm sure most will agree with me. It really does matter a great deal. You claim you are disgusted and appalled by Clarence Thomas' actions. but i believe you are lying. If you feel so strongly, then you would care whether he said what he was accused of saying or not. Yes, we all do have skeletons in our closets and they do eventually come out - if you haven't noticed. I applaud and praise Anita Hill for taking the chance and risking her life to come out when she did. All those seeking a public office should feel the pressure and should be concerned that their past will become public knowledge. These "disgraceful processes" will encourage those to live a life with higher standards of morals and ethics.

I, personally, do not believe that Uncle Tom (that's what he is) should have been appointed. First of all, Uncle Torn had appointed. First of all, Uncle Tom had everything to gain by this process

This is an exarmple of the superficial uses of the labels "sexist," and, Im sure if Clarence Thomas were white, "racist." This is not to discount the existence of such inexcusabie thoughts as those term describe; I arn wholeheartedly against such types of thinking. But when labels such as these are uged in place of thoughtful argument, then they lose their credibility. Why not focus on the actual testimony instead of those giving it? I took both Clarence Thomas and Anita Hill ta be credible people. Yes, I did begin to listen to the hearings with an open mind. \section*{Under state's influence}

If you're underage and plan on using your student identification to get a drink this weekend, you had better do it before Friday.

New York State has passed a law making the use of student identification to purchase alcohol illegal. Now, customers must produce a driver's license, passport or military ID - all of which display date of birth and a photograph of the individual. The stringent nature of the law increases the obstacles involved in the purchase of alcoholic products.

Local bars on Marshall Street are wise to the ways of the thirsty college student, however. They already do not accept the use of SU D Das a valid form of identification. Smart move, considering the number of student patrons on M-Street every weekend.

Originally used only to weed out non-college students, the awareness campaigns and statistics have finally penetrated the bureaucratic red tape and made a difference.
New York has taken a large step in combating under-age drinking and disabling the student ID card. While student Dim open many doors on campus, literally and figuratively at SU, the saloon doors now slam a little harder in the face of minors looking to break the law.

The proposed district would be bordered roughly by Comstock and Ostrom avenues on the west, by East Colvin Street on the south, by Westmoreland Avenue on the east, and by East Genesee Street on the north.

There exists no other designated special neighborhood district in Syracuse.

A 13-page report given out at the hearing provided 10 circumstances which it said justified the special neighborhood designation. The report also listed tables comparing such items as noise and parking complaints for the university area to other city neighborhoods.
Forexample, threeother neighborhoods in Syracuse averaged about 97 noise complaints per year, while the university area reported 742 .
Such statistics demonstrate the need for special designation, said area residents who spoke at the hearing. They were overwhelmingly in favor of the measure, which "would help the neighborhood to survive," a Concord piace resident said.

Helping the neighborhood
"This is the single most helpful measure ever undertaken to help (neighborhood) stability," said Sherri Chayat.

Neighborhood groups, such as the Southeast University Neighborhood Association (SEUNA) and the University Neighborhood Preservation Association have repeatedly asked the city to give the university special designation, said SEUNA President Stewart Koenig
"This neighborhood needs help to survive," Koenig said. "This policy is coming just in the nick of time.
Designation of a special district would aid neighborhood revitalization, and the city could "point with pride" at the investment it had made, Koenig said.

Other residents noted that the designation would help to stabilize property values and improve living conditions for renters.
"If this plan does not go through, you are guaranteeing the demise of a neighborhood." SEUNA member Kristen Cominsky said

At least one landlord did not agree with the planning commission, however Property owner David Eade said that many points outlined in the planning commission's report were not fully addressed and lacked official documentation.

He noted that while the university arca was 34 percent tenant-occupied. the citywide figure was 59 percent. Eade also said that parking problems cited in the report are frequently due to Carrier Dome events.

Student Government Association Off-campus Representative Christopher Duley also said he was not sure the measure would help students and called the measure redundant.
"I think it's ridiculous," said Duley, who lives on Madison Place. "The houses already have to be inspected.:
"The area where this could be helpful with tenants is if something breaks and the landsomething breaks and the landlord
He also noted that students could use an ordinance to keep rents reasonable.
"(The proposal) would be ef fective if it controlled price," Duley said, adding that landlords who own a lot of property near the university can fix prices.
The planning commission will probably vote on the proposal Nov. 11, Rohde said. If it is approved, the Common Council will vote on the proposal.

being able to predict the future with the accuracy of a Scud missile. Sure, you can blow off imminent doom if you hear it on Oprah, but Nostradamus is serious. This is really scary. Lots of people could be killed, families could be destroyed and all of it just because Syracuse University had to build an addi tion to Day Hall.

The idea of the mass murder actually happening isn't as creepy as the prediction itself.

Now that someone said it was going to happen you know what is going to happen. Some guy who watched Rambo one too many times will be sitting in the bushes outside of Day with an Uzi and night vision goggles picking off people who look like "mass murderers" one by one.
That doesn't really scare me: It's Day Hall, they're freshmen. What really disturbs me is the fact that some guy from the 1500 can have any idea about what is going to happen to SU in 1991 . I bet this guy used to clean up in his office football pool.
The whole thing makes you get real philosophical. Could it be that for this guy to predict a murder 400 years in the future is as big a deal, in the cosmic scheme of things, as Domino's telling you your pizza will be there within 25 minutes? Is the prediction going to come true?

No one can say for sure, but I hear they are going to set up bleachers in front of Day so that we can all find out together. Only time will tell.

"It always boils down to more than one or more than two players for a great team," Nets coach Bill Fitch said. "But if we get the job done, they'll look at (Coleman) as one of the cornerstones."

Coleman doesn't think of himself in those terms. The con stant losing is hard to get used to, but Coleman said he doesn't feel added pressure to be the team's leader.
"I just come out to play. Good nights, bad nights. I roll with the punches," Coleman said.
As a rookie, Coleman started 74 of 82 games and beat out Sacramento's Lionel Simmons Orlando's Dennis Scott and Boston's Dee Brown for the postseason award.

Coleman said he's better pre pared physically for this season after he held out of training camp last year. And he has a better idea of the mental grind of an 82 -game schedule.

It was a plus being in camp this years" Coleman said. "Last year didn't hurt me as far as playing. it har me as far as conditioning. I hasically played pondifinto shape last year:
nyself into shape last year.
And there were times when Coleman suffered from his missing camp, but not many. On most nights, Coleman held his own and won immediate respect among the league's veterans.
"He's got a lot of nice post moves, a nice jump shot and he passes the ball well inside." said New York Knicks forward Xavier McDaniel. "He does a lot of things exceptionally well."

Coteman said he was unfazed by his opposition and didn't spend extra time worrying about who was guarding him.
"If you can play the game, you can play the game." Coleman said. "I didn't look at it as, This gay has more experience than me or he's played more years than I have.' I look at it as five guys playing against five guys."

Fitch is hoping Colernan maintains that attitude and plays with the same gusto he did last season, when the 6 -foot-10 forward felt he had a lot to prove after critics questioned him being taken No. 1.

The Orangemen'sall-time leading scorer and rebounder also has a Tive-year, \($ 15\) milion contract in his back pocket. But Fitch says there's much more for Coleman to do.
"Time will tell." Fitch said "Complacency is something that shouldn't happen to a young player. I'd like to see him reach greater heights.

Conley's injury caused some personnel movement in the SU defense because aside from being an inside linebacker, he served as a down lineman when Syracuse used the fourwman front.

The Orangemen have used nose guard Kevin Mitchell and defensivelinemen Gearge Rooks to fill the outside rush pasition. Lusardi, who has 73 tackles. including 29 solo, said there isn't any pressure on him to fill Conley's shoes.
"People have to understand I'm not Dan Conley," Lusardi said. "I'm going to \(g o\) in there and play my game. You can't put pressure on one guy, it's the whole defensive unit."
The Illl-in role isn't unfamiliar to Lusardi, who played against Florida State in 1989 when David Bavaro was injured on the first series.

Lusardi, a 6-foot-1, 220pound senior, is a former walkon and was given a scholarship after working his way onto the two-deep.
"He's an example for the younger players," Coyle said. "Here's a guy who kept on working and when his shot came, he just came through for the team."

While Conley's injury caused movements in the defensive scheme. Todd made a straight substitution for Wooden, who had 33 tackles on the season prior to the injury.

Todd had eight tackles on the season prior to the East Caro lina game. Since Wooden's injury in the first quarter against ECU, Todd has had 19 tackles.

"I thought our top five (men) would be 26 (minutes) or better. They) had a gap of \(1: 30\) and we hadn't been over a minute all season.'

The top three runners for the Orangemen all established personal records for the Van Cortlandt Park course in New York despite the team's disappointing finish.

Darren James ran the fivemile course in 26:05 to finish 27th overall, the top SU fin isher. Gary Hans placed 46 th in 26:53 and Jamie Navarro placed 49th in 27:11.
The top three Orangewomen also established personal records, led by Maryjo Dougherty who ran the 3.1 -mile course in 18:54 to place 27th overall.
Michele Zani finished 39th 19:35 and Sarah Martin finished 41 st in 19:48.

For the Syracuse University women's field hockey team this past weekend game at Providence College was one of firsts and lasts.

After nine consecutive victories, the 15 th-ranked Orangewomen tied the No. 19 Lady Friars \(3-3\) in overtime in the last regular-season Big East Conference garne.
SU coach Kathleen Parker said the tie shouldn't be regarded as a blemish on the Orangewomen's record.
"It was an outstanding hockey qame." Parker said. "It was intense. It was wide open. They had their chances to win and we had our chances to win. For the most part, it was a well played game."

The Orangewomen, 11-3-1 over all and 3-0-1 Big East, came back on Sunday to defeat the University of Rhode Island 2-1, also in overtime Against the Lady Rams, cocaptain Kelly Larkin netted both goals including the game winner.

Julie Williamson, Jessica Billger and Larkin accounted for the Orangewomen's goals against Providence

With two consecutive over time games, Parker said overtime, in OT

Syracuse could have an advantage in the upcoming Big East. Tournament
"It might help us that we had to play two tough and long games going into the Big East Tournament." Parker said.

Still, the Orangewomen didn't gain any new knowledge of the Lady Friars who will likely be Syracuse's first round opponent in the tournament.
"We didn't learn anything new," said senior midfielder Diana Despiaumolina said. "We always knew that Providence is aggressive, and well have to dig down a little deeper to beat Providence in the Big East."

Usually this space is utilized for commentaries on professional sports, or just simply random thoughts.
seldom do you see a column on Syracuse University sports in this space. That's why I've decided to throw out some random thoughts on SU sports.

Lately, I ve heard a lot of grumbling about Marvin Graves' ability as a quarterback. The people complaining are the same people who hailed Graves as the savior at quarterback last season.
For those people. calm down alDAVID I ready. Graves is

BUSCEMA SPORTS OPINION best the nations best quarterback. nor is he a bad one. He is a good, one. He is a good, solid. young guaremerging leadership skills. True, he has been somewhat rattled at the end of games, but he is only a sophomore, protected by an inexperienced line.

He also appears to have lost some of his quickness after getting turf toe against the University of Florida.

Graves has a lot to learn. such as throwing the ball away to avoid sacks, and cutting down on interceptions, but he is as big a reason as any that the Orangemen are 6-2.

So, relax and give him time to develop. In a couple of years, Graves may lead SU into contention for the national championship.
-Orangewomen volleyball coach Dan Schulte was complaining of an illegal offense by the University of Pittsburgh during SU's three game loss to the Panthers over the weekend.

Schulte said the technique of powertipping, used when Syracuse led 1410 in the first game, disrupted the Orangewomen and helped cause thern to lose not only the Pitt match, but wreaked such havoc that SU was swept by West Virginia University the next day as well.

Now, I didn't see the game and the technique may very well have been illegal, but were the Orangewomen illegal, but were the Orangewomen so distraught they couldn't adjust in so distraught they couldn't adjust in the next six games? Sorry, Dan, but that sounds like a cop-out to me.

What is going on with Syracuse University soccer players Chris Wright and Steve Pollnow?

Coach Dean Foti has suspended both players twice this year for disciplinary reasons. The first suspension was for a road game. The players were reinstated for the next home game, then suspended for 30 minutes on the back for the next home contest.

Foti would not elaborate on the suspensions.

Why can these guys play at home, but not on the road? Either they repeated their original offense really quick or they are such hooligans on the team bus that Foti must discipline them each time. I just don't get it. All I know is they better get their road act together soon because the Big East Tournament is not a Carrier Dome event.
-I'm going out on a limb. This will be the year the \(S U\) ficld hockey tear wins the Big East Tournament and gains an NCAA berth.

Gee, golly, excuse my excitement. but it's almost time to talk to Jim Boeheim again.

"The (Orangemen's) attitude and effort have been very good over the past two weeks," Foti said. "The players have finally realized that they have to do the dirty work - little things in defense that enables you to control games.
The Orangemen, in winning three of their past four games, have played better since moving Chris Wright from sweeper to center midfield, and Richard Alexander from outside defender to sweeper.

Wright, who has thrived in offensive positions in the past, gives the Orangemen extra punch up front, while Alexander is able to utilize his speed in the middle of the field.

Chris Wright is better in the role he's playing," Foti said. "And Richard Alexander is also better in his new role.
The key to this lineup change may be the play of Tim Lester. Since the switch. Lester has been starting in Alexander's old position. Against Pitt. Lester scored his first goal of the season and recorded three shots in all.

\section*{Stepping up security}

Tonight's the night.
Recent rumors about mass murders and prophetic predictions have thrown Syracuse University and other schools on the Eastern Shore into a tailspin.

SU Security is taking the threats seriously and is planning to increase patrols in the areas earmarked as potentially dangerous.

Security has finally made a wise move.

True or not, the rumors are worrying some people, especially those living in and around Day Hall. The rumor has been spreading quickly, making SU only one of many targets.
Recent stories in papers like The New York Times and USA Today have reported predictions of suspicious activity at the University of Massachusetts. Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass., and right here at SU. Apparently, each version of the prophecy is different; some say 11 female students will be the targets while others set the event to take place during a year with reversible numbers - 1991. There are even predictions of a massacre occurring in a building named after slain President John F. Kennedy.

On the SU campus, there are plans to bring a police officer in to patrol the area during that night. The fact that SU Security is taking the threats seriously shows their commitment to protecting the students and denouncing vicious rumors of murder.

\section*{Prophecy lives life of its own}

Ithink it's time we really picked apart this murder prophecy thing. This is a case where the things we are believing are nothing but hearsay in a massive game of telephone. Think about where you heard this story.

In this case, there is no single, verified story. As with most rumors. everybody knows something difterent. "I heard it was on Oprah." "I thing different. "I heard it was on Oprah." "I ERIC STANCEL And even if it were obvious.

This puts the university in a very tough situation. They called The Oprah Winfres Show. In an official statement. the university said. "Contrary to rumors circulating on campus, no pxychic appeared on The Oprah Winfrey Show predicting activity would take place at a Northeastern university Oct. 29-31, or at any other time.

Though Syracuse University has shown there is lititle to this story, they still have to act as if there is a threat. SU will beef up security in the Day Hall area, the spot where the unfounded rumor stated an incident would occur. Now that the rumor has gotten out of hand, who knows, there may really be a threat. Orange ("Murder prophecy plagues SU"Oct.
24) and in the Herald-American (Halloween murder rumors spook SU" Oct. 2\%) concerning this hearsay. The Herald-American handled it well because they spelled out in big letters that it was just a rimor.

The media's wide exposure of this falschood scares me. If some unstable person happened to read about it or see a news piece dealing with the "predicted massacre at Day Hall with the "predicted massacre at Day Hall." they may feel that it is some sort of calling for them to do something.

I can't be critical of those who have rented hotel rooms for Halloween night. At first I thought it was silly because it is evident to me that the story is a hoax. The way in which the rumor has spread and developed has given it a life of its own. The more people talk about it, the more frightening the situation becomes.
It would make me uneasy if I had to spend Halloween there.

If you do hive in Day Hall. I suggest you just relocate for the night. There's no harm in that. This is a college campus, and you know that some people are toing to play pranks relating to this rumor.

It's really sad that the students. parents and even the university has to worry about a prophecy that was not produced on The Oprah Winfrey Show, as originally feared. but probably invented in someone's dom room.

Be safe everyone.

Reflection of tension
Susan Wadley, chairwoman of the anthropology department at SU, agrees.
"They" clearly point to ten sions in society, "Wadley said in an interview Monday after noon. She said the kiltings in Texas last week are aliso a likely reason the rumor has surfaced.

But Wadley said students who are leaving Day Hall are over-reacting.
"All societies havo folklore and their folklore is continuously changing to match the imes," Wadley said. "Most of the time, urban myths are actually used to alleviate anxiety to make people more cautious when perhaps they should be anyway."

Wadley said the only danger in this urban myth would be if someone decided to take it upon themselyes to see it become a reality.
"I don't think there are very many people in the world who are that crazy," Wadley said. "That's pretty drastic steps for somebody to take

She compared the current urban myth circulating SU to others that have surfaced time and again. The story about green M&Ms being poisonous. the hearsay about the woman drying her dog in the microwave and last year's myth about a little boy's ghosit in Thrce Men and a Baby are all examples of urban myths. she said.
"They're all the same kind of thing," Wadley said. "We don't know where they start, and it's impossible to trace them.

\section*{A classic rumor}

Grider pointed to another legendary hoax that caused mass hysteria: Orson Welles' War of the Worids broadcast.

While imposias
While impossible to trace

Grider naid these rumors can spread quickly.
"It's altogether possible it got started with a Inng-distance phone call." she said. "A rumor like this can spread incredibly quickly and if there's an undercurrent of hysteria, it spresds even faster.

One aspect of the story Grider said she had not heard before was the theory that it could be traced back to the writings of Nostradamus. Grider sajd she thought Nostradamus was probably brousht into the myth because of the increase in what is termed "new-age thinking
"So now a new generation has dusted off tired old Nostradamus:"Grider said.

What we told students 20 years ago was to exercise a little bit of common sense. that the advent of Halloween frequently gets mixed up with the media and a hysterical response, Grider said. "Anyone living in a college dorm needs to be careful all the time: that's just common sense.
"This is all deja vu." Grider said. "I hope that everyone has a good scare and a memorable Halloween and this all dies down and then students get back to studying."

\section*{County park offers scenic autumn hayride}

By ANGELA RAMSAY
Contributing Writer
A traditional autumnactivity awaits students along the woodland trail at Onondaga Courty's largest park
This fall, students can ride through the scenic woods at the "Harvest Time" Hayride in Highland Forest.

A person taking the 45 minute ride to Highland Forest is met by a mirage of colors. Once there, the horse-drawn wagon comes into view within about five minutes.
The horses are set to rest for a few minutes and then riders pay the fee and hop on the hay wagon.
The hayride lasts for 30 min utes and costs \($ 3\) per person. It is free for children under 5 .

\section*{After Ours}

It began Sept. 14 and will run every Saturday and Sunday every Saturda
"This has been poing on this has been going on for at least five years, said Chris Tindall. recreation coordinator at Highland Forest. "It started out as a tractor that pulled a wagon, now it's a team of horses pulling a wagon.
"Between 18 and 20 people can hold on a wagon," she said.
"All different ages go on hayrides - families with chil dren, couples and also young people," she said.

Fun doesn't end with fall
They offer other programs at Highland Forest, such as horse back and saddleback riding.

There are also hiking trails and a museum that explains the park's history located in High-

Gorey Stories seems perfect for students. It gives the actors a chance to play several different characters, and it introduces audiences to a largely unknown literary figure, Edward Gorey.

Most importantly, it is great entertainment.

What exactly is a hayride? For each person, it has a different meaning. Two Syracuse University students described their perceptions of this traditional autumn activity.

Nine performers play dozens of characters, none of which would classify as being normal.
The ensemble works together perfectly, but Jason Chaet and Amanda Crafts deserve special praise for their work. Chaet's portrayal of a child wavering between piety and true evil is ase of the high points of the evening.

Kari Ann Shiff, Brian Stepanek, Richard Marcus and Heath Belden also perform admirably.

Kerro Knox's unceasingly clever staging also warrants praise. Of particular note is the simulated movement of "The Willowdale. Hexadcar" and the people that it passes.

One small criticism: The second act, a story combining several Gorey tales into a continu ous narrative, would have been better suited to the first half, when the audience's attention span is longer.

But when the sole complaint lies in the order in which the high-quality material is performed, that says something very good about the play.
'Widow' not so merry
I should mention that operetta is one of my least favorite forms of theater. It seems to take the most superficial concepts from opera and musical theater and leave behind the real excitement from each.

Franz Lehar's The Merry Widow, which was presented Widow, which was presented last weekend at the Civic Center, is no exception. The performers, for the most part, seemed constricted by the music, anxious to break out into either an aria or a showstopping number.

The book is extremely flimsy, like many operas.

But operas are underscored by music to conceal this weakness. The Merry Widow did not have this luxury.

Several of the leading performers, most notably Chris Groenendaal and Carol Ann Davis as the central couple, have impressive credits in both opera and musical theater - Groenendaal played the title role in Phantom of the Opera for a year.

It would be great to see their considerable talents exhibited in a more worthy piece.

\section*{By MARY JO KUSS}

Asst. Procfuction Manager

\section*{My sixth grade teacher scared} the hell out of me.
He shut the lights off, pulled the shades down, sat down at his desk with his hands folded and told the class a story.

He and his friends had been driving home one night along the 13 Curves, a curly noodle of road near Marcellus called Cedarvale.

With the road went a story about a couple killed in an accident on their wedding night. My teacher said he and his friends were stopped on one of the curves when they saw it: the white veil of the dead bride floating up through the trees.
But the tale of the 13 Curves is not the only ghost story in the Syracuse area.
You thought Syracuse was dead.
But the lady in white, an angel in white and Harry keep the city alive with stories.
'Where are you going ...
"Clarissa" wanders the staircases and balconies of Syracuse's 63-vearvold Landmark Theatre.

The first known sighting, by a group of volunteers working on the theater's restoration. was about 13 years ago.

According to the story, the volunteers saw a woman sitting in one of the seats in the upper right balcony. They told her the theater was closed. She got up from her seat, moved toward the aisle and disappeared.

No one knows her real name or how she died. It is believed she was a frustrated actress who has found her heaven in the old theister.

Ellen Besanson, former operations manager of the thea ter, "bumped" into Clarissa on the landing of the grand stair- lights, spoons and coffee pots. case two years ago.

Besanson said she was walk ing up the stairs, looking at her feet. When she was on the second step from the landing, she saw Clarissa about a foot away.
"I was caught off guard," she said. "I put my hand on the hand rail and when I looked up (she was gone)."

Besanson described her as a woman in her late 20 s . with woman in her late 2os. With bun, with big eyes and wearing a silver flapper dress.
"It looked like she was standing in a fog," she said. "(It was) a little misty.
Besanson said stagehands have heard Clarissa in the lower part of the theater near the ladies room.

She said Clarissa has called the stagehands by name. The voice comes from the direction of a dressing room, which was discovered during renovations in the late 1970 s .
Besanson said Clarissa always asks the same thing: "Where are you going?"

Sociable spirits
In contrast, "Harry" at the 200-year-old Weber's Wayside Inn in Elbridge just asks for coffee.
According to General Manuger Dan Harvey. Harry, who has been dead for 20 to 25 years. returns to haunt his unfaithful wife who worked at the inn.

Harvey said Weber's has several spirits.

"They're fun." Harvey said We've heard them ask for cof fee.'

He said the owner of the inn collects coffin plaques from the 1700 s, and these keep the spirits moving.
"Whenever they're present you get that chilling effect." Harvey said.

Psychic Ronald Dunn knows about the chill
"It's like a coldness," Dunn said. *A breath of wind goes across your face or the hair goes up on your arm

He described his sightings of spirits in forms of either white mists or lights.

Dunn has read spirits for the Landmark'Theatre, Weber's Wayside Inn and Syracuse Stage.

the graveyprd. tery," Dunn said.

He said more spirits are active on Halloween, and his spirit readings are stranger than normal on that night.

He has sat through Halloween nights in cemeteries reading spirits.

Obviously his sixth-grade teacher never told him the story of the 13 Curves.

Carpenter weaves a web of suspense as Dr. Loomis (Donald Pleasance) tracks his former psychiatric patient back for his Halloween homecoming.

Jack Nicholson shines
The Shining offers a very realistic plot and a small boy who has an imaginary friend. Tony, in his mouth that answers hoarsely, "Yes, Mrs. Torrance." Jack Nicholson is fabulous as a man who begins to go stir crazy during a stay at the Overlook Hotel.

The characters seemed to have overlooked the horror of the hotel when they took the housesitting job.

It comes back to haunt thern with waves of blood, a hedge maze and two strange twin girls that the boy finds on his Big Wheel expeditions around the hotel grounds.

For gore and sheer terror, the original Exorcist with Linda Blair as the possessed child who screamsexpletives at her mother and gives new meaning to pea soup is hard to beat.
The unknown is what creates the scare in this one. A demon has taken over the soul of a small girl and turned her into a crucifix-wielding terror. See ViDEO Page B5

Adam Hann-Byrd and Jodie Foster star in the new film Little Man Tate.

He begins to see his goal realized when he gets a job with gangster Dutch Schultz (Dustin Hoffman), whose right-hand man Bo Weinberg (Bruce Wiliis) may be selling Schultz out.

Schultz hires Billy to look after his girl, the married Drew Preston (Nicole Kidman), while the Dutchman is on trial in the fictional town of Onondaga. N.Y. Although set in a world of gangland murders, Billy Bathgate is really the story of a boy who falls in love. Billy vows to protect Mrs. Preston, as he calls her, and he eventually falls in love with her too.
Kidman is excellent as Mrs. Preston, losing her Australian accent and turning in a decent performance considering she's playing a not-always-too-bright character.
"I'm not his girl," Mrs. Preston says of her relation with Dutch Schultz. "He's my Eangster."

\section*{Murder, he said}

Hoffman is sensational, as always, in another over-the-top performance where he gets to beat one man to death and shoot another point blank in the mouth.
"This ain't lace and embroidery." Schultz tells Billy when he's explaining the mechanics of murder.

Dean is perfectly cast as the title character. Billy is a nice kid who is intrigued by the idea of the mob, but he also has a heart. He flinches when hee sees death, and he risks his life to save the woman he loves.

As a newcomer. Dean's wide eyed performance is helped by the fact that this is his first bir film. He hasn't been wined and dined enough by Hollywood executives to wear a Bruce Willislike smirk.

Willis* role in Billy Bathgate is nothing more than an extended cameo. When being tortured, he displays some believable terror, but for the most part he's just as smug as always. Steven Hill appears in Billy Bathgate as Otto Berman, a numbers wizard who works for Schultz. Hill is a stand-out audience favorite in this ensemble because his character watches out for Billy.

Party up

The Authority, an up-and-coming alternative band, will get down with the tribal heartbeat of urban meanstreet when they perform tonight at 907 Wainut Ave. "Party up" is the operative password at The Authority's over-the-top is the operative password at The Authority's over-the-top live shows when the band revs into their signature tune, "Officer Friendly."

Despite printed reports that the film was a troubled production, Benton's Billy Bathgate doesn't seem problematic. Filled with moody atmosphere, Ben ton fills the movie with some great shots, especially the juxtaposition of Bruce Willis, fall into the ocean with Nicole Kidman's plunge into a stream. Excellent production values and performances make foktl Man Tate and Billy Bathgate two excellent films, which may have Oscar nominations in their futures.

Continued from Fage A12 indicates what kind of ball dub they are." Hackett said. "Now we're going to have to deal with their running game along with the passing of Glemn Foley."

In Saturday's matchup. it seems the Eagles have everything to gain while the Panthers have everything to lose. And although a bowl bid is slipping away. Hackett put the season, into perspective.
"We've lost to teams with \(a\) combination of four losses," Hackett said. "Losing is very difficult, especially losing in the last minute of the game. We have to learn from that."

After last week's 51-6 pummeling at the hands of Penn State, West Virginia coach Don Nehlen was not a happy camper.

When asked if he paid special attention to his post-game speech. Nehlen responded in his usual, blunt manner.
"If you ran a bank and you lost a million bucks in a month, you'd want to call a meeting. wouldn't you?" Nehien said. "I hope our players feel a little sick and disappointed. If not.

we've got a big problem."
The Mountaineers must bounce back this week in a Big East contest with Rutgers. Both teams sport \(5-3\) overall records and are coming off tough losses. Syracuse defeated the Scarlet Knights last week, 21-7, to drop Futgers* conference record to 1-1.
But even if WVU, 2.2 Big East, can rebound from the debacle at Beaver Stadium, it will be a long time before Nehlen Syracuse defensive end George Rooks garmered the Defensive Player of the Week award for his three-sack, eight-tackle performance against Rutgers.

Rooks also forced a fumble in the Orangemen's 21-7 conference victory

Virginia Tech's Bo Campbell returned three punts for 102 yards in the Hokies'41-13 thrashing of Louisville and was named Special Teams Player of the Wpeek.

Wallace has attended the Nike camp and the Boston College All-Stars camp among others. He was aiso a two-time member of the Empire State Games, as well as the Most Valuable Player of the Delaware shootout held last spring.
"His best competition has been at these campsa and in the summer leagues," Brown said. "Big time competition will bring nothing but good things for him."
Brown cited Wallace's dedication to improvement as his strongest asset. Lately the senior has been working to fine-tune his game.
"He should defnitely work on his ball-handling." Brown said. "And his shooting can always improve.
"Defensivelyhe's going to have to adjust. He's always been a tremendous shot-blocker. but he's also always been one of the biggest guys in the league. He's going to have to learn to play aggressive aganst people his size."

Coleman said that Wallace reminds him of a former Carrier Dome favorite who has since moved on to higher ranks.
"He's very similar to Derrick Coleman," Van Coleman said. "If he dedicates himself to the weight program he could develop as Coleman did."

Developing. according to his coach, is something Wallace is prepared to do.

He's aware of the things he has to do," Brown said. "I think he's got a really good handle on what basketball might be able to do for him, even past college." Wallace said he will announce his plans on Nov. 9 or 10.

\section*{Top recruit to visit SU this weekend \\ By KEVIN SAX}

Staff Writer
It would be understandable if Syracuse University men's basketball coach Jirn Boeheim is a little uneasy this week.
The visit of a prized recruit could easily cause such queasiness. But these are the butterness. But these are the but
This weekend SU will be courting John Wallace, one of the most highly regarded prep players in the country.
Wallace, a senior at Greece Athena High School in Rochester, is high on the Orangemen's wish list, and with good reason. The 6 -foot- 8 forward is a member of the prestigious Nike Prep Report Dream Dozen, a listing of the top 12 high school players of the top 12 higg

Van Coleman, a prep talent scout for "Future Stars" recruiting service and a contributor to the Basketball Times, rates Wallace in the top four at the power forward position - a position he feels is the strongest in the class.
"He's a great talent," Coleman said. "He's very similar to a Lawrence Funderburke (ex-Indiana University forward now at Ohio State) and Ed O'Bannon (UCLA forward). He?ll definitely be an impact player in college." Wallace is moted for his exceptional foot speed, quickness and outside shooting skills, a unique and invaluable blend for a player his size.

"He's quick and can handle the ball in the open floor," said Don Brown, Wallace's high school coach. "He probably has the greatest aptitude to improve of any kid at 6 -foot-8 at this position. Whoever gets John is getting a very special player."

Not surprisingly. SU is not alone in its attempt to lure the recruit. Wallace has already visited the University of Connecticut, Providence College and the University of Pittsburgh, and has planned a trip to the University of Kansas on Nov. 9. Coleman rates SU and Kansas as the favorites to land Wallace. The taytraws won't

\section*{By 105 HB}

The NCAA has forced the Syracuse University soccer team to forfeit all its games for the past three seasons in which former Orangeman Steve Morris played.
The ruling will cost Syracuse 33 victories because of a violation committed by former SU coach Tim Hankinson.

Hankinson co-signed a loan to pay for Morris' tuition when the player was declared academically ineligible and lost his soccer scholarship in the spring of 1987.

Morris was trying to regain his scholarship by taking classes at University College.

At the time, Hankinson said he did not realize the loan was a violation of NCAA rules, since Morris was unable to play.
Hankinson resigned last spring in the wake of the allegations to take a profes sional coaching job in Iceland.
"What's done is done," said Syracuse associate athletic director Doris Soladay. "The impact is to make certain everybody realizes you have to abide by the NCAA rules."

\section*{Parents Office provides important} link between university, family
By ELISE LEVASSEUR
Contributing Writer

The Syracuse University Parents Office provides a vital link between the university and parents, according to Grace M. Severino. director of the office.

Parents Weekend, an annual event coordinated by the Parents Office, takes place this weekend. Severino said she is excited and has high hopes for the annual weekend.

One of the highlights of the weekend, Severino said, will be a cabaret showeasing student talent. Due to the cabaret's popularity in the past, there will be two performances, at 9:30 and 11 p.m. in Goldstein Auditorium on Saturday
Rather than hire a professional performer, Severino said she wants parents to see the diverse and important talent that exists on campus.

Other events taking place include a "Parents of the Year Dininer" on Friday, a box lunch before the football game on Saturday and a musical sampler Saturday afternoon

Despite the poor economy, lower enrollment and the weekend's close proximity to Thanksgiving break, Severino expects the number of parents arriving on campus to be greater than ever, with 2,000 to 3,000 parents in attendance.

Begins work opening day
Aside from Parents Weekend, the Parents Office serves as a contact point to answer parents' questions and address their concerns, Severino said. Severino's office begins its work on Opening Day in August, with a tent on the Quad to provide parents with introductory information. Throughout the year, telephone calls, seasonal newsletters and helpful handbooks link parents to her office. Severino said.
"It's important for parents to share in the educational experience their children are having, not just pay the bills," she said.
The Parents Office was first developed in 1972, during a time when students and parents were not communicating very well, Severino said.
"The main reason it was developed was to have a single office that would interact with parents of our students in a timely and accurate fashion," she said.

Parents were becoming increasingly concerned about the actions taking place on college carmpuses as students were See WEEKEND Page 22

About one-third of rape assailants on campuses are members of athletics teams, a recent study reported.
Syracuse University's statistics are similar to the national average, said University Rape Advocacy Prevention Education (R.A.P.E.) Center Director Joan Gibson.

Spurred by the alarming number of rapes by athletes, the SU athletic department is working on the issue.
"We are conducting a program of presentations by the medical and legal community as it relates to the issue," said SU Athletic Department Director Jake Crouthamel.

Crouthamel said a change in policy should occur soon.

He said a new policy will change the role of the athletic department once an athlete has been accused of rape.

\section*{By ANDY RYAN}

Syracuse University Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw yesterday related restructuring plans at SU and academic institutions nationwide to what has been happening in the private sector for many years.
Shaw spoke at University College's Thursday Morning Roundtable.

I'm going to talk about what's happening at Syracuse University, but I think you can apply these changes to any aspect of the private sector," he said. "It's happening at hospitals, the United Way Foundation and at General Motors.
"Restructuring is a natural response to change," he said. Shaw said higher education had been protected in the 1980 s and was not subject to the ups and downs of the private sector.

However, Shaw said he believes that now, and for a long time to come, higher education will join the private sector in instituting massive restructuring.
According to Shaw, Yale University will be cutting 5 to 10 percent from its social institutions, and Stanford University will cut \($ 43\) million from its budget These types of changes will be occurting at colleges and universities accoss the at colleges and "We'll need to cut \($ 28\) million from our budget over the next four years," Shaw said.

Shaw cited excellent management by former chancellor Melvin Eggers as the reason why SU does not have major debt problems.
SU must restructure because of its heavy dependence on tuition and the projected 20 percent drop in the number of 18-year-olds during 1990-1995, he said.
Shaw said there are three ways that SU could deal with the large drop in college-age students.

The firgt option would be to ignore the situation, which would be the worst situation, which w
The second option would be to completely abandon admission standards and accept anyone who applied.

Flaws in this methodology include the possible discovery that a face-to-face dialogue between Arabs and Israelis will only magnify their disagreements. While President Bush has said he will not impose a settlement. The New York Times noted "the United States did not get the parties to agree to talk by gentle over Israel ... and by tacitly threatening over Israel... and by tacitly threatening the Pal."

The Bush administration visualizes the negotiations taking place in three phases.

Phase one includes the opening statements by President Bush, Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and each of the delegations. Phase two will find Israel in bilateral negotiations with each of the other parties. American representatives will attend only if invited by both participants. The thind phase would

Some of the more demanding talks might take place between Israel and Syria. Assad hopes above ail else to induce Israel to return the Golan Heights to Syria.
The Syrians insist they will not engage in a separate deal with Israel and all of the occupied territories must be surrendered.
Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has said his government must have signed peace treaties with its Arab signed peace treaties with its Arab individuals who are strongly influential in athletes' lives.

"We are going to address the concerns of each one of the athletic teams," she said.

Gibson said she likes the way the athletic department is working on this from the top down.

A new corrmitment
"We are getting a commitment from the department and the coaches." she said.
"It is more effective in the long run than just mandating something for the players and getting lukewarm support. from coaches," she said.
"A disproportionate amount of rapes are cormmitted by athletes," Ditz said.

Despite some inroads, the athletic department needs to do a lot more, he sald.
"Athletes are the only segment of \(\mathbf{S U}\) that is not receiving rape education." Ditz said.
"There are mandates for alcohol and drug education for ath. letes but not rape education." Ditz said.
"It would be easy to do a program mandated by the department and show athletes what actions lead to rape," he said.

Athletes are generalized too often as being something that they aren't," Crouthamel said. "If an athlete violates a civil or university rule, they are identified as an athlete, not a stu* cent."
"The frequent enforcement of aggression makes athletes aggressive," he said.
"A successful athlete must be aggressive, whether in team or individual sports," he said.
"Obviously an athlete carries more aggression than a nonathlete," he said. "You can't just. turn that aggression on or off." Gibson said the general argu. ment for why athletes rape is the greater probability of mate bonding activities and the group dynamics that make rape possible.
"One reason athletes rape is because of the way they have been treated their whole life, Ditz said.
"They are told they are special and that they can get what they want," he said. "This is an attitude which promotes rape." "When stories involving athletes, including \(S U\) athletes, hit the newspapers, they get a very the newspapers, they get a very high profile,* Gibson said. "That high profle, Gibson said. "That leaves the public with the perleaves the public with the ception that athletes rape."

She said fraternity members and athletes get publicity.
"The St. Johns' lacrosse players received more than their due in publicity," she said.

Given somebody else in the Mike Tyson trial, it certainly wouldn't get the press coverage," she said.

\section*{Lack of discipline}

Ditz said coaches can also promote rape by calling players a "fag" or a "sissy."
"Lnck of supervision and discipline also combine to create a dangerous situation," he said.
"Sorne players are on the practice fiejd before they start school," he said. "It is also irresponsible to have freshmen athletes living on South Campus without a resident adviser nearby."

Crouthamel said "groupies," people who follow players after a game, add to the problem.
"We can't lock athletes up and not let them socialize or go home alone," he said.
"There is very little we can do except advise athletes what to look for," he said.

Crouthamel said there will not be changes in athletie recruiting visits despite the inctdent involving \(S U\) basketball recruit Wilfred Kirkaldy. He was accused of sexual assault. last year and acquitted.

I am one of these people that says there is a process for an alleged incident." Crouthamel said.
"A process unfolds and resalves itself. 1 might be naive. but that process has taken care of itself. The perception is something else, but I'm not going to make that an issue, he said. \\ \section*{THIE TAY \\ \section*{THIE TAY \\ \\ Stop Smoking. \\ \\ Stop Smoking. \\ \\ American Heart \\ \\ American Heart \\ \\ Assoclation \\ \\ Assoclation \\ \\ A} \\ \\ A}

\section*{Fight rape together}

Recent statistics have prompted the athletic department to initiate a program within the department meant to educate athletes about rape.

It is true that athletes are stereotyped, especially those on the Syracuse University campus. But it is also true that athletes make up a group that is slowly becoming more and more segregated from other SU students.

Athletes should not be separated and educated individually based only on the fact that they are athletes. SU Athletic Department Director Jake Crouthamel said athletes are "generalized" and when they commit a crime or wrongdoing, they are identified as "athletes," not as "students." Generalizations are wrong and invite unwanted stereotypes.

This is why rape education should be taking place everywhere, as campus groups have frequently mentioned.
The fact that one-third of all reported rapes on campus have been committed by athletes only increases the need for education and action against the problem of rape - but increases that need among all students. Athletes must realize they are members of a community whose other members are looking to improve the collective conditions in which they live.
Students are students, and athletes are students. Whatever race, creed or age, we are in this fight together and all should be treated equally.

Athletes should be educated about the problems of rape and how horrific the experience is, but singling them out as a target group is wrong. Team effort, a concept they undoubtedly will understand, should be the underlying theme.

It seems as if people just get a plate full of food and put it on the conveyor belt to dispose of it. The amount of food people throw away is budget is used on the dining halls, but I'm

\section*{Science not addressed in comic}

To the editor:
This letter is a response to Daniel Giancola's article "Widen idyllic minds" in the Oct. 29 issue of The Daily Orange.

Mr. Giancola likens opposition to the Hobbit God's cartoon to the Catholic Church's persecution of Galileo's work in the seventeenth century. This is the equivalent of likening Mozart to Madonna. I do not Mozart to Madonna. I do not think anyone in their right think anyone in their right mind would argue that the Mind would argue that Church was correct in persecuting Galileo or dispute persecuting Galileo or dispute that it has made many other mistakes in its 2000 year history. However, this has absolutely nothing to do with the present issue. What scientific breakthrough will the Hobbit God's mocking of Christ's crucifixion offer society? The answer is the cartoon serves no one and nothing, except the people and things that stand for the defamation of the Christian religion.

Mr. Giancola finds it "offensive and destructively limiting" to use religion as a foundation of morality and beliefs. Whatother basis would he have us use? Perhaps the he have us use? Perhaps th basis we should use is the wonderful societal gospel we wonderful societal gospel we have today that celebrates insulting cartoonists that are not funny and musical not funny and musical clothes off on stage and stick soda bottles in their bodily cavities?
\(I\) do not believe that religion and government should be sanctified beyond the reach of the individual. There is an enormous difference, however, between questioning Church policies and defaming its sacred mysteries.

There is nothing wrong within my idyllic mind. I will continue to base my morality and beliefs on the foundation of the Catholic religion, despite any attempt on the part of Mr. Giancola and his army of lemmings to impede me.

Reunion is a tale of questionable loyalties. Before taking charge of the USS Enterprise, Capt. Jean Luc Picard commanded a deep space exploration vessel. the USS Stargazer. Now, years later, circumstances have brought most of the Stargazer crew together again for a brief voyage on the Enterprise.

Someone aboard the ship, however, is unhappy to see Picard's old friends and members.

Slipping through subspace
To make matters worse, the Enterprise becomes trapped in a subspace slipstream, and the crew must break the ship free to deliver one of Picard's guests to his initiation as hereditary leader of he Daa'Vit empire. Missing the cer mony could cause galactic anarchy.
There are parallel plots: a "who-doneit?" puzzle and a "we're-all-going-to-die!" journey through subspace at uncontrollable speeds. While the two plots do not hinder each other from developing, they are almost unrelated outside of both occupying prominent places in Picard's It istressed mind.
It is as if neither plot is strong enough to stand alone, so they are thrown together into one book and intertwined with only limited success.

This is not to say neither of the two stories is worthwhile. The mystery part keeps the reader following along until the end, although the choice of suspects is minimal.

Naturally, each of the main crew members from the TV show has a role toplay. Reunion even includes seven new characters, all crew members of the Stargazer. The newcomers add variety to the regular cast but have little depth to them.

The usual characters remain static and true to their TV personalities throughout the book. Unfortunately, the reasoning behind their actions is often overplayed. By the middle of the story, as by the end of the first Star Trek episode, the reader knows the characters and their motives. They do not need to be explained repeatedly.

The greatest turn-off of the book's dialogue is the use of 20thecentury liches and expressions, most of which are so detested today they can hardly expect to be used several hundred years from now.

Otherwise, Reunion is clearly written. The book is simple and requires scarcely Yes, it is 184 pages of information about a spaceship hat does not exist.

Outside of its service to those with a vehement desire to better follow a TV series or dream about futuristic space eravel through hours of quasi-nonfiction reading, the general uselessness of this book is hard to deny.

Admittedly. Star Trek: The Next Genration is an enjoyable IV show. But when an Enterprise crew member mentions the warp propulsion system, most viewers probably do not feel the need to look up the system and discover it consists of three major assemblies; the matter/anti-matterassembly, powertransfer conduits and warp engine nacelles."

As nice as it is to know that the approximate value of integer warp factor six is 392 cochranes, I do not even know how I would understand this fact or relate it to my everyday Star Trek viewing.

\section*{Few understandable facts}

The Technical Manual, in fact, gives the average 20th century Earthling few understandable facts. Instead, its explanations are overflowing with terms for things not yet invented, such as nadions and tricorders. Apparentiy these pieces of equipment are the products of the research of future generations.

Sternbach and Okuda do keep the manual at least partly relatable to the actual show, however. Footnotes in the book place certain concepts in the con text of recent episodes.
For example, the reader is informed that a line in the "Sins of the Father" episode provides an instance of the \section*{New Dire Straits fails to impress}

There's music on the radio today that doesn't merit an opinion. No matter what anyone says, certain artists will spawn hit singles and sell millions. Take Dire Straits, for example.

While some artists need to KRISTIN LJEB THIS AIATT NO DISCO limits. Take Mark Knopfler for example.

On Every Street, the new album by Dire Straits (a.k.a. Mark Knopfler and whoever he happens to record with), shows that knopfier is not working up to his potential. and the result is an album not worth an opinion.

That's not to say On Every Street is a bad album. It's going to be successfal, anyway, given album's first single, "Calling Elvis."

What a cop-out
The problem with the album is that it's a cop-out, which makes it something of a disappointment. As music, it's good. As a logical progression in the career of a talented musician. t sucks.
By not daring to try anything new on his latest effort, Knop-fler showcases a rehashed version of Brothers in Arms, the band's 1985 relense and most popular record to date.

The comparison between the two albums is obvious but the newer songs lack originality and sound like outtakes from Brothers In Arms. They're valid songs, but you've heard them before. Even in terms of rhythm sections, vocals. imagery and lyrics. you can almost match them up song by song.
"Heavy Fuel" is a derivative of "Money For Nothing," the band's best-known single. It has the same guitar set-up and the same theme: "I love the babes. don't get me wrong/Hey, that's why I wrote this song.
"Iron Hand,"a folk tale that sounds as if it were writien at " campfire gathering, echoes "Man's Too Strong." The music in "Iron Hand" is stripped down to familiar faint guitar riffs and the vocals are isolated and delivered in the same off-the-cuff manner as in the song's predecessor.

Reflections of the past
"Fade To Black" is a logical continuation of "Your Latest Trick." Both succeed as enticing, lounge-music-backed ballads that thow Knopfler straining vocally and reflecting on past rejationships
"You and Your Friend" runs along the same lines as Knopfler broods: "I relive the situation/ Still see it in my mind/You've gotmy imaginationdrunning overtime."
"Planet of New Orleans" has a Cajun bent and umorthodox instrumentation reminiscent of "Ride Across The River."

And rounding out this formulaic abum is "Calling Elvis," a typical Dire Straits charttopper. It's catchy, simpleminded and doesn't command as much attention as better cuts on the album. But it's marketed well and is turning up all over the radio.
The high point of On Every Street comes when the band unwittingly harps on its own shortcoming on "Iron Hand": The same old fears and the same old crimes/We haven't changed since ancient times."

The only aspect of Dire Straits that changes (albeit consistently) from album to album is the composition of the band The composition of the band. The now in the midst or a Sorld tour now in the midst of a world tour, Mark tegap in lare August. Mark Knopfler and company stop in Syracuse in early March.

\section*{'Trompe le Monde' lives up to its title}

I work in a record store, see? And at this record store, we got advance copies of the latest Pixies' record, Trompe le Monde, so I've had extra time to try to figure out just why this record is such a disappointment.

corded a full-length record, Surfer Rosa, which garnered more praise and a sizable cult following.

The band made its Amerjcan debut with Doolittle, an abrasive record in the same vein as Surfer Rosa.

Then Doolittle went gold on the strength of two hit singles, "Monkey Gone to Heaven" and "Here Comes Your Man."

So the Pixies toured, got rich, released Bossanova, got boring, toured some more, got rich again, released Trompe le Monde, and released sent it to my record store, where I said, "Hmm, I wonder if this is any good."

Well, the record starts interestingly enough with the title track, and climaxes somewhat prematurely with the first single, "Planet of Sound," which doesn't make any sense, but still sounds like a three-minute hurricane "Alec Eiffel," in which Black Francis coos, "He thought big and they called it phallic/ They didn't know he was panoramic," is augmented by Kim Deal, who sings, "Littie Eiffel, Little Eif. fel", after every line.

Kim Deal is probably the biggest disappointment on Trompe, because she almost never sings, and she happens to be my favorite Pixie.
"The Sad Punk" tells the story of punk-extinction in screaming hardcore, while "Letter to Memphis," the second single, takes a decidedly mainstream approach.
The Pixies also cover the Jesus and Mary Chain's 1989 hit "Head On," with moderate success, while "U-Mass" starts off well, but doesn't know when to quit.
"Palace of the Brine," "Bird Dream of the Olympus Mons" and "Space (I Believe In)" are really boring, and should be skipped, while "Distance Equals skipped, while Times Time" and "Lovely Day" are both mindless pieces of trash.
In "Subbacultcha,"Black Francis says, "There's somethin' cis says, "There's somethin about this song ..." that really these people thinking when they these people thinking wh recorded this ... thing?

They were thinking they could make some money, so it didn't make some money, so it didn't what they were thinking.Trompe what they were thinking. Trompe le Monde is "Trick the World" le Monde is "Trick the World" in French, and that's exactly in French, and that's exactly what I think they're trying to do.

Some of Syracuse's best artists displayed their work at the Onondaga Historical Association Museum, and Holme Roberta Martin was named the best of the best.
Martin's painting "Greenhouse, Morning Light", captured the Golden Steele Award for the Best of Show at the Associated Artists of Syracuse 65th Annual Juried Member's Exhibition.
"I've been painting for 40 years, and this piece made a nice statement," she said. "It said what I wanted it to say."

Forty-six works of art were selected for the exhibition at the Onondaga Historical Association Museum

The show was judged by Cornell University art Professor Norman Daily and features mixed media including paintmixed media including paintings, prints, drawings and ce-

The art collection at the Onondaga Historical Association includes work from current and past Associated Artists mem bers and is considered one of New York's finest local collections.
"It's essential to nurture our local artists," Onondaga Historical Association exhibit designer Patricia Ballinger said. "There's a lot of talent here. and if our local artists are neglected they'll go elsewhere."

Associated Artists currently has about 100 members ranging in skill from amateur to professional, said Martin, who is also president of the organization.

Although membership is open to anyone with an interest in the visual arts, works shown in the exhibition were produced by advanced artists.
"The main purpose of Associated Artists is to form a cohesive organization for pros and semi pros in the area," Martin said.

Associated Artists has met and held monthly exhibits in the Manlius Library since 1983 The annual members' axhibi the had been held in a large tion had been heid in a larger gailery at Cazenovia College Ontil 1990, when it moved to the Onondaga Historical Associa tion Society Museum.

Associated Artists hopes to keep the show in the Syracuse area, where it started in 1926.
"This experiment of moving back has been slow but satisfy ing," Martin said. "I was basi cally not pleased with having it out of Onondaga County.

Barbara Kellogg received a Merit Award for her "Blue Intensities." as did P.R. McGrath for his work "Other Places.

Honorable Mentions went out to Anne Baldwin, June Carey, Marion Lapham and Betty Munro.

Wentworth said it doesn't bother him that the role he has taken on will not lead him to he Heisman Trophy or flash his tame on the Carrier Dome scoreboard.
"I'm not on everyone's AltAmerica list. but I'm able to get the job done." Wentworth said.

Wentworth and his fellow defenders have been a big reason for Syracuse's No. 18 rank and a \(6-2\) record.
The defense has yielded an verage of only 18.9 points per garne, and registered a shutout against Tulane University.
"We have the athletic ability and the speed to be one of the most dominating defenser in the country " Wentworth said "There isn't a team that we can't match up with."

Wentworth has three regulat season games lef in his Syracute career and said he is happy with his accomplishments at SU

Things got pretty competitive for this job. I'm sure my college degree and good grades kept me in the nunning. But in the end it was the leadership and management experience I got through Axmy ROTC that won them over.

Arrny ROTC taught me responsibility, selfdiscipline and leadership. Those are things you just can't learn from a textbook.

I don't know where I'd be right now if I hadn't enrolled in Arrny ROTC, but I do know one thing for sure...I wouldn't be here.

"We need to get in syne offensively." Pasqualoni said. "We've got to get some tempo back and it's hard to do that without key players. It doesn't help the rhythmat all."

Quarterback Marvin Graves was 9 -of-18 for 81 yards and was sacked live times. He also was sacked five times. He also

The Owls have also gone the way of their quarterbacks. Anthony Richardson started the season. but punter Trent. Thompson is currently the starter. Both have played in all seven games.

SU opponents have racked up passing yardage, but a potent pass rush last week held Reqgers quarterback Torr Tarver to 118 yards and sacked him six times. Tharver completed 10 -of27 passes.

Joseph said the pass rush makes the secondary's job easier, bue the unit will still be challenged Saturday because Thompson is a good quarterback.

Keegan capitalizing on theirs. Colonna leads Georgetown with 9 goals and 8 assists, while Keegan has 7 goals and 9 assists.

Foti said the Oramzemen should be able to keep the Hoyas under control.
"If you can't get motivated for this game, you don't belong at the Division I level." Foti said.
"Thompson's smart." Joseph said. "He's got a nice arm. He doesnt make too many dumb doesnt make too many dumb it's supposed to he."
The Owls* lack of efficiency at quarterback has meant very few points on the scoreboard.
Temple scored in double fig ures for the first time against a Division I opponent in its last game, a 21-14 win over Navy on Oct. 19.

After a \(\mathbf{4 0 . 0}\) shutout of Division II Howard University, Temple was trailing Penn State \(10-7\) with over six minutes leff in the game before losing 24-7
The Owls were leading west Virginia 9-0 with eight minutes left. but were unable to score from the 1-yard line and last 10-9.
"I really believe we're a better team than our record would indicate, but it's the final scores that count," Berndt said. "I hope we found out a little more about winning. Hopefully, the "real Temple team will show up."

The Owls last year had the nation's biggest turnaround in Division I-A, going from \(1-10\) to 7-4. Temple, however, finds itself somewhere in between this season.
"This is something to salvage their season," Pasqualoni said. They have a chance to play another Top 20 tearn after they've had a little success. Maybe this is the opportunity for them to accomplish something this season."
The game against Temple is the first of three home games which close out the SU season.

After three early-season losses, the Syracuse University women's field hockey team had a goal to go undefented the rest of the season.

The Orangewomen, 11-3-1, can make that gonl a reality with a win over Colgate University. 5-7.3, on Saturday, 11 a.m.. at Coyne Field.

If we win this game then we have reached our goal of not losing another game." SU coach Kathleen Parker said.

According to Parker, the 14 th ranked Orangewomen cannot afford a loss if they expect to make postseason plans besides the Big East Tournament.
"If we lose this game, it will kill any chances of making the NCAA Tournament," Parker said.
SU co-captain Kelly Larkin said if the Orangewomen achieve their early season goal, it will provide momentum for the postseason.
"It's our last regular season game," Larkin said. "We have to win it to gain confidence going into the Big East. A loss right now wouldn't be good."

Larkin said the Orangewomen and the Red Raiders have been quite similar in recent weeks, and that similarity has Syracuse wary or Colgate.
"They're good," Larkin said. "They tied Providence in overtime, just like we did. They beat Rhode Island, just like we did. We have to take them seriously. We have to take them.
They're a solid team."
This game will mark the last home appearance for Larkin, co-captain Traci Dimeo and aix other seniort. Parker said this will give the game some additional meaning.
"It's the last home game for the seniors," Parker said. "It's kind of emotional. We try and honor them before the game."

Columnist bowled over by sponsorship

By DAVE MAGER
WAER Sports Director
Ah，November．The time of year when athletic directors＇ hearts turn to bowls．big time cash，and where to get a safe tan in late December．So let＇s focus on the bowls and bowl match－ ups we＇d like to see，along with the sponsors who should join the bowl commercialization fray．

Exxon Crash and Burn Bowl：The Holiday Bowl gets withdrawal symptoms as Ty Detmer and BYU meet David Klingler and Houston．The two disappointing Heisman candi－ dates meet in Cicely，Alaska， which doesn＇t even really exist． The teams would like to say the same about 1991.
National Hockey League Lady Byng Bowl：As long as the NHL can＇t promote itself as a major sport，it might as well get involved in one．The Lady Byng Trophy is awarded for ＂gentlemanly play，＂so this game goes to the gentlemanly teams which lay down for the big clubs．Tulane vs．Oregon State in that great hockey market． Tampa．

Paul Tsongas Name Rec－ ognition Bowl：The Democratic presidential candidate gets desperate early with this at－ tempt at answering the ques－ tion：Who am 1？For these two teams meeting in Lubbock，the question is always：Where is that？Austin Peay vs．Bethune－ Cookman．
Lenscrafters Bowl：Joe Paterno＇s favorite fun stop in the State College Mall gets this game between Paterno＇s team and Pat Dye＇s Auburn Tigers． All SU fans admitted get a free beer to toss at Paterno or Dye． That＇s a tough choice．
Temple（ +17 ）at Syracuse：
Even though SU is appar－ ently back on the winning track． this is a big spread for Big East game No．3．Here＇s why：

1．Since scoring 30 points in each of their first three games， the Orangemen have been in－ consistent on offense．And with－ out Qadry Ismail＇s individual－ effort TD．plus a good defensive game，there might have been trouble against Rutgers．

2．With the exception of per－ ennial chumps Vanderbilt and 24 Tulane，SU hasn＇t blown any－ one out．

3．Temple， \(2-5\) ，isn＇t as bad as its record．Temple＇s schedule has caused difficulties．Although the Owls have beaten only How－ ard and Navy，they played Penn State tight for a while and lost by only one to West Virginia．
Temple has a talented runne n Scott－McNair but the QB in Scott Mol spot is awful ．．．Trent Thompson and Anthony Richardson have combined to complete just over 40 percent of their passes．The SU defense will rule again Syracuse 24．Temple 9.
Pittsburgh at Roston College （ +3 1／2）：
Three weeks ago，Pitt re－ ceived the Dartboard＇s Kiss of Death．At 5－0 and cruising into Notre Dame，I called Paul Hack－ ett my Big East＂Coach of the Year．＂He still is my choice but things have fallen apart at Pitt

With a chance to redeem itself atter losses to Notre Dame and the Orange，Pitt lost to that titan in purple and gold，East Carolina they covered the spread Carolina they covered the spread in Greenville，N．C．
Now at \(5-3\) ．Pitt faces bowl elimination this week at Boston College，2－5．The Eagles should finally get a win at home this week，after losing there to Michi－ gan and West Virginia．

Glenn Foley and Mark Chymura should be successful underneath against the Pan thers．Boston College 27．Pitt 24.

Rutgers at West Virginia（－6）：
We were very surprised down at Giants Stadium last weekend at how lame this Rutgers club actually is．The Scarlet Knights， 5－3．have a QB with little or no arm，wide receivers with no speed，and a defense carried by its two outside linebackers．This is not a bowl tearn．
West Virginia，5－3，is border line for bowl action as well．A win over Rutgers is a foregone conclusion，but with Miami and Syracuse coming up．Don Nehlen＇s team could finish 6－5 A loss to Rutgers would mean a non－bowl season to follow a 4－7 year in 1990．And this was a team that almost took it all the way in 1988．West Virginia 13 Rutgers 6.
Rowa at Ohio State（－1）：
A terrific game from the Big Ten：both teams are 6－1，Iowa is No． 11 in the Associated Press poll and Ohio State is No． 13. The folks in Ohio were signing John Cooper＇s walking papers before the season，but the Buck－ before the season，but the Buck eyes are in years． lowa had to come from behind last week against Purdue－the Buckeyes weren＇t all that im pressiveagainstMichiganState This should be a standoff in Columbus．and will answer the question：Who will come second to Michigan？Ohio State 3，Iowa \({ }^{\circ}\) ebraska at Colorado（－2 1／2）： Earlier this week，Colorado became the first Big Eight team other than Nebrasica to stop Oklahoma three straight times since World War II．

Look for Colorado to establish its dominance over Nebrasica as well．Last year＇s championship team，led by Eric Bienenmy destroyed the Cornhuskers in the rain in Lincoin．In this year＇s battle，Colorado should win in front of Ralphie and the home fans．As usual Tom Osbourre＇s squad comes up short in the big one．Colorado 28， Nebraska 17.
NFL，Game of the Weelc－ Houston（ \(t 61 / 2\) ）at Washing－ ton：

For a big game and a likely

Super Bowl preview，you＇d think John Riggins came up with this spread－while drunk．Sure， the Skins have been dominant at home，with three shutouts， but the Oilers are a different out the Oilers are a dimerent story．Warren Moon should be at his best．so Houston should keep it close．

Washington is the best in the NFL right now．Let＇s just．hope those heinous Hogettes don＇t become as popular as the Toma－ hawk Chop．Washington 35， Houston 31 ．

FM88＇s coverage of SU－Temple begins Saturday at IZ：30 with Countdown to Kickoff．

These are the kinds of games that you train year round for - to play a big game with something on the line, SU Eoach Dean Foti said. "This is for a Big East birth."
A victory over previously undefeated Seton Hall on Oct. 26 has moved Georgetown into a position where it can qualify for the tournament.
"If Georgetown lost to Seton Hall, they would have nothing at stake, and it would be harder to get our guys up," Foti said. "This should prove to be a very good, competitive, hard-fought game.
"Hopefully, we'll come out with flying colors and go to the Big East," Davison said. "Everyone's going to have to give it 150 percent all game, and play as a team, like we've been doing the past couple of games."

After Wednesday's double overtime win, the Orangemen will face Georetown on a three-game winning streak. Paul Young gave \(S U\) a 1-0 lead ten minutes into the first overtime period, when he scored his 15 th goal of the season on an Eric Puls pass.

Only one minute later, Oneonta came back and scored on a breakaway goal from Mike Klebanow to tie the score at from Foti said Oneonta, 8-8-1, utilized its home field to its advantage.

"The field was small and very slick, which doesn't cater to the way we play, Foti said. "We like to keep the ball on the ground. It was made difficult under those conditions to keep possession of the ball."

Davison scored the winning goal after picking up the rebound off a direct kick by Young. "Paul (Young) took the free kick from about twenty yards out, Davison said. "The keeper couldn't hold on to the ball, and I came in and got the rebound. It was a nice shot from Paul.

\section*{Sculpture court opens Saturday outside Shaffer}

\section*{By TOM SEELEY \\ Shom Writer}

In 1953, Syracuse University Art Prafessor Ivan Mestrovic wansed to destroy his sculpture of Moses.

Today. it is the focal point of a new sculpture court located between Howne Hall and the Shaffer Art buitding.
"This gives us an opportunity to bring the works of the Comstock Art Facility to Shaffer.: said Donald Lantzy, Dean of the College of Visual and Performing Arts.

Lantzy said the sculpture court completes the Shaffer building and integrates it with the Quad

The new court benefits the entire community and adds to the overall quality of ife here, he said.
"This is a great place for students to sit and reflect and be positively charged," Lantzy said.
The court was dedicated Saturday morning with 100 parents. faculty and students in attendance. Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw opened the dedication ceremony.
The court includes the sculpture of Moses, several of Mestrovic's other works, which have been relocated, and two pedestals where student works will be exhibited.
A place for everyone
The court is not just a place to be left to the art majors, but something to be appreciated by all." Shaw said.

It is a place of quiet, beauty and nspiration," he said.
Although the new court finishes the art building. the idea for it preceded the idea for Shaffer, Lantzy said.
In 1953, while Mestrovic was at SU. he made the first model of the sculpture of Moses for a contest. However, when the contest fell through. he wanted to destroy it

Lawrence Schmeckebier, former Dean of the College of Art. convinced him to give the piece to the university.

\section*{Activities showcase Latin culture}

\section*{By WENDY SIMARD}

Asst. Design Editor
A discussion about Puerto Rico's statehood drew about 200 people and media coverage last year during Latin Awareness Wrek.

This week. people with different interests will once again have an opportunity to get acquainted, said Jessica Martinez. president of La Casa Latinoamericana.
"The purpose of the week is to communicate what Latin culture is," Martinez said.

It is essentially different cultures with common language and religion, she said. La Casa will be holding its annual Latin Awareness Week this week.

The activities scheduled for the week are open to everyone, and Martinez encouraged people outside of the Latin American community to attend.

The play Brigadista will be shown tonight at 7 p.m. in The Underground of the Schine Student Center.

A brigadista is a group of people who go to work.

The play portrays a young North American woman's experience on a coffee plantation in Nicaragua during the 1990 election.

La Casa Bohemian Cafe, a musical social gathering, is planned for Tuesday at 6 p.m. in The Underground.
Coffee from eight South American countries will be served with pastries called churmas. The musical group Chaski, from Ecuador, will also play.
There will be an informal round-table discussion titled "Racial Exploitation in discussion titled "Fuacial Exploitation in Guaternala Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Room 304 C of the Schine Student Center.
Two speakers from a grassroots organization will talk about racial and social problems in Guatemala. Miguel Quieja from Guaternala and George Garry from the United States will lead che discussion.
A documentary movie on domestic violence titled Aslor de Piel is scheduled in Maxwell Auditorium on Thursday at 7 p.m.

The movie does not have subtitles, but is graphic, making it understandable. Martinez said.

She raved about the film. saying it is "beautiful and well-done."
It was funded by the Puerto Rican government. and is a case study of a woman who is beaten by her hasband.
A Latin Party will be held Friday at 8 p.m. in The Underground.
This event is co-sponsored by La LUCHA and features two live bands and a disc jockey. Conjunto Chevere, which plays salsa and meringue and Los Sabuplays salsa and meringue and Los del Meringue will perform.
"It will be a great opportunity to dance." Martinez said.

Unilike other events scheduled for Latin Awareness Week, the Latin Party will have a \($ 5\) cover charge, and SU IO is required.

However, community members can go if they call the La Casa office at 443-4099 before the event and bring some form of D with them.
La Casa was founded in the late 1960 s . and the tradition of Latin Awareness Week has been alive for about 10 years

Guards fired tear gas Saturday to prevent a clash between about 400 stonehurling Vietnamese in the fourth incident of violence last week at Hong Kong's largest camp for boat people.

Officials said no one was injured in the hour-long incident at Whitehead. which houses some 25,000 Vietnamese boat people.

Protesters object to an agreement between Britain and Vietnam to force boat people back to their Communist homeland.

Vietnam agreed on Tuesday to accept the forcible return of up to 50,000 boat people from Hong Kong, part of the more than 1.5 million Vietnamese who have fled their country.

\section*{Thousands protest union of Taiwan, China}

Tens of thousands of Taiwanese are defying arrest in a bold campaign of street protests that challenge the belief that Taiwan must one day reunite with mainland China.

The demonstrations are centered in the gritty industrial cities of the south. To the tune of the Taiwanese hit. "Walk Ahead, Fear Nothing," the protesters demand that the Nationalist government support independence for Taiwan and abandon, after 43 years, the idea of reuniting with mainland.
About 30,000 Taiwanese demonstrated in the city of Kaoshiung on Oct. 25.

A brain-dead pregnant woman has been kept alive by machines at St . Joseph's Hospital Health Center, Syracuse, for more than seven weeks so her fetus could be born.

Doctors, who plan to do a Caesarean section today, said they are optimistic the baby will survive, even though it will be delivered three-weeks early.

After the birth, the machines will turned off, and the woman will be allowed to die.
The woman, not identified at her family's request, has been kept alive on mechanical life support since suffering a brain aneurysm.

The bleeding in her brain was too severe to repair so the woman's family decided to do what could be done to save the baby, a hospital spokeswoman said.

\section*{Harlem woman charged} with fatally stabbing child A 24-year-old woman was arrested Saturday for allegedly stabbing her 6 -year-old daughter to death and dump ing the body in a park near Kennedy Airport, police said.

\section*{Sexual harassment endures \\ \section*{By SHEILA DOUCHERTY}}

\section*{Professors ponder Hill case's legacy}

It may have taken the notoriety of a congressional hearing to bring sexual harassment to the forefront of American politics, but many say it is not a new problem.

Sexual harassment in the workplace is a prevalent roblem for women Judy Long, Syracuse University sociology professor said.
"It occurs all the time," Long said. "Probably most wornen have experienced it.
Leslie Bender. SU professor of law and feminist theory, said there are two leyal classifications of sexual harassment - "quid pro quo" and "hostile environ-

Quid pro quo means the terms of a person's employment. such as promotions and pay raises. are based on the exchange of sexual favors, Bender said.
said.
Your boss would say to you, "If you sleep with me, I will give you a promotion,' or 'I'll give you a raise if you go out with me,'... when it's made directly contingent upon a sexual relationship, that's quid pro quo." she said.

\section*{Hostite enviromment}

Hostile environment is defined as unwelcome con duct that interferes with person's ability to do work properly, Bender said.
"Hostile environment doesn't have to be touching." she said. "There are cases where the workplace is covered with pornographic posters or nude women posters from Playboy calendars.

LLanguage referring to women in derogatory ways could be considered a hostile environment.

Terrell Northrup, SU assistant professor of political science and international relations and associate director of analysis and conflict resolution in the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Afrairs, said there is a broad range of behavior that could be considered sexual harassment.
"There's a wide range of stuft, from saying "Hi gexy. which is inappropriate, to predatory behavior, such as following a woman around," she said.
"I don't think it's an accident that the first gross examples of sexual harassment came from women who are located in the workforce in a place where they have very little choice," she said.

Long said some of the worst places for sexual harassment are in the food service industries.
"lt's rampant, and that's because the women can"t walk out of those jobs," she said. "They cant get better jobs.

There are two reasons sexual harassment happens in the workplace, Long said.

Abuse of power
One reason is abuse of power, she said. "If there is no check and balance system for the exercise of power no check and balance system for the exercise of power then you can't assume that abuse isn't going to occur."

Another reason sexual harassment occurs has to do ith how women are portrayed as sex objects in the media, Lang said.

It serves as a backlash to women's gains over the past 20 to 25 years," she said. "We have a new head, old body problem.

Long said most Americans believe in greater opportunities for women, but established arrangements in society limit women.
Men use sexual harassment to keep women in line, Long said.
"If you're going to have women aiming high and working hard and expecting rewards, you'vegot to keep them in line some other way," she said. "Sexual intimidation - it'zis crude, it's unworthy of our male counterparts, but it does seem to work."

Northrup said what is often thought to be normal behavior for men is seen as improper by wormen.
"In our society, lots of behavior considered to be normal male behavior is what women feel intimidated by," she said

Victims of sexual harassment can bring civil charges against the individual harasser and the employer under Title VII of the United States Code, which defines quid pro quo and hostile environment. Bender said.

There are other ways to bring complaints about sexual harassment, she said.
"They can also be brought under other legal theories such as state human rights or discrimination acts, or tort law," Bender said. "There are those other avenues, so sexual harassment doesn't have to fall under the same defnitions that Title VII states," she said.

Long said there are several steps a victim must take to stop sexual harassment.

One is a woman has to document what's going on, two is she has to blow the whistle, three she has to use the channels that exist in her place of business." she said.

\section*{Speaker examines media's role in Gulf War}

By LAURA HARDING
Shatf Writer
The relationship between the U.S. media and government played a crucial role in how the United States viewed the Persian Gulf War, Syracuse University senior Jenifer Maroon said.

Maroon, a dual major in English & textual studies and psychology, spoke Friday at the Women's Lecture Series.

According to Maroon, the Gulf War was seen in the setting of post-Vietnam, where there was conllict between the media and the "war machine of the Pentagon."
"During the Vietnam War, glitches happened as to how we perceived the war in this country, which is why it was such an unpopular war," she said.

One of the main problems in the Vietnam War, Maroon said, was that the news media were allowed to go into the war and see things the American public is not supposed to see.

Media problems from the Vietnam War have been worked through and as a result, the United States received edited result, the United States received edited material and a construe Gulf War, Maroon said.

TThe reality of the media is merely another representation and fiction," she said. "You can't pin down the reality of anything by showing it through the U.S. media."

During the Gulf War. society was flooded every evening with irnages of missiles hitting targets ending in "crisp puff of smoke." Maroon said.

One of the technological advances that aided in creating an image of the war was having a camera inside the missiles to send an immediate view of the missile seeking and hitting the target. Maroon said.
"This technological advance was a connecting or merging of the media and the war ... and makes for a better and more-eflicient war machine," she suid.

After the missile hit, the "viewer's attention was immediately refocused by a briefing or some new piece of information in order to keep them from wondering what happened when the smoke cleared," she said.

According to Maroon, using the term "war machine" takes away the reality of the killing of people, the human quality and the image of harm and horror of war
*During the Vietnam War, there was very little censorship and a lot of bodies were shown, but that showed the human level of the war," she said.
-In the Gulf War, an officially-ereated image showed personalized allied troops eating meals, unpacking boxes and saying hello to their families in the United States," Maroon said.

\section*{Cracking the Code}

\section*{NYC to add another area code}

By IENNIFER DUEHN
Contributing Writer
Area code changes are coming to New York City as early as Jan. 2, 1992, according to New York Telephone reports.

The decision to introduce a new 917 area code was approved by the Public Service Commission (PSC) on Dec. 11, 1990, and again on June 26. 1991.

The new code will apply to cellular telephones, pagers, fax machines, computer modems. and NYTel land line services in New York City. The PSC also approved the reassignment of the Brons approved the reassignment of the to the 718 area code by May. 1993 .

These decisions were made to counterThese decisions were made to counteract the shrinking supply of lines avail able for assignment in the 212 area code.

tions representative.
"The number shortage in Manhattan stems directly from the increased telecommunications systems requested by businesses," Baxter said.
'Information-based corporations now have voice and database communication systems, which require five phone lines to accommodate the advancing technology." Baxter said.

\section*{Paging, paging, paging}

A report in the Wall Street Journal projected the use of pagers in the New York City area to triple by 1992 and triple again by 1997, Baxter said
" 917 can make this actively growing wireless network possible."

New wireless customers will receive the 917 area code beginning Jan. 2. Reassignment of existing numbers will take place over several years.
Depending on the commercial carrier. some cellular lines may not be affected by the 917 mandate. Baxter said.

AT&T assigned the 212 code to New York City in 1945. The code provided service to all five boroughs until 1985. when a new 718 code was introduced to satisfy the growing line demand in Queens, Brooklyn and Staten Island
In May 1993, the Bronx will be added to the 718 service. As this change will to the about 410.000 residential and 25,000 business lines, a "permissive dialing period" will be used to facilitate dialing period
"Beginning July 1, 1992, calls to the Bronx numbers may be made with either the 212 or 718 area code," said Baxter.
"After May 16, 1993, however. customers who do not use the new 718 code will be reminded of the change via a recorded message." Baxter said.
"Even though Manhattan customers will have to use the new area code when calling the Bronx, long-distance charges will not apply," Baxter said.
Bronx businesses can keep their 212 code if they are willing to pay for the exchange. "Some businesses like the inner-city image associated with 212 and are willing to pay for it," Baxter said.
Keeping the 212 code also eliminates the need to change letterheads and advertisements.
"That's why we are giving customers early notification of the reassignment," Baxter said.
"New York Telephone will not be responsible for the costs of stationery and advertising alterations.

Ten thousand Bronx businesses have aiready paid the fee to retain 212 service.

New York City is not the only urban center with multiple area codes. "New center with multiple area codes, New York Telephone studied similar code York Telephone studied similar code transitions in major cities like Boston, Lransitions in major cities like Boston, 917 were first introduced.

17 were first introduced.
"Although adding another new code Although adding another new code numbers to a staggering volume, direct dialing would no longer be possible," Baxter said.
"We are trying to minimize service disruption across the board.

With the reassignment of Bronx telephone and wireless systems alone, 500,000 lines will be made available in the 212 calling region, and direct dialing can be preserved.
Nreserved. haustion of existing 212 lines by the end of 1994 . With the implementation of the of 1994 . With the implementation of the 917 code and the reassignment of the 917 code and the reassignment of the Bronx to 718 , longevity is projected to Bronx to 718 , longev increase by 10 years.

When I used to watch Sesame Street as a child there was a segment called "Who Are the People in Your Neighborhood?"
The five-minute piece had a catchy tune and Muppets dressed up as postmen, nurses, doctors and firemen

The purpose of this segment was to help kids learn about different career fields, although the choices offered were very limited.
Unfortunately, many college students still begin job hunting in their fields with limited career information.
Syracuse University has a number of resources available to increase your understanding of different fields.

Bird Library has hundreds of trade magazines that professionals in various industries read. These magazines can give current information on key events and people in your field of interest.

Trade magazines also list industry conferences that occur throughout the year in cities all accoss America. These conferences usually run a few days and have workshops on all aspects of their particular industry.

The professionats you meet at these conferences are often one of the best sources of current career information. They also allow you the chance to begin to network with those in the industry.
The professionals attending these conferences likely belong to the national association for their industry. Contact the association for your field and ask to be sent membership information. They may even have a person who coordinates internships for students who want to internships for students who want to industry.

Bird Library also houses Infotrac, a computer database that has reference listings of articles that have appeared in hundreds of magazines and newspapers. Students can use this computer database to get career information in numerous fields.

Bird Library also carries the Yellow Pages from many cities in the United Pages from many cities in the United Ismail is averaging 27.1 yards per return, including a 95-yard touchdown scamper in the loss to FSU.

Shelby Hill, the Orangemen's usual punt returner, did not play Saturday due, to a suspension. Instead, SU turned to backup quarterback Doug Womack to retrieve Owl kicks.

The explosive sophomore took his first career punt return at the SU 47-vard line. Deciding against a fair catch. he blew between two Temple tacklers. caught the ball in full-stride. dodged another \(O w l\) and was off down the side line. He was finally hauled down by punter Trent Thompson at the Owl I2-yard line. Womack's return went for 41 yards.

That's a gutsy return by Doug," Casullo said. "He covered a lot of ground to catch the football and actually eliminated about nine Temple tacklers by outrunnine them to the ball"

Casullo said the coaching staff thought Womack could handle the return job last spring.
"In the spring. Doug and Shelby were in a neck-and-neok battle for the return job." he said. "We made the committment to Shelby so far this season, but things have got' a littlestale. Shelby was not available for us today so we did not hesitate to put Doug in.

Hill is averaging just \(\mathbf{7 . 7}\) yards per punt return.
Womack said the only reason he did not break the return for a touchdown was because be was doing too much thinking. "I thought I had it broke." he said. "But the thing is you don't think when you run, you just run. I started thinking and that's why I got caught.

\section*{Not just a Third World problem}

\section*{Local industries improve on toxic waste, but more work lies ahead}

\section*{BY MARIE O'TOOLE}

Statit briter
Five years ago, a toxic chemical leak at a Bhopal, India. Union Carbide plant kilted thousands of people. Following this incident, a Community Right-to Know Act was approved by the government. which requires companies to file state reports with information about toxic chemicals produced by their industries.
Far from being just another Third World disaster story, toxic waste is a major problem in Onondaga County, which produced a whopping 11.8 million pounds of pollution in 1990. This figure was second only to nearby Monroe County, which produced 18.1 million pounds of toxic waste. Most of this ( 13.8 million pounds) was sinele-handedly produced by Eastman Kodak Company of Rochester Still, that figure was a 24 percent decrease of waste over 1989, according to a report published in the Syracuse Herald-Journal.

Of the 48 industrial plants that filed reports last year, LCP Chemicals NY. Inc.. of Solvay showed the most dramatic decrease in toxic waste, down by 95 percent from 17,238 pounds to 863 pounds in 1990. percent increase, the most marked, from 249 pounds percent increase, the most marke in 1989 to 43.715 pounds in 1990 .

However, the big picture shows a 16 percent decrease in New York state's toxic pollution over last year. Or Onondaga's 10 biggest industrial polluters, 70 percent have reduced their output.

Thestate's environmental records show that while 131 million pounds of toxic waste were produced in 1989, the state's industries reduced their output by 26 percent. yielding only 110 million pounds last year

Still, 110 million pounds of rotting, toxic anything is a lot to have in one state. Samuel Sage, president of the Atlantic States Legal Foundation, a Syracuse-based environmental group, said in the Herald-Journal report that local residents must cast a wary eye on the residents must cast a produced in their toxic chemicals being prodicedinardous back yards. Some of the hazardous substanceshavebeen linked with cancer respiratory problems and other illnesses

To date, however, no one has shown that the industrial pollution is causing any health problems in the immediate community
"The whole purpose (of the state reports) is to let people know what's going on with toxic chemicals in their community," said William Miner, New York's environmental emergency coordinator, in the Heraidmournal.

Waste is shipped out
However, the numbers don't necessar ily tell the whole story. as companies are quick to point out. Although Roth Bros. Smelting in East Syracuse was listed as

1990's biggest producer of toxic waste nearly all of it was shipped to a hazard ous waste landfill in Michigan

Crouse-Finds Co. also shipped two thirds of its waste, prineipally hydrochloric acid, to a landfill in Quebec.
Other companies are taking more permanent solutions to the long-term problem. Carrier Corp., an air-conditioning manufacturer in DeWitt, achieved its 20 percent reduction of waste by eliminating the use of toxic degreasers. BristolMyers Squibb Co. has also greatly reduced its use of toxic chemicals and spent \($ 10\) million this year to upgrade aboveground chemical storage tanks.

One company's approach
According to Charles Borgognoni, a Bristol-Myers plant spokesman, the cornpany is taking a three-tiered approach to controlling chemical emissions.
"We have made a commitment to investment in emissions technology, to research in manufacturing processes and to hiring the best people." Borgognoni said.
"Through emissions control technology, we were able to recapture over 98 percent of the toxic chemicals used las year. We are committed to addressing the remaining two percent, although it is very difficult from a technological perspective," he said.
In the last six years, more than \($ 30\) million has been spent on emissions control. Not only has the waste output been lowered, but according to Borgognoni, the company's production has soared 40 percent. In the last two years alone, production has risen six percent.
Borgognoni also said the Environmental Protection Agency has proposed a 33-50 program. Any industries Agency has proposed a 33-50 program. Any industries that comply with the program agree to first reduce Plants such as Church & Dwight Co. Inc. are recycling contaminated by-products. The ammoniacontaminated water from the plant was treated at the Syracuse Metropolitan Wastewater Treatment Plant and discharged into Onondaga Lake, while the ammonia was made into ammonia bicarbonate to be used by bakeries.

General Electric is currently experimenting with non-toxic, water-based cleaners (some made from cítrus fruit peels) to combat its 84 percent increase in waste. General Motors Corp. reported a 55 percent decrease of chemical waste as a result of manufacturing changes and lower production brought on by the recession and the Persian Gulf War.

The closing of large companies has also contributed to the drop in toxic output, according to Miner. The 1989 decrease was facilitated when the Ciba-Geigy Corp. in Warren County closed its doors two years ago.

Looking to the future, local industrial plants plan to reduce their waste output even further. BristolMyers anticipates spending an additional \($ 35\) million over the next six years to combat the problem.

Vaughn Irons, president of the Student AfricanAmerican Society, speaks at a rally in the Schine Student Center Monday aftermoon to promote Black Solidarity Day. The rally is part of African-American Males week that will run through Saturday.

\section*{By JODI LAMAGNA}

Black Solidarity Day is important for everyone, not only the Student African-American Society, said SAS President Vaughn Irons at a rally in the Schine Student Center atrium Monday.
He presented the approximately 150 onlookers with the task of determining what the day means to them

The rally was part of African-American Males Week which is being celebrated through Saturday.

Today is the day we recognize black power, black love and black unity," said SAS Vice President of External Affairs Robyn Lane.
She explained that black students wore black Monday to show unity.
"We're wearing black to show that we recognize that there is a struggle - that we are self-reliant, determined and knowledgeable," she said.
"You stand here today because people died for you. Everything we stand for, someone had to die for."
She added that black people also have an economic impact on society.
"We're taking care of ourselves, our own businesses today," she said. "We're not buying in Schine (Dining) or (the University Bookstore). Today we're buying from black businesses.
Some of these businesses include: Gift From God, Heritage and the Temple Of Akebulan bookstores, Home Sweet Home and Vera's Place restaurants and Sound Shack. All are and vera's Place restaurants and

The Gift From God bookstore will sell merchandise, such as clothing, jewelry, tapes and books, in Goldstein Auditoium throughout the week

SAS Vice President of Cultural and Educational Affairs Sharney Lance said SAS does not just plan a day or a week.
"It's good to have a Black Solidarity Day," she said. "But I think it's a farce. We nced every day, not just one, to be united).
Irons said it is important to discuss two terms - black and solidarity.
-Black is the only term outside of African-American we still allow to define ourselves," he said. "However, we still allow it to be associated with negativity without challenging
He cited the terms "black market" and "black list" as examples.
"And we know that blackmail isn't just letters black people send to each other," he said.
"So where are we today with this term. black. when it's surrounded by all of this ambiguity and confusion?" he asked.
He said the color black has always been a source of power and influence. Judges, priests and nuns all wear black robes he said. "We know that knowledge equals power. Most graduates wear black caps and gowns.
The route of the word solidarity, solid, means solid hroughout, strong and nearly impregnable, Irons said.
"Today, we need to be unified in purpose and interest," he said. "This is our holiday. Nobody else said we could celebrate today. We said we could celebrate today.
He asked the crowd to end the rally with a chant. In the background, a group said, "Too black, too strong."
Simultaneously, two other groups chanted alternately, "Sing it loud. I'm black and I'm proud," and "Uplift the race."

SGA requested \($ 526\) and received \($ 820\).

The Assembly asked the Finance Board for more money to make 4,000 survey forms to distribute to students about downsizing Syracuse University.

Finance Board members Tanisha Tingle and Steve Gardner represented SGA Comptroller Chris Loggans and Assistant Comptroller Teri Fetheroff, who were not present for the contingency funds request.

The comptrollers could not be reached for comment about their absence.

Finance Board member Adam Hersh replaced Tingle midway through the contingency hearing.

SGA President Emily Zenick said

Tingle stepped down so there would not be a conflict of interest between her position on the Finance Board and as chair of the Student Senate Coalition, which is a sponsor of the surveys.

Zenick said after the meeting that she did not know the procedure for conduct ing contingency requests when the comptrollers are not present.
"It's never come up before since I've been in SGA," Zenick said after the meeting. "It's not. like anyone violated anything.
SGA Parliamentarian Jeff Carman could not be reached for comment. The parliamentarian is responsible for the enforcement of bylaws and procedures. Surveys might be the only way to generate student input about the university's plan to cut \($ 28\) million from its budget, Tingle said.
"I am very disappointed about the amount of student feedback," she said. *Downsizing is the most critical issue facing students, and, so far, response has been apathetic.
"Students are pretty much apathetic or they are unaware about what's going Surveys will be distributed to residence halls and classrooms next week, Tingle said.

SGA will also run the survey in a full page ad in The Daily Orange.

Tingle said students can clip out the survey and bring it to the SGA office in the Schine Student Center or put in one of the boxes that will be placed around campus.

The "swap" party was held Oct. 3 by members of the Kappa Delta sorority and the Sigma Chi fraternity. Its theme was "Who Rides the Bus?" and at least two sorority members came in blackface and had basketballs stuffed under their shirts to imitate pregnancy.

When the incident became known two weeks later, black students called for the punishment of the fraternities and sororities by the administration and for improved race relations on campus.

The university's president. E. Roger Sayers, called the incident "outrageous and deplorable and canceled all swap parties.

He also asked fraternity, sorority and student government leaders to educate students about cultural diversity.

Student marchers said they felt they needed to march because the university did not punish Kappa Delta and Sigma Chi specincally and that atronger action was needed to fight raciam on campus. Earlier last week, the president of Sigma Chi, Brett Taylor and a black student leader, Valencia Belle, both received threatening phone calls.

The national headquarters for Sigma Chi and Kappa Delta apologized for the incident.

By KRISTEN GERENCHER

As a student coming of age in Nazi Germany, Marie-luise Schultze-jahn led the silent minority called the "White Rose Society" in passively resisting the Third Reich - and she lived to tell about it.

Schultze--Jahn spoke to about 85 people in the Schine Student Center Monday about her fight for freedom under Hitler's rule. She is in the United States to open the White Rose Society Permanent Exhibition at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C

She described the society as a "small German student resis tance group in Munich." The group consisted of "six students, a professor, and friends who helped."

The name, White Rose Society, came from a book which "described the imperialism of Mexican farms by American ail companies," she said.
"We all were interested in philosophy," she said. "We heard of cruelties agranst people in Poland, but we never heard of concentration camps."

Although they were risking their lives, the group worked undercover by distributing leaflets across Germany to make the organization appear larger she satid. The rroup mailed the leaflets in the hope of "under mining the belief in Hitler and creating an awareness of shame

We thought everybody must see what we saw," she said. "We wanted to appeal to passive resistance."

Tight-lipped secrecy
Schultze-Jahn said the need for secrecy was critical for their survival as well as their cause. "My parents and brother didn't know. Nobody could tell," she said.

However, some people who received mailed leaflets took them to the Gestapo for investi-

Schultze-Jahn said the six students "agreed in the rejection of the National Socialist party."
She said in the Third Reich there was "no freedom in speech, religion. science, or art. There was no open mind. just obedience."

\section*{Open educational options}

Cutting the costs of college may mean reducing the amount of time a student spends furthering his or her education.

Oberlin College in Ohio is devising a new way for students to get an education - one that would require only three years of study as opposed to four years. The venture would remove some of the liberal arts education every student is required to receive in order to obtain a degree.

In these times of economic cutbacks, a cutback of this sort is not a bad idea. While saving a year's worth of tuition, students would be able to centralize their course of study and spend more time learning and developing their skills in their chosen field of study.

The issues I was concerned with were who Opponents of the proposal suggest a downturn would take place in the quality of education a student receives if the three-year system was to be implemented. Quality and quantity are two different measuring tools. Good teaching would overcome the shorter time allotment. Bad teaching never reaps any educational results, regardless of how much time is spent in the classroom.

As one educator said, students in need of more attentive education may attend community colleges, which would give them the two years extra attention they need.
The three-year option should remain open for students who wish to complete their degrees in less time for any reason - whether economic or educational.
was or were brilliant to create a rumor which eventually gained national attention in USA Today. I wanted to know how many residents were scared enough to flee Day Hall Halloween night. I was interested to see how the residence hall staff and university administration were going to handle the situation. (By the way, they both deserve strong commendations for dismissing the rumors across the board and having extra security up on Mount Olympus Halloween night.)

Not to any skeptics's surprise, no incidents occurred at Syracuse University. I was prepared to have the final say in the matter. That was until the news from Iowa came Friday night.

Tragedy can happen anytime, anywhere. Nobody can reasonably anticipate it. I cannot describe the ernotions SU students felt after the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 or members of the University of lowa community are now encountering. I have been fortuna not to experience such occurrences.

The theme should be a time of healing. It must come to grasp with the horrible circumstances. While SU left Halloween without a scare, the University of Iowa had tragedy that surpassed our wildest rumors.

\section*{Theater chain incites legal battle}

The Loews theater chain is facing legal roadblocks in its hope to abandon plans to build a \($ 4\) million cinema complex in the Hills Shopping Plaza in DeWitt.

Owners of the plaza want the theater.

Located on Erie Boulevard East, the proposed cinema complex would have a 3,150-seat capacity.
Lawyers for the two sides were in the State Supreme Court last week arguing about the lease agreement signed by Loews and Hills in January signed 1990.

Loews lawyer David Garber told the Syracuse Herald-Journal the lease stipulated that the agreement would become void if plans for the theater were not approved in 18 months. Loews contends the lease became invalid July 8.

On Friday, Nov. 8 at 6:30 p.m.. about 225 people will put their muscles to the uitimate test. These men and women will attempt to "leap a tall building in a single bound.'

Actually, they are the participants in the Cystic Fibrosis Stair Climb 1991, which will take place at MONY Tower II.
According to Vicki Talbot, Cystic Fibrosis spokesperson. Stair Climb began a few years ago in Denver. Now the eventoccurs nationwide. Although different organizations use the Stair Climb here in Syracuse, Cystic Fibrosis is the only nonprofit organization to use the idea. The first climb in to use the idea. The first Sypacuse was held last year.
Running up 19 flights of stairs, 300 vertical feet, the runners will compete against the clock and themselves. According to Talbot, professional timers will be on hand to determine the winners of the event.
Competitors can win in one of three categories: individual, three-person team or two-person relay team. One member of the relay team will run up nine flights and the other up 10 fights. Their times are combined to come up with the winner. The winner of the three-person competition is the team with the lowest combined time.

\section*{SU, Neighborhood Watch unite Campus, community work together to fight crime}

By AHNA L. WEAVER
Contributing Writer
While some universities share their libraries or health facilities with the surrounding residential areas, Syracuse University Security shares its Campus Crime Watch Program.
Although greater Syracuse has its own Neighborhood Watch Program, the community and campus programs work together to be more effective at fighting crime on and around the SU campus.
"We have been recognized nationally for the successful structure of our program," says Lt. Jay Duda of SU Security.
The programs have been working together for the past two years.
When there was a burglary last semester in one of the athletic facilities, Syracuse's Neighborhood Watch was helpful in working to help us assess the crime, Duda said.
"Fighting crime is a real team effort,"
Duda said.
Each program has its own volunteers and directors. The groups meet monthly to discuss strategies and share information.

Many workers available
The Neighborhood Watch program is comprised of 20 volunteers per group. There are about 20 watch groups throughout the Syracuse area. The SU campus watch program not only includes SU security officers, but also other radio accessible employees, such as workers at the Physical Plant, Steam Plant and SU Mail Services. There are currently 80 members in the campus program.

Duda's emphasis on cooperation with crime watch is his reason for encouraging students to become involved in this joint program. According to Duda, knowiwill help students feel safer on and off campus.

Duda said there are three components to the characteristics of a criminal: desire, motive and opportunity.
"We can't do much abuut motive, but we can work with desire and opportuwe can work with nity," Duda said.

If the opportunity for a crime to occur is lessened by more aware students. then the overall atmosphere will be that much better, Duda said.
a not Duda said
Another way Duda feels the programs can help students is by integrating With all that Syracuse has to offer With all that Syracuse has to offer dents can feel more comfortable venturing out into Syracuse.
There is always more to learn about being safe than can be read in a "campus safety booklet," Duda said.

Although becoming a campus-neighborhood watch volunteer cannot be confeels the experience can greatly benefit all SU students. Duda says he is willing to speak with any students interested in the programs and can help place them into Campus Crime Watch training programs.

According to Duda, the more awareness and responsibility students take, the closer they will come to annihilating two of the three criminal characteristics: desire and opportunity.

Syracuse quarterback Marvin Graves found out Saturday just how fickle the SU fans can be.

Graves was booed by portions of the Carrier Dome crowd when he returned with five seconds remaining in the third quarter.

Back-up quarterback Doug Womack had run one play for nine yards, getting to the Temple 7 -yard line on a keeper of the option.
"I heard it a little bit, but I was into the game," Womack said. "I thought they were booing me because I didn't score." Graves, who was 10 of 18 for 101 yards, said he was surprised to hear the boos.
"That kind of bothered me," Graves said. "I wasn't playing that badly at that point that I should be booed.
"I'rn not going to worry about that. I'm just going to play like I've been playing."

The boos didn't go unnoticed on the SU sideline, either.
"I didn't pay much attention to it, but obviously you hear it," Pasqualoni said.

Graves said he will let the coaches evaluate his performance and not worry about the fans.
"If it gets to the point where it's so bad that I have to come out of the game then the coaches will make that decision," Graves said.

is, we have two weeks to get over them. We've got to keep up our intensity in the training room." Pasquaioni has given the team the day off from practice Monday and Wednesday, but they will practice on Tuesday. Thursday and Friday
"Relaxation and a couple of days recovery, that's what we need,"defensive lineman George Rooks said. "It's a plus for us. Other teams are playing and we're taking a week off."
There had been some concern, as the injuries continued to mount, that an open week earlier in the season might have benefitted the Orangemen more, benefitedthe Grangemen more, but Grave just right.
"It's a perfect time," Graves said. "I'm glad it didn't come any earlier or any later. We've been going since August. It's a deserved break. I think you're going to see a big difference in people's legs."

The off week gives the Orangernen time to get theirstruggling offense back in sync, something they were unable to do with all the injuries.

Aside from healing, Pasqualoni said the players will have the opportunity to rest and catch up on class work.
Going south for winter?
As bowl invitation day, Nov.
17, draws near, speculation continues about Syracuse's postseason plans.

SU continues to be hotly purgued by the Hall of Fame and Blockbuster Bowls.

Representatives from the John Hancock, Gator, Citrus and Fi esta Bowls were also in attendance on Saturday.

The 17th-ranked Orangemen are among only 17 Division I-A teams with seven or more wins.

Invitation day falls one day after Syracuse hosts Boston College.
"A lot is going to be based on BC." Pasqualoni said. "All I know is what you know. People are there watching the games. Invitations don't come out until two weeks from Sunday."

The Blockbuster Bowl is played on Dec. 28 in Miami and pays each team \($ 1.6\) million.
The Hall of Fame Bowl is held on New Year's Day in Tampa and pays \($ 1\) million.

In the past, the players have voted on which bowl invitation to accept, but Pasqualoni would not speculate on their possible selection.
Last season, the team spent Christmas in Hawaii and Pasqualoni said the team had yet to discuss plans for the holidays.
"I'd like the latest bowl we can get," Rooks said. "The later, the greater."

lege on Saturday at 1 p.m. The second game has the top-seeded University of Connecticut facing defending champion Villanova University.

On Oct. 26, the Orangewomen and Friars played to a 3-3 overtime tie.

Orangewomen co-captain Traci Dimeo said this past weekend's victory should give the Orangewomen some additional confidence.
"I think it's definitely good to go into the Big East with a win," Dimeo said. "It will definitely build momentum.'

Syracuse's momentum is not only emotional, but can be seen tangibly on the field. Parker said.
"I thought the \(5-0\) win was pretty good," Parker said. "I think the team is playing the best they've played all year."
Against Colgate (5-8-3) Kelly Larkin netted two goals while Julie Hess. Shelley Magee and Yvonne Milionis each added one.

It was the ninth time SU has shut out an opponent this season.

Milionis and Larkin are competing for the school's all-time scoring record, which can only help the Orangewomen during the postseason, Parker said.

Kelly and Yvonne are still neck and neck for career scorneck and neck for career scoring," Parker said. "The two of them are the center of our offense. If one doesn't do it, the other does."

\section*{Trade down coast works for Owens}

Billy Owens left Syracuse University a year early for the NBA, but he's waited a whole preseason and now a few games more for his professional career to get off the ground.

Owens signed a seven-year, \($ 19.6\) million contract with the Golden State Warriors on Saturday.

Owens was taken by the Sacramento Kings with the third pick overall in the NBA draft last June. The 6-foot-9 Carlisle, Pa., forward The 6-foot-9 Carlisle, Pa., forward was in the Kings plans on the court, Was in the Kings plans but not in their wallets.

Owens admitted JOSH \(\quad\) He wons admitted BARNETT__pansion, team SPORTS \(\quad\) last April when OPINION Su.
The Kings arer't an expansion team, but they're about as close as you can get.

So why then was he so surprised when he was taken by the Kings? Owens said he wasn't pleased with the tearn's record or their exposure.

It certainly would have been a dramatic change for Owens from basketball-crazy Central New York to Northern California where nobody to Northern California where nobody cares about the Kings. Then again. cares about the King can you blame them?

The Kings traded Owens for Mitch Richmond, Les Jespen and a second round draft pick in 1995.

You have to feel sorry for Richmond. He was a crucial part of the Warriors; "Run T-M-C," which took them into the playoffs last season.
Now, Richmond is in Sacramento, which is only a few miles from oblivion.
For Owens, the move down the California coast is a good one. He's California coast is a good one. He's on a playoff caliber team with young but experienced players.
The only problem Owens has now is that the season has already started without him.
Basketball is basketball, but Owens has yet to learn Don Nelson's system or his role with the Warriors.

Owens' versatility was one of his biggest attributes coming out of college, which should work in his favor. Coming soon to Golden State, "Run T-M-B" with Owens at power forward.
But not quite yet. Now that the season has begun and the grind of the 80 -game schedule begins, Owens may be further behind than he could have imagined.

Getting used to the NBA takes time, and Owens won't have the advantage that other draft picks who were in training camp had.

Training camp may not be all that it's cracked up to be, however. Derrick Coleman was Rookie of the Year without training camp and several other rookies have had an impact without the benefits of preseason experience.

Owens' other problem is that he is admittedly out of playing shape at 225 pounds, which is about 10 pounds over his usual weight.

Combining the physical nature of the NBA game along with his lack of the NBA game along with his lack of training camp, Owens may have a long way to go for superstardom.

Time, however, may be on Owens' side because he's getting on-the-job training this year as opposed to still playing at SU.

Syracuse University wide receiver Shelby Hill found himself in an usual position on Saturday.

Instead of being on the field, Hill spent most of the afternoon in the stands at the Carrier Dome while the Orangemen defeated Temple University, 27-6.

Hill was issued a one-game suspension by SU coach Paul Pasqualoni.
"It's an in-house thing." Pasqualoni said. "All I can say is, it was a violation of team policy. It was a one game thing and I'm certain he'll be ready to go next week."

"The majority of my time this season as a coach has been spent trying to as a coach has been, spent trying to all the different personalities, egos and all the different personalities, egos and attitudes, there's a need within this team to have to try and motivate them."
The Orangemen lead the game 1-0 until Tom Dillow scored goals at 54:47 and \(56: 39\) to put the Hoyas ahead for good.

Georgetown iced the game with just under 14 minutes remaining in the contest when Kinney scored on a pass from Tim Keegan to close out the \(\mathbf{3 - 1}\) score.
"At halftime we said that we had to attack with total commitment," Tabatznik said. "We couldn't just have four or five guys attacking at a time, because when the ball was lost, we had no one to win the second ball." See HOYAS Page 1.5

\section*{SU to host consultants on restructuring process}

\section*{Ey MARK A. BROUSSEAU}

Asst. News Editor
Syracuse University, seeking other perspectives on its restructuring process, will host a team of consultants from other colleges and universities today and tomorrow.

The team will review various departments, make recommendations about budget cuts and hold a series of open forum office hours for the \(S U\) community.

The office hours begin at 4 p.m. at various locations and are open to the public.
"This is another outlet to have input into the restructuring process," said Student Government Association President Emily Zenick.
"(The specialists) can shed light onto what Syracuse University should do and reflect on their areas of interest.

The team of consultants was assembled by Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw. Members of the team have been assigned to specific units of which they are chief administrative officers at other univeraities.
"The consultants reviewed the departments to get a sense of their plans," said Vice President for Research Benjamin Wice P.

During their campus visit, consultants will meet with the administrative officers of the respective units, tour the facilities involved and meet with staft members and students.
"The consultants will see descriptions of the units; hear the budget plans; and meet with the department heads." Ware said.
Each consultant will also host an open office hour to receive input from the campus community.

But critics chorge that students do not understand the responsibility that accompanies a credit card.

Meeting the requirements
This often sinks students, sending them into debt placing a tremendous burden on themselves, that follows them long after college.

Purdue Unjversity financial counselor Flora Williams said in The New York Times that more and more students are using credit cards to cover rent or to pay off other credit cards.
"Students are getting credit when they don't meet the requirements for credit: capital, chariater and collateral." Williams said. "They look at credit as a resource, not as what it is, a debt.
\({ }^{4}\) This practice is creating a new generation of debt addicts, even before they are ready to support thernselves."
Many parents will pay off a student's credit card rather than let the student establish a bad credit rating, said Luther R. Gatling, head of Budget and Credit Counseling Services Inc. in New York City.
"Parents have become de facto cosigners," "he said.

Gatling said he is concerned that stadents are developing a distorted view of the value of money.

A multi-cultural commission would help Syracuse University fight problems of racism, sexism and homophobia, according to Christopher Koliba, adminis* trative assistant to the dean of Hendricks Chapel.
A commission would create an aware ness of the pluralism on campus and foster tolerance of racial, sex, religious and ethnic differences, Koliba said.
An unofficial coalition of students and faculty has been formed to create a multi-cultural commission, Koliba said.

We want to move the campus toward being a multi-cultural community," he said.

Koliba said SU's pluralism should be a way for students to learn about different barkgrounds and cultures.
The coalition is circulating a petition to gain student support of a multicultural coalition, Koliba said.

The petition will be presented to Chancellor Kenmeth A. Shaw on Nov. 11.

\section*{Educating, not pressuring}
"This is not a pressure tactic," he said. "Chancellor Shaw has expressed interest in these issues.

\section*{SU examines foreign enrollment} Active recruiting abroad may solve fiscal woes

\section*{By ILENE KALISH \\ Combributins: Writer}

\begin{abstract}
As more international students cross the oceans for an education, some educators believe this wave could help revive Syracuse University in the current recesSyrac sion.

Faced with a shrinking pool of high school-age students. SU will be forced to find different ways of generating revenue. And one idea currently being discussed is to increase the enrallment of international students at SU by implementing an active recruiting plan.

According to Diane Roney, assistant director for graduate and international admissions, SU "doesn't actively recruit international students." Instend. she stated that \(S U\) practices "arm-chair recruiting."

SU does not have any programs which seek out international students.

Yet, Roney said \(S U\) is "very well \(k n o w n\) overseas" and the university "is held in high esteem as a very marketable institution, in torms of providing the types of edveation currently desired by

Conservative lecturer addresses natural law

Natural law was a misunderstood concept during the Clarence Thomas confirmation, a leading American conservative said.

The judiciary committee was inconsistent in its beliefs on natural law, said Russell Kirk, a well-known conservative writer and lecturer.
"The committee accused (former Supreme Court nominee Robert: Bork of not believing in natural law while accusing Justice Thomas of believing in natural law," he said.
Natural law is not a code, but an underlying body of ethical principles, he said.

Kirk addressed about 75 people Tuesday afternoon at the College of Law Natural law is a part of enduring human nature and should be considered by the legislature, not the federal courts, he said.

Bork's downfall came from his apparent belief in orixinal intent, he said.
Original intent is a practice in which there is an attempt to decipher what the framers of the Constitution meant, he said "It is not always crystal clear what the Constitution means," Kirk said. "Bork said there is enduring meaning to the Constitution.

As a result, Bork ended up looking, to the judiciary committee. inhumane and unfeeling, he said

Kirk said original intent is necessary because the Constitution is a social constant which people look to for continuity.
"The Constitution is the fun damental law of the land.

Without it, why not have judicial oligarchy?" Kirk said. osite of Bork, he said
"Thomas said. 'Yes there is natural law, but it is not what You base decisions of the Su preme Court on," Kirk said.

Syracuse University needs to reassess its values in the classroom.

Many students on this campus suffer from an intolerance of anyone who is different. Racism, sexism and homophobia abound.

Yet the required courses at \(S U\) do not show a commitment on the part of the university to teach its students to be more tolerant.

One purpose of the university is clearly to prepare students for the "real world" that confronts them upon graduation. This campus is clearly a microcosm of society.

It is in this atmosphere that the first step must be taken to promote the value of multiculturalism.
Every school and college at SU requires students to take electives Estran&ed partners,

1 applaud the decision of The Daily Oranfe to initiate a weekly invited editorial from a professor or staff member because it addresses one of the biggest roadblocks to improving the quality of undergraduate education at Syracuse University and throughout the United States. That rondblock is the hostile relationship between many students and many faculty.

\section*{FACUTY} VIEWPOINT Undergraduates for a Bethear students whining that faculty are inacimplaints include lectures, can't communicate, present irrelevant material, are rude, and are only interested in research.

As a faculty member who is sometimes viewed as a champion of undergraduates. faculty frequently tell me how students refuse to engage the faculty, are boring, can't communicate, are obnoxious, and are only interested in jobs and grades.
My initial reaction to this whining from both sides is to say, as Shakespeare said, "A plague o' both your houses!" However, I cannot avoid my responsibility to my commitment to to make an effort to. reduce the mutual estrangement between undergraduates and professors. Space does not permit me to say much more, but I want to close with two within the arts and sciences curriculum.

One of those classes should be a course teaching multicultural values. Students, coming from many different backgrounds, may become aware of the issues of minority groups for the first time during their freshman year at SU.

These students need to know how to function in a world with more than one kind of person. Their first year on campus is the time to inform them about these issues.

While it may be unrealistic to think that such a course could reverse beliefs that may have been instilled in children as they were growing up, such a class is a good first step-one it would do the university well to take.

\section*{worthless results}

\section*{assignments - one for students and one for faculty.}

Every undergraduate who reads this column should plan within the next week to help each should plan within the next week to help each of their instructors improve their courses. For example, the next time a faculty member presents a general theoretical idea or even a definition that you do not understand, ask the faculty member to give a concrete illustration. Perhaps, suggest that the faculty member ask the class for a concrete illustration if the faculty member is stuck. Don't take "no or TA" as an acceptable response. Be firm. persistent and accepta.
To the faculty, I suggest that you ask the students in the next week to provide you with a list of suggestions for improving the course. You should convince the students that you really want to hear responsible suggestions that will increase learning. You might ask the students to provide a critique of a test, a paper requirement, or your lectures.

Each of these acts would provide an initial step to begin the healing process so that students and faculty can do their respective jobs in an atmosphere of mutual respect. Students will want to learn, and faculty will want to teach.
Finally, this column is a big first step in reducing the estrangement. I hope that the DO's editorial department will not have difficulty in getting faculty to provide invited editorials in the future. If there are problems, get Chancellor Shaw to instruct the Deans to treat the editorial as a formal publication for tenure, promotion and salary adjustments purposes. That'll work.

Faculty Viewpoint will be published every Wednesday on the editorial page in The Daily Orange. Professors or faculty members interOrange. Professors or faculty members interested in contributing to this feature should contact the editorial department.

To the editor:
Well, it is getting to be that time of year again - cold. And so the fur demonstrations are about to begin. I wish the groups that demonstrate against fur would think for a minute about the other side of this issue. Do they ever stop to realize that many of the fur items being worn today are 5 , 7,10 , even more than 20 years old? many are refurbished and are lovely stylish items today. How many syntheticcoatshave polluted our environment in polluted our enviromment in provide serviceability? Just provide serviceability? Just think of the air pollution we think of the air pollution we create producing synthetics. in a heap in ourlandfills at a in a heap in our landfills at a shamefully eary date in this shamefully early date in country. No wonder our landfills are overflowing! It also astounds me that leather jewelry, purses, belts, skirts, shoes, brief cases and luggage are perfectly okay. Where do the fur demonstrators classify these items? Are they not made of animal skins also? They also offer years more serviceability and satisfaction than plastic items.
Let me here state that I do understand demonstrators from the animals' standpoint, but haven't animals always served mankind? I am grateful for the research specimens that have served to end many of our most dreaded diseases. Also, no one could love them as pets anymore than I do as demonstrated by one dog, two cats, six birds and a tropical tank full of fish in our household!

My question is, when are we as a populace going to become more interested in exploring the many facets of most issues instead of taking it upon ourselves in dangerous ways, for example, spray painting coats being worn, to try to inflict our beliefs onto others.

At the center, a meditative master, called a guru. teaches people to control breathing by chanting a mantra, a group of words the meditating person silently repeats.
"The mantra focuses and calms the mind by eliminating extraneous thoughts." said Wadsworth, who meditates for 30 minutes every day and night. "It's like sleeping, except you are aware of your surroundings.

Wadsworth said she likes to repeat the mantra, "Jai Jai Vitthala," a phrase in the ancient Indian language of Sanskrit meaning, "Hail to the Sustainer of the Universe.
"I can go into a deep meditative state where I lose consciousness of my body," she said. "I feel content and at peace. It's like that cozy feeling of being warm on a cold morning.

\section*{Finding your spiritual energy}

Most people who practice Siddha yoga believe that a god-dwells within each person. Wadsworth said
"This is where the shakti comes from," she said. "Everyone has this spiritual energy inside of them.

The presence of a guru distinguishes Siddha yoga from other forms of yoga, such as Hatha, Wadsworth said.
"A ruru has the power to awaken the meditative energy that lies dormant in many people." she said. "In Hatha yoga, individuals try to awaken their own spiritual energy, which is a difficult thing to do."

Hatha yoga also concentrates on loosening the joints by meditating in different positions, such as standing on the head or on one leg.
"In Siddha yoga, we just sit with our legs crossed because you just cannot meditate seriously while standing on your head," she said.
Although the spiritual experience achieved through meditation resembles a religious experience, Wadsworth said Siddha yoga is not a religion.

"We had Hart last time. No way do we get him two days in a row."
My position was Deep Right. I know it sounds like a cheap adult film title, but in grade school it is a stigma. Deep but in grade school it is a stigma. Deep Right is a position 40 to 50 yards past Right is a position 40 to 50 yards past the point that a boy my age, summoning the point that a boy my age, summoning apall.

I would have to play in Deep Right because we would always pick captains at the start of recess. Scott was usually my captain. He put me in Deep Right and heplayed shortstop because he knew I really sucked. Back then it was kind of a bummer to be looked down upon by your peers, but the last I heard, Scott last I heard, Scott was in a drug rehab program in Ohio.

I heard they let him play shortstop team.
Don't ask me why, but I decided that I wanted even more of this abuse so I offered to pay for either piano lessons or Little League
Great choice. I could either learn a talent that I could carry with me for the rest of my life bringing me a better appreciation of music and the arts in general, or stand in aide with some guy named Stan shouting at me because that he never managed to recapture in middle age

Yeah, I made the right choice.
Anyone can impress people by playing a piano at a party, but I can slide into second without hurting myself.

The kids on the Little League team warned my coach about me and he pulled me aside at the first practice to give me some advice on hitting. He didn tell me how to swing the bat. He didn't tell me much more down to earth.
"Keep your toes on the plate," he said.
For those of you unfamiliar with the sport, allow me to explain. In baseball, a pitcher tries to throw this really solid sphere as hard as he can at the plate. Little League pitchers generally have about as much luck at doing this accurately as Clarence Thomas does at getting his pick-up lines to work. By putting my toes on the plate, I ostensibly I Iearned haniearned a lot about competition I I vo got hit in the head really hard, 1 ould go to first and that was good.
So to me, the national pastime became a big stoning. The wide-eyed Arnerican boy learning to risk almost certain njury to get ahead in a game Sure. I'm jaded, but there is sornething fundarmentally wrong with baseball beng our national pastime. I mean, baseball is guys dressed in white waiting patiently in line for a chance to hit a ittle ball with a big club so that they can un around in circles. There is nothing American about it, although I do like the part about them scratching therncelves. Now, monster truck racing: There is a sport that should be this country's national pastime. Monster truck racing is women in tube tops watching men who hunt deer on weekends drive trucks with really big wheels over foreign cars that someone parked in the mud. And the whole thing is sponsored by beer companies.

I suppose it is easier to play catch with your son than it is to build a mud pit for him to zip through on his Big Wheel.
Maybe I'm just bitter that instead of having memories of balls I hit over the fence, I have mernories of my teammates visiting me in the hospital
I can't be too hard on baseball, though. After all, baseball taught me to do anything to win and to hold a personal rudge against the other guy if I lose.
But looking back on it 10 years later, I wish I had taken the piano lessons.

who applied for a credit card package that included three major credit cards, two department store cards and a gas card, had run up a \($ 6,800\) debt. She was forced to seek out a campus financial counselor.
Anotherstudent at Iowa State University dug himself into an \($ 8,000\) hole, on top of having student loans to pay off.

Not all students are faced with such credit disasters.

The iwo-card approach
SU junior Sylvester Helhoski has two major credit cards -a Master Card and an Express card. He is responsible for the A merican Express Card, while his parents pay the Mas ter Card.
"I tell my parents when 1 am going to charge something on going to charge something on thing about having it is that the bills go home," he said

He said he got the American Express card to charge things that he did not want his parents to know about.
He said he had one close call when he was not able to pay a \($ 300\) bill for a several months. He was finally able to pay it off. but he said threatening phone calls and letters from American Express taught him a lesson.
"I don't charge things that I'm worried about paying off." he said.

Texasfinancial counselor Beverly Richardson has developed a list of symptoms that may indicate credit card abuse.

- Ownership of more than one credit card and one charge card that must be paid in full each month.
-Card payments prevent regular payment of rent, utilities or car loans.
- Cash advances or checks written on one credit card are used to make payments on another. - Balances are at the credit limit, making cards unavailable for emergencies.
-Credit is used to pay for meals with friends who reimburse in cash, which is then regarded as "found" money.

Consumer Credit Counseling Services is a non-profit organization that specializes in helping people with credit card difficulties to work out a payment schedule with creditors.

SU does not offer any type of financial counseling services.

need for financial support, make. it seem that increased enrollment of international student is one possible panacea for SU's monetary woes.

But. Roney said "this is not a new topic."

Implementing an increased recruitment plan has been talked about for years." she said

However. "there are no current plans of operation" underway to do this.

According to Pat Burak, director of the Office of International Services, \(S U\) is currentiy ranked 5.5th in the nations colleges and universities for enrollment of international students.

The majority of international students are enrolled in the School of Management. the College of Engineering, the Maxwent School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, and the College of Arts and Science:

This is in compliance with the "needs of the foreign market for manasgement. engineering. international relations and hard science skills," Roney said.

Pedersen said if a concerted recruiting effort is made. it is not "unrealistic to believe that the number of international students could be increased dramatically."
Asst. Neits Editor Robert Shie/ds contributed to this stors:
> "Good friends don't let good finends smoke cigarettes:"

> Larry Hagran

Cigarettes aren't good for your friends. Adopt a friend who smokes and help 'em quit today. You'll both be glad tomorrow.

After graduating from West Virginia University in 1933, he was a high school coach before entisting in the U.S. Army after Pearl Harbor.
Schwartzwalder's Army record is as impressive as his foothall record. He advanced to major and was a member of the prestigious 82nd Airborne division and jumped three times in combat.

He received the Silver Star, Bronze Star. Purple Heart. four battle stars and a Presidential Unit citation before retiring as a lieutenant colonel in the reserves and heading back to football.
Through all his years in and away from the garne, Sch wartzwalder said it's still the same game
"It's still the game of football \(\rightarrow\) offense, defense and all the skills that it takes to be effective," he said. "It never changes. You've either got the talent or you dont.

Schwartzwalder was a starting center while with the Mountaineers, quite an achievement considering the fact that heonly weighed 152 pounds. It was that type of toughness which he tried to instill in his teams, Youmans said.
"If you weren't hard-nosed. You didn't play for Ben," said Hall of Fame Bowl representative. "He was tough. Ben's not tall in stature, but he's tall in strength and determination. I think everyone tried to model think everyone tried

PRI bad grades in 1986, Hankinson 0 -signed a loan that Morris needed o go to night school

Morris pulled up his grades enough at night school to reenroll at SU and rejoin the soccer team.
In Morris' final three years at SU, he led the team to an overall record of 33-20-9.
When the NCAA found out about the loan, Hankinson resigned.
This seemed like the ultimate punishment for a violation of this nature.

If you give Hankinson the benefit of the doubt, all he was trying to do by co-signing the loan was to hel \(P\) a person get back on his feet.

On the other hand, you can say that Hankinson co-signed the loan only because he needed his star player back in the line-up.

In either case, what Hankinson did was wrong. He had to know before he signed the loan that it was against NCAA rules. A Division I coach knows how stingy the NCAA is.
What bothers me most about the whole situation is the penalty handed down to the team.

By taking away 33 victories from SU, the players are the ones being punished.

Hankinson wasn't punished. He already resigned. The forfeits don't mean anything to him.

Morris isn't being punished. He was able to finish his carcer at SU and his team scoring record is still allowed to stand.

The ones being punished are players such as Chris Wright, Lee Davison, Mike Britton, Steve Pollnow, and Those players were at SU from 1988-1990. They played their hearts out for the team. Now they find out that their victories this season are the only ones of their career at SU.

They, nor any other player, had no control over the situation. They didn't commit any crimes.

Yet, the NCAA didn't see it that way.
And seriously, think about how from a it is to strip away victories lot of partying across the campuses of the teams that benefit from the forfeits. The Orangemen defeated Niagara Niagara is credited with the win. those Purple Eagles probably are having a hard time controlling their joy.

The NCAA probably feels justice was served in this case. I don't think so.

The Syracuse University men's basketball team has yet to play a game this season, but the coaching staff is already busy securing the future

This past weekend, Syracuse welcomed 6-foot-8 forward John Wallace from Greece-Athena high school in Rochester to the campus.
Wallace, a member of the prestigious Nike Prep Report Dream Dozen, is widely considered one of the best power forwards in the country.
Other schools Wallace was rumored to be considering include Providence College, the University of Pittsburgh, the University of Connecticut and the University of Kansas. Pittsburgh, however, was recently eliminated from Wallace's list of potential schools.

Parents are always worried when their children leave for college, but when Floyd (Ben) Schwartzwalder was a coach they had nothing to worry about.

Schwartzwalder, who coached the Orangemen from 1949 to 1973 , served as a father figure for an entire generation of SU football players.
"He's the kind father figure now." said Maury Youmans, a Syracuse tackle in 1958. "Back when we played, he was the fearful father figure. He had this very wiry sense of humor that worked against you when you had a bad game.'

Schwartzwalder's seat in the Carrier Dome press box is a place where many memories are found as players come back to visit the 82 -year old former coach.

The good thing about coaching is, you're dealing with great kids," Schwartzwalder said." "You have a great affection for them."
"They come back and I see them and I give them a hug because they were my kids. That's what really means a lot.

The nature of the game causes that type of connection between player and coach, Schwartzwalder said.

You're asking those kids to spend 2 \(1 / 2\) hours every day on the field and to take care of themselves and exercise and go all out," Schwartzwalder said. "So they become your kids.
Schwartzwalder's long list of kids made him the winningest coach in Syracuse history with a 153-91-3 record in his 25 seasons.
"You're either successful in winning and losing or you're not," Schwartzwalder said. "If you're not, you don't hang around very long. You either survive or The Orangemen under Schwartzwalder, the 24 th winningest coach in colleder, the 24 th winningest coach in colle-

"So many (great moments) stick out." Schwartzwalder said. "If you're going to stay in coaching you have to produce.

Schwartzwalder's success on the field has led to many personal honors off the field.

He was college football's Coach of the Year in 1959, inducted into the College Football Hall of Fame in 1982, and is also a member of the Syracuse Sports Hall of Fame.

Syracuse University Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw used Wednesday's University Senate open forum as an opportunity to field questions on aubjects from students perceptions to restructuring to SU's ROTC policy.

Shaw did not give an opening statement, but began by fielding questions from students and staff.

The first issue Shaw addressed was the perception students have that faculty cares more about doing research instead of teaching, while the faculty believes that the students just are not interested in learning.

There are two things I think we have to do better to foster more accurate perceptions among the faculty and students," Shaw said.
Students must understand that research is important to furthering a younger student's education and for giving older students the opportunity for hands-on experience and the chance to work closely with a knowledgeable professor, Shaw said
The perception held by the faculty that students do not care about learning must be changed, he said. As a former teacher. Shaw said he could relate to professors who form these perceptions because of the way some students behave.
The perceptions are spawned by students who complain about homework, arrive late to class and perform poorly on tests.
"It is a very difficult issue to deal with," he said. "We form perceptions of people around us to help deal with a very complicated world."

Many questions stemmed from the recent restructuring forums held by the University Senate.

One atudent said the committees were not divulging enough information for the students to look at and submit adequate input

Shaw responded by saying the purpose of these initial forums was to inform the students and staff about proposed changes.

Shaw promised that students and faculty members will have time in the near future to give input.

\section*{Hitting the campuses}

Credit card mania is not a new phenomenon on college campuses, but it has become a hot issue in recent years.

Applications are everywhere. They can be found in cardboard dispensers throughout the SU campus and at the bottom of shopping bags that come from book and clothing stores around SU.
Making applications easy to find and offering incentives to entice students to apply for particular credit cards are intended to attract students by meeting their specific needs.
They can take advantage of the other benefits of the card later, said Luana Burcul. American Express vice president of special markets.
"We are adding to the value of the card by tailoring it to students." she said. For instance, we have found that students want and need inexpensive travel.
Other programs offered by American Express targeted at students include a deal between American Express and MCI Telecommunications that includes a half-hour of free phone service per year and a free subscription to Connections, a quarterly magazine that publishes articies that are relevant to the concerns of students.
Even though students used their credit cards to spend \($ 60\) billion in 1990, that number only represented about 1 percent of the total revenue generated by credit card use.

The rationale is obvious," said Kurt Peeters, editor of Credit Card News. an industry trade publication

Hays asked students what they would like to see in an alumni publication.
"I'd like to see a broader picture of the climate of the university," Millersaid. Shealso said the university should use telephone calls for reasons other than fund raising.
"There should be phone calls that are not just for money," she said. "It would be nice to get an informational phone call rather than one just asking for money." Miller also said there is a general attitude among students that the administration does not care about them.
"It's kind of an us versus them situation, the students versus alumni," she said. "Stu" dents don't feel a part of the university or a tie with the administration." Miller said changes in the administration are encouraging more student are encouragi

"You can't give back if you're not getting any satisfaction while you're here," she said.

\section*{Students voice need for parking}

Before final budget cuts are made, Syracuse University needs to improve the location and afety of its parking lots
That was the message given by students at the facilities management forum Wednesday afternoon.

This was one of six forums held Wednesday in which :administrators from other colleges and universities provided insight on managing SU's restructuring plan.

There is a big problem with parking for graduate students," said Nina Tamrowski, a graduate student in political science and representative from the GraduateStudentOrganization.

The location of parking after hours is unsafe for graduate students and their complaints have not been widely acknowledged, she said.
A member of the chemastry department suggested special aceess to campus parking lut: p-m. to create a safer parking environment for graduate students.
Suggestions for adding indoor parking havebeen reviewed doorparkinghave been the committce, said william \({ }_{F}\) F. Daigneau. director of unicersity facilities at the Universityof Rochester.

Paying for expanded parking is a main concern of the chancel lor because tuition cannot be raised to accommodate rises in cost. he said.

Budget cuts would force significant parking rate increases to pay for the rew facilities. Daigneau said.
"I am here only to evaluate the cost reduction plim, and to advise on its impacts, nol identify or recognize strategie for this plan of reduction," ho seind.

The facilities area is particalarly difficult because much of the work involved is related to the square footage of the facili ties, he said.

With the budget reductions. services to buildings will be reduced as well, he said

SU is fortanate bectuse it has not had to shut any bulldings. he said.

Another concern was how to pay for damages in emergency situations, such as floods

The Center for Science and Tuchnology building has been presented with this several times, the chemistry department rmember said.

Communication in these situ. ations has never been strong. Sete PARKING Page AT \section*{Democrats legitimize race}

Democratic Senator Harris Wofford of Pennsylvania has successfully conveyed a message to the president of the United States.

Watch your back in 1992. The Democrats are posing a real threat to the Grand Old Party.

Ar unhappy Keystone State electorate flexed its collective muscle on Tuesday night, rejecting former Pennsylvania Governor Dick Thornburgh. As the former U.S. attorney general, Thornburgh was painted as an incumbent in the race for senator.

Political analysts throughout the United States consider Pennsylvania's senatorial election an indicator of sorts. And all indications are pointing toward Democrats and their peopleoriented philosophies.
"Pocketbook protection" was Wofford's key to victory, acknowledging the public's need for middle-income tax cuts and a national health insurance plan. By claiming victory in Pennsylvania, Wofford has proven a sizeable discontent exists among Americans about the country's affairs, be they economic or health-oriented. The convincing 58 to 42 percent margir of victory in a consistently conservative state is indicative of a desire for change.

Even backing from the president himself was not good enough for Thornburgh. He offered no concrete agenda and relied solely on past credentials. In this time of budget deficits and plunging interest rates, politicians should know they have nothing to fall back on and should, instead, look at presenting a plan for the future.

Wofford's victory has created a sudden influx of pressure on the currently Republican White House to begin reaching "grass-roots" America something that is long overdue. While pressure continues to mount on the Republican Party, it seems the Democrats are going to make a run for it .

\section*{Comics poke fun at life's problems}

To the editor:
Greetings to Ian, Mary and Toby.
It seems that, yet again, you continue to harass the artists of the comics puge.

When we last spoke, \(t\) thought I had given you a better understanding of why better understanding of why things are writtem in response to your recent letter. I pose some questions First, let me agree with you on the fact that. yes, the Nazis were a vicious organization who were responsible for the deaths of thousands and that torture atill exists in this world today; but don't you think that you a re reading a bit much into this? I mean, a comic appeared over a month ago and you are still harping on it? Isn't it a little late? When I read that comic about the pencilliet me see if I can remember ... I l found it funny Ididn't say to myself that this humor was maliciously aimed at those who were being tortured or electrocuted. I just read it on the simplistic level.

I'm sure that if you look hard enough at every comic in the world you could find some malicious or sickly depressing thing to apply a comic to. There are so many other problems to protest against that \(I\) find your attack on us a bit wasteful. But. then again. maybe you do that on parpose so you have something to ialk about in your classroom.

I don't want an answer to that question. But remember what I have said to you in the past: Controversy can be a good thing. It can make people sit up and realize that our world has a lot of problems. What's wrong if we poke fun at a few of them? After all, it's iustacomic.

\section*{Plates cause grief}

To the editor:
If you are a faithful reader of The Daily Orange, you may have read the article in Monday's edition about the Tennessean whose license plates were stolen from her car. Well. those plates were mine and I want the persor: out there who stole them to know what hell you have know what
What may have been a funny Halloween prank to you and your friends has caused me th loss of my car, loss of much money and loss of many tears. Just let me tell you why.

After my plates were stolen, 1 , of course. could not drive my car. I was told I would have to wait until my parents went to the Department of Motor Vehicles in Tennessee to get me new tags and had those tags mailed to me in order to legally drive my car. So I only legally drive my car. so only drove it to switeh sides of the drove it to switch sides of the street to avoid getting a ticket
But what I negligently was not told by the police officer was that I was not allowed to park my car on a city street without a license plate. So on Monday when I went out to move my car for the night. guess what? Right ... my car was gone. Yes, it had been towed for having no tags. Thief. And at Mr. or Ms. Tag Mine! The towing fee is a nat rate of \($ 65\) plus an additional s10 for each day the car sits at the garage.

That's the catch. Because my car is remistered in Tennessee, I have to wait until my new tags are sent to me And because the car is not registered in my name. I also have to wait on my father to send the city of Syraicuse a notarized letter stating I have permission to drive the car. While I wait on my new tags and the notarized letter to be delivered by the U.S. Turtle Express. I sit here with no ride to work, no monev to have the car released and a big headache - all because of your childish fun.

Please, if you want my new plates when they get here, just ask me. Ill be glad to give them to you. In the meantime, I hope the next tags that get stolen are yours. Maybe if you knew what it wass like to be the victim of someone"s immaturity, you would grow upa little yourself.

By ALEX PIGMAN
Stati Writer
Syracuse University's publications service may provide an important service as well as a profit making endeavor, said David Rubin, dean of the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications.

"All their bus

If they cannot make it in the open market, get rid of the whole thing, he said.
The meeting was one of six forums conducted by a team of consultants assembled by the chancellor.
John \(F\). Burness, senior vice president for public affairs at Duke University held the meeting as part of his two-day visit to study the SU administrative unit.
"I think we must have publications at SU, but I do not think the monopoly they have should be allowed," a speaker from the College for Human Development said.
She compared the publication and design service to the U.S. shoe industry.
'There needs to be more development in design." she said.

A member from Student Afri-can-American Society said the organization has stopped using the service.
"For our newsletter, we just typeset what we want on our computer and simply send it over to Alteracts to get printed," he said. "It's cheap and suits our needs."
Alteracts is independent from SU's publication service.

After listening to several speakers. Burness asked if any administrative departments had considered customer research schemes.
"It strikes me that one does not target their money to testing and customer surveys," Burness said.

One professor said he has had problems in dealing with the monopoly.
"There is a tremendous lack of customer orientation, the technology is old and it is hard to do business with them," he said. "I do not think that they would survive in an open market,": he said.

Grace Lanni, a publications specialist in the School of Computer and Information Science, said that she sometimes has trouble dealing with the service.
"Sometimes I wonder if they realize who the customer is," she said.

\section*{Sainte Marie exhibit teaches about local history \\ BY IIM HORTON \\ reflect the ways in which both}

Shofl Writer

The Syracuse area is one or the nation's richest in American Indian history and tradition. However, it's easy for students to pass through Syracuse University havingexperienced Jittle of this interesting culture.

One place that students can go to learn more about American Indian crafts and history is the Sainte Marie. part of the Iroquois exhibit in Liverpurl.
The site features a recreation ofa 17 thentertury French Jesuit settlement that once stood on the shore of Lake Onondaga. Here, costumed Jesuits appear as they did hundreds of years ago.

The Sainte Marie exhibit also includes a museum, offering a host of sights and sounds that Iroquois and Jesuits lived.

In addition, the site sponsors a number of programs and workshops focusing on Iroquois history and traditional crafts.

Joseph Bruchac, an Abenaki storyteller who has published several books, recently appeared at Sainte Marie as part of the extibit's Native American Cultural Awareness Series. He recited several American Indian legends and explaiond their impurmitut us tegehing towis w group of about 20 wide-eyed children and their parents on Sunday.

Telling stories
Bruchacteaches Native American Literature at the State University of New York at Albany and has been telling stories for 18 years.
"Stories are very, very impor tant because they are used to teach children," he said.

Bruchac explained that children were never spanked or beaten. Instead, stories were ased as method of terching children lessons.

Bruchac recounted a Mohawk story about a monster called "No Face" who preyed on disobedieptyefy and animated style, Bruchac described the antics of a young boy who was punished by being sent outside. After an encounter with "No Face," the boy was never heard from again Stories were also used to educate children about nature and the environment, Bruchac said.

He told a legend about the way a bear lost his tail as an example.
"Teaching was important for adults as well." Bruchac said.
To illustrate, he used an example of how strong female roles were encouraged by one stary.
"In Native American cultures, women are greatly respected," he said.

Wquantike a white-dominated society, American Indian women have nlwayo hetu at stcat veat of power, fncluding the ability to choose chiefs and decide a child's clan, he said.

He then told the story of a woman who exhibited great cunning and courage by saving her child and herself from a fierce monster known as "The Flying Head."

Between stories, Bruchac spoke a bit about the Iroquois and their history since European colonization.
He closed by wishing peace co all thase in the audience.
This month, Sainte Marie will host several more events designed to promote cultural awareness. These include free archeolorical workshops semiars on local wildlife and hisou y and wreath-and soap making workshops.
aaysuntweytromio a.m. to 5 p.m. until Dec. 31. Admission is \($ 3\) for adults.

Opinions and suggestions can be given between Dec. 16 and Febs. 15.

Asked about whether this will be ample time for all ideas to be considered. Shaw said it was the very maximum amount of time that could be given.
The university wants to have all its major changes imple. mented before recruitment begins for next year's freshman gins for next

"We want to see what the impact of these reductions on the community will be and to offer suggestions about these reductions," Daigneau said.
we will honor that commitment." Shaw said.
SU's BOTC policy
Shaw was asked why he supported the Board of Trustees stated position on the ROTC issue.

The military's policy of not allowing homosexuals into the ROTC profram viotates SU's own code of ethics which prohibits diserimithation on sexual orientation among other things. Shaw said.

SU wants the military policy changed, he said. He added that SU will work to change it.

The ROTC program will be reviewed in \(1994-95\), and if the reviewed in \(1994-95\), and if the policy is not changed, SU will do away with its ROTC prodo away with

Despite the policy's violation of SU's ethics code. he said. removing the program immediately would not be the best action.

Shaw said a number of students depend on their ROTC scholarships to pay for their education. If ROTC was removed, those students would be forced to leave, he said.

Continued from Page A12 Temple and Syracuse (7-2 and 3-0) and home with No. 2 Miami (7-0). Not a bad schedule, considering the Eagles have already faced No. 4 Michigan, No. 9 Penn State and Georgia Tech.

According to Coughlin, the rough early schedule is beginning to pay dividends for his squad.
"In playing championship competition week in and week out, you get accustomed to playing at that level," Coughlin said. "There's no question that the quality of the schedule has helped us sustain our level of play."

Standing in the way
As the college football season remains onc week away from its first bowl game, Florida State vs. Miami, the Hurricanes will try to remain focused on this week's contest with West Virginia (6-3 and 3-2).

Miami travels to No. 1 Flor ida State on Nov. 16 in the season's biggest game to date, but must first deal with the Mountaineers.

Saturday's contest marks the Canes initial Big East contest, a fact that pleases coach Dennis Erickson.
"It is our first game in the newly-formed league and it's a time to develop some rivalries," Erickson said. "We're going to be excited about playing this game.'

West Virginia, left for dead in a 51-6 whitewash at Penn State, rebounded last week to defeat Rutgers University (5-4 and 1-2), 28-3.

According to WVU coach Don Nehlen, he does not expect the Hurricanes to be looking past his squad.
"Miarmi is probably as good a football team that I've been able to watch and prepare for," Nehlen said. "They just like to have fun and play football. So I'm sure they won't look past us to Florida State."

\section*{Young stars sicken writer with greed \\ Watching former Syracuse Univer} sity star Billy Owens in his profes fional debut Tuesday for Golden State in Chicago was a time of eager anticipation for Syracuse hoop fans.

Personally, it made me sick.
Not that I dislike Owens. I consider myself a dedicated follower of the talented Carlisle, Pa., netive.

I have seen Owens mature from a hish school star to college AllAmerican to the third pick in last Aume's NBA draft in a matter of years

\section*{MIKE} BUS

\section*{SPORTS OPINION} But what has happened since his selection by Sacramento Kings is what an Kings is what an Oqs me the most Owens' whin ngy over the Kings selection and subsequent trade to Golden State Friday is a scenario all too familiar Friday is a scenario all too in professional sports today.

Big name players can now dictate where and who they play for, simply by manipulating the teams and leagues they represent.

Take Todd Van Poppel. The highlytouted high school pitcher was the anticipated No. I pick in the 1990 armateur baseball draft by the Atlanta Braves.

Instead. Van Poppel balked, no pun intended, at the prospect of pitching for the then-lowly Braves, and declared he was attending the University of Texass.

Come draft day, Van Poppel's mind had changed, and he was selected by the pitchingrich Oakland Athetics later in the first round.

Now tell me a rotation of Steve Avery. Tom Glavine, John Smoltz and Todd Van Poppel wouldn't sound nice come next April.
Another NBA

Another NBA player whose negotiating antics disgusted me is Danny Ferry of the Cleveland Cavaliers

Ferry was the second pick in the 1989 NBA draft when the los Angeles Clippers selected the former Duke star.
But, like Owens, Ferry was unhappy with his selection. Unilke the Kings, the Clippers refused to trade Ferry. and he took his basketball talents to Italy

The Clippers gave the dispruntled Ferry his way by trading his rights to Cleveland, and be returned last season to register a rather unimpressive rookie sea pressive squad.

Another player dictating his future is Erie Lindros, the Canadian junior hockey league phenomenon.

Lindros refuses for various reasons, cali it greed or call it arrogance, to play for the Quebec Nordiques.

Quebec selected Lindros first in the 1991 NHL draft

Now instead of beginning what could be a legendary career in the NHL, the teen-age Lindros is toiling the sport's lower ranks
The actions of high profile athletes such as Owens, Var Poppel. Ferry and Lindros will only show younger stars that they can get away with picking and choosing their future teams.

What's the point of even having a draft system when the selfishness of players without one professional game players without one professional game richer?

The 1991 season ended on a sour note for the Syracuse University soccer team. Army's Philip Shearer scored with 1:44 left in the game to break a \(1-1\) tie, and Brian Loftin scored only 22 seconds later to give the Cadets a \(3-1\) home later to give the Cadets a \(3-1\) home

Hall of Fame on Feb. 8 .
"You don't have to necessarily be a national champion to ket in there," Simmons said. "EThere are) national championship coaches that have not been accepted into the Hall of Fame."
Simmons has a compiled a \(206-78\) record at Syracuse, winnimg the national championship in 1983 , 1988 , 1989 and 1990 . He took over the head coaching position from his father, Roy Simmons Sr. in 1970.
Simmons Jr. will join his father. who was inducted into the Hall of Fame in 1964. The Simmons are the fifth fatherson combination in the Hall of Fame. The younger Simmons will become the 13th Orangeman in the Hall.
Simmons Ir. said his induction was more pleasing to the elder Simmons than himself.
"He was probably more excited than I was about it. because he liked the father-son aspect." Simmons Jr. said. "He had given his life to the sport and I have given a great deal of my he to the sport. In his lifetime he wanted to see sport. In his lifetime he wanted to

While the induction is an honor for Simmons, it is also an honor that has arrived much too late, according to Orangemen assistant coach John Desko.

"I haven't had a chance to let anything settle in and think about anything." Foti said. "At this point, I just want to get to the recruiting - start to fill the spots of the people that are going to be leaving.'

\section*{Jr. to enter Hall}

Second, I think it's long overdue.
One reason for Sirmmons' earlier omission could be the selection of people near the hall's location on the campus of John Hopkins University.
"I think there's some regional aspect to it." Simmons said. "I think if you look at the ballot this year it might be just oincidence. There's Annapolis. theres he University of Maryland and a Cor nell boy, who's actually a Canadian and me. It seemed to be a regional distribution.
Currant SU captain Tom Marechek uid the Orangemen success in the late g80sshould have been enough to elevate Sirmmons into the Hall of Fame immediately.
"It always helps any coach that wins (the national championship) three years in a row." Marechek said. "You always look that over.

Committees could have also looked over Simmons playing career. As an SU attackman, Simmons received homorable mention All-American honors in 1957 and 1958.

Simmons was already a member of the Greater Syracuse Sports Hall of Fame as well as the Upstate New York Chapter of the Lacrosse Hall of Fame.
Still. he wasn't upset at the delay for his admission to the hall
*I personally think about Hall of Fames as being when you retire from the sport or the twilight of your life, Simmons said. "I don't feel I'm in any position to retire nor am I in the twilight of my life.

Though the major card companies have only been slugging it out in the college market for a few years, credit through the bookstore, which is owned and operated by SU, has been available in some form or another since at least the 1940s, said Kathy Fonda, University Bookstore customer service supervisor.

There are many advantages to the additional piece of plastic that SU stu dents carry with them. Fonda said.

Most students use their card primarily at the beginning of the semester to buy books and supplies, she said.

It does not replace bank cards, but it is much easier for students to consolidate their purchases on one card than to carry around cash, a checkbook or a pile of different credit cards.

Slightly lower interest
Also, the card's 18 percent interest rate is lower than the standard 19.8 percentage rate of most major bank cards.
"Students may also want to have the convenience of one statement that shows what they are buying for a particular period of time," Fonda said.

Since payments can be spread over a long period of time, as long as minimum payments on the card are made each month, students are able to get all the books and supplies they need without having to worry about paying for them right away, she said.

The card is more of a service to students than a way for the bookstore to make money, said Betsy English, bookstore director.

But senior Jamie Horvitz said the lure of the card keeps students from learning to use credit wisely.

It's too easy to use and there is too much available," he said.

SU to formally install Shaw as chancellor

\section*{By MARK A: BROUSSEAU}

> Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw wants to take time to address the university and Syramuse communities this afternoon.
> Meanwhile, Syracise University will officially install Shaw as its \(10 t h\) chancellor at 4 p.m. with much pomp, a little Mardi Gras and few visiting dignitaries

Suspended art

Junior computer graphics major Mike Hand checks the angle of his sculpture for his upcoming critique Thursday afternoon at the Comstock Art Facility.

Traditionally, SU would have invited its sister institutions to attend a formal ceremony

The university's budget concerns prohibited that expense, so today's installation will be a hometown-affair:
-We are doing this in just two months;" said Nancy Marquardt, director of special events. Shaw began work Aug. 22. Traditional ceremonies take place nine to 12 months later.
"You need more time to send the invitations," Marquardt said.

Instead. more than 4,300 invitations have gone out to every university employee, several hundred student leaders and numerous city and county officials.

The band cormes marching in
The SU Marching Band, sounding a Mardi Gras theme, will parade down Comstock Avenue from Euclid Avenue to Manley Field House at 3:30 p.m. The band will be followed by deans and administrators.

Faculty, staff, students and the public are invited to follow the band. At Manley, the university's combined choirs will perform an invocation.

Shaw will receive the charge of office from H. Douglas Barclay, chairman of the Chancellor's Selection Committee and vice chairman of the Bonrd of Trastees.

Chris J. Witting, chairman of the Board of.Trustees, will then ofincially install Shaw as chancellor.

Chancellor Fimeritus Melvin A. Eggers will present Shaw with the Chancellor's Medallion. The medallion is the official symbol of the chancellor's office.

Eggers; Shaw's predecessor, was not offered an installation and did not ask for one.

Shaw personally called for today's installation.

Following the presentation of the medallion, Shaw will deliver his inaugural address \({ }^{H}\) He will talk about SU, its mission and its values," Marquardt said.

The program will conclude with the singing of the university alma mater.

Following the one-hour ceremony, the chancellor and his wife will greet the public at a reception in the freld house Cookies and punch will be served while the chancellor tries to meet as many community members as he can.

It will be only the eighth time in the'SU's 121-year history that such a ceremony has been held.

This only happeng every 20 years and, it is niot often it happens while students are here 50 Thope they fee inclined to come." she said.

Most of this discrimination stems from male students who are misinformed about female engineering students, she said.
She points to a forum on sexual harassment held by the engineering department last spring where several men complained that women received preferential treatment.

Their corriplaints ranged from easier requirements for enrollment in the engineering department to better jobs upon graduation, Hirtzel said.
"Men think that most women are getting hired out of college before them because of \(a\) quota system," she said. This isn't the case.
The industry is just picking the most qualified applicants, she said

Some male engineering students blame women instead of their own poor performance, she said.
The conference on sexual harassment did not turn out to be productive, Thft said.

\section*{Waving the magic wand} magic n. la: the use of means (as charms or spells) believed to have supernatural power over natural forces.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson, a man whose name has become synonymous with the mystical, admitted Thursday he is just like the average person. He announced he has tested positive for the human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS.

As an MVP basketball player, Magic was a role model whose admiration transcended race and class. Since the disease has forced his playing career to come to an end, his endorsements now will be for awareness of AIDS, a disease that also does not discriminate.

America loves its heroes, and more specifically it loves its sports stars. When Rock Hudson died of an AIDSrelated illness, there was a footnote to his death - he was gay. Unfortunately, America still does not accept homosexuality. But it welcomes, with open arms, an innovator of sports and the exciting leader of a five-time world champion basketball team.

Magic did not say how he contracted the disease. It was insinuated from his press conference that he got it from not practicing safe sex. For Americans in awe of its superstars, the reason does not matter.

Johnson has always exhibited extraordinary power on the court. He wove passes into a tapestry of necromancy and electrified all who watched his magic touch. His opponents could only watch in awe when he cast his spell. Now, off the court he has the ability to use his supernatural name to help overcome what has become a natural disaster.

He discusmed business in the 1990: and the growth of Pier I Imports Corp.. which consists of 5ss stores that sell home furnishings from 44 countries.
Declining interest rates and low overall prices create oppostunities for small, and mediumsized busincesses to grow. he satid.

Johnson said he predicts buxinose growth will pull the nation out of the recession and make the 1990s one of the most economically prosperous decades.

The 90 s will be one of the hest decader," he satied. "When the erenomy stablixes there will be different kind of prosperita.
Changing for the better
Because the economy is chang. ing for the better. Juhinson said he is not worried about the urvivat of Pier 1 Imports.
But hast January was a different sitory, Johnam. whas teacher a retall course al Harvard Business School. satid the corporation sunk into a \($ 21 \geq\) million debt.
Pier stores in New York New derser and the New England refion suffered the largest drop in sales, Johnton said.
After selling assets. increasing prices for items only availahle in Pier 1 and evaluating the corporation's policies. Johnson reduced the debt to \($ 160\) miltion.

One of my ultimate goals is to make sure the business survives," he said.

Clark fohnson. chairman and CEO of Pier 1 Imports.
fohnson said his hasinesphilosophy for the 1900 is to cater to consumers needs and want:.
One of a business manager: most important tools is information guthered from consumer research and focus groups, Johnson said.

Hook on to your customers and do what the custamers tell you to do." he said.
For example, Johnson said research indicated customers wanted to choose from a wide variety of merchandise.

\section*{High health care costs lead to American inequities Speech demands that federal agencies impose limits}

By ANDY RYAN

The U.S. federal government must set limits on health care costs to make care more affordable to the public and to keep insurance rates down, said Syracuse University professor Timothy Smeeding.

Smeeding, a professor of economics and public administration. spoke at this week's Thursday Morning Roundtable.
Overall. the United States spendsabout \($ 666\) billion a year spendsabout \($ 66\) bition a year of the national health care program. Smeeding said. First, ryone to be able to have access to health care," he said.

Unfortunately. this is not the case, he said.
"We are one of the richest countries in the world and yet 10 percent of all Arnericans ar refused health care". he said.

A second roal of the health cire program is to provide the highest quality care possible.

The SWE does outreach programs with local brounie troops to inform them of opportunities in inform them of opportumering, Tiberio said.
"We are trying to seach women before they get to high school and are told that they are not smart enough for sciences,"

The SWE also tries to case

And, according to Smeeding. those with insurance receive what is possibly the best care available in the world.

\section*{nsurance advantage}

However those without insurance never have a chance to receive the same quality care, if any at all, he said.

The final poal is to keep health care costs down. Unfortunately, the costs are rising. he said.
Overall. there are many good quatities about the national health care program. Smeeding said. The quality of care is excellent, and those with insurance have easy access to this care and access to the laterst in technological advances.

The bad side of the health care program is that those without insurance have a very difficult time gaining access to this quality care.
Smeeding said Americans should look at other countries' health care programs and incorporate the best qualities into the U.S. health care program.

Smeeding used Canada as an example because it is a big, diverse and relatively young country. like the United States. Also, there are many aspects of the Canadian health care prorram that are better than the American. he said.

Canada has centralized cost ontrol, which means the government controls the fees charged by doctors, hospitals, and insurance companies, and this has helped to keep costs down, he said.

Hospital costs in the United States are \($ 40\) billion higher than in Canada.

Smeeding's taik will be aired Sunday at 4 p.m. on WCNY-FM 91.3. WSYT-TV Channel 68 will broadcast the speech at midnight on Dece. 8 .

Syracuse University should have a course to introduce freshmen to cross-cultural awareness, said Caroline Jalbert of the New York Public Interest Research Group.
"We're looking for mutual agreement and understanding different points of view Jalbert said.
"We really need a course for this." she said.
Jalbert spoke Wednesday night at the NYPIRG Multicultural Awareness forum in the Hall of Languages.

Representatives of Students Concerned About Rape EDucation, Student Government Association, the Women's Center and the Teaching Assistant program were at the forum.
"At our first forum, we wanted to get feedback on cross-cultural issues," Jabbert said "We won dered if a cross-cultural course could answer our needs."

Although SU has history and contribution courses, students do not know how to put knowledge from those classes to use, Jalbert said.

Learning about cultures
Students need to know about other types of people, other cultures." she said
The Freshman Forum, a new course for first-year students. has cultural ovents built into has cultural a yent buil into the curriculun.but these event represent a narrow view of cul ure, Jalbert said.
"Most of the events are dinner and a trip to the Syracuse Stage or the Everson Museum, and these are very narrow definitions of culture," she said.

One of the goals of the course should be understanding between cultures. Jalbert said.

Basic communication barriers on campus should be addressed before cultural and racial isgues, said SGA Represencative Aaron Amos.

Students should be more open after a few weeks on campus and I don't see that happening to the extent we should," he said. "Students should work on being more open and then work n communicating between on communicatin between aces.
Amos suggrested tactics such as sensitivity and meditation training.

The course should be an over all study in diversity and then narrowed down to more specific issues, said Jennifer Richardison of the Women's Center.
"We should look at' what's most important to students." Richardson said.
"We also need to address issues other than racism, like relationships between men and women and homophobia. she said.

A representative from S.C.A.R.ED said the course concept is positive, but it is necessary to have realistic expectations.
"It would be naive to go in thinking about erasing racism, sexism and homophobia." he said.
NYPIRG's next step is to present the idea for the course present the idea for the course College of Arts and Sciences. Jalbert said.

WJPZ hopes to lure more rampus listeners

For those of you who feel there's a limited selection on the Syracuse FM dial, there is an alternative.

Freshly Squeezed, an alternative music show, is featured on WJPZ-FM 89.1 ( \(Z\)-89) every Sunday from 10 a.m. to 11:45 a.m.

The show, hosted by sophomore Kim Farina and senior Evan Trees, first aired on Sept. 1, following a successful pilot show. It is strictly an alternative music show, featuring new and old groups such as Erasure, \(10,000 \mathrm{Maniacs}\), Living Color and Jane's Addiction.

The idea for the show was prompted by a similar show, A Different Orange, which aired last year, also hosted by Farina.
"We thought there would be a need for it." Farina said. "We want campus involvement, to get students listening to 2-89."
The only other station on campus to feature alternative music is WERW, but neither Trees nor Farina fear that their show is in any jeopardy.
"You can't really pick (WERW) up." Trees said. "They have very low freTrees sa double sets in the pas 25-plus years fand that one was a live set, the set, the question becomes: Do people pay \($ 30\) for a half-assed double pise?

Last year he released a greatest hits album, which should have given him plenty of time to record this latest release Hymns To.The Silence. Maybe he had too much free time and felt he had to share all of the results with us. Maybe next year he'll deliver a boxed set.

Half worthwhile
In any case, the new release is a double album with one album up to Morrison's standards. It's full of snappy, slowrocking rhythm and blues/jazz combos. The other half of the set, exposing Morrison's self-indulgent puritanical streak, is, at best., inoffensive dead space. The first disc on Hymns To The Silence succeeds from beginning to end fincluding the fact that Morrison resisted the cloying trend of titling each disc).
The first single, "Why Must I Always Explain," features Morrison in his most comfortable role: the disillusioned soul searchrole: the disillusio

This time
This time he's a romantic berating those who favor empirical evidence and pragmatic thought over intuition and revelation.

He sings: "Well I get up in the morning and I get my brief/I go out and stare at the world in complete disbelieffIt's not righteous indignation that makes me complain/It's the fact that I always have to explain." He then criticizes thought simple tons: "Well it's out on the highway and it's on with the show/ Always telling people things hey're too lazy to know."

Vibrant harmonica, organ and old-time rhythm and blues surround "Ordinary Life," a typical spousal-bashing bar tune: "Nagging wife starts a fight/Trying to make you uptight."
"So Complicated," a jazzy, sax-heavy number complete with deep, bluesy back-up vocal support and a hint of sarcasm, is Morrison at his best: "Are you telling me I'm doing fine/When telling me I'm doing fine/When can't even tie my shoes?"
The album's first two cuts. "Professional Jealousy," a tale of woe about the green-eyed monster, and "I'm Not Feeling It Anymore," a song about disillusionment, are good grooves chair music that'll make your feet tap but won't quite get you up to dance.

Disc one also succeeds in its originality when Morrison covers the country tune "I Can't Stop Loving You" and even raps on "See Me Through Part II Thee)."

The songs on disc two, though - they're another story. Not one song has a real identity, and all tunes blend together, creating unwelcome down time.

When the music isn't boring. the lyrics kill. They range from religious drivel ("By His Grace") to affected electric guitar and synth-backed poetry readings "On Hyndford Street")

Lulling ballads "C
Luling ballads "Carrying a Torch" and "It Must Be You" might serve as the only saving graces, but compared to disc one, they're bland.
One wonders if someone put Morrison up to creating a doubledisc set out of songs that should have been tossed. He says himself, "If this is success, then something's awful wrong/Cause I bought the dream and I had to play along."

This A in't No Disco" is published each Friday in the Lifestyle section of The Daily Orange.

The Falcons are ranked No. 7 in the mideast region volleyball rankings. The Aggies are coming off a victory over the seventh-ranked team in the nation, the University of Texas. The Rams suffered a 3-0 loss to SU earlier in the season.
"It is hard to say which team is the toughest," Schulte said. "Texas A&M is a very talented team, Bowling Green has a big and solid midide which will gives us trouble and I'm sure Rhode Island will be looking for revenge."

The Orangewomen will use this weekend's first-rate competition as a proving ground for a new defensive alignment.

Schulte said Syracuse will not change any of the personnel in the starting lineup, but in an effort to protect against the tip and dump shots, the Orangewomen will attempt to have defensively in the middie.
"Mentally we know that this is it." Schulte said. "We are going to be challenged all weekend and we know that we have to start playing well and preparing for the type of competition we are going to see in three weeks at the Big East (Championships)."

\section*{Orangemen lose to Pitt}

\section*{Syracuse begins new season in old way}

\section*{By ZEV BOROW}

Staiff Writer
Last Saturday the 1991 Syracuse University men's swimming season began much the same way as the 1990 campaign ended.
The Orangemen \((0-1)\) were defeated in their season-opener at the hands of the University of Pittsburgh (1-0).
SU finished third behind the Villanova University Wildeats and theeventual conferencechampion Panthers at the 1991 Big East championships last February.
Saturday afternoon at Pittsburgh. the Orangemen were bested once again by the Par* thers. losing 124-119 in their first dual meet of the seacon.
Syracuse lost despite what coach Lou Walker called a -dominatingperformance" against the Panthers.

SU won nine of thirteen events on Saturday, including the 200. meter back stroke, in which junior transfer student Derek Philips aet a new school record with a time of \(1: 54.67\)

The nine first-place finishes for the Orangemen were not enough to garner a win for Syracuse as Pitt secured its victory by scoring points off second, third and fourth place finishes.

The loss to the Panthers illustrates one of the main areas chat Walker feels will serve as Syracuse's Achilles' heel this season: depth.
"As we look at our team in terms of the Big East conference and really, any talented team we swim, our problem is depth," Walker said. "We have the fronrunning talent. Our weakness is nur depth.

Depth, or the lack thereof. was a problem of the 1990 Orangemen as well. However. the 1991 team has underione several additions and revisions that should help bolster the SU roster.
"Last year our two weakest events were diving and the backstroke," Walker said. "We definitely improved ourselves in those areas and as a team as a whole.
Syracuse will be the new home for two junior transfer backstrokers. Philips, who is from Louisiana State Univer* sity. qualified for the NCAA's while at LSU, and Rob McGuckin from Auburn Univer* sity. who has placed at the SEC championships, will be the new Orangemen.

Webster Pool will also house the talents of the Orangemen's promising group of freshmen swimmers, led by backstroker Seth Williams. Williams, a native of Cortland, was the YMCA \(100-m\) and \(200-\mathrm{m}\) yard back. stroke national champion in high school.

Freshmen Dave Rucker and Brian Book look to strengthen the Orangemen in the diving events. Rucker placed second at the Pennsylvania high school championships and Book wor the Ohio state diving meet.

Unlike last year's Orangemen team. Walker said the 1991 squad will be able to enter afrontrunningswimmeror diver in every event.
"Our goals are to have a winning dual meet record, place in the top three at the Big East in the top three at the big East, and send as many people as we can to the NCAAs. Walker said. If feel we can do that, but in order for ug to be successin we need for the less experienced guys to develop and contribute." of sophomores for sienificant of sophomores for significant contributions. Bo Miller, Zach Have to continue to acore point have to continue to score points for the Orangemen

We definitely have the guys who can take the firsts," Hatch said. We need people to take the seconds and thirds too if we want to win as a team.
On Saturday, the Orangemen will be on the road again, facing conference foes Seton Hall University and Boston College Eagles in Orange, N.J., at 1 p.m.

\section*{Deluge of questions may hamper Pasqualoni's rest}

By DAVE MACER
WAER Sports Director
It's "open" week, but coach Paul Pasqualoni probably isn't etting much rest

While "Double \(P\) " probably wishes he could get a full night's sleep for the first time since early August, I'll bet there's something making him toss and turn.

Bowl rumors.
It all must seem like one long question to the coach by now "Where you gonna play? Is the money right? Is it Tennessee, Texas. Tulane, the Terps or the Tide? Will you go to the same bowl you went to three years ago? What would Amos Alonzo Stingg say? Who was that president between Nixon and Car ter? Hey, coach, do you think Oswald acted alone?

So. coach. grab some Sominex of turn on your Films of the Temple garne. Get some sleep.
(Shhhhhh ... Syracuse and Tennessee in the Blockbuster Bowl on Dec. 28 in Miami. The money's more than right, it's not against a "T" tearn, the team won't go back to the Hall of Fame Bowl. Stagg would say go for it. Gerald Ford and I*m still not sure about the Oswald thing. 1

West Virginia \((+27\) ) at Miami:
The Hurricanes come into this ballgame with a consecutive game winning streak that stands at 13 . Theyve won 42 straight at the Oramge Bowl. Theyre No. 2 in the country. They're going to win this game. But by how much? West Virginia doesn't have one of its better teams in 1991 . The Mountaineers ( \(6-3\) ) saved their outside bowl chances with a win over Rutgers last week and they need to keep this one close to maintain their shot - West Virginia should keep it less than 27.

But Miami will seill rollin its Grst Bing East garme. Miami 35 West Virginia 14.
Boston College 1.6 1/21 at Temple:

Don't laugh: Boston College (3-5) is the third-best team in the mediocre Big East right now.

Sure, it took a while - early losses to Michigan and Georgia

\section*{The race for the case}

Tech hurt the Eagles record, but' may have toughened the team up. Quarterback Glenn Foley is the conference's leading touchdown passer with 15 , after touchdown passer with 15 , after getting a career-high four last getting a career-high four last week. The BC defense stuffed Alex Van Pelt in that gime.

Three words describe the Temple Owls: 1. Boring. 2, Boring. 3. Boring. Boston College 31 , Temple 9.
Rutgers at Pitesburgh \(1-9\) 1/2):
The Panthers are officially in deep hibernation. Pitt started off with a five-game win streak, btut has dropped four in a row topping off the slide with a 26-point loss to Boston College. Pitt should finally bounce back with a game at home against Rutgers ( \(5-4\) ), another team in demise. The key for Pittsburch is QB Alex Van Pelt. He tossed three interceptions against Boston College last week. Without Van Pelt going well, the Panthers are just as bad as the Scarlet Knights.

But Rutgers couldn't beat anybody right now. Pittsburgh 24. Rutgers 6.

Tennessee at Notre Dame \(-7 \%\)
The Volunteers bring their aerial show to Domeville, where the Irish have been racking up the points as well.

The latest win for Team NBC was a 38-point shutout of Navy. Notre Dame, which is consider ing a nickname change to the Reacocks (but only if the money is-rightl. didn't look that impressive coming into the season. but is 8-1 and Fiesta Bowlbound.

Tennessee ( \(5-2\) ) scuttled all See PICKS Page 16

\section*{Shaw officially installed as chancellor Friday \\ bue-light system.}

\section*{Convocation outlines values, faults of SU}

\section*{By ROBERT SHELD}

Asst. News Editor
Syracuse University officially installed at a convocation at Manley Field House Friday
"I understand clearly that this ceremony of installation is a symbol of the faith and trust you have invested in me," Shaw said. "I mean to be worthy."
About 1000 faculty, students, staff and members of the cornmunity attended the ceremony.
Earlier in the afternoon, the SU Marching Band led a parade to Manley from Euclid and Comstock avenues.

About 80 marchers followed the band, ncluding representatives of sororities and student organizations.
Shaw has served as chancellor since Aug. 22. The installation ceremony was the eighth in SU's 121-year history.

An event like this comes only rarely in the life of a university," said Chris \(J\). Witting, chairman of the SU Board of Trustees.
"We can say we were there when the Chancellor Shaw era began," he said.

\section*{Addressing SU's values}

Shaw's installation address outlined SU's values, its faults, and his suggestions on how to move the university forward.
'Syracuse University's five principal values are: quality, caring, diversity, innovation and service," he said.
"Quality is the most fundamental of Syracuse's core values -it is at the heart of what we do," he said.
Shaw said SU's quality shows in many ways, including the international recognition of schools and programs, the honors program, and the \($ 160\) million Campaign for Syracuse fundraising proiect.

Diversity is the enriching biend of people and ideas that marks this campus," he said. "This university is a place for all people, an environment devoted to intellectual and personal discovery."
He said the increase in minority enrollment, the Division of International Programs Abroad, and University College show SU's diversity.

Innovation is a signature of SU, "welldocumented in a distinguished history; survivingearly financialhardships;opening its doors to returning veterans after World War II; developing numerous innowative approaches to acadernic programs and to continuing education," Shaw gaid.
"Service at Syracuse is an attitude, a desire to use expertise for the betterment of all," he said. "It is determination to go beyond the boundaries of job descriptions to meet the needs of the mornent.
"It is what makes this university a good neighbor, locally, nationally and internationally.'

\section*{The universify's faults}

Shaw discussed SU's faults, calling the need for more caring the most important fault to correct.

We are all diminished when those among us intentionally hurt others through hateful slogans on Twshirts, signs or whatever." he said. "We can be a more caring place and we must."

Shaw outlined a 14 -point plan of ways to make SU better.

Highlights include:
- A set of core requirements for all undergraduates.
- A summer orientation program for students and parents to acquaint them with life at SU.

> A total quality management program leading to improved service for students. faculty and staff.
- The formation of a Retired Faculty Association in the Syracuse area.
- The formation of a community forum to bring neighborhood and SU representatives together.
"My task was to give you the framework, the values. that \(I\) believe you will need as you do your work," he said. "Won't you help me as we move forward?"

Kristallnacht, the "Night of Broken Glass" that signaled the start of the Holocaust, was remembered in a candlelight vigil Saturday night on the steps of Hendricks Chapel.
"On this night, Jews were killed, synagogues and Jewish homes were simultaneously destroyed," said Rabbi Alan Iser, at the vigil.
"Kristallnacht was just the excuse Nazis need to speed up their plans, to strip Jews of their properties," he said.

The vigil opened Holocaust Awareness Week. Bponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation and the Hillel Student Organization.
'Six million Jewish men and women, pne million children among them, were taken by other human beings to die in gas and fire" during the Holocaust, he said.
"All the people who died were people - individuals, not numbers, and they deserve the respect as such," said sophoceremony

\section*{A week of programs}

Other events are planned for this week.
- There will be a panel discussion on Thesday in the Hillel Lounge in Hen dricks Chapel at 7 p.m. about genocide dealing with the horrors of the Holocsust and African slavery, led by Professor Laurence Thomas of the philosophy department and Joe Kalina, a Holocaust survivor.
"The Holocaust was a tragedy for Jews and a horror for all mankind," said Rev. Tom Wolfe, Protestant chaplain at Hendricks Chapel.
- On Wednesday, SU freshman Shari Cuenca will give a slide presentation titled "To Auschwitz and Back," on her trip to the Poligh concentration camp. The presentation will be at noon in the Hillel lounge.
"When the survivors die, no one else will be able to talk about the horror of the Holocaust. and we'll have no way to know this actually happened," Cuenca know this mctually happened, Cuenca stop something like this from happening again," she said.
- Morris Dan, a concentration carmp survivor, will speak Thursday at 8 p.m in Room 202 of the Hall of Languages.

Dan, a native of Poland, sorted the clothing of the people who were sent to the gas chamber.

With the valuables he found in the clothing, he was able to collaborate with a group that bombed the crematorium. - The closing ceremony will be Friday on the steps of Hendricks Chapel at 4 p.m.
"This week is important, lest we forget the Holocaust: that would be a horror far greater," said Hendricks Chapel staff greater," said Hendricks

Financial Aid office moves

\section*{By MICHAEL FLYNN}

Contributing Writer
As a part of a "master plan." the Office of Financial Aid has a new home in Archbold Gymnasium

The new Gynuasium.
The new address has been called Syracuse University's financial building as the Bursar's Office is also in Archbold.

The move had been discussed for the past three years, said Chris Walsh. director of financial aid.
Since that time, finding a location was a main priority. he said.
"Last year, we found a location when several sports offices planned to move to Manley." Walsh said.

The Financial Aid Office was located in two buildings: one in Steele Hall where most financial aid processing took place, and one in the Tolley Administration Building. where financial aid counseling and telephone assistance took place, he said.

The idea to move came from Walsh and David C. Smith, Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid.

They decided it was in the best interest of the students to combine the ofices, Walsh said.

\section*{Isn't that convenient...}

The problem with the way we were arranged in Tolley and Steele Hall was that it wasn't very convenient for students," Walsh said. "Students would frequently have to visit one office and be referred to another building to solve a particular problem.
I think it also had an impact on the timeliness of being able to respond to particular concerns."

The Student Employment Office will move to Steele Hall during Thanksgiving vacation.
"This is like a master plan," said Sharon Mullen, director for student employment. "It's been going on for a while to make better the facilities at the university for students." "To make thing's more coherent, and certainly more cohesive than what it has been in the past,"

Lacrosse team receives new practice field Bronze sculpture of Gary Gait unveiled at subsequent luncheon

\section*{By MARK A. BROUSSEAU}

Asst. News Editor

Despite winning three consecutive national championships in the 1980s, the Syracuse University lacrosse team needed a sodded practice field to prepare for road games.

Consequently, the Alfred Wohl Lacrosse Field was dedicated by Michael, Wohl's son, at the Manley Field HouseColvin Park Athletic Complex Saturday morning.
"The field gives lacrosse a place to call home within our athletic complex," said Jake Crouthamel. SU athletic director.
"Before this, we were an orphan," said Roy Simmons Jr., SU lacrosse coach. "Now we have a practice field close to Manley."
"In terms of a facility, it is just one more piece of the pie that gives us quality, facilities and keeps us competitive," Crouthamel said.

It's critically important to the operation when we have unique things tike capital funds when there is instability," he said.

Michael Wohl presented the field to the university before an audience of about 20 people at the field.

\section*{In memory of 1934 alumnus}

Alfred Wohl earned a bachelor's degree at SU in 1934 and played varsity lacrosse for three years. He was a mernber of the university's Varsity Club and received the Letterman of Distinction award in 1977.
"Clearly we are indebted to the Wohl family for providing opportunities for our athletes," Crouthamel said.

Following the dedication, a luncheon was held at the Goldatein Student Center featuring a cake in celebration of Roy Simmons Sr.'s 91 st birthday.

In addition, Simmons Sr , unveiled a bronze sculpture depicting the moment that Gary Gait scored a goal against the University of Pennsylvania in the semifinals of the 1988 national lacrosse championship held in the Carrier Dome.
Known from that point as "Air Gait," the goal was made as Gait sprang from behind the net. whirled in mid-air and launched the shot into the goal from over his shoulder
"He made the horizontal game into a vertical game," Simmons Jr. said.
"That unorthodox and creative shot gave SU tremendous national recognition for its spectacular inventiveness," he said.
"And in the same game, Gary duplicated the shot for another score," he said.
"A hero like Gary sold a lot of tickets and gave innovative things to the game." he said.

Gait is the subject of the sculpture created by artist Fred Kail of Baltimore.

Roy Simmons Ir. coach-of Syracuse University's lacrosse team stands before the sculpture, "Air Gait." with former SU players Paul, left, and Gary Gait. The sculpture was in honor of the famous move performed by Gary Gait.

The artist never saw the actual play and never met the players," Simmons Jr. said. "He did it all from a photograph." The statue will be on permanent display at the Carrier Dome, he said.
Gary Gait and his brother Paul play professionally for the Detroit Turbos in the Major Indoor Lacrosse League.
"The Gait guys gave us a visibility in the lacrosse world like no others in recent history," Crouthamel said.
"They took the game to another level and they did it while playing at SU," he said.

\section*{Counselors warn students to regulate levels of stress}

\section*{By STACEY D. CARTER}

Contributing Writer
Being stressed out can. lead to serious problems for college students and it should not be taken lightly, according to local counselors.
"Without a certain level of stress you are not happy," said Mary L. Langlie, assistant director of the Office of Residence Life.

However, she said. students must know where to draw the line between stress that is healthy and stress that is detrimental.

Stress can be unhealthy because it wears down the immune system making the body more vulnerable to colds and sickness, Langlie said.

Dr. Jim Yonai. an alcohol abuse counselor in Wampsville, N.Y., warns against the use of drugs such as Vivarin to stay awake during times of added academic stress.
He said Vivarin causes students to become more stressed out because it is an amphetamine, which causes more. tension.
Suffering from withdrawal
The symptoms of Vivarin withdrawal are similar to those of cocaine withdrawal, Yonai said, noting the depression, sleepiness, lethargy and headaches that follow use.
In order to avoid these symptoms. people often continue to use Vivarin and can become addicted, he said. On campuses, however, this drug is periodically abused, especially at the end of the abused, espectaidy Stress problems are common among most college students, especially freshmen and seniors, Langlie said.
It greatly affects freshmen because they are faced with a new environment and have to make both personal and academic adjustments. she said. Seniors are stressed because they are getting started with their careers.

Langlie said students increase stress by being too hard on themselves.
"Students value themselves by their accomplishments," she said. "If they get bad grades, they think they're bad people."
"You never accomplish enough to think you're a good person," she said.
Yonai said there are other physical problems brought about by stress including drug abuse and suicide.
Many of the students that he counsels are from Colgate University and SUNY Morrisville and most of their problems can be attributed to alcohol use, he said.
"Alcohol abuse is wide on campus," he said. Students abuse alcohol because they are out of their parents' control and have a greater opportunity to drink and ake drugs, he said.
Yonai said many students believe alcohol alleviates stress. This leads to alcohol abuse when students drink not only for fun. but for relaxation and to escape problems.

Drugs and alcohol play a role
He said a college student he recently counseled attempted suicide by taking a bottle of Tylenol. Alcohol played a major role in her decision to attempt suicide. in addition to relationship problems and a helpless feeling.

Yonai said more than half of all suicide attempts involve alcohol or drugs. Feeling helpless and hopeless are two major reasons that college students attempt suicide, Yonai said.
"It's not so much that they want to die, they just don't want life to continue the way it is," he said.

\section*{Prioritizing may}

\section*{reduce tension}

\section*{By STACEY D. CARTER}

Knowing how to prioritize is the most important way to alleviate stress, local stress counselors say.
"Say no to the things you like, so you can say yes to the things you love," said Mary L. Langlie, assistant director of the Office of Residence Life.

Langlie said many students try to do too many things and do a mediocre job at all of them, instead of choosing a few things and doing all of them well.

Dr. Jim Yonai, alcohol abuse counselor, agreed that prioritizing is important, but said students must first accept that there are stressors in their lives.
"If you know what the stressors are, you can plan ahead," Yonai said.
"Develop a lifestyle that will cushion stress," Langlie said. She said that people often laugh at the term "cushion," necessary to keep the cushions built up.

Both Langlie and Yonai said that taking care of the body is also very important in decreasing stress.

Fun, food and sleep
Exercising, eating right and being consistent with the amount of sleep one } gets is vital, Langlie said.

\section*{Survey speaks volumes}

Students must speak now or forever hold their peace.

Election Day has passed but the opportunity to make a difference, at least in the Syracuse University community, still remains. The Student Government Association has devised a survey in cooperation with SU administrative officials to get to the heart of student opinions about the downsizing plans. The survey is included in this issue of The Daily Orange.

The administration has said no decisions on the budget cuts have been made. If this is true, then students still have time to make a difference.

To date, student participation in the downsizing process has been nonexistent at best. Few students attended the budgetary forums and input to the administration has come mostly from large student organizations. like SGA.

SGA represents student opinions as well as it can but its scope is wide, encompassing many students with only a few voices. This survey would cut to the chase, allowing for more direct communication between the administration and students. It asks pointed questions administrators are expected to take into account when determining the items most likely to be removed from the budget.

One question, for example, asks how an increase in tuition would effect the student personally. If high tuition costs are upsetting to students on this campus, as they always are, the administration needs to know.

SU is a business meant to educate students yet still operate at a reasonably efficient cost. There will need to be cuts. The decision is left to the student body as to the future of the campus and the nature of the necessary cuts.

Take the two minutes necessary to fill out the survey and hand-deliver the completed form to either the SGA office, the middle of the Quad, or the Schine atrium. Student input has never been so vital. The decisions this student body makes will be the future of this university.

\section*{Bus ride suicide on Centro}

Do you want to kill yourself? Forget arsenic. razor biades, carbon monoxide. reruns of Thirtysomething, and all the other accepted methods of suicide.

Do it the right way - ride on a Centro bus traveling through South Campus on weekday mornings between 7 and 9 .

\section*{ORANGE} ORANGE OBSERVMIONS

Being crushed was never so much fun. so much fun.
Accorcing to the little sign by the door. the capacity or the Centro buses pacity of the Centro buses is \(" 44\) sitting, 22 standing."
But after ridings on the bus almost every day for three months, I ve concluded that the sign should actually read " 70 sitting. 900 standing. 40 on the roof. 10 in the wheed well and 10 in the driver's lap.

I don't expect luxury when I ride the bus. But I do expect some regard for human life.

It's not uncommon during one of these morning runs to see people standing on the back steps, people standing up by the driver, and people packed two-deep in the aisle.

If there was ever an accident, those people would be dead. If the bus hit another car, or would be dead. If the bus hit another car, or rolled over on its side. dozens of riders would rolled over

There have been numerous occasions while riding on a crowded bus when \(I\) started thinking about what would happen if the bus crashed. All I could picture was a mass of tangled limbs, broken glass and crushed bodies. I could imagine people piled on top of each other, unable to reach the emergency exits:
 would happen if the bus also caught fire. Can you say "barbecue?

This is neither outlandish nor alarmist. A bus accident is much more likely than a crazed murderer sneaking into Day Hall on Halloween.

Im sure that a headline like " 10 students Im sure that a headline like " 10 students killed in bus crash \(S \mathrm{U}\) is lookiner for.
SU is looking for.
Out of simple regard for student safety. the university and Centro should seriously consider doing something to alleviate the overcrowding. For starters, they could run more buses during the busiest times. This would probably do a lot to cut down on the number of passengers.
Sure, this might cost a little bit of money. But I think my life and the lives of my fellow students are worth it.
If mere student safety isn't enough of a concern to make university officials correct this problem, maybe they should think about it this way: For every student killed in a bus accident, the university loses about \($ 12,000\) in accident tuition.
If loss of life can't spur action, maybe loss of money can.

I, for one, would just like to be able to ride the bus without fearing for my life.

Syracuse University is facing one of the most critical times in its history. As the next few weeks go by, the university administration will be laying plans for over \($ 28\) million in budget cuts. It's very important that the students of S.U. realize the magnitude of what is happening and have a say in where the cuts are made. In a very short time, S.U. is going to be a very different school. The results of this survey will have a direct impact on the future of the university.
1. How do you view the following two statements about faculty members leaving the university?
I. The university should retain as many tenured professors as possible and reduce more sharply the number of untenured faculty. a) strongly disagree b) disagree c) agree d) strongly agree

Doug Hodge keeps busy behind the bax at the Orange Cafe on South Crouge Avenue. The bar hosts a large crowd for happy hour and special sporting events as well as regular evenings.

\section*{New dance bar opens on SU Hill Orange Cafe looks to attract sophisticated crowd}

By HUAN NGHIEM
Contributing Writer
Students looking for a fresh but familiar place to go during the week may want to give the Orange Cafe a try.
One of two new bars in the Marshall Street area this semester, the Orange Cafe is located at the corner of South Crouse Avenue and East Adams Street. It is the third bar/restaurant to occupy the space in four years.

The basic theme of the Orange Cafe is similar to the past restaurants'. The Orange Cafe seeks to provide a dance bar to a more upscale, mature crowd. However, assistant manager Matthew Knechtel said he feels the cafe will do better than its predecessors.
"We're a thousand times better than Murphy's," said Knechtel, who was critical of the former bar's condition.

Knechtel said he and Orange Cafe owner Ron Skalko were schooled in restaurant management.
"We try to do a little bit more professional job," Knechtel said. "You can get a consistent meal, get the same food, the same drink every time you came back."

According to Knechtel, the cafe differ-entiates itself from other bars on Marshall Street by its size.

Dance floor's hopping
"The dance foor is going to be a big key," Knechtel said. "Sutter's is the only other place with a dance floor, and it's not the brightest place. We're looking to go a little more upscale than Sutter's."
Knechtel also said the Orange Cafe has the largest sound system on the Syracuse University Hill.
In order to give the bar a friendlier atmosphere, Knechtel said plants and a new paint job were added to the decor. In addition, the cafe moved the deejay booth from the corner of the bar to a more central position in order to encourmore central position in orde.
"It seemed a lot of people like to interact with the DJ, talk to him," Knechtel said.

The cafe's size also makes it a good choice for special events, Knechtel said. "We can do a lot more with fraternities and sororities than (other bars) can," Knechtel said. "We get a lot of business that way.
The cafe has seating capacity for about 65 to 70 people, but has accommodated more than 120 for past events, according to Knechtel.
Knechtel said the 21 and over admittance policy is helpful in maintaining the cafe's aim at a more upscale group, but does not restrict the cafe financially,
"We are trying to get a better crowd." Knechtel said. "We want people to come in and not have freshmen spill beer on them and get obnoxious and start fights."
Theme night frenzy
Like other bars, the cafe also has theme nights during the week. Knechtel says the Orange Cafe's Monday Night Football has been a big success with \($ .15\) wings, a free buffet, as well as drink specials for fumbles, interceptions and an open bar if a player scores against his an open ba own team.
"We figure the odds are in our favor on that one," Knechtel said.

Under-age students are allowed in on Tuesdays. Wednesday is Miller night, and Thursday's theme is Molson Madness. Happy hour is from 4 to 7 p.m. every day.
During the day, Knechtel wants the cafe to be an alternative to some of the other eateries.
"Our basic theme is we're trying to do

For the Syracuse University women's basketball team, the offense has been centered around Holly Oslander, but this season the Orangewomen are looking for someone else to step forwaid

Oslander, the 6 -foot- 5 junior center. averaged 17.4 proints and 8.1 rebounds per game last season

The remainder of the front line was juggled due to injuries and was unable to produce enough points and rebounds which helped lead to SU's 7-21 overall record.

This season, SU coach Barbara Jacobs is looking for a forward to take some of the scoring burden off Oslander
"It will take a lot of pressure off Ho!ly." Jacobs said. "It will probably be easier for her to score if we had other people scoring because then they're going to have to defend those other people. Last year all they did was defend Holly." Shawn Ziemba, one of the four players Jacobs is considering using at the power forward position, said it will be critical for the forwards to score more.

I think it's going to be very important that one of us steps up and scores," Ziemba said. "Everybody's going to double and triple team Holly, so they're going to leave us wide open. If we hit a couple of shots and become a threat also. Holly will get open and score too.'

The Orangewomen are looking for a versatile player to complement Oslander, a preseason second team All-Big East selection.

We need someone who can come outside." Jacobs said. "Someone who can rebound. Eomeone who can pass and run yet, either.

Cetting rebounds from the forwards will be important for the Orangewomen. Last season Syracuse was outrebounded by an average of more than five boards

When people talk about endurance in basketball, they are usually talking about the stamina necessary to mun up and down the court for 40 minutes.

For last season's Syracuse University women's basketball team, however, endurance took on a whole new meaning.

The Orangewomen endured one of their worst seasons ever, finishing 7-21 during the \(1990-91\) season, which included a school-record I6-game losing streak and a last place finish in the Big East Conference.

Still, four wins in their last seven games and a late season victory over nationally ranked Rutgers University have given the Orangewomen some hope for this season.
"I think that the players have learned a great deal," SU coach Barbara Jacobs said. "They showed themselves and the coaching staft that they could endure a lot of things.

II say that, because at the end of the season we played and beat Rutgers who was then ranked 13th (in the country), and (the Orangewomen) fought through a losing streak where they could have just as easily said forget it. But, they idn't."
Syra
Syracuse was hard-hit by injuries last season, which forced some inexperienced players into some important roles.

When senior forward and co-captain Davita Smith went down early in the season with a knee injury. Exin Kenneally was forced to move from her guard position to small forward. Taneshia Welch also saw time at that position, while Karen Zajick moved into a starting role at point guard.

Angel Lewis, a highly touted freshman last year, also missed the season becauge of a knee iniupy.

Last year, we expected our:igäto players to be Holly (Oslander), Erin and Davita," Jacobs said. "Then, we lost Davita to injury and Erin had to move

"I'm a senior and have the most experience," Ziemba said. Experience s going to play a lot

Jacobs said ohe expects the power orward to crash the boards and average Gve to seven rebounds per game.

\section*{Center's season most memorable}

Big East foes now fear Oslander

By MIKE BUSH
Staff Writer
The 1990-91 Syracuse University women's basketball season was one that few associated with the squad would like few associated

But nobody can forget the season that center Holly Oslander had for the Orangewomen.

Oslander emerged as one of the dominant past players in the Big East, finishing league competition with a 18.1 points per game average, and a conference record 47 blocked shots.
Ostander also broke Martha Mogish's school records for points in a geason (469) and a single game (37). The 6 -foot-5 junior finished the year with 488 points and tallied 39 points against Boston College on Jan. 12.

Now established as a force in the conference, Oslander looks to solidify the team's chances in the league.

Last year. what she did was kind of take it upon herself to try and score a little bit too much," coach "Barbara Jacobs said. "I think now she has a much better understanding of what she needs to do to make not only herself better, but also the players around her.

The advantages of having a dominant center are numerous. But since the squad plans to play an up-tempo style this season. Oslander's ability to open up offensive opportunities for her teammates is vital.
"Holly allows us to be a double threat," guard Erin Kenneally said. "If one day our outside shooting is off, we can go inside. And if our inside game is off, we can go outside. She just really opens things up for us."
Last season. Oslander carried the team. Out of 28 games last year. she led the Orangewomen in scoring is times and rebounding 15 times.

With added depth at the guard spot this season, some pressure should be off Oslander.
"Obviously, you can't win with just one player." Oslander said. "We"re looking for more from the perimeter game this year so I can kick it back out."
Oslander took the league by surprise last season, coming off a freshman campaign with a 4.4 point per game. By season's end. she was named second team All-Big East and became a huge worry to Orangewomen opponents.

I think she was the dominant center in the league last year and I expect her to be the same this year." St. John's University coach Joe Mullaney said. "As far as a legitimate big center, I think Holly is a real go-to center.
Providence coach Bob Foley, who watched Oslander scorch his team for 33 points and seven boards on Jan. 1, agrees Oslander is a force to be reckoned with.
"I think she's the best post player in the Big East," Foley said. I have a lot of respect for her game.
Oslander finished the 1990-91 season with 17.4 points per garme and 8.1 rebounds per game averages and is closing in on a milestone as the 1901-92 campaign approaches.

Oslander should reach the 1000 -point plateau by the end of this season, a feat accomplished by only seven other Orangewomen. She is currently 396 points shy of the milestone.

Among those in admiration of Oslanders talent is Jacobs. The SU coach has son. . Gefot- 5 and as mobile as Holly is, there's nobody in the Big East that's as good as she is, nobody," Jacobs said. "If she's not picked as Big East Player of the Year, I'll be very disappointed." See CENTER Page 10

Syracuse University geniox guaxd Karen Zajick will be one of a trio of experienced guards lookimg to lead the Orangewomen back to an up-tempo style of play this season.
"Angel is a very, very good point guard," Jacobs said. are probably the best of the point guards we have right now."

While the guards may have all the toois to return to a nunning styie; the post players can have problems in an up-tempo style.

According tojunior center Holly Oslander, however, the frontcourt should have no problema playing an up-empo style.

> Oslander is the focal point of SU's frontcourt. She exploded last season, raising her scoring average from a freshman season total of 4.4 points per game to last season's 17.4 scoring clip.

Joining Oslander in the frontcourt will be senior Shawn Ziernba, sophomores Patrice Amos, Stacey Lewis and Cromwell was named a secondteam All Big East rookie, but according to Jacobs, Welch has been most impressive Right now, IVe been very. very pleased with Taneshia Welch." Jacobs said. "She came back into practice and has impressed all three of us coaches with her attitude and her hard work ethic."

But before any type of offense works, a team must be able to work together
"I don't think it's going to matter who starts because I think everybody will play." Jacobs said. "I think they will all have to play with the style we're trying to play this year."

Much to the dismay of Jacobs, Oslander was relegated to secondteam All-Big East status in the preseason coaches" poll

According to Oslander, being slighted for first-team honors will only make her work harder.
"They didn't expect me to do anything last year and 1 made second team." Oslander baid. So Ill just have to go out and prove myself.

Holly produced what we expected. We just expected a little bit more from the perimeter."
The 6-foot-5 Oslander was seventh in the Big Enst in both scoring and rebounding, averaging I8. 1 points per game and 8.6 boards in conference play. Her 47 blocked shots were a Bis East single-season record.

The Orangewomen also lost starting forward Cindy Pittner late in the season when she went down with a fracture in her right hand.
These injuries led to a lack of direction amongst the players.

There was something missing last year - a leader," naid sophomore Welch. "We needed a leader on the floor

Although Welch said seniors Zajick and Charisse Crouse have stepped forward this season, Jacobs said no one player has emerged ns leader at this point.
"No one's really stepped forward yet." Jacobs said. "I think once the games start, that will change. Our seniors have done an excellent job of setting great examples early in the season."

The Orangewormen's struggles could be attributed to their youth, but sophomare center Patrice Amos said youth wasn't the sole culprit.

Since we were a young team, a lot of people attributed the problems to being young," Amos Jacobs said there were early signs that last season might be a dificult one.

In the preseason Big East coachess poll, the Orangewomen weren't predicted to do much werenting They were picked to finish in a ninth place tie with Boston College.

SU hopes to prove the coaches wrong.
"We know what happened last year," Oslander said. "Too many of ug that are here now were here last year who experienced losing 21 games, and we just aren't going to let that happen again."

matches them with tutors. LVA recommends that students and tutors meet in a public place usually for one hour. twice a week.

After Newlon was matched with Al, she said, he dictated a "personal experience story" bout his family reunion and they read it over together, picking out the words he had trouble with and writing them down.
"From the story we pulled words he recognized and used thern as sight words." Newlon said. "From those words we built word patterns and then learned phonics. Each student learns differently, though, and what works for Al may not work for someone else."
Pease said LVA concentrated on word patterns. If a student recognizes the word "came," for example, the tutor can then build the words "fame" and "tame" on it. From there the tutors use worksheets and short stories to build up the student's word recognition and reading ability.
"Al has read stories out of Reader's Digest, eight to 10 stories out of another book and a newspaper for adult new readers," Newlon said.

Newlon asked, as she turned to him with a smile and tapped him on the arm, "Remember that Frederick Douglass story 1 read to you when we first started working together? I bet you could read that now."
Al, remembering the story, grinned slowly
"Yes I think I could" he said simply. "I'd like to read that book on Frederick Douglass some day. I like him."

that. We're weak in that spot right now."

The Orangewomen are looking at Ziemba, sophomore Patrice Amos, junior transfer Rhonda Boyd and sophomore Stacey Lewis as power forwards.
"We've got four people that we can rotate around until I can find the person who can do the, job that day," Jacobs said.

Amos served mainly as a back-up center last season, averaging 1.2 points and 2.8 rebounds in 10.2 minutes.
"I think Patrice came in and contributed a lot last year," Ziemba said. "I see a lot of improvement in Patrice from last season to this year. I see her contributing a lot to this team."
Ziemba started 11 games last season and averaged 4.9 points and four rebounds in 19.3 minutes.
Jacobs said the key to Ziemba's success is a greater degree of consistency
"She's got the tools," Jacobs said. "She's just not a consistent player. Until she can control her emotions and be a consisher emotions and be a consistent player, tough for us to depend on her."
tough for us to depend on her.
Ziemba said being consistent isn't a problem exclusive to her.:
"The game's 40 minutes," Ziemba said. "I just have to play hard for 40 minutes. We all need to work on our consistency."

Consistency is also a concern at the small forward position. where the picture is much clearer:
Sophomore Taneshia Welch, SU's leading scorer oft the bench last season, is expected to start at the three spot.
"Offensively, she needs to be more consistent," Jacobs said. "Some games she came in and banged down shots for us and went hard, but I think that was just a freshman thing. When you're a freshman and just learning. you are an inconsistent player. She's come back with a vengeance."

Welch made the final cut at the U.S. Oiympic Festival, which Jacobs said should help her confidence.

Welch was suspended for disciplinary reasons and will not

We try to go for a \($ 5\) lunch. Our kitchen has only been open'for a couple of weeks, and we're trying to iron out the kinks. But every day it's getting better and better."

Knechtel admits there has been an identity confusion be-play in the Orangewomen's first play in the Orangewomen's first game, an exhibition against Kosice, a Czechoslovakian team, on Nov. 14. Nov. 14 Welch will be tested by freshman Melaynie Cromwell, a second team All-Big East rookie selection.

Cromwell averaged 25.5 points and 8.7 rebounds during her cause of the name.
"There's a big problem there. It's really unfortunate now there's three bars with the name orange in them: the Orange Grove, the Olive and the Orange, and here," Knechtel said. "It'll take some time before people get to know us, but I think people will overcome that."

Knechtel also said the recession has had an impact on the establishments in the area, including the Orange Cafe.
"We"ve-talked to a couple of senior year at Wheaton (Md:) High School and amassed 1,435 career points.
"Taneshia and I are competing very hard at that spot," Cromweil said at very hat spot, Cromwe and said. She's pushing me and I'm pushing her. Were working together and that's the main thing.

Cromwell's impact will depend on the Orangewomen's style of play, Jacobs said.
"If we run and press like we want to, she'll get time - a lot of time," Jacobs said. "If we have to go into the slow style of play, the doesn't fit that."

If the Orangewomen play the style of play they want to, it style of play they want to, it

\section*{By KIM MICHALSK \\ Contributing Writer}

The tall, lanky man, dressed in brown jeans and a rust-colored button-down shirt, grinned widely as he approached the table in the middle of the fiction section of Beauchamp Library in Syracuse.
"Hi Joanie," he said to the woman already seated at the small wooden table as he slid into the chair next to her.

Al, who is 63 years old, is going back to school - to learn how to read.

Al is learning to read through Literacy Volunteers of America Inc. (LVA). Joan Newlon, a secretary at the Syracuse affiliate of the organization, located on the second floor of the library, has been tutoring Al since last May. The LVA national headquarters are in DeWitt.
"I've never had any really bad experiences - you know, dangerous experiences - not being able to read," he explained as he shrugged off his coat and laid his he explained as he shrugged of his coat and laid his "Other people I know had times when it was dancerous "Other people Iknow had times when it was dangerous that they didn't know how to read Don't Stand Here, No Smoking."

\section*{Each day brings challenges}

Everyday routines, which are not dangerous and which most would take for granted, such as filling out an employment application, using road signs to find an unfamiliar place, ordering from a menu or reading a newspaper can often be scary and frustrating to people who cannot read

According to a 1982 U.S. Census Bureau study, the most recent statistics available, there are between 17 most recent statistics available, there are between 17 million and 21 million adults who cannot read at all million and 21 million adults who cannot read at all or read below the fourth grade level. And the numbers are increasing
"I was at the bank once, and the lady wouldn't fill out the, you know ... what do you call it?" Al asked. turning to Newlon. "Right, that's it - the withdrawal slip. And one time I was at the state unemployment office, and they wouldn't fill out the forms for me. That made me feel bad.

Both experiences were uncomfortable for Al at the time, but he remembered each of them without embarrassment or fear Newlon, seated on his left, listened to both stories with a small smile on her face.

"Al is unique because he is not afraid to talk about his experiences of not being able to read," she said. "H is not ashamed, and that is a very different attitude than most adults. Most adults are ashamed of not being able to read."

\section*{Practicing subterfuge}

In fact, many adults who cannot read or have difficulty reading anything more than a few basic words go to great lengths to appear as though they can read - often carrying a newspaper or magazine around with them.
"Illiteracy is usually called an invisible handicap. because most adults who cannot read are very skilled at covering up their inability," said Terry Pease, a former basic reading administrator for the Syracuse affiliate of LVA. "Many adults hide the fact that they can't read or have trouble reading, because they are ashamed."
Pease said one student who she tutored two years ago lived in the suburbs, and "no one would ever suspect that she had a problem reading." She came to LVA because she was not able to help her children with their reading and homework, Pease said.
For one in five American adults - 20 percent of all For one in five American adults - 20 percent of all adults in this nation - this sentence as well as this entire article could very well be written in a foreign language.
According to the figures from the 1980 Census, about 2.2 million people are added to the adult illiterate population every year.
A functionally illiterate adult is unable to use reading, speaking, writing and computation in day-today life.

The numbers for Onondaga County are slightly lower than national statistics, Newlon said. There are about 46,000 illiterate adults in the county, which is about 10 percent of the population, she said. These numbers are based on the last census.

\section*{Problem knows no boundaries}

Illiteracy cuts across all ages, races, ethnic groups, income levels and educational levels. The majority of LVA students are white, and 45 percent are unemployed.

Compared with white adults, a higher percentage of black and Hispanic adults are functionally illiterate.

However, the actual number of white "non-readers" is double the number of black and Hispanic nonreaders.

Pease emphasized there was no single reason, no one cause on which to place the blame. for the growing numbers of functionally illiterate adults in the country.
All non-readers have individual reasons for why they did not learn to read.
Many adults did not receive the individual attention they needed in school when they were slower than most to grasp reading skills, she explained.
Some, as was the case of a woman who Pease tutored for one and a half years, had health problems when for one and a half years, had health problems when they were younger. Some adults came to America from they were younger. Some adults came to America from another country. Some left school early to work in order to earn a living.
Al's story
"I was born in Georgia," AI explained. "We had a large farnily - nine boys, two giris. Most of the time, I had to work. You have to understand, I don't have anything against my education or against my growing up. I had to help my famity out. That's just the way it was."
Al said he was 22 when he left home and came to Syracuse to work as a linen recorder at what was then Syracuse University Hospital. He started working as a Syracuse University Hospital. He started working as a heavy-duty crane operator for Crucible Steel in 1951. He retired two years ago.

His wife "talked him into signing up," he said, and he is glad that he did. His wife is able to read, he added. "It is one of the best things to do ... to learn how to read ... It's one of the best things that ever happened to me," he said. "Everybody that don't know how to read, you know, is missing a lot. It's nothing to be afraid of. Some of us didn't have the chance when we were younger. I don't have anything to be ashamed of at all."
Smiling shyly while glancing at Newlon out of the corner of his eye, Al asked if the interviewer wanted to see his notebook. Beside him, Newlon smiled again, happy that his attitude is so positive.
Always progressing
As Al slowly and patiently turned the pages. filled with the worksheets and exercises he had completed with his neat printing, Newlon explained the process LVA uses to teach adults to read.
"Al's made great progress," she said before she began to explain. "I didn't realize how much we've done since May:"
When students come to LVA, she explained, they take the READ (Reading Evaluation Adult Diagnosis)

\section*{Committee recommends faculty input in athletics}

By KENT FISCHER
Sports Enfitor
A committee of six faculty members issued a nine-point report Monday which recommended more faculty input in the athletics program at Syracuse University.
The Faculty Oversight Committee (FOC) issued its report to Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw Nov. 1, but the contents of that report were not made public until Monday.
The FOC, instituted by former Chancellor Melvin A. Eggers last spring, was formed in response to the internal investigation of alleged wrongdoings in the SU basketball program.
Both Shaw and the committee stated, however that the report is in no way related to the current investigation.
"(These) are a series of proposals on academic and other arrangements which are not related to the allegations concerning the basketball program or the report of the university's internal investigation of these allegations," the report said.
The FOC, rather, will remain a permanent body which will participate in the annual review of the SU athletic departinent.
Among the nine concerns raised in the report, the committee proposed new academic eligibility requirements for student-athletes.

Athletes would be required to conlinue to meet current NCAA academic stindards as well as the requirements of their home colleges.

\section*{Maintaining 2.0}

In addition, student-athletes would also have to maintain a minimum grade point average of 2.0 at the beginning of their third academic year. SU's current GPA policy is set by each athlete's school.
The report also recommended SU bolster the number of minimum credit hours an athlete must complete each

\section*{Excerpts from committee report}

The following are excerpts from the Faculty Oversight Committee's report issued to Syracuse University Chancellor issued to Syracuse University

The Faculty Oversight Committee proposes that a committere on athletic concerns become a permanent part of the review of SU's athletic programs.

The new FOC will have ass its central concern academic standards but will also be involved in other matters pertaining to the conduct of intercollegiate athletics at SU.
- The FOC will conduct yearly reviews of the academic records of individual student-athletes at Syracuse.
- In addition to meeting mandated NCAA standards and applicable requirements by individual schools and colleges at the university, each studentathlete entering a third year at college would be required to maintain a minjmurn grade point average of 2.0 at the beginning of each regular academic year to be eligible to practice and play. Student-athletes entering their third semester at SU would be required to complete at least 27 hours of course work each year.
- Each student-athlete in the final year of eligibility to compete on an SU team must complete at least 12 hours in the fall semester to be eligible to practice play in the spring.
The FOC proposes that arrangements should be made to ensure that every student-athlete is involved in regular institutional orientation and advising programs. Similarly, the academic advis ingarrangements at Manley Field House ingarrangements at Manley Field House Athletes entering their final year of eligibility would be required to complete a minimum of 12 credit hours in the semester preceding the athlete's final season.

"We want to ensure that they have a legitimate shot of fulfilling their degree and can be student-athletes in every sense of the word," Shaw said at a press conference. "These new standards are over and above what regular students are required to do."
The FOC report also made amendments to admission policies for studentathletes.
Under the new plan, borderline or questionable applicants would have their high school GPAs and SAT scores forwarded to a proposed faculty athletics representative. Afer reviewing the ap* plicants' transcripts, the representative would meet with the dean of admissions to help shape admission decisions Cornmittee Chairman David H. Ben nett said the reforms stem from a greater need for faculty and academic inpat into the decisions of the athletic department.

There is an age of reform sweeping collegiate athletics." Bennett said. "It is important for the faculty to be part of this reform The faculty and the commuhity seform should both have a key voice here to have a unique opportunity as experi Wo have a unique opportunity as experineed faculty where athietics and aca environment where athletics and aca* demics

Bennett added that the committec hopes that its proposals will be adopted by other universities that face similar conflicts between athletic and academic departments.

We shaped and crafted our proposals here to serve not only our own institu ional community, but other communi. ties as well," Bennett said
- The committer notes the importance of faculty involvement in the early stages of every student-athlete's experience at SII, and recommends the continuation of the presentations made by proposed faculty athletics representatives at the organizational meetings conducted through the athletic department.
- The FOC endorses the chancellor's decision 20 make public information concerning the SU athletic budget. - The committee endorses many parts of the restructuring effort within the athletic department and approves the enlarged role of the internal audit department in serving as one external agency for reviewing compliance. The FOC proposes the creation of another group tu be involved in this compliance structure.

\section*{Secret Chinese script strengthened women}

By LAURA HARDING
Staff Writer
Between 600 and 700 years ago, women in a small village in southern China began using a separate script and language to communicate with one another, Syracuse University graduate student Fei Wen Lui said.

The exact date when the script was started and why it began is difficult to trace. Lui said.
"When a woman using the secret script died, her writings had to be burned with her to accompany her in the hereafter," she said Friday at the Women's Friday Series.

A possible reason for the start of the female script in China relates to the martiage of women into the palace as a servant, Lui said.

A woman was married into the palace as a concubine iservant) and was lonely and missed her family, whom she couldn't communicate with because of palace rules," she said.

In the palace system, women were not allowed to communi cate outside of the palace without special permission. she said.

The secret script
"This woman began the script to secretly speak with her family and friends." Lai said.

Another possibility in the formation of the script was that the woman's brother, an officer in the patace, produced the script for her, she said.

The language may have also formed because women were not allowed to receive education and

Fei-Wen Lui
learn the Chinese language after China unified, so they retained their old village dialect. Lui said

The female script is similar o the official Chinese script because both are written from top to bottom and read from right to left, Lui said.

The main difference in both anguages and scripts is that the Chinese script is square and the female is in more of a rhomboid shape," she said.

In the Chinese script, 90 percent of the characters need more than nine brush strokes o make a character Lui said The female script has only 36 percent of its characters using nany strokes
"In the official Chinese language there are 7.000 ordinary characters, but the female script uses only 400 characters." she said.

The female seript can use only 400 characters because it uses the same characters for many different meanings, she said.

Syracuse University's 10th chancellor last Friday. Taking the podium, the chancellor spoke of the importance of quality, caring, diversity, innovation and service to the campus community.

It is especially appropriate during Celebrate Difference Week to focus on caring and diversity. We're fortunate that students come to SU from a variety of backgrounds, bringing their culture and their beliefs to our campus. For many, coming to SU is their first time living away from home. It also represents for many students their initial opportunity to interact as part of a culturally diverse community.

It is up to today's student to break this cycle, not only in the near future with his or her vote, but in the years to come through the action each of us will take in our own communities upon graduation.

We welcome Chancellor Shaw's recognition that a quality experience at SU is not limited to the institution's innovation and service. Enlightenment flows from many streams but they converge with the realization of our common humanity.

Each of us have become part of SU because of our previous experiences. We will spend a number of years together and then move on to pursue individual futures. Whateverourdestinations, a respect for others and a willingness to entertain points of view that differ from ours will serve us well.

As Johnson noted, the one glaring positive point taken from the tragedy will be heightened awareness about ADDS and ADDS-related illnesses. Although the amount of public information services regarding AIDS has drastically increased during the past seven years ignorance still pervades the minds of many Americans. No heterosexual of this stature has ever admitted, at least publicly, to con tracting the virus. Although the value of Magic Johnson to society was quite substantial before this tragedy, his value now will simply be incalculable.

The ROTC policy is one that affects many of the students here at Syracuse University
The ROTC policy states that The ROTC policy states that "homosexuality is incompatible with military service." This statement contradicts SU's policy of nom-discrimination. The Board of Trustees Ad Hoc Committee clearly stated: " not to be discriminated against by any agent or organization of SU for reasons of age; creed ethnic or national origin, gender, disability, marital status, political or social affiliation, race, religion or sexual orientation." This statement clearly opposes what ROTC is trying to enforce. The Student Government Association, Students Affairs Committee will be addressing this issue on Nov. 12 at 7 p.m. in Maxwell Auditorium. This is a growing issue here on campus and we would like to invite anyone in the student body to attend and express their views on this important issue. The ROTC's policy has been debated in many schools nationwide. Some have lost their ROTC programs already, affecting the student body as a whole. This is a growing and important issue and if you have anything to say about it, now is the time.

To the editor:
We would like to respond with some facts and suggestions to Joan E. Bardeen's editorial, which was published in the Nov. 6 issue of The Daily Orange, on the use of synthetic furs and animal rights.
First I want to suggest and encourage that Ms. Bardeen explore the many facets of (an) issue" before submitting her opinion to a public newspaper, as she asked animal rights activists to do before taking action in her letter to the editor on Nov. 6 It upsets me to know that many people read and believed the statements in her article without any further questioning.

Ms. Bardeen also mentioned the accepted notion that animals have always served mankind. I would like to respond to this with one quote that sums up my feelings: "The greatness of a nation and its moral progress can be judged by the way its animals are treated ... I hold that, the more helpless a creature, the more helpless a creature, the (Dr Charles Mayo, Founder, Mayo Clinic, Quoted in the New York Dsily News, March 13, 1961) It doesn't take a degree in biology to know the anatomy of a mouse is very different from that of a human.

The allegation that animal rights activists spray paint fur coats is ridiculous and an exceptionally rare occurrence Animal rights groups discourage such violent acts, and only promote peaceful demonstrations.
The truth is that the fashion of wearing a fur does not justify the cruelty and suffering inflicted on the animal. One last thing you may want to think about, Ms. Bardeen: if you love animals called "pets," why do you eat animals called "dinner?"

Small doses of aspirin may help weak hearts
A daily intake of aspirin might be beneficial to heart attack and stroke survivors, but a little goes a long way. A new study published in a recent New England Journal of Medicine showed that patients who had suffered mild strokes benefitted by taking as little as 30 milligrams of ing as little as 30 milligrarns of These patients experienced fewer stomach problems and fewer bleeding complications than those who took 283 milligrams a day. An average aspirin contains 325 milligrams.

Earlier studies have indicated that taking an aspirin every other day can cut back on the risk of heart attacks.

Researchers suspect this informa tion will lead to more in-depth studies on the medical benefits of aspirin.

In related news, a study released yesterday by the American Medical Association said short people are more likely to have heart attacks.

This is related to the fact that their lungs are smaller and may not work as efficiently as lungs in taller people.

Holden Observatory settles into its new home on the hill next to Crouse College.

\section*{When you wish upon a star} Venerable building endures changes on campus

\section*{By S. OMAR ALI \\ Design Editor}

When Donna Thomas goes to work every morning, she enters an office which, from the inside, appears to be like any other at Syracuse University.

Thomas' office, however, sits in the heart of the second oldest building at SU - Holden Observatory.
"It's neat to work in a building that has served a wide variety of purposes graduated from SU in 1985 . "When I was a student at the university, Holden was a student at the university, Holden housed the University Events and Inforhoused the University Events and Information Office as well as the Office of Orientation Programs."

That was during the pre-Schine Student Center era.

Currently, the observatory is home to the Undergraduate Research Program and the Soling Prograrn.

In 1887, however, Chancellor Charles N. Sims had other plans for the proposed observatory to be situated on "science hill:"
According to his dedication addiress for the observatory, Sims hoped the observatory would bring the developing school tory would bring the developing school to the forefront of science education.

Search for funds
But just as financial dilemmas face Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw today, Sims lacked the funds to get the observatory project off the ground - and observing the stars.

Erastus F. Holden was to be his answer.
Holden, a Syracuse coal dealer and later a member of the university's board of trustees, established a \($ 25,000\) endowment for the construction and upkeep of the observatory, to be named in memory of his son, Charles Demorest Holden.

Charles Holden had been a member of the Class of 1877 . The Syracuse community was stunned when he died of a heart ailment, according to description in the 1887 Onondagan.

A star baseball player for the university, Charles Holden was also a cofounder of the SU crew team
"If (the observatory) shall help any boy to learn something of the laws which govern the movernents of the worlds about us; if only one Onondaga Hill boy who will study there will learn those great facts or will take any special interest in them, I shall be more than repaid," Erastus Holden said at the dedication.
And indeed it did.
Construction of the 320 -ton observatory began without delay. Designed by architect Achimedes Russel, who later would design the Tolley Administration building and Crouse College, the observatory was constructed of Onondaga limestone with walls two feet thick.

According to the Onondagan, Russel fashioned the walls of the observatory after the sixth-century Tomb of Theodoric, emperor of the Ostrogothic Kingdom, which existed immediately after the fall of the Roman Empire.

\section*{Cause for celebration}

Included in the original design was the 30 -foot observation tower, topped by a wooden dome overlaid with metal.

On Nov. 18, 1887, classes were canceled to celebrate the dedication of the observatory. Astronomer Simon Newcomb spoke to a gathering of students and faculty in nearby Hall of Languages on "The Place of Astronomy in the Sciences."

At its completion, there were only 22 other observatories in the United States, including the National Naval Observatory in Washington, D.C.

Building an observatory for educational purposes was not an unusual idea at the time. Decades earlier, Womas Jefferson had constructed one for the institution he founded, the University of Virginia.

During its early days, Holden was used for research. particularly in meteused for research, particularly in mete orology and physics. Its telescope played a role in time-keeping. which many abservatories such as the National Maritime Observatory in Greenwich, England, were designed to do.

Tools for star-gazing
Most of the original equipment, with the exception of the telescope, was installed before the dedication in 1887
This equipment included a three-inch reversible transittelescope, chronograph, chronometer and other meteorological instruments.

The instruments were housed in the observatory's lower rooms, which included a classroom for up to 19 students. The basement, which today is accessible only through a trap door, was used for the storage of equipment, particularly batteries.
An eight-inch refractor telescrne was

But to achieve benefits such as improved cardiovascular fitness and efficiency in fat burning. John Smith and his Mayflower buddies would have had to take three components of aerobics into consideration.

These are frequency, intensity and duration.

To achieve aerobic results, the frequency of exercise should amount to at least three times a week.

According to Barb Holtzhauer, aerobics director at Pine Grove Country Club in Camillus, any less exercise than three times a less exercise than three turs.
week will not obtain results.
Beek will not obtain results. aerobics more than five times a week unless you can keep this pace.

She said many people "plateau" after more than five times a week - they fail to see any móre results.

Enter: Cross training
That's where cross training or strength training jumps in. Strength or resistance training tones muscles.

These forms of training offer "the best of everything," Holtzhauer said. The increase in lean body mass and cardiovascular fitness are attributed to cross training
The second component, intensity of the workout, should be done at 60 percent to 80 percent of the maximum heart rate.

Holtzhauer says 60 percent is the most emicient level at which fats are burned.
A heart rate that is too high involvesanaerobicactivity, which burns carbohydrates, not fats, like gravy on mashed potatoes. Bummer.
That's why high-impact aerobies may be "a contradiction in terms" for some people, Holtzhauer said.

Holtzhauer said this form is beneficial for people with a high fitness level.

The third component, duration, has sweated it out in debate.

Some instructors argue 15 minutes of aerobic activity is enough, while others argue for 20.

Holtzhauer said she tries to keep her classes going for a little more than 30 minutes. since it takes time to get into the aerobic phase of exercise.

But there might be a fourth component: moderation.
Hotzhauer said her clients who want miracles in a short period of time drop out of aerobic classes.

Reaping the harvest of aerobic benefits involves a recipe of moderation, diet, patience and serious commitment.

After mixing these with the three components of aerobics. you deserve to be a little pilgrim - in moderation.

Procrastination and fear are two of the main problems students face when trying to find a job at the end of their senior year, according to Lynn Vanderhoek, a new Syracuse University adviser on carcer opportunities.

Vanderhoek, Newhouse Career Development and Alumni Relations director, has held her position since Oct. 21, but said in a recent interview that being new enables her to educate students about "the cold, hard facts of reality."

Vanderhoek said her job is to "pull together resources to give students the skills and confidence they need to get not only their first job but their second and third jobs as well."

But Vanderhoek emphasized her job is not to find positions for students.

I have found most students looking for work in the communications industry to be creative. This creativity will be key to operating an effective job search.

One of the things commu nications employers look for in a candidate is internship or student organization experience. It is crucial to gain this experience as soon as possible.

Find out what the student organizations are for the field of communications you enjoy and join them. There are Syracuse University student groups for all the communications industries, and most of them are affiliated with a national association.

Once you are active in the student chapter, you can attend national conferences for this organization. These conferences will allow you to meet professionals and build your network of contacts.

You can arrange an internship through the Community Internship Program (CIP) in Room 313 of Huntington Hall. In addition, many students call a company directly to inquire about internship opportunities.

The Newhouse School of Public Communications has a resource center. located in Room 24 of Newhouse I, that receives many trade magacines and newspapers.

You can find trade magaaines like Advertising Age, Multichannel News, Shutterbug, PR Jotirnal, Publishing News and American Film. Many other industry magaines are available to aid you in your job search.

Studerits should read through these magazines to gather names of professionals who can be contacted for an informational interview. In addition, you can read up on the current trends and types of jobs in the field.

the second time this season and snapping a five game losing steak. The match, which went a grueling five games, culminated in an 18-16 game victory.
"We gave Rhode Island all the opportunities to win the match, but we were just going to win it." Schulte said. "We didn't just fold up and quit. It was a big win and a good fight."

The Orangewomen received no rest in the finpl game of the weekend versus the Aggies. SU was forced to play its second five game match of the afternoon. and this time a tired Orangewomen team could not muster a win, losing 15-12, 15-6. 11-15. 11-15, 15-12.
"We had just played a three hour match with Rhode Island, and three hours later we're in a five game match with A&M," Schulte said. "If it was the (SU) team that had played against West Virginia, we would have packed it up, lost and gone home. But they really stuck in there and lost a tough one in the fifth game, but we showed a lot of character."

The weekend competition allowed the Orangewomen to continue to work on their defensive alignments, an area Schulte said the team has been focusing on all year.

"We continued to work with Debbie Bennet and Annie Parisien." Schulte said. "After playing with it this weekend think we've developed a modification on our lineup, using Debbie and Annie, that should work well."

Offensively, Schulte said that the team played "overall. pretty well" over the weekend. Seniors Parisien and Andrea Carson once again led the Orangewomen offensively.

I think it came down to who got the luckier break," Parker said. "And they snatched it."
The luck factor made this tournament different than ones in years past, according to SU midfielder Heather Jagelski.
"It was much easier to handie this year than it was last year." Jagelski sait. "We didn't have luck with us."

After eliminating the Orangewomen. the Lady Friars capped their weekend by capturing the conference title.

On Sunday they posted a 1.0 overtime win over the 15thranked University of Connecticut (10-8-3 and 4-1). Earlier. top-seeded Connecticut beat defending champion and fourth.

Parisien led the team in kills for the tournament with 51 , while Carson recorded a team high 47 digs over three matches. Carson was the sole Orangewomen named to the alltournament team.
"We played three very tough matches," Schulte said. "We tried some new things that worked well and I think that our team chemistry has been strengthened to where we can play at a higher level."

Yvonne Milionis and Kell Larkin scored the Orangewomen's goals on Saturday. Both players end their SU career tied for the all-time scoring lead with 52 points.

Parker said the team had opportunities to win the game, but were unable to capitalize.
"It was a good game." she said. "We had some chances. We missed a penalty stroke in the first half that might have not sent the game into overtime."

Still. Jagelski said. it didn't seem like the team conild corntrol the outcome.
"We did everything humanly possible." she said. "It just wasn't meant to be.

The most familiar of the four, however, may be Edsall. He is a former SUJ player and was a member of the Syracuse coaching stalf from \(1980-90\) before leaving when Dick MacPherson departed in January.

Edsall had coached the SUI secondary and running backs as well as served as recruiting coordinator.
"Randy was here for so long," Pasqualoni said. "He's coached on both sides of the ball. They're on both sides of the ball. They re going to know exactly wh do and force us to execute.
"They have the entire system - how we call things, the whole deal, what we do and what we try to do. 'That's going to be a big advantage for BC without. question.

The Eagles have also had an opportunity to watch the Orangermen on film earlier in the season. Twice this season. BC has played an SU opponent only a week after Syracuse. The Eagles faced Temple University last week and the University of Pittsburgh a week after SU beat the Panthers 31-27, on Oct. 20.
"They had those two weeks when they were breaking our film dowr and getting an good look at us," Pasqualoni said. I'm sure they are very aware of our personnel and what were doing and are right up on it.
Combine that with the fact that Fandy's there (and) the playbook is probably out there

Despite the great degree of familiarity, Pasqualoni said he doesn't anticipate any changes.

Sometimes when you change, you foul yourself up." Pasqualoni said. "We're not going to change anything. We're just going to go into the game and try to be prepared to play."

\section*{Brief bowis}

Syracuse is still being pursued by the Blockbuster and Hall of Fame Bowls, but the team has yet to have a meeting to discusa post-season plans.

Pasqualoni had a 10 -minute meeting with the seniors to discuss the bowl situation.
"We spent 10 minutes to reaffirm that the kids are very interested in going to a bowl," Pasqualoni said. "They would like to participate against the like to participate against the highest-ranked team they could play.

Cigarettes arent good for Your friends. Aulopt a friend who smokes and help 'em quit today. You'u both be glad tomorrow.

That was the discussion. It lasted 10 minutes and that's the end of it. They don't know anymore than you do."
Bowl bids can be officially Bowl bids can be officially announced on Sunday. Nov. 17 announced on Sunday. Nov. 17 at 3 p.m. Pasqualoni alid no plans have been made for the team to meet at that time.

Should a meeting be necessary. Pasqualoni said "it would only take a phone call.
Time heals SU's wounds
Last week'a open date gave the Orangermen a chance to rest and heal, something they greatly needed.

Syracuse had played nine consecutive games without a consecu break.
"I think our players enjoyed the couple of days off." Pasqualoni said. "Froms bumps and bruises standpoint, we 11 go in as good a shape as we ve been in for a long time.
The injury list has been dra matically cut down. Outside tinebacker Jo to Wooden is listed as questionable for Satur. day's game. Pasqualoni said Wooden will be evaluated on a day-torday basis to determine his availability for BC.

Wooden sumpred a partial tear of the parterior ertrciate ligament in his left knee against East Carolina and has missed the last three games.
Back so soon?
With Wooden's possible reCum, only inside limebacker Dan Conley is left on the injury list. Conley tore the anterior cruciate ligarment in his right knee in the second game of the season agninst the Unjwersity of Maryland and was lost for the remainder of the season.
"I told him I hope we see him on the field on Saturday," Pasqualoni joked. "He told me not to worry. If he wasn't back this week, he*d be back for West this week.
Virginia."

Conley has continued to rehatbilitate since a Sept. 15 knee reconstruction and is already off his crutches.
"He's doing freat." Pasqualoni said. "He's right on schedule. He'll rehab from now until next August and be ready for the preseason."

\section*{No 'Bull' about Chicago this season}

In case any of you were sleeping under a rock, the National Basketball Association season has begun.

Although most teams are at least five games into their schedule, it doesn't really matter. The NBA has become hockey-like anyway with 16 of the leagues 27 teams making the playoffs.

\section*{BARNETT}

SPORTS

\section*{OPINION}

The regular season wont matter very much this year. You can start with last season's conferencefi-nalists and really don't have to look any farther.
The Chicago Bulls and the Portland Trailblazers will clash come June.

The Trailblazers were beaten in the Western conference finals last season by the Lakers, but they should come back strong.

The Bulls have the NBA's premier star in Michael Jordan and last year proved they have the supporting cast to match.

Scottie Pippen, Horace Grant, Bill Cartwright and John Paxson all form a cohesive package.

Grant and Jordan apparently had a little argument in the preseason and that may be their Achilles heel. The only thing which can kill the Bulls chances are the Bulls themselves.

The Trailblazers have struggled at 3-3 thus far, but little fine tuning from Kick Adelman should put them back on the right track.

Portland has been building for several years and will finally reach the threshold until they face Chicago.

The excitement of NBA basketball will go on throughout the winter, but once it turns spring, mark down the once it turns \(s p\)
Bulls to repeat.
Since that's settled, how about the NBA Awards for 1991-92
- Most Valuable Player: Clyde Drexler, Portland Trailblazers. The obvious choice is Jordan, but why not go out on a limb. Drexler has the ability to be the Portland's go-to man, score and fill the lanes on the break.
- Rookie of the Year- Billy Owens, Golden State. With the Warriors lack of height, Owens versatility at the power forward spot should lead him to superstardom. He can run the floor, score, pass and rebound. Once he gets into better playing shape and becomes acclimated to the rigors of the NBA, he has the potential to make the most impact of this year's NBA rookie class.
-Coach of the Year: Mike Dunleavy, Los Angeles Lakers. Dunleavy is faced with a situation no other coach has with a situation no other gone through. Without Magic Johnson, the burden falls on DunJohnson, the burden falls on Dunleavy to try and keep this team together. A heavier burden may fall on point guard Sedale Threatt, who is now faced with running showtime. The Lakers should finish strong and anything close to a reasonable record should get Dunleavy this award.
- Most Improved Team: Los Angeles Clippers. People have been waiting for the Clippers and their flock of No. 1 draft picks to come together. This should be the year they move from cellar dwellers to moderate respectability.

\section*{sU tournament loss compounded by NCAA snub}

By GIL PAGOVICH
Slatif Writer
The Syracuse University field hockey team was disappointed when they left the field Saturday.

Not only because the second-seeded Orangewomen were eliminated in the opening round of the Big East Tourna ment by No. 3 seed Providence College \(3-2\) in overtime, but because the loss probably meant they wouldn't be invited to the NCAA tournament.

On Monday, when the seedings were announced, the 11 th-ranked Orangewomen's fears became reality.

For the second straight year. Syracuse, who finished the season at 11-4-1 overall and 3-1-1 Big East, was denied an invitation to the NCAA tournament, something which was difficult to comprehend for coach Kathleen Parker.
"It doesn't feel very good," Parker said. "I feel we"ve been overlooked two years in a row."

No Big East team was invited to the twelve team tournament which begins on Thursday.

Parker said circumstance was a big factor in the loss to the 20 th-ranked Lady Friars (12-8-2 and 5-1-1), this past

Syracuse University midfielder Denine Groff, shown in action earlier this season, and the Orangewomen lost to Providence College, 3-2, in the first round of the Big East Tournament on Saturday. The loss ended SU's season as the Orangewomen failed to secure a berth in the NCAA tournament.

\section*{Alumni access proposal under consideration}

\section*{By JEREMY FREEMAN}

Contributing Writer
A proposal to allow alumni to use some Syracuse University athletic facilities was withdrawn until the Office of Recreation Services can ensure students, faculty and the administration that overcrowding will not occur, said Nicklaus J. Wetter. director of recreation services.

The office submitted the proposal in April, but has since dropped the plan following resistance from members of the Student Government Association, he said.

The proposal stated that alumni should be permitted to use Flanagan Gymnasium, Archbold Gymnasium and the Women's Building for recreation, he said. Alumni interested in using the facilities on a daily basis would pay a seasonal or annual fee.

The income generated by the program would be used by recreation services to improve and expand facilities, he said.

Wetter said the proposal was unnecessary until the card access system was installed.
"There has never been a school policy allowing alumni to use the athletic facilities; however, they managed to find a way to do so anyway," Wetter said.

\section*{Safer buildings}
"The buildings are significantly more secure than they were a year ago, and as a consequence of preventing the entry of thieves and vandals, alumni who have of thieves and vandals, alumni who have grown accustomed to using school faciliies are no longer able to." he said.
Alumni are permitted to use the facilities as guests up to four times a semester, he said.
Wetter said he feels that alumni should be able to use the facilities; however, student concerns about overcrowding are legitimate.
"The proposal was a victim of bad timing," Wetter said. "When it went before the SGA, the weight rooms were at their most crowded point ever."
Charging fees to permit the use of a school facility could present tax problems for SU, he said.
"The IRS has been very specific about what tax-exempt institutions are alowed to do with their facilities," he said.
IRS guidelines state that the renting out of any athletic department buildings for non-related activities are taxable.
LeMoyne College has successfully implemented a program allowingits alumni to use its facilities for fees ranging from \($ 50\) to \($ 250\) per user.
Wetter said he could not foresee more than 100 alumni participating in the program and parking woutd not be provided.

\section*{Forum addresses athletic cuts}

\section*{By SCOTT MULLER} Staiff Writer
If budget cuts compel the Syracuse University Athletic Department to fund its own scholarships, wrestling coach Ed Carlin said basketball and football teams might be given top priority over non-revenue sports.

Less-profitable teams will suffer the most, Carlin said.
At a recent University Senate open forum, Carlin and swimming coach Lou Walker reported their teams as being significantly profitable to the university.

Even the non-revenue teams generate some revenue," Carlin said.

Associate Director of Athletics Doris Soladay said the athletic department Soladay said the athletic department arships until the university announces arships until the univer budget cuts on Feb. 15.

But Soladay said for any sport to be competitive, reasonable acholarship support must be provided.

Carlin told the committee that wrestling team recruits bring money to the university.

Generating tuition revenues
The wrestling team accounts for about \($ 1.2\) million in tuition revenue for the university, Carlin said.

He also said out of 51 students on the wrestling team, only nine receive schol- sity arships.
"If the program is dropped, the university will be losing revenue they think they'll be saving," Carlin said.

The university would lose revenues if athletic scholarships are cut. Walker said.

For example, he said if the tuition cost of \($ 20,000\) a year is multiplied by 40 swim team members, it generates \(\mathbf{$ 8 0 0 , 0 0 0}\) for the university.
"Without these students coming to SU, the university will obviously be losing out," he said.

Both Walker and Carlin told the committee none of their players receive a full scholarship. Players receive partial scholarships in varying amounts.

A full scholarship covers tuition, books, and room and board.

Walker also said recruiting athletes produces revenue from application fees. Last year we had 107 itpplicants that totalled to over \($ 4,000\)," he said. "We also recruit a significant number of walkons."
Walk-on athletes do not receive any scholarship funding, Walker said.

A significant number of athletes who were recruited to SU for the swim team are no longer involved with the team, Walker said. However, 29 former swim team members still attend the univer-

Carlin said he felt the Chancellor's Ad-Hoc Committee made the recommendation to cut scholarship funds without thoroughly investigating the athletic program.
"The Ad-Hoc Committee didn't go into depth enough," he said.
For example, Carlin said the committee overlooked the fact that many athletes are not on scholarship.
"The senate committee was very shocked that 40 players were not on scholarships," he said. "We brought our case to the fore-front."
Carlin said his players might not understand the problems facing the team if scholarships are cut.
"They have seen the grood times, most haven't seen the bad.
"This is only the tip of the iceberg," he said. "All programs will be hurt by the downsizing,"

Walker said he applauds the university's effort to collect input.
"We have to prepare for lowering admissions," he said.

From an economic standpoint, Carlin said he understands why the athletic department will give priority to the football and men's basketball teams.
"If I was in the athletic director's "I don't blane him for that," he said.

As enrollment continues to decline and more and more financial cutbacks and more and more funancial contbacks must be made, education conservation of energy may become in. creasingly important, said several Syracuse University community members recently.
SU is currently paying about \($ 8\) million a year on electricity, said Annette Caldwell, an analyst in SUs budget and planning office.
Costs are going up faster than inflation," she said.
"The bottom line is that all of these costs get passed back to the students."

The office is always looking for ways to cut costs, she said.
Efforts are being made to bring in more efficient and more cost effective lighting and electrical appliances, said both Kevin Kenyon, assistant director of the SU Physical Plant, and Stan Nowakowski. senior project engineer of design and Students, however, do not seem to show any concern for conserving energy, said Jonathan Goodwin, director of DellPlain Hall.

Goodwin said that he sees students constantly leaving lights, televisions and radios on when no one is in the room.

\section*{UDemocrats look to debate Republicans}

By TOM SEELEY
Staff Writer
The University Democrats feel the College Republicans fear a debate between the two groups at Syracuse University, said UDems President Douglas Melcher.
"They"ll walk with lead feet toward a debate," he said, "but if we do all the work necessary to have the debate, I think they'Il come."

Kevin Reigrut. president of College Republicans, said he expects a debate next semester. "We would love it," he said.
The prospective debate was one of several topics discussed at a UDem meeting Monday night. The UDems discussed such topics as a debate with the College Republicans, bringing a speaker to campus in early December or January and generating support for the upcoming presidential election. typically against debates," Melcher said.

However, several members of the group said they felt that although a debate would be a good idea, they are not ready for a debate.

Define before debate
"Having a debate before we have declared who we are is useless," sophomore Jason Bruder said.
"I agree with the idea of having a debate, but I question the timeliness," he said.
Reigrut said the College Republicans are willing to debate any issue. including the upcoming presidential election.

Bruder said he feels the UDerns should start an education campaigo for the SU community.

Graduate student Carol Cimitile suggested choosing several issues that may be sensitive to SU students, and focusing on those issues.
She said she feels some prominent Democratic National Committee issues may not apply to SU students and might discourage them from getting involved.
"We need to become well versed as a group on several issues to create a strong base; then we can become strong in the community," she said.
The group discussed several methods of generating publicity. Suggestions included having a table in Schine Student Center, and distributing a survey to the community.

The group will have Peggy Murray, a former congressional candidate, speak in December or January about her experience running for Congress in 1988.
"We could use this event to have a membership drive," Cimitile said.
The group also discussed publiciz. ing information about Democratic candidates for president.
The group feels distribution of the material is essential to a democratic said.
"I don't want to see what hapfened in 1988 happen in 1992," said Ed Jenney, senior staff member in the department of civil engineering.

UDerns will be holding their next meeting on Nov. 20 at \(8 \mathrm{p} . \mathrm{m}\). in Room 126 N of the Schine Student Center.
The College Republicans will hold a meeting in a few weeks, but Reigrut did not know the exact date. The Republicans can be reached at 423 3131.

\section*{Eating disorders plague SU}

\section*{Students handle college pressures with knife, fork}

\section*{By KATE FLATLEY}

Staff Writer
Almost half of all Syracuse University students have some kind of eating disorder that is made worse by college life, said Sue Sandstrom, a nutritionist at SU Health Services.
"Nationwide there is a figure of 40 percent of students having eating disorders, and I would say that SU is typical of that figure," Sandstrom said.

She said eating disorders are part of aself-destructivebehaviorand not merely caused by trying to lose weight. They have a psychological root, she said.

Disorders can be worsened by parental pressure, she said.

One phone call from mom asking 'Have you gained any weight?' can really have an impact on a student's self-esteem and confidence," she said. "You can't get to the Ben and Jerry's fast enough."

A nother problem students have is that after gaining weight during freshman year, they return to school after the summer break with more restrictive eating habits that can get out of hand, she said.

She said she handles about 400 students each year with concerns about weight loss, nutrition in dining halls and general counseling.

Students with eating disorders get help from a nurse, a counselor and a nutritionist at Health Services.

\section*{Tough walking into dining halls}
"People don't realize how frightening it is for someone with an eating disorder to walk into a place like a dining center," she said.
"It's overwhelming ... the people, the people who are eating, the amount of food that they see - the whole environment is very frightening." she said.

She tells her clients to attend dining centers at the least crowded times, and to use the layout of the center to their advantage by choosing ahead of time What they are going to eat.

from the dining hall ahead of time through SU Health Services, and can avoid tempting, fattening foods, she said.
"The dining halls have made an honest attempt to respond to student's complaints, suggestions, and complements," she said.
The Friday dinner ment, which has received criticism for providing too much fried food, has been altered to offer more low-fat items as entrees, she said.
"We're instituting changes, adding two or three more entrees to the menu like stir-fry, chicken club, and a seafood platter," she said.
Sandstrom said any student who is on a meal plan at \(\mathbf{S U}\) is more than welcome to make suggestions to dinning halls.
The myth, the legend said. However, it can be interpreted two ways.

One way refers to the 15 pounds that fernales are inclined to gain in their first year of college, due to a lower caloric need, she said.

The other way refers to the 15 pounds that males are inclined to lose in their first year, she said.
"This is due to the fact that 18 -yearold males are still growing, and they can hardly keep up with their need for calories," Sandstrom said.

The main cause of the Freshman 15 is ordering food to be delivered. "Because students' sleep patterns are disturbed, they are awake longer, which gives them more time to eat, and having pizza places and other restaurants that will deliver at all times of the day is really dangerous," she said.

\section*{To the editor:}

This year, Celebrate Difference Week will be held from November 10-15. Since the first Celebrate Difference Week three years ago, there have been expressed concerns about the title. People have been worried that the word "difference" has implied Indeed, this may be how our culture has taught us to interpret it. There have been several suggestions to change the narne to "Celebrate Diversity.

The current Celebrate Difference Week Committee has struggled with the name change issue for the past year. We have come to the conclusion that we will keep the word "difference." It is felt that the problem is not with the word but rather the connotation it has been given by the people on this campus and society as a whole. By changing the word we may solve the semantics problem, but not the \section*{'Tea' Playdramatizes warbrides'lives}

In just 90 minutes, Syracuse Stage's Tea says more than most plays do in two or three acts.
Playwright Velina Hasu Houston, director Julianne Boyd and five actresses aspire to nothing less than depicting an entire society, and they almost succeed.

While the play does overreach on a few occasions, such a flaw is vastly preferable to remaining content with sub-standard material.

These five actresses, all of whom excel, ERIC GRODE THEATER REVIEW play representatives of the more than "wa,000 Japanese "war brides" who States after World War II.
These women were frequently subjected to racism upon arriving in Amer-

The central portion of Tha shows the long and short-term effects of these discriminations. After a brief, shocking prologue, the story begins in 1968, immediately after the suicide of Himiko Hamilton (Jeanne Sakata).
Symbolic occasion
The other four women meet at Himiko's house to pay homage through a symbolic taking of tea. It quickly becomes clear that these women have adapted in wildly different ways, and these differences make up the buik of the play.

The drinking of tea in this play is much more than a method used by Houston to bring these characters together.

Instead, it is seen as a once essential part of their culture, one that allows them to travel back to a more accepting time of their lives. After seeing these women in this earlier period, the jump back to the harsh reality they must live in is all the more disturbing.

But Houston is not just content to show how these women ended up - she also shows how they became this way.

Lengthy flashbacks and surreal passages lend insight into these five very different characters. At various points, the actresses play themselves at a younger age, their inugnters and even their husbands, in one
One of Tes's greatest strengths is its refusal to resort to cheap melodrama or laughs. Many of the darker passages

Some lyrics don't measure up

\section*{Low SAT scores mean snowy school}

At one point in time there were 15 seriously considering attending for my undergraduate career. One by one I eliminated them from the list for little reasons like not being able to get accepted.

Getting a 790 on my SATs didn't help things either.

By the way, this weekend 1 found myself discussing SAT scores with my

RON HART
HUMOR FR L'AQUA CASA This is the test that I worried abourt test everyone said important exam I would evesingle most years later, all my SAT score is good for is a barroom argument about which of my friends is the smartest.

I probably wouldn't be so bitter about this if even one of my friends did worse than I did.

So I went around to all these schools that wouldn't even mail me an application, and then I changed my standards. You see, my older sister went to Notre Dame for her college career.

4.0 everag up with ball team that won a national championship, and a for her after she graduated. But I felt no pressure in picking out a school.
I hate Notre Dame
Florida vs. Syracuse
So my qualifications in choosing a school were twofold. First, it had to be a school that would accept me. Second, it had to be a school with a sports team capable of beating Notre Dame. From this I narrowed my options down to two schools.

One was Syracuse University on the tundra of Upstate New York. The other was the University of Miami in Coral Gables, Fla. None of you got a 790 on Gables, Fla. None of you got a 900 on your SATs so you can probably guess which one I ended up attending.

Now you may be wondering why I need to write a column about this. The reason is because \(i\) always second guess the year.

As I write this column, I look out my window and I see snow Do you know how much snowfall Coral Gables averages in a year?

ZERO!
In Miami they have beaches. Girls go to class in bikinis. They surf on the quad. When it rains, they stare up at the sky like cavemen wondering where the sun went.

This is not Miarni. This is hell.
Sure hell is supposed to be really hot, but I think it would be worse to suffer an eternity of Syracuse weather. And we didn't even beat Notre Dame the first year I was here.

I'm happy about this. This is the school for me. I just wish I lived further from campus so that I could be outdoors more.

I remember saying to muself that if I went to Miami I would end up going to the beach every day. I knew that I would never study and it would be impossible to concentrate.

look that's all his own. Unusual hats and other unexpected accessories are Evans' trademark.
"How you look is definitely reflective of how you are as a person," Evans said.
He commented on the evolution of men's hairstyles from "flattops to dreadlocks to totally bald."
Evans predicted scarves will soon be the rage. Could he be the Nostradamus of fashion?

A look that's on the cutting edge of men's fashion right now brings to mind the look associated with 1960 s rock group The Byrds. Mock turtlenecks and ankle boots are the basics behind any hip man's wardrobe.
Standard denim jackets are also making a comeback, as well as square-shaped jackets that fall just below the waist. Brightly tinted sunglasses and buzz cuts complete the look.

In street fashion, there has been a movement away from the athletic look toward one that is more polished and sophisticated. This can be seen in the current shift from sneakers to dressier shoes.

Most fashionable men will agree that a well-dressed man combines an awareness of trends with his own sense of style. A fashion tip from Evans: "People need to break away from this conservative attitude and start conservative attitude

Even with the lapse late in the game, Boeheim said the Orangemen played well despite the team's overall youth.

The Orangemen outrebounded Marathon Oil 43-38 despite being outsized at every forward position.
"I'm surprised we outrebounded them," SU forward Scott McCorkle said. "We're trying to emphasize our quickness on the boards with technique and boxing out because we were so much smaller."

Syracuse was led by senior forward Dave Johnson on the boards as he pulled down a team-high nine rebounds. He also led all SU scorers with 16 points.

McCorkle had the hot hand late in the first half, though, as he scored Syracuse's last nine points before intermission.

The Syracuse Universitymen's swimming team experienced something pretty rare in. its opening meet of the season -a loss.

The Orangemen finished last season with 11 consecutive wins after a loss to Penn State in their second meet of the year.

Syracuse (2-1, 2-1) returned to the routine world of winning last weekend, defeating the Seton Hall University Pirates and the Boston College Eagles in its second competitive weekend of the season.

SU defeated the host Pirates 83-12 and the Eagles 69-27.

The Orangernen dominated every aspect of the competition. SU won every event against Seton Hall, and took ten of the eleven first-place finishes against Boston College.

We definitely swam well against BC and Seton Hall," senior co-captain Steve Burke said.

Syracuse was led by sophomore Attila Ari who was a triple winner, taking firatin the 500 -meter freestyle, 200 -meter breaststroke and the 200 -meter individual medley in both meets.

Junior co-captain Jay Craft. turned in another outatanding performance. Craft, who has already qualitied for the Olym* pic trials in two events, won the 1000-meter freestyle with a time of \(9: 24\).
The Orangemen also recei ved important contributions from their corps of freshmen.
Seth Williams won the 200meter freestyle versus the Eagles and won both the 200 -meter freestyle and the 200 -meter back-

The Syracuse University women's swimming team exterminated the upset "bug" Saturday with wins over Seton Hall University and Boston College last weekend

After upsetting the defending Big East champions. the University of Pittsburgh on Nov. 2 , the Orangewomen successfully avoided succumbing to the bite of underdogs Seton Hall and \(B C\).
Syracuse beat Seton Hall 7538 and Boston College 85-29 to remain undefeated at 3-0.
SU coach Lou Walker feared a possible letdown after beating the Panthers, but his team came through with another balanced effort.
"After the opening weekend we have to make sure we don't have a letdown." Walker said. We were more up for Pitts burgh. Obviously, we came through quite well.
One element Walker was woried about was his lack of knowsedge of the teams because it was so early in the season.
I don't have any results," Walker said. "Before we get results, a lot more is left to the magination "(Preparation) was based on information from last year. My thoughts were that we were capable of winning. We really dominated."
Sophomore Laurie Kasch led the Orangewomen by winning the 200 -meter and 500 -meter freestyle events. Kasch is undefeated in four races this season.

As a team, the Orangewornen have been dominant. winning 25 of 35 races Against Seton Hall, senior co-captain Lisa Bock won the 100-meter fly and sophomore Michele Ciesienski won the 200meter breaststroke.

Fellow freshman Dave Rucker continued to improve, scoring well for SU in the diving events.
I was really pleased with the way the meet went," Walker said. "We felt we should be in control and we were. We really wanted to work on our times and I was very pleased with the way things worked out."

The Orangemen's weekend sweep comes after \(S U\) suffered a tough loss at the hands of conference foe University of Pitisburgh in the opening meet of the season. Last weekend's two conference victories bring the Orangemen's record to \(2-1\) in the Big East.
"Obviously we would love it if we were 3-0," Walker said. "But looking at our performance thus far I can't find fault with anything we have done. We are on schedule to have a great year."

Against Boston College, freshmen Kerri Colditz and Amy DeMarte continued to impress. Colditz won the 1000 -meter freestyle and 200 -meter fly while DeMarle won the 200-meter backstroke and 200 -meter individual medley.

Other winners against Boston College included senior cocaptain Shannon Manikowski, who won the 50 -meter freestyle, and Ciesenski, who won the 200 -meter breastst roke.

Syracuse diver Shannon Jerome won both diving events while Laurie Mantegna finished second.

The Orangewomen also swept the relay events. we had a real good group effort with the spectrum of seniors and freshmen," Walker' said. "Saturday) was a continuation of the good performance at Pitts. burgh.

On Saturday afternoon Quakers Mormons and the rest of the college football fans who think winning shouldn't be everything, will be watching Penn State and Notre Dame have some good clean fun in the Happy Valley.
Meanwhile, we get to watch Florida State and Miami pull out all the stops in their attempts to be the top ranked team in the nation.

And if they can rub the other team's face in it along the way. all the better.

1 know, 1 know, the Seminoles and the Hurricanes may lack some elements of sportsmanship and their ideas concerning the student-athlete may be a little ... uh ... original, but theirs is the only game this weekend where you'll get to see FSU quarterback Casey Weldon get his pretty face and his feelings hurt
Let's face it, Penn State and Notre Dame are two great programs, but they are also boring. You never get to see any cheap shots, fights, or any really good examples of in-your-face cockiness.
The FSU-Miami game gives you all that, plus the two most talented teams in the nation going after the No. 1 ranking.
Nice guys don't always finish last. but it is so much more fun when the bad guys are the ones fighting it out at the top.

The Syracuse University men's baskethall team had its freshman convocation in the Carrier Dome during Tuesday night's 95-85 exhibition game loss to Marathon Oil

Four out of six freshmen scholarship players saw playing time for the Orangemen and three of those players were in the game for at least 10 minutes.

The only freshmen who didn't see action, center J.B. Reafsnyder and guard Lazarus Sims, will be redshirted this season.

Marathon Oil coach Glenn Sargent pecred into his crystal ball and made a prediction after his squad defeated the Syracuse University men's basketball team Tuesday night 95-85 before 11,964 fans in the Carrier Dome.
"We've played the other Big East schools and if tonight is any indication, Syracuse will finish about the middle of the pack," he said. "Jim (Boeheim) said it would be a tough year and it's pretty obvious that it will be for Syracuse.

Marathon Oil shot a near perfect 19 of 21 from the free-throw line in the second half to break open a one-point game.
"We've been real physical in practice so far and that hurt us in our foul situation," SU coach Jim Boeheim said. "We reached and grabbed too much and that hurt us in the second half.

Marathon Oil went to the free-throw line 16 times in the game's final \(9: 19\). cashing in on 15 free points.

Marathon Oil coach Glenn Sargent said the foul shots were a result of an intense, but ineffective pressure defense. They did not do a good job at cheating and recovering on defense, Sargent but they just weren't recovering. It left a lot of holes for us to get some easy points."

Bonet said the Board of Trustees has taken the position that this is a social, not legal, issue.

Since ROTC classes are available to all SU students, the issue is not within the jurisdiction of the Board of Trustees, Bonet said, who is also SGA vice president for student affairs.

Nothstein said the Department of Defense's policy is not illegal, "But there is a hypocrisy on this particular campus regarding the ROTC discrimination policy."
Nothstein said the Board of Trustees has issued a statement in which it claims to understand the issues, but it is not interested in responding.

Shields said a number of colleges, such as Dartmouth, have faced the ROTC discrimination issue.
"This is a national issue." he said. "It's

"I don't want to see present ROTC students hurt. That is why we are waiting until 1993 for a change in policy."

Removing ROTC from campus would damage the quality of SU , Bonet said. referring to the board's position.
"(The ROTC program) is appealing to many students and it could jeopardize enrollment," she said.
The board will review its stand on the issue in 1995 to decide whether to change the policy.

Lightning's liplock leaves lad lamenting
The best-buddy relationship between a boy and his turtle ended in a liplock and a call to 911

Adam Hanson, 8, of Hutchinson, Kan., was playing with Lightning Monday when the foot-long turtle stretched its 3 -inch neck sideways and clamped Hanson's upper lip.

The boy's parents called 911 for help. Before rescue workers could arrive, Hanson's mother used a carrot to entice Lightring to open its jaws.
"I want to play football with him," Hanson said.

Investigation of fraternity pledging starts at UVA
The University of Virginia chapter of Kappa Alpha Psi is currently under investigation for violating its national organization's ban against pledges on line.
"Pledging is outlawed in Kappa Alpha Psi," said Howard Tutman, the Kappa Alpha Psi Eastern province adviser. "No one should be marching in step or be dressed alike" for fraternity purposes. he said.
According to Brendon MeElroy, former chapter president, "there are no violations here because of the fact the people on line) are brothers."
"It is their voluntary and constitutional right to dress the same, to walk on line and to eat together.* he said.

Steve Pearce, a Kappa Alpha Psi member, said the on-line process remains voluntary for the initiates who are entering the fraternity. He said there is a difference between "initiates" and "pledges," and that the pledge process has been made illegal.

As of Sept. 1, a national greek council eliminated the traditional on-line process of the black greek system.

Tutman said a special committee has been assigned to investigate the situation and to hoid a hearing on the legality of the process.

\section*{A taxing situation}

Syracuse University students, like everyone else, are being asked to tighten their belts. With possible budget cuts facing the athletic department and the need for the entire campus to conserve energy, the fragile state of the economy is truly part of our daily lives.

Election 1992 is about one year away and politicians are pushing tax reform proposals, eager to show the average American how much they care about his or her economic plight.

President Bush keeps playing his "cut the capital-gains tax blues," claiming the middle-class will benefit from the added revenue that would be funneled back into the economy.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., want to cut the capital-gains tax to finance other tax reductions like their motion to provide tax credits for first time home buyers.
Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, would allow each middle-class family to claim \($ 300\) for every child under 18 years of age, financing the cut by trimming 5 percent off the military budget over the next five years.
Enter Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., and Rep. Thomas Downey, D-N.Y., who propose the most logical tax reform package: alleviate the hardship of the middle-class by taxing the wealthy.
Families would receive an \($ 800\) tax credit for each child, as would farnilies that are too poor to owe taxes. The top tax rate of 31 percent would be adjusted to 36 percent and a 15 percent surtax would be levied on individuals who earn more than \($ 200,000\) a year.

The Gore/Downey proposal deserves more than a cursory reading by people who have to work for a living and students who will have a loan to pay off upon graduation.

It's time for the executives who ride in private jets to land and find out what's really going on in the country. It's time for congressmen who don't pay for their lunches to discover that the rest of the nation doesn't eat for free, and some don't eat at all.

\section*{Rituals bleed students dry} can I borrow a quarter?
You probably hear this question a lot, specially if you live in Boland Hall. I happen to live there. I also happen to ask this question a lot.

Why, you ask? Am I financially deprived? Well, this is only partly true. There are actually many reasons why I'm poor nt this a couple.

IAMAL WRIGHT

\section*{PEOPLE} OBSERVER

First of all, there are the infamous Brewster/Boland dryers. When using these dryers. one is always a quarter short of attaining dry clothes. I used to think dry clothes. I used to think that fifty cents put into a that fifty cents put into a somewhere. Instead ifind dryer could get you somewhere. Instend I find that many people would much rather hang happens to me is sort of like a ritual. I never really learnmy lesson. Every time I do laundry I save a couple of dollars for the dryer. But usually get bored and play maybe one video game. That one video garne is usually what brings up the possibility of me being either damp or dirty the next day. That one quarter that 1 spend on the video game seerns to be of utmost importance to the dryer. Anter I spend this one quarter, I could proceed to throw in my entire tuition for all it cares. It will not get my clothes dry. In fact, In almost swear to the is that I'll end up begging for quarters, searching for one identical to the one that got away.
There are still other reasons why I need welfare.
When I first signed up for phone service, I was told that it would cost my roommate and me 20 dollars a month. Lo and behold, come Iudgment Day, two very handsome guys received a sixty dollar bill.

Now in light of the fact that sixty dollars is a long way off from twenty, the phone company and 1 had a problem. They basically gave me a lot of gibberish that would sound good to any average burnout, but I still had to come up with the cash

As far as credit is concerned, I've decided to cancel my cards as soon as possible. I have to do something. Where do these companies get the idea that they can charge us an annual fee for being "special" enough to carry a card? I'm sorry, but I've decided that I don't want to be "special" anymore. My scissors were just starving for a taste of my Discover card. Citibank actually sent me an annual fee for a card that I haven't even received.

Leave me alone! Don't you understand that I'm broke? No, I do not want a long-distance card and I really don't want a University Bookstore card anymore.

The next time you see a big black guy with dreadlocks and cheap clothes on, put a quarter in his tin cup. He might do the same for you one day.

\section*{LETTERS}

\section*{Communications solve problems}

\section*{To the editor:}

I am writing this letter in response to the lecture given by Will Kiem on Nov. 11 in Goldstein Auditorium.
I think I speak for everyone who attended the lecture when I say that it was, at the very least, incredible. Since I enrolled in Syracuse University in the fall of 1988 , I have never seen an audience more captivated or enthralled in one person -his mesaage is truly person -his message is tru universal. Ionly wish that universal. I only wish that everyone at SU could have heard his powerfial speech.

In athoroughly entertaining and humorous way, Dr. Kiern emphasized the need for selfrespect in order to survive the 1990s. With issues like drug and substance abuse, AIDS, racism, sexism and homophobia facing college students across the country, it is easy to sit back and go along with the crowd in pushing those issues aside and pretending they do not exist. But, he continued, we can no longer do that. We, as the future leaders of the country and the world, have to face those challenges and find the solutions. The only way to do that is to start with ourselves.

He charged each of us to take care of ourselves as we would kake care or is crying or needs his or baby is crying or needis his or her diaper changed, we do not ignore the baby s problem - we take care of it and get rid we take care of it and getrid of the problem. In the same of the problem. In the same intolerable and abusive people and situations in our lives, we should not walk away. We should face those problems and become a part of the solution.

I would like to charge each student on this campus with that very task. Learn to communicate with people who \section*{come from diferent} nationalities and backgrounds than you. Help out a friend who has an eating disorder or a problem with substance and/ or drug abuse. Stop the intolerant attitudes that constantly surface on this campus. As future leaders, we have to realize that if we do not confront the issues that face us today, no one will and the problems will never disappear.

And remember, one person can make a difference! If you don't belleve that, just ask anyone who heard Will Kiem speak on Monday evening. He is one man who made a difference in the lives of everyone who was there to hear his powerful message.

\section*{Accept poor pick}

To the editor:
Talk about a sore loser Your response in the Oct. 25 issue of The Daily Orange really was classless. While I have no intentions of lowering myself to your standards, I do think it is about time for you to face reality.

The great thing about athletics is that an underdog team can play an inspired game and come away with a victory. The fact that few writers picked East Carolina to defeat Syracuse (a 12 -point favorite) in the Carrier Dome favorite) in the Carrier Dom makes the \(23-20\) score even more impressive. The margin more impressive. The margi of victory should have been of victory should have been greater except for the fact that greater except for the fact that the offeials nullified two ECU touchdowns. Just accept the loss and quit crying over spilt milk.

I recommend that you take a look at the 1992 schedule and take notice of where the Orangemen play their season opener-Greenville, N.E.So be my guest and come down for a little"southern hospitality" and we'll be sure to teach an old man like you some manners.

I've already mailed your column to Coach Bill Lewis and his staff. No doubt they will share your thoughts with the team in preparation for next year's game. Care to fuel the fire anymore?
Oh yeah, nice pick on the Pitt-ECU game. You've been consistentiy wrong and it's good to see that some things never change.

In closing, just answer one question for me. Just what is an "Orangeman" and aren't you embarrassed to have a giant citrus as your team mascot?
ECU football -we'll play anyone anywhere!

The event began Saturday at Watson Theater with an appearance by Mira Schor, artist and writer: the Guerilha Giris. a group of women who speak out against the discrimination in the art world: and a screening of two films directed by Maria Beatty.
This week-long event was created and organized by Syracuse University seniors Jennifer Cillespie and Joanna Spitzner.
They first became interested in creating such an event after seeing film director Yvonnce Rainer, who appeared last night at Watson Theater, speak at Colgate University.
Initialiy, the project began with their attempts to bring her to SU and speak. However, as they began to speak to faculty mermbers and conduct research, they found that something of greater importance and significance could be created.

Six months of preparation
They began preparation for Matrilineage in early May by asking various artists and performers to come to SU and participate in the program. They project since then and were still tying project since then and w about developing the music," Corgan said.

Io achieve that, it basically took either getting people in the band to agree with my philosophies on life and how we should be as a band or in some cases saying, 'I know you don't agree with me, but that's just the way it is."'

After a short and discouraging stint with the band The Marked in 1986, Corgan said he went through two years of soul-searching before deciding how he wanted to approach his next band.
"I realized that my internal wants and desires conflicted with the way most bands form," he recalled. "So I chose to do it in my own instinctive way."
In 1986, Corgan set out to put his vision in motion and soon met up with guitarist James Ihe, who at that time was heavily influenced by English heavily influenced by English pop acts like The
They then added bassist and Cramps fan D'Arcy and drummer Jimmy Chamberlain, who Corgan said had just come off playing the "Holiday Inn circuit."

An odd combination of personalities and musical tastes, the band went through several stylistic experimentations before molding out their own sound, Corgan said

It wasn't like we ever had this shared musical vision -it was more like we had this shared vision of what we wanted to be mentally, and the music whid come later, he said ros they took was far from the easiest one, "It all worked out easiest for the bes " and brought us a better band and brought us together ways that other bands aren't together.

Over the next two years, Corgan and the Pumpkins searched to combine their shared emotions and translate them into music.

What is it about Jimi Hendrix or Bauhaus or some blues guy that make all those people appeal to me in the same way? he mused. "The unifying factor is that they managed to connect their emotions into some gence where they can express what they want in a very powerful way. That's what I wanted from my band."

The Pumpkins quickly built a strong regional following in their hometown of Chicago and eventually gained national underground status with the release of "Tristessa" on the prestigious SubPop "Single of the Month" club in the beginning of 1991.

Over the next few months, the band turned down an onslaught of large contract offers with major labels before deciding to sign with an independent label, Caroline Records.

It was important. for us to maintain control," Corgan said. "I couldn't see any of the (other labels) going along with the way I wanted things. Now that we've proven ourselves, we're in a completely different position, but I had to prove it in the but I had to

With way.
With the release of their debut LP Gish in May, Smashing Pumpkins did just that as the album and its single "Siva" shot up the college radio charts and even found a spot on Billboard's Top 200 Albums chart.

Today, having validated his vision through the album's success, Corgan said he faces a new set of challenges.
"The band has displaced a lot more in my life than I ever thought it would," he admitted. When you're 19 and you want to play rock, it's a lot easier to rationalize being on the road, but then you realize the sacrifice that it takes on life."

Since beginning the tour in June, Corgan said he has only June, Corgan said he has only spent two weeks at home and he only expects to spend another two weeks there before the tour ends in March.

Although he said he is constantly at odds with the whole process, Corgan accepts the challenge gracefully, but somewhat regretfully.
"I wanted albums, I wanted to tour, I wanted to be in a position where I could be respected as an artist," Corgan said. "I longed for all this, but somehow, going home and just being with my cat seems like a really good idea right now.

The goal of the Student Government Association Elections Committee is to increase voter turnout for the election. Election Commissioner Neil Suttersaid.
"Id like to see between 12 and 15 percent (of the student body) turn out," Sutter said.

Elections for SGA president and comptroller will be from Dec. 4 to 6 .

Students will be able to vote in dining halls and the Schine Student Center, Sutter said.
"We are also exploring other locations, such as (Huntington Beard Crouse Hall). Bird Library and the Carrier Dome," he saīd.

The deadline to submit candidacy petitions to the SGA office is Nov. 20, petitions to the SGA office is No
SGA President Emily Zenick said.

The criteria for president and comptroller candidates are full-time undergraduate enrollment and a 2.0 grade point average. Candidates may not be on university probation of any kind except financial, Sutter said.
"The president is the chief liaison between the students and the administration," Zenick said. "This is someone that has a real impact."
A voice for concern
She said another major responsibility of the president is to act as a voice for students.
"Basically, SGA is responsible for student concerns," she said. "One thing I've tried to do is make sure student concerns are always looked at."

The comptroller is responsible for SGA budgetary matters, Zenick said.
"The comptroller is responsible for the allocation of the student fee, which is allocation of the student fee, Which is about \($ 1\) million." she said. "He's on the about \($ 1\) million." she said. "He's on the finance board, and he deals with budget finance board, and he deals and contingency requests."

There will be three forums for candidates to address students questions, Sutter said.
There will be an open debate between the candidates in The Underground on Nov. 22.

Besides voting for comptrolier and president, students will also be voting on a referendum concerning The Daily Orange, he said.

The referendum appears on the ballot every two years, Sutter said.
"It will just be a yes or no question," he said.

Sutter said the referendum will ask if students want \($ 7\) of their student fees to go toward a year's subscription to The Daily Orange.

Sutter also said the ballots will be "more clearly defined" this year.
"Many students don't know what the student fee is, which is \($ 97.50\), or even what SGA is," he said.

The Elections Committee will attempt to provide students with non-biased definitions.

We want to give people an idea of what SGA is without bias," Sutter said.

Now that the excitement generated by the United States' decisive victory in the Middle East has passed, the harsh lessons of the conflict are being revealed, a noted peace advocate said Thursday.

\section*{Conflict approaches}

When 200,000 more troops were added without any form of rotation, it became clear that conflict was close, Coffin said. The various stands Saddam Hussein took concerning his occupation of Kuwait verified that conflict was approaching, Coffin said.

At first, Hussein claimed that Kuwait was Iraqi territory, Coffin said.

With the buildup of force in Kuwait, suddenly Saddam showed signs of backing down, although in the end he did not yield to threats from the U.N. Security Council.
Then, in January, U.N. forces started bombing Iraq. Coffin said there seemed to be no discussion in the United Nations about moving from Act 41 to Act 42, which authorized the use of force.
"I thought it was pretty sad ... when a country is losing \($ 100\) million a day and countries like the Soviet Union are willing to work at diplomacy, it was a Great mistake to abandon sanctions," he great

Gov. BillClinton outlines agenda
By ERIN NEFF
Bill Clinton took over as governor of Arkansas at the same time Ronald Reagan became president of the United States. For the past 11 years the country has fallen victim to Reagan-Bush economic policies. Clinton told a Syracuse crowd Thursday

Speaking to the audience of the National Tenants Organization's 22nd Anniversary Convention at the Hilton Hote] in downtown Syracuse. Clinton diagrammed his strategies for a "common grammed his vision."

Clinton asked the convention Reagan's 1984 re-election question "Are you bet1984 re-election question "Are you bet-ago?"

Wo?" tively, he added "Do you want a president to get us on our feet again?"

With his slight southern accent calling to mind Clinton's Hope. Ark., origins, the governor announced ways to release the budgetary burdens from the middle class by instituting national health care, federal education plans and economic reform.
"A president owes you an economic again," Clinton said. "Not compete win again."

In the discussion following the film, Syracuse University freshman Clare Penisartz said most students assoćiste with meinbers of their own culture.
'There isn't enough dispersion through the campus of different cultures, she said.

\section*{Huddling with the governor}

He echoed many of the same ideas Thursday in Syracuse and even met with a delegation of Syracuse University students after his press conference.
Standing in the midst of a huddle, drinking soda from a paper Hardee's cup, the governor asked the students cup, the governor asked future goals and present concerns.
Student Government Association speaker Dionne Roberts said she thoughit speaker'ionne Roberts interesting.
"He has a lot of good ideas if he can institute them." said Roberts, an SU senior.

Graduate student Sarah White said it was nice to see someone with experience in state government coming up with good national ideas
"He is one of the best candidates the Democrats could get going," she said.
Roberts especially agreed with Clinton's education plan as she thinks of the costs of paying for her education.
"The president owes you a partnership with states and sehool districts," Clinton said, referring to funding such programs as Head Start.
If the nation can spend \($ 500\) billion to clean up the Savings and Loan crisis, Clinton said, it can spend \($ 5\) billion on a program for literacy.

Clinton also proposed a national training option for people who do not wish to attend college.

Emphasizing the work ethic

\section*{By SCOTT MCINTOSH}

Stalf writer
Tsitsi Dangarembga, a Zimbabwean novelist and playwright, said she wants to empower women through her writing.
Dangarembga read portions of her 1988 novel Nervous Conditions to about 70 people in Bird Library as part of the African-American studies department's Colloquium Series Wednesday.
She said she hoped some young women will read her work and feel empowered by reading it.

I could not see my own face in the literature I was reading as a girl," she said. She cited works like Jane Eyre and Wuthering Heights as the type of literaure she was reading.

She said that when she writes, the audience she has in mind is young girls in Zimbabwe who need role models in literature.

Professor Bruce Hare, chairman of the African-American studies department, said Dangarembga was the first black voman in zimbabwe to write a novel in English, and mentioned her other accomplishments. wonderful and intrepid things," those wonderful and Dangarembga said African writers have been pandering to Western markets, where it is currently trendy to publish African political works.

She warned against making a strong connection between African literature and political institutions because the political is not the only institution at work.

Dangarembga spoke about her difficulties finding a publisher. "I felt chastised for having dared step out of the mold and deal with such issues," she said.
Asked what projects she has planned for the future, Dangarembga said, "I wish I knew myself. I have all these deas."
She talked about a continuation of Nervous Conditions, which Alice Walker. author of The Color Purple, called "that rare novel whose characters are unforgettable."

She also spoke about getting involved with film. She has become "more and more interested in the medium" and would like to work on some documentaries, she said.
She went to Cambridge University in England and also attended school in Germany before returning to her native Zimbabwe.

with the United States threatening to sever aid to certain countries.
"I think it's fair to say that this coalition was somewhat coerced," he said.

According to Coffin, American citizens were given only a technological view of the war.

\section*{American weapons}

Americans did not see the destruction caused by U.S. Weapons and, therefore, could not understand the magnitude of the war.

He said the most important lesson to be learned is: "If there had been no militarization of the Middle East, there wouldn't have been a war."

He said if the United States and other countries had not sold weapons to Iraq. it would not have had enough arms to effectively invade Kuwait.
"We have to start moving against the arms trade," he said. "I think it's morally wrong to use military technology in foreign diplomacy "
"It's also morally wrong for corporations like General Electric) to sell weapons abroad for commercial profft," he said.

Coffin also said the believes the U.N. Secretary General should have more influence in U.N. actions.
"The Secretary General of the United Nations should be considered the number one person in the world, and should demand a lot more respect." he said.

With more respect. Coffin said, the United Nations would be more powerful and influential.

Coffin concluded his speech by saying the American spirit shown during the war was distressing.

He said the level of enthusiasm for U.S. actions rose when it was elear conflict would be "a massacre in our favor.

Coffin cited President Bush's statement that the United States had finally kicked the Vietnam syndrome, and that Armerica was back on top.
"If it takes a one-sided war like that to make America seem like it's standing tall. what does that say about the spirit of America?" he asked.
Although TMR is not open to the public, Coffin's speech will be aired on WCNY Radio (FM 91.3) Sunday at 4 p.m.

Also, WSYT Channel 68 will broadcast the speech Dec. 15 at midnight.

\section*{Cut diplomatic ties}

The recent Middle East peace conference hasinspiredinternational mollycoddling on the part of President Bush. However, in light of the indictments made by the United States and Scotland labeling Libyan officials as the perpetrators of the Pan Am Flight 103 bombing, it is time to cut the cord connecting Libya.
Three years of painful searching and investigating have finally revealed answers to problematic questions. The indictments handed down Thursday hold two upper level Libyan investigators responsible for the malicious bombing of Pan Am Flight 103. The disaster killed all 259 passengers aboard the plane, including 35 Syracuse University students. Eleven people on the ground were also killed. White House Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said retaliatory action has not been ruled out, military or otherwise.
Any agreements made with either

Libya or Syria, a country also involved in the incident, should be reevaluated. While the indictments do not prove guilt, both economic and political sanctions should be imposed. All ties must be cut, disabling discussion between the United States and Libya until a point of retribution is reached.
Responding with any military action this long after the bombing of Flight 103 would be irresponsible and dangerous. Actions such as this would portray violence as the only legitimate response to terrorism. Stooping to the level of Middle Eastern terrorists would be wrong.

Diplomatic action must be taken. The United States must fight the forces of violence in the Middle East and, without resulting to terroristic measures, must find some way to make the Libyans pay for 270 lives already lost in vain.

\section*{LETTERS}

\section*{Compassion sparks heated debate}

\section*{To the editor:}

I am writing in response to Christopher Crossman's letter in the Nov. 11 issue of The Daily Orange. It seems that Mr. Crossman has his issues confused. His response to Marc Wiener's letter did set the facts straight concerning the trapping of animals and how this process has gone from what Mr. Wiener called "torture devices" to more humane methods of animal capture. Yet, I think that Mr. Crossman should have read Mr. Wiener's letter more carefully. Marc Wiener was writing about the ignorance that abounds concerning animal rights, not about the roles that hunting and trapping play in game managernent.
Wiener's letter dealt with the general lack of compassion that the human race has for its fellow residents of this planet. something I agree with very strongly. I urge all of you to ask yourselves: is it really worth all of the death and suffering that takes place just to keep our bodies warm (in the name of furs or leather) and our stomachs filled (in the name of meat) when there are so many other ways to go about fulfilling our own bodily needs as human beings?
Though I do agree that hursing is necessary in terms of game management, I also believe it to be a sad (and grisly) fact of life. As far as trapping is concerned, I do not see trapping as a primary way to control skyrocketing animal populations as does Mr. Crossman. And thus, I consider furs to be nothing more than symbols of death, suffering and a society that lacks compassion for all living things.

\section*{The power of humor}

To the editor:
As someone who studies how prejudice and stereotypes are communicated through humor. I want to applaud Wendy Kaplan for her excellent piece in The Daily Orange appearing on Wednesday's editorial page.

The analysis and comments could not be more correct. The comparisons with other forms of power relationships are very effective. Her admonition to cartoonists that they must take seriously complaints when their humor denigrates less powerful groups will hopefully carry some weight and legitimacy. Her support of those who do complain is much appreciated.
I have so many examples of accounts written to excuse or otherwise support the use of denigrating humor that it is indeed refreshing when counter voices are heard, especially one so articulate as hers.

\section*{Disease spreads doubt}

To the editor:
There is an identifiable disease of the tongue and pen called "sesquipedalianism," Sesquipedalian literally means "a foot and a half long." The disease in question, however, refers to the apparently pathological need to employ long words where short ones would serve the purpose just as well. The manifestation of this disease can be merely annoying, as it no doubt is in this letter. The effects can be more significant, however, since the need to employ flowery language often distorts the language often distorts the question

I am reminded of this disorder by a sentence in a recent editorial published in The Daily Orange. We are told that Magic Johnson "wove passes into a tapestry of necromancy." I take this to mean that Mr. Johnson's basketball abilities were and are enough to raise the dead. While I should certainly not deny that an athlete of his stature might be capable of such feats, I submit that conclusive evidence of same remains elusive.

Blaine De Lancey Academic adviser

Editor's note according to Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary. The word necromancymeans
"conjuration of the sprits of the dead forpurposes of lforncasting the fiuture) or influencing the course of events; masic, soncerv. "It wos in this second sense that our writer used the reord.

\section*{Letters Policy}

\section*{King clobbers Castle Rock again}

\section*{Latest release rehashes tried-and-true themes}

The devastation heaped on Iraq during Operation Desert Storm pales in com parison to the devastation Stephen King has heaped on small towns in Maine. For example: the town of "Salem's DARIN by vampires and then burned and city of Derry was BOOK city of Derry was sunk by an earth.

\section*{REVIEW} quake and flooded And the entire population of Haven was possessed by aliens and then blown to bits by the army.
This Edwin Arlington Robinson-in hell motif returns again in King's twen tieth novel, Needful Things, in which he trashes one of his most enduring settings: the quiet but not-so-inviting town of Castle Rock, Maine.
But while entertaining, Needful Things is not as gripping or believable as some of King's earlier treatises on the horror of small town life.
Even those only passingly familiar with King's work will recognize Castle Rock. As King writes in the prologue and epilogue: "You've been here before.

Horror-filled history
This was the place where police officer Frank Dodd murdered children in The Dead Zone, where a rabid St. Bernard killed four people in Cujo and where author Thad Beaumont battled his own evil subconscious in The Dark Half. evil subconscious in The Dark Half.
Castle Rock was also the setting for numerous King short stories, as well as the novella The Body and its movie adaptation. Stand By Me.
King works nearly all of Castle Rock's supernatural history into Needful Things The main character, Sheriff Alan Pang bourn, was also a major character in The Dark Half. And Ace Merrill, the teen age bully from Stand By Me, reappears as a 40-year-old cocaine dealer.
The central premise of Needful Things is simple. A mysterious stranger named Leland Gaunt opens a new store called "Needful Things" on Castle Rock's main street.
But while the store appears to be nothing more than a run-of-the-mill curiosity shop, its real identity is far more sinister. Every customer who enters "Needful Things" finds the one thing they most covet for sale on the shelf.

An 11-year-old boy buys a 1956 Sandy Koufax baseball card, his mother buys a pair of Elvis Presley's sunglasses. A sheriff's deputy purchases an old fishing pole exactly like the one his father used pole exactly ike the to have. And so on.

The prices are incredibly cheap, but Leland is not after money. He wants souls.

As a condition of each sale, Gaunt makes the purchaser promise to play a Kaye (Anne Lauterbach) croons "Where the Boys Are" as Cheryl, Donna and Peggy (Sara Stock, Erin Fehlau and Jennifer Brewster) harmonize in The Taffetas, now playing at Syracuse Stage's After Ours.

Twenty musical numbers, including two extended medieys, are neatiy spread among the four singers, and they range from the merely entertaining to the fantastic.

Examples of the latter include "Dedicated To the One I Love," performed by Peggy (Jennifer Brewster), "Tonite You Belong to Me" by Donna (Erin Fehla) and Peggy, "Where the Boys Are" by Kaye (Anne Lauterbach) and "Johnny Angel" by Cheryl (Sara Stock).

Throughout both the numbers and the dialogue, Lauterbach gives the most polished performance, but all four excel. They are aided by the simple but flashy direction of Louis \(F\). Goldberg, complete with some nifty choreography. complete with some nifty choreography.
Many of the numbers segue right into the next - "I Cried," "Cry" and "Smile," for example, comprise an effective medfor
But the "Travel" and "Music" medleys, which end the first act and begin the second one, go on too long. The first, in particular, could be trimmed in half and still give each of the singers a chance to shine.

And the dialogue in between the songs borders on the inane, but I suppose that's the point.

These, however, are moot points. I doubt if anyone will come to The Taffetas for the poignant dialogue.

The music makes up about 90 percent of the play. and it is fantastic.
So don't expect great drama with The Taffetss. Just come ready to see and hear some attractive performers sing great music, and you will not be disappointed.
"The Taffetas" will be playing tonight through Sunday. with shows at 10:30 p.m. tonight and Saturday and 9 p.m. Sunday. After Ours is located in the Sutton Pavilion. 820 E. Genesee St. For more information, call the box oflice at

Gaunt's merchandise weaves a powerful spell on the purchasers, making them care about nothing but the thing they bought.

As the town falls under his spell, the practical jokes become more deadly. Before long, paranoid and feuding neighbors are aking knives and guns to each other.

At the center of all this is calm, rational Sheriff Alan Pangbourn, who can't figure out what has driven everyone in town bonkers.

As with much of King's writing, Needfol Things is a synthesis of many earlier, tried-andtrue horror themes.

The mysterious power leland holds over his customers is reminiscent of both Ray Bradbury's Something Wicked This Way Comes and the Joyce Carol Oates short story The Bingo Master.

And the theme of a town gripped by collective madness owes a great deal to Peter Straub's book Floating Dragon. King, as usual, takes these themes and makes them his own. But the poorly drawn characters are what ultimately undermine Necdful Things. Except for Pangbourn, almost none of them ring true.

King's best book of small Lown evil, Salem's Lot, worked real. But many of the characters he presents in Needful Thing's are retreads.

The fat, soap-opera addicted housewife, the hypocritical preacher, the dishonest selectman and the closet homosexual have become, in King's pantheon, cardboard archetypes.

The dialogue too breaks down in places. Often it sounds forced, and punctures the novel's mood. In addition, as with The Dark Half, the book is marred by a hokey ending.

As King himself has ofter written, suspension of disbelief is vital if a horror novel is to work. But stilted characters and dialogue disrupt the reader's ability to believe too many times. Sections of the book are quite good, but as a long novel (690 pages) it just doesn't gel.

Needful Things is not an unpleasant read. just a disappointing one. Avid King fans will purchase it nnyway, but more casual readers are advised to wait for the paperback.

The Syracuse University woments swimming team is fac ing a program on the rise in the State University of New York at Buftalo Saturday, but that dnesn't seem to bother Orange coach Lou Walker.
"It's hard to tell this early in the season, but it's been a pretty dominant meet for us," Walker said. "There's always a chance rof an upset1. You never know what's going to happen. Talentwise, 1 think were in good shupe.

The Orangewomen (3-0) won the previous two meetings with the Bulls by what Walker called Somfortable margins.

SUNY-Buffalo is in its first year at the Division I level after eing a Top 10 Division If team.
"They want to swim the better schools and it's a reasonable distance," Walker said. "It's a chance for us to swim at a very fine facility in a very good swimming arca. It's worked very well for all parties concerned." The Bulls top swimmer is Angie Blaser, who Walkercalled "an excellent sprint freestyler."
(Blaser) won the 50 -meter freestyle and we won just about everything else," Walker said about last year's meet.

Continued from Page 16 was suspended for one game due to undisclosed disciplinary reasons, while Karem Zajick missed the game because of an ankle injury sustained in an in trasquad serimmage on Sunday.

The Orangewornen jurnped out to a \(7-6\) lead eariy in the game but played catch-up the rest of the way.

Sophomore Angel Lewis, who sat out last season with a knee injury, and freshman Melayne Cromwell both made their Orangewomen debuts in the first half.
Lewis tied for the team lead with center Holly Oslander, scoring 14 points as the starting point guard.
Cromwell, forward, came off the bench and scored two points with 4:45 left in the first half to cut Kosice's largest lead of the half down to seven, 29-22. "Angel's been great." Oslander said. "She's a really confident player.
"It was good for (Lewis and Cromwell) to get into the game, to try to get the nerves out."
The Orangewornen went on a \(6-0\) run right beforc halnime to bring therm within three.
The next time down the court. Erin Kenneally was fouled and made both of her free throws.

Then, with six seconds ieft on the clock, the Orangewomen cut the score to \(35-32\) when Shawn Ziemba finished a pretty fast break, which went from Amos to Crouse to Ziemba.
(Playing fast-break offense) is what we were trying to do the entire first half," Jacobs said "I think we were tentative. Everyone was afraid to make mis takes. That tentativeness made us slower than we needed to be,

The Orangewomen couldn't get closer than three points in the entire second half.

At 9:44 Lewis put one in on an end to end drive to make the score 53-50.
It was a couple of threepointers which did the Orange women in, however. Two of Kosice's Zuzana Sivakova's three field goals were from way outside the three-point line. giving the Czechs leads of seven and eight points.

Sivakova is a 5-foot-11, 26-year old veteran on the Czechoslovakian team. She is one of four players over 25 years old, mak ing Kosice a more experienced and disciplined team than the Orangewomen.
"They are a very good passing team. Which we are not at this team. which we are not at this point." Jacobs said. "They use and see each other very well. You can tell that they've phayed together quite a while.

Stronf offonsive robounding late in the game enabled Kosice to stop the Orangewomen from making any late runs, solidifying the 76-68 victory.

Guard Jana Ingrovaled Kosice with 18 points while forward Andrea Chupikova chipped in 16.

Ingrova also pulled down 12 rebounds, while Oslander had 14 for the Orange.
In 33 minutes of action, Amos scored 13 points and had 10 rebounds in the losing cause. She said the solid effort helped her confidence rise.
"I felt real comfortable oftensively," Amos said. "1 feel lve always been a pretty good defensive player. Now, offensively, I feel a little bit more comfortable."

The Orangemen's victory in the University division last year after an eighth place finish at the Big East Championships indicate that Syracuse is capable of contending for a championship.

Two of the top five Orangemen runners are back after missing the Georgetown-Rutgers meet due to sickness and injury. Senior co-captain Gary Hans suffered a bronchial infection and senior Mike Murphy was out with hamstring pulls, which hampered their practices.
Coleman said the experience of the five seniors will make the ECAC meet even more special. Maryjo Dougherty, Sarah Martini. Schulte said the Bilue Devils will present the biggest problem for the Orangewomen. Duke is presently ranked sixth in the mideast regional rankings and is at the top of the ACC volleyhall standings.

The Orangewomen, however. will have to battle more than the talents of the North Carolinian triumvirate. SU will have to ward off the fatigue of playing three matches on three separate three matches on three separate ourts in only two days.
"It's going to be tough to play three different teams, all on their home courts, in one weekend." Schulte said.
SU has yet to lose to an ACC opponent during Schulte's five years with the Orangewomen. Syracuse has also defeated the eventual ACC champion the previous two years.

However, Schulte said the Orangewomen's past dominance of the ACC will be harder to duplicate this season.

Foley has thrown 18 touchdown passes, but has also tossed 14 interceptions. He has completed just 50 percent-of his passes for 1,859 yards.

Early in the season the ball was always in Glenn Foley's hands." Pasqualoni said. "Now that the concept of what they're trying to do running the ball has been established. 1 think it has helped Glenn Foley tremendousily. Now they're able to throw the ball off the run.
The Orangemen. who lead the Biys East in rushing defense. allowing 92.8 yards per game. will make stopping the run their first priority. Todd said.
"What we want to do is play a sound run defense first and then play pass," Todd said. "If then play pass," Todd said. "If

Although she scored 14 points, sharing the team lead with center Holly Oslander, the 5-foot-7 sophomore admitted she was a little anxious about her debut.

I know that today, all day I was really nervous," Lewis said. "It's been about a year and a half since l've been able to compete, so I was really excited. But after the jump ball, the jitters went away:"

Oslander said Lewis" jitters weren't evident on the court.
"I think she did really well," Oslander said. "She was really under control and I don't think she was nervous at all."

Throughout the preseason, coach Barbara Jacobs has stressed the need for a point guard to step up and become a leader.

With junior Erin Kenneally, who occupied the spot two seasons ago, and seniors Charie Crouse and Karen Zajick capable of playing the point, the position seemed likely to fall upon a veteran player.
But on Thursday night, Lewis staked her claim to the point position.
"She's a very good point guard and she's going to get better," Jacobs said. "She did a nice job defensively in the second half."

Two quick fouls relegated Lewis to only five minutes of first-half play, but she returned to play every minute of the second half.

The former USA Today All-Michigan selection also finished with two assists and three rebounds

According to Lewis, the play against Kosice was different than what she last faced in high school.
"It was a little physical," Lewis said. "They were really smart and they looked like they've been playing together for a long time."

With the absence of Zajick, who sustained an ankle injury in Sunday's intrasquad scrimmage, Lewis was forced See LeWIS Page 13

A Holocaust survivor recounted the graphic experiences of two death camps to illustrate the tragedy of World War II.
"How did I survive? Why me? I don't know. Maybe I survived so that I could be here to talk to you - the future, our future," said Morris Dan.
"If I don't talk to you, then who will talk so that this never happens again?" he said.

Dan said today's society must always remember the tragedy of six million adults and I \(1 / 2\) million babies who were murdered just because they wers Jews, he said.

Dan survived the Nazi death camps of Auschwitz and Buchenwald in Poland during World War It and told his stories to about 90 people in the Hall of Languages Thursday

Dan was 16 years old when the Nazis occupied his hometown of Ciechanow. occupied his hometown of Cilechanow, Poland,
"The Nazis told the Jews, 'You must wear these yellow Stars of David,"" he said. "We did that. Then, 'You can't walk on the sidewalks. You must walk in the streets.' We did that. Then they told everyone."

Handicapped also killed
The Nazis did the same with handicapped people, telling them they would be taken to a hospital.
"About 100 handicapped people went to the town square and the Nazis shot them dead

The Jews in the town were rounded up and transported in railroad cattle cars to the death camps, he said. The Nazis rewarded the town's non-Jews with a bottle of whiskey for each Jew they turned in.

The sign above the entrance of the Buchenwald death camp read, "Work will make you free." Dan said even though the Jews worked, they were still though the Jews wo Rolling up his sleeve, Dan revealed the tattoo cut into his skin by the Nazis.

"'You are 74886,"' Dan said, repeating what a Nazi guard had told him. "From now on, there is no more Morris Dan.'
"If you wanted to live, you had to fight and struggle every day."
After the guards woke up the prisoners each morning. the prisoners were served a breakfast of blackened water that the Nazis called coffee, he said.

\section*{Scholar examines race in Bible}

By MARIE O'TOOLE
Staff Writer
Until the Renaissance, characters in the Bible were not depicted as white, according to William Dwight McKissic Sr., a Baptist preacher and scholar.
McKissic spoke Thursday in Grant Auditorium about the role blacks and other people of color played in the Old Testament and the founding of Christian churches.

A graduate of Ouachita Baptist University in Arkansas, McKissic said he became interested in his research "not to look for black folks in the Bible, but to preach to my congregation through the Book of Genesis the origin of mankind."

It was genetically possible that the three sons of Noah were the ancestral fathers of all three races, McKissic said.

A geneticist he consulted confirmed that two dark-complexioned parents could conceive a light child, but not the other way around.

A recent case in Australia of a British man and a Nigerian woman who bore twins - one white and the other black - caused McKissic to question, "Why not in biblical times, as well?"
According to Acts 17:26, all races were descended from a common blood.

\section*{Birthplace of man}

McKissic said while it is generally accepted by modern scholars that the first man and woman were black, the Bible cites Mesopotamia instead of Africa as the birthplace of Adam.

The first world leader, Nimrod (meaning "mighty one") was from the farnily of Ham, the black son of Noah. His descendants ruled Mesopotamia for 2000 years, McKissic said.

The Canaanites were described as black by the Jewish Talmud of the sixth century, McKissic said.
"Modern schoiars don't give credit to Libyans, Nigerians and Canaanites of biblical times as being black," he said.
He also cited Exodus 12:18, which says that "a mixed multitude left Egypt," as an example of multiculturalism
Blacks also played a fundamental role in the founding of Christianity, McKissic said.
"In Acts 13:1, we're told that two Ethiopian men played major parts in the Church at Antioch, Syria, and ordained the Apostle Paul who carried the Good News to the Europeans."

\section*{Natural religion}

Christianity is the natural, or indigenous, religion for Africans, McKissic argues.

According to a National Geographic study. Ethiopians were committed to the God of Abraham before the first European missionaries came "The Cross preceded the Crescent in Ethiopia by 400 years, he said.

The Africans practiced monotheistic worship of a benevolent god 600 years before the Hebrews, McKissic said, and in the first century the Coptic church in Egypt preceded the Roman one.

McKissic cited Acts 8:26, in which the \section*{Palestine advocates criticize Madrid summit}

\section*{by Steve daly}

Following the recent Middle East peace conference, two advocates for the establishment of a Palestinian state said the Madrid conference may have come too late.

Jeanne Butterfield, chair of the North American Coordinating Committee for Non-Governmental Organization of Pal-Non-Governmental Organization of Palestine, said the chances of 1.7 million Palestinians being awarded a sovereign Palestinians being awarded a sovereign state diminish by the minute as the state diminish by the minute as the United States drags its feet by giving aid to Israel.

Meanwhile, Butterfield said the Israelis continue to establish new Jewish settlements and maintain military outposts in the occupied Israeli territories of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights

Butterfield, who is also the executive director of the Palestine Solidarity Committee, and Virginia Tilley, director of the independent project settjement watch for the NACC, addressed about 75 people Thursday.

While the Palestinian question remains undecided, the Israelis are committing deliberate ethnocide on the Palestinians by choking off their economic, political and cultural resources and political and cultural resources and limiting their free movement, Butterfield said

\section*{Human rights violation}
"The treatment of the Palestinians is direct violation of the international charter of human rights," she said.
"The Israelis have maintained the conscious intention and impact of stranthe type of brutality that is inherent in a military occupation," she said.

The United States is the largest monetary contributor to the occupation, she said.

Israel receives more U.S. military and economic aid than any other nation - \($ 3.1\) billion out of a total aid budget of \($ 15\) billion in 1991.
Most of the aid money goes to maintaining military control and developing new Jewish settlements in the occupied territories, Butterfield said.
"It is costly to keep up an army to sit on the necks of 1.7 million people," she said. "Without U.S. aid, the occupation would have to be abandoned.
"It is glaring how very special Israel is to the United States," she said. "What are the priorities of U.S. foreign aid?"
The specific area that the Palestinians desire for annexation, and where the majority of the Palestinian population currently lives, is the West Bank territory.

Extending from the west bank of the Jordan River, west to JerusaJem, north to the Golan Heights and south to the edge of the Dead Sea, it has been controlled by Israel since the war of 1967.

Gradual autonomy
Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has proposed a program of gradual autonomy, where the Palestinians, over an unspecified number of years, would slowly gain control of the West Bank.

The frst step would include free election of local Palestiniangovernments and control of daily municipal functions.
Palestinian officials have expressed interest in this, but the Israelis have said they will not begin to implement the program of autonomy until the Palestinians show some unity of purpose
-something the Israelis say the Palestinians have not yet exhibited.

The Palestinians' response to this Butterfield said, is that Israel's restriction of Palestinian freedoms keeps them from organizing a single body that speaks for all Palestinians,

Meanwhile, the Israelis are constructing a ring of strictly Jewish settlements around Jerusalem that are extending further and further into the West Bank and leaving less room for the Palestini ans and more limited access of Jerusa lem, Tilley said.

At one time it was hoped that Jerusalem, recognized as the world's religious center. would remain an inter self-governing city. Tilley said.
"What is happening is the west bank territory is becoming so small and so cut off that there can never be any real economic and political action taking See ISRAEL Page 13

\section*{Politics destroy wetlands \\ The "education" president, the "cham-} pion of grass roots America" president, and, finally, the "environmental" president.

The cliches are staggering and getiting old quickly. The country continues to hear about its president's committment to AIDS research, education systems, and other issues not being addressed during this presidency.

Now, after numerous press conferences this summer in Kennebunkport with stunning backdrops and scenery, President Bush is destroying the American wetlands.

The White House attempted to redefine the meaning of "wetlands," which would release nearly 50 percent of current wetlands area from governmental protection and allow construction to take place in Florida and

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) discouraged the White House from suppressing information about the construction plans, urging it to go public with these conclusions, which puts 100 million acres of protected land in jeopardy.

Destroying areas of governmental protection in secret proves the theory that governmental scope is too large in the United States. Red tape needs to be reduced and plans like this need to be averted by the American people.

Too big, too strong. American government, and more specifically President Bush's power, has grown to inhuman proportions. It has become an administration worried about the individual opinions of the wealthy and unable to represent the country as a whole.

\section*{Policy casts cadets in bad light}

I said it before and I'll say it again: the U.S. Department of Defense's policy banning homois both illogical and ridiculous.

I have vet to hear one sensible explanation of why "homosexuality is incompatible with military service.

Although I believe students shou!d do everything in their power to get the policy changed, I must disagree with the course of action advocated by former Gay, Lesbian. Bisexual ancaludent Association PresiDARIN dent. Todd Nothstein.
POWELL

\section*{ORANGE} OBSERVAIONS According to Thursday's issue of The Daily Orange, Nothstein. during issue, called for the ROTC leave campus if it did not change its policy. "We want the ROTC policy to change by 1993 or for the organization to leave campus," Nothstein said.
Well. What a novel approach that is fighting intolerance with more intolerance Banning the ROTC program is wrong. All it will do is inflict needless suffering on the students who rely on the ROTC program to fund their educations.

The ROTC cadets are not the enemy. The Department of Defense is. ROTC cadets are nat bigots or gav-bashers. They are bound by the rules of their organization, rules that they do not make.
no control over is just plain stupid.
And. at a time when collegre education costs are stratospheric. eliminating the opportunity
ROTC offers is unfair to the students who need

Banning the ROTC is a knee-jerk reaction. It's easy to say "Oh, the ROTC is wrong. Let's ban it." It's much more difficult to work for change in an atmosphere of tolerance.
SU's Board of Trustees apparently shows mo interest in this issue. It's time for them to wake up.
The best course of action for opponents of the ROTC policy is to make themselves heard - loudly and often.

Continue to hold open forums. Gather petitions. Persuade Chancellor Kenneth Shaw to pressure the Department of Defense. Barrage our do-nothing Congress with letters and phone calls. This is the way to get things done-

Throwing ROTC off campus will only create enemies
The policy is wrong. Anyone can be a soldier. Every qualified person should be allowed to serve their country. Military discrimination against homosexuals is no more justified than discrimination against blacks and women.

This is an important issue. It's not just a gay concern. Everyone who opposes this silly concern. Everyone who opposes this sily policy. from students to faculty to ROTC members, should make themselves heard.

But don't return one form of intolerance with another.

longer in use? The fact is, the longer in use? The fact is, th leghold trap which is most widely used, is still legal in all parts of the United States excluding New Jersey, Rhode Island and Florida. The leghold trap is a torture device. It is set by positioning a trigger which is connected to a powerful spring which, in turn is attached to a pair of steel jaws. Often, some sort of bait is put around a trap to lure is put around a trap to lure unsuspecting animals. When an animal comes to a trap and is released and the jaws snap around the animal's leg with tremendous force.

Crossman also states that "once caught, an animal feels no discomfort inflicted by the trap because this area becomes the captured animal will struggle to get loose, mutilating the foot and causing deep, painful lacerations. Or the animal will attempt escape by chewing or twisting off the trapped extremity. There's no way anyone could convince me that isn"t painful. Ten to twelve hours after being captured the animal is still in pain." It is important to note that any animal can be caught in these traps. Cats and dog are just as easily caught as are just as easily caught as those sought for furs, and constitute many wasted lives. Crossman accuses S.U.F.A.R. (Syracuse University for Animal Rights) of propaganda. The Random House College Dictionary defines propaganda as "information or ideas methodically spread to promote or insure a cause of a groun nation. Utilizing this definition.S.U.F.A.R.'s actions fit the description. It is necessary to distribute information in order to counteract fallacies such as the ones present in Crossman's letter. However. if Crossman wishes to imply that propaganda involves a twisting of words, then he is the one guilty of this. He uses words guilty of this. He uses words such as "dispatch the animal" such as "dispatch the animal" to conceal the awful drowning of animals who are slowly killed by underwater body gripping devices. Also, game management and environmental recreationalist are euphemisms used to describe the bloody sport of hunting. Mr. Crossman is worried about his "pastime" being taken away. Perhaps he should think about the fact that his pastime is nothing that his pastime is nothing more than a ritualized murder.

"In 1492. Columbus sailed the ocean blue ..."Many people were taught this rhyme to remember the year Columbus "discovered" North America.
For many American Indians no rhyme is needed. They know next year marks Columbus' quincenternary, the 500th anniversary of the oppression of their people in this country.
"I feel trivialized every time someone says Columbus discovered America," said Ginny Doctor, executive director of the Native American Indian Club.

We have survived genocide. the doctrine of Manifest Destiny and John Wayne... our vitality exists." she said.
Doctor spoke at Friday's Women's Studies lecture in the Schine Student Center.
Tribe mothers and leaders of the Onondaga Nation have said the Onondaga Nation have said the quincentennary is a time healing and reconciliation.
When Columbus landed in the Caribbean islands, he thought he was in India and named the people he saw Indians, she said.

Ginny Doctor
According to Doctor, Columbus said, "these people will make good servants" and they were brought to Europe and sold as slaves.
"Many Native Americans were also torn apart and eaten by the Spaniards' dogs," she said.

About 200 years ago, "the fledgling United States continued the British idea of treaties ued the British idea of treaties and negotiating and with each treaty the Indians lost more of their land, Doctor said.

The city of Syracuse and Syracuse University are actually on Onondaga Nation land, she said. The city is leased from After 650 treaties, only land deemed too inhospitable and uninhabitable was left to the Indians," Doctor said.

milhon, she said.
Doctor grew up on the Onondaga Nation territory, which was then called a reservation. She said she experienced "freedom at Onondaga unmatched by any other place I've been."
"This was my age of innocence ... perhaps because it's the place where the best of both worlds meet," she said.

Five years ago, Doctor learned there was a toxic waste dump very close to her home on the territory. "I know because I played in it; luckily we got our water from the other direction. but. I wonder what effect it's had on me."

Nat living on tribal lands
Today about two-thirds of the American Indian population does not live on tribal lands, and Doctor has lived in the city of Syracuse since 1974.
"Migration to metro areas and cities began in the 1950 s when the reservations had little or no economic base," she said.
"The Eisenhower administration felt relocation and termination policies were needed," she added.

With this great migration to the cities came not only culture shock, but also a disintegration of the farnily due to the change in status of women, Dactor said.
"Women were moved into a culture where they were not respected and into a dependant situation," she said. "Wornen were vested with agreat amount of power in the tribes."

Doctor has been involved with the Native American Indian Club, located in West Syracuse, for 15 years.

She said it is a multipurpose agency offering an number of direct servicess such as job training, after-school child care, a food pantry, substance abuse help and assistance in dealing with family violence.
"It's scary to think what the next 500 years will bring. especially because Native Americans are still being oppressed in this country," Doctor said.
"We must turn the world around because if we don't we won't be able to survive the way we do now," she said.

The Japanese are less versed on the disease and its deadly effects because there are only 405 ADDS cases in Japan as compared to 180,000 in the United States.

Advances on the Japanese stocks were similar to the response in the United States, where condom stocks also rose.

President Bush asked credit card issuers to cut interest rates last week to help the country's weak economy.

Bush spoke at a fund-raiser in New York and noted that credit card interest rates are commonly 18 per cent, while the prime rate banks charge their creditworthy customers is only 7.5 percent
"I frankly would like to see the credit card rates down," Bush said. "I believe that would help stimulate the consumer and get confidence moving again.

On the heels of Bush's speech, the Senate approved a cap on credit card interest rates. The measure sets a top card rate equal to the rate the Inter nal Revenue Service charges on overdue taxes, plus four percent. IRS rates rise and fall with the market. Under current conditions, the credit card cap would be 14 percent.

Now that the Senaste has approved the measure, the House is likely to consider the proposal this week.

\section*{Twilight Book & Game Emporium offers students alternative reading}

\section*{By HUAN NGHIEM}

Contributing Writer
Students tired of reading textbooks and unable to find an escape in the regular bookstores might want to stop by Twilight Book & Game Emporium.
Twilight is the new bookstore that has opened downstairs from the Orange Cafe, on the corner of South Crouse Avenue and East Adams Street.
The store specializes in comic books. sports cards. role-playing garnes and science fiction/fantasy novels. It is a located on North Salina Street Manager Brian Dowd said the reason behind the campus bookstore is convenience for students.

"We did a bit of a survey and found college students are our age group," Dowd said. "We felt we were missing a few students out on North Salina; some people had never been there, freshmen who didn't know about us, so we figured who didn't know ab we'd come up here.
Dowd said the combination of the different specialties works because many of the people that come into the store are involved in all four hobbies.
"People may be coming down for a role-playing game and see a comic that a Dungeon \(&\) - Dragon's comic, and there is crossover within comics."

Cornics' appeal on the rise
The appeal of comics, which Dowd estimates is more than half of the store's sales, has been on the rise. No longer "kid stuff,' comics have, in the past decade, evolved into well-illustrated pieces, to the point that some are called graphic novels, he said.
As for role-playing games. Dowd said the attraction is in the ability to become lenge a person's thinking skills.
*You can pretty much play anything you want now: superheroes. science fiction, old Western, anything," Dowd said. "You can be a gunfighter to a space pilot. wou can be a gunig

The store has a variety of comics and rames, including imported Japanese comes and British role-playing games. While the store itself is small, Dowd says its connection to the parent store gives it more size than is readily apparent.
"I have the support of my larger store," Dowd said. "If you don't see something here, I can get it from our other store. And if our other store doesn't have it, we'll check our distributors.
Dowd says there is a role-playing group on campus, but he has not gotten information from them. He himself is \section*{Job panic hits December graduates \\ can still see the business cards of those}

By VINCENT SALISBURY

\section*{ルiM}

As the holiday season approaches, most students are looking forward to finishing the semester and taking a vacation.
December graduates tend to have different feelings about this time of the year.

Words like panic, stress, worry and recession often pop up in their conversations with people.

Most of the December graduates have transferred schools, added majors or transferred schools, added majors or last May.

They also will graduate at a time when the recession is still making job hunting difficult in most fields.
In addition, they are usually taking the most difficult courses in their programs and have little time to hunt for a job.

The combination of these facts means that developing a support network is especially important for December graduates. This support network should be mamily and counselors whom you can consult with concerning your job search Seek out individuals who can provide advice, encouragement and connections

Check in with the counselor
Last year, many December graduates called the Placement Center and made phone appointments with counselors. This gave them a chance to consider new approaches to their job searches.

Unfortunately, many of this year's December graduates are just now considering their job searches and finding they have missed deadlines for jobs.

The Placement Center hosted companies interviewing for December gradumisged the month of October. If you who came to recruit.
If you are interested in a corporate training program, there are some that start in February and others that only begin in the summer. The latter will sometimes take on a December graduate move the assistant into the summer training program.

Other students are taking jobs that were not their first choice in order to have a position starting in the spring. These graduates tell themselves that they do not have to stay there forever. One December graduate said at least she will have an income with which to pay off her student loans. off her student loans

Many December graduates have gained positions through connections made in their fields.

To make such connections, find out what the national association is and when an industry conference is taking place. You might even want to intern in an organization in your field just to get a foot in the door.

The key thing that a December graduate can do is talk with advisers and counselors to set up a strategy appropriate for job hunting in a particular

Walker's 148 yards gives him the Big East lead in rushing with 851 yards for the season and keops him within striking other positions taken concerning restructuring included evaluating the need of university support services and budgets of auxiliary units, such as the athletic department, for potential financial savings.

GSO members also said proposed budget cuts should not affect the quality of education students receive. Faculty should maintain service, caring, diversity and innovation in their teachings.

Allocation of funds for various student groups was also dissussed at the meeting.
GSO approved allocating \($ 5608\) to SU Ambulance. However, some graduate students were skeptical about supporting SUA.

They said the organization should receive funds from the Carrier Dome since SUA covers Dome events.

The Iragi Minister of Health calls the food distribution programs "gimmicks." The New Fork Times says the minister believes "if the people of Europe and the United States saw a vast and direct food distribution effort under way ... it would quiet their consciences and shut up' their opposition to continting United Nations sanctions."

The Iragi government's ration of formula for infants is approximately six days worth of food per month.

Iraqi currency is being printed in large denominations to keep up with the rate of inflation since there is no national in come, only spending. Moststaterun industries are idle and the work force remains inert. Black market prices have put staple goods out of reach for most Iraqis and as a result, murder and robberies are riming at a disturbing rate.

Although the issue has subsided in the United States, many Iraqis believe that President George Bush stopped short of securing a satisfactory concinsion to the Persian Gulf War.
On to the Persian Guif War.
Earlier this week The New York Times related the story of a "member of one of Iraq"s most a "member of one of "raq 3 most prominent families" Who said many Iraqis hold President Bush responsible for the continuing sufferimg because he did not fimish the job he started on Jan. \(17 .{ }^{*}\)
The woman said, wrell the world we are suffering and bleeding, tell Mr, Bush that there is a silent majority in Iraq that is against this regime, but we can't do anything about it and we are holding him responsible."

The debate over whether or not President Bush should have ordered the troops to press on to Baghdad and remove Saddam Hussein is no longer the object of discussion among political analysts. The military objecanalysts. rity Council didn't include that provision and any atternpt by provision and any aternpt by Washington to move militarily on the rragi leader would have had a decided negative impact on the recent Madrid Conference.

Questions remin unan* swered as to what the situation will be when next year's spring gives way to the sweltering Iragi summer. As the heat rises. so will Iraqi suffering.

\section*{SU retur head back \\ to Tampa}

By DAVID J. BUSCEMA
Asse. Sports Edito
You may not be able to fo home again, but as Syracuse University found out on Sunday, you can return to some places.
As expected, the 17 th-ranked Orangemen were extended and accepted an official invitation to the Hall of Fame Bowl in Tampa. Fla, on Sunday Syracuse, who will play No. 19 Ohio State on Jan. 1, beat Louisiana State University in the 1989 Hall of Fame Bowl, 23-10, and will be making its fifth straight bowl appearance.
The Orangemen are 3-0-1 in their past four bowl appearances
"We'd like to congratulate the administration, coaches, players and water boys," said Bernie Epstein, a member of the Hall of Fame selection committee. In particular, it was (the players) who kicked butt
"Now it's bonus time. (and) we'd like to offer you an official invitation at this ime.
Syracuse athletic director Jake Crouthamel accepted the invitation for the Orangemen and said he was thrilled by the return invite.
"On behalf of Chancellor (Kenneth) Shaw. the university, the athletie department and the football program, we are absolutely delighted and accept the invitation," Crouthamel said. "I think it's a great honor to be invited back, I think it's an even bigger honor than the first time.'

Syracuse beconnes the only team in the bowl's six-year history to be invited to play twice.
Nick Pund, another Hall of Fame Bowl representative, said the committee was just as anxious as Crouthamel to see the matchup between the Orangemen ( \(8-2\) overall and 4.0 Big East) and the Buckeyes (8-2 overall and 5-2 Big Ten).

If we could have picked two teams at the beginning of the year, they would have been the teams," Pund said.

The matchup promises to be intriguing as both teams stand at \(8-2\) overall. and both teams are in close proximity in the Top 25

Both teams will also close out the regular season next week. Syracuse will host West Virginia at the Carrier Dome and Ohio State will play No. 4 Michigan in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Despite the even matchup, the veteran Syracuse players have an added incentive, SU senior co-captain Tim Sandquist said.

Four years ago, we went up to Ohio State and they got the best of us (26-9 in 1988)," Sandquist said. "We want a little payback.

The Syracuse co-captains also said they would be more than glad to pay a visit back to Tampa.

I'm very excited about the trip." senior defensive back Greg Walker said "The first time was great, not only the game, but all the activities.

Sandquist mentioned activities that ranged from visiting Mickey Mouse to events that shouldn't include the kids."
"We did a lot of team activities," Sandquist said. "We went to Disney World (and) Busch Gardens. They have good nightlife out there. (We don't mind returning) at all, not when it's Tampa, Fla."
Walker, however, did have one small complaint about the team's last trip.

The hospitality was great," Walke said. "If you could do anything different, (it would be to) just let us stay there a litele longer.

This year, the Orangemen would have sion from a New Year's Day bowl Walker said.

Former Syracuse University football coach Dick MacPherson holds the championship trophy after the Orangemen beat Iouisiana State Univer sity 23-10 in the 1989 Hall of Fame Bowi. Syracuse returns to the Hall of Fame Bow to face No. 19 Ohio State on Jan. 1 in Tampa Stadium
"When the season started, one of our goals was to play on Jan. 1." Walker said. *Very few teams get to play on Jan. 1 and we're excited."
Speculation began that the Orangemen would be one of those few teams after Syracuse's convincing \(38-21\) win over then fifth-ranked Florida on Sept. 21.

SU looked as if it would have drawn interest from an even more prestigious bowl until back-to-back losses to Florida State and East Carolina.
"At one point, I thought they would be out of our class," Pund said.

On Oct. 5, though, Syracuse lost 46-14 to the Seminoles, then the top-ranked team in the nation. The following week, the Pirates, then unranked, beat SU, 23-20.
"We had our shot against East Carolina." Pasqualoni said. "That was a very costly (loss) but I think we grew.
"It was a goal of our team to play on Jan. 1. It's great to play in a bowl of this caliber and have an opportunity to play a great team like Ohio State
One would think the accomplishment of that goal would be even sweeter for Pasqualoni, who is in his first year as head coach for the Orange.

Despite keeping up the bowl pace former SU coach Dick MacPherson started, however, Pasqualoni placed credit on just about everyone but himself.
"It means the same thing to me as it does to the guys on the team", Pasqualoni said. "It's a team accomplishment. it's nothing I've accomplished.

I can't tell you enough about the great group of coaches we have here," Pasqualoni said, and proceeded to mention every member of his staff.

\section*{Latest trip makes five for seniors}

\section*{By JOSH BARNETT}

For the Syracuse University football seniors, their years as Orangemen have been filled with both style and substance.

The 17th-ranked Orangemen officially accepted an invitation to the Jan. 1 Hall of Fame Bowl on Sunday, meaning the 14 fifth-year seniors have appeared in a bowl in each of their years at SU.
"We came in style and we're leaving in style." Syracuse senior co-captain and in style," Syracuse senior co-captain and back-up quarterback Mark MeDonald said. "We came in and went to a bowl sard. We came in and went to a bowl and all throughout our carecrs weve gone to a bowl. Were special. This is something yo:

These Orangemen have had substantial success during their five years, compiling a 45-12-3 record and posting a 3-0-1 record in their four previous bowl appearances.
Syracuse tied Auburn in the Sugar Bowl \(16-16\) following the 1987 season. They beat Louisiana State University \(23-10\) in the Hall of Fame Bowl after the 1988 season. The Orangemen defeated Georgia 19-18 in the Peach Bowl following the 1989 season and last season shut out Arizona in the Aloha Bowl 28-0.

A person who hass had the opportunity to get a first hand look at this group of seniors is first-year head coach paul Pasqualoni, who joined the staff as a linebackers coach the same year they arrived.
"They work very, very hard," Pasqualoni said. "It's not luck. It's not an accident. It's the fact that it's a great program at Syracuse University and there's a great tradition here.

Prior to this stretch. Syracuse had never appeared in more than three consecutive bowls. SU lost to Oklahoma in the 1959 Orange Bowl. beat. Texas in the 1960 Cotton Bowl and beat Miami in the 1961 Liberty Bowl.
"It's a tremendous accomplishment that this program has made." senior offensive lineman and co-captain Andrew Dees said. "I'm happy I'm at a drew Dees said. where we vone to fivestraight prowls. I have friends at other schools and bowls. I have friends at other s.
they've never gone to a bowl."

When these seniors arrived on campus. they couldn't imagine the success the they couldn't imagine the success the next five seasons would bring co-captain Tim Sandquist said.
o-captain Tim Sandquist said.
"I neverenvisioned it," Sandquist said. "I just take it one game at a time.
Whatever happens at the outcome of that Whatever happens at the outcome of game is where I evaluate ourselves.

The evaluation has been positive since Syracuse's 11-0-1 season in 1987.

SU finished the regular season undefeated before tying Auburn in the Sugar Bowl on Jan. 1, 1988.

Syracuse had finished around the .500 mark the several previous seasons, but 1987 marked the turnaround in SU's fortunes.
-The current fifth-year seniors redshirted that season, but saw the changes begin to evolve.
"I saw that we had what it takes to be the team that we wanted to be," Dees said. "Everybody strived for that goal and we accomplished it."

Sandquist said the 1987 season marked a change in attitude which has carried through his years at Syracuse.
"Everybody just had a winning atti tude," Sandquist said. "Everybody wanted to win. Everybody worked hard to win Everybody saw what you had to do to win. You saw work ethics get better."

\section*{Midnight rally urges reform in Assembly} Ad hoc committee calls for more responsive student government

\section*{By JODI LAMAGNA}

An ad hoc committee of students calling for responsive student government and constitutional changes rallied in the Schine Student Center early this morning.
Students from several prominent campus groups as well as the Student Government Association spoke to more than 500 students who were waiting in line for Spectrum's Midnight Madness sale.
The committee had tried to bring a legislative bill to the SGA Assembly meeting Monday night. The rally pro-

\section*{SGA Assembly fails to recognize student proposal}

\section*{By SHEILA DOUGHERTY}

The Student Government Association has forgotten its roots, Syracuse University senior Lisa Nichele Skop said.
Skop addressed the SGA after it refused to hear student viewpoints on legislation.

The Assembly voted against discussing reform-minded legisiation at Monday night's meeting.

Skop sald she is angry because SGA, a group that is supposed to represent the students, refused to recognize student concerns.
"Even if you follow the rules, what they say goes," she said.

Before the controversial legislation, the Assembly approved the constitutionality of a section of the by-laws that corresponds to the SGA Constitution stating that any student may introduce a proposal at any SGA meeting.

The section provides SGA with guidelines for bringing legislation before the Assembly.

Assembly member Christina Liriano introduced and sponsored the reform bill that was backed by Skop and an ad hoc committee of students, she said.

Assembly objection
But after an objection by Assembly member Eric Weierstall, the Assembly voted against hearing the proposal at the meeting.
"This body didn't vote against the student body," said SGA recorder Natanya Levioff. "They voted against a proposal because of certain procedure."

\section*{Administrator calls alcohol policy too lenient}

\section*{BY GENARO C. ARMAS}

Staff Writer
The Syracuse University alcohol policy is too lenient, according to Kathleen Deters, student develop ment coordinator at the Office of Residence Life.
The policy is not strict enough because it gatheres to the New York state law that prohibits anyone under 21 from drinking alcohol, Deters said.
"The SU policy really isn't that stringent because it does not supersede the law," she said.

Deters said the policy needs to be stricter because alcohol abuse is a dangerously growing problem on campus.

Of the 280 reported studentconduct violations last year, 78 were alcohol-related, according to Benjarnin Baez, SU judicial adviser. But he said most violations involving alcohol were not reported.
\({ }^{*}\) This number should be much higher," he said.
A survey conducted by the Office of Residence Life last year found that 83 percent of students living in residence halls consume alcohol.

The study also revealed that 62 percent said their drinking has increased since coming to SU , while 55 percent said they usually drink about four or more drinks on a given night out.

\section*{Hall residents agree}

Seventy-four percent of the students in residence halls agreed alcohol abuse is a problem on campus.
"There is an unexpected norm that people should drink," Deters said. "This causes many problems for students.
"Some people here can't think of what a weekend would be like without going down to the Marshall Street barg."
Deters said officials at other colleges and universities nationwide also believe alcohol abuse is increasing among students.
A recent New York Times article cited alcohol policies are becoming stricter at Princeton and Rutgers universities. Syracuse and Dartmouth universities and William and Mary College served as a model for the policies.

Baez said other schools are considering banning kegs. SU policy prohibits kegs on all university property.

However, banning kegs does not alleviate the problem of alcohol abuse, Baez said.
Underage drinking in residence halls contributes significantly to the problem of alcohol abuse, Baez said. "There should be no alcohol present even if there is someone overage is in the room," he said

SU policy states alcohol-related violations within residence halls are first dealt with through the in-hall judicial systern.

The Oregon State University Bookstore Printing service may be affected by the recent ruling by a New York district court that rejected Kinko's Graphics Corp.'s claim that its copying fell under the "fair use" guidelines in the I976 U.S. Copyright Law.

The lawyer for OSU is currently reviewing the decision in order to deterstore, according to Terry Smith, the bookstore's textbook division manager.
"1'm not sure that we're going to be able to skirt around the law because of our position as a co-op," he said.

A number of departments at OSU may be affected by the decision. "It's unbelievable. It's frustrating. It will put constraints on what I'm able to provide my students for reading," said Michael Mix, a professor of biology.
"I could have students read (materials) in the reserve room at the library, but that's the pits," said Paul Farber, chairman of the general science department. "As an instructor, I feel it's not reasonable to ask students to buy a book if they're only going to be asked to read a small part of it."

In 1985, he began formal Zen training at the Dai Bosatsu Zendo where he was later ordained in 1988

Not a smooth transition
The transition into the monastery was not as smooth as Haber had hoped.
"On the morning of this transformation, 1 had a screaming argument with the assistant cook," he said
"I'm supposed to be imperturbable as a monk, and I went into a depression." he said. "I felt cheated as I always had because I was not what I wanted to be."

After mourning the death of his mother and two friends in the course of a year, Haber said he lost his faith.
"I realized that I was the same fountain of energy as I was when I was six," he said. "In closing the circle. I found my heart opened."
"In coming together I discovered there was room in my life for everything that comes" he said "It comeg with allowing said. it comes wich allowing ourselves to be who we are at this moment.
Haber is now active in providing support for the HIV positive community.

Because he has the virus too. Haber is building a house outside the monastery for when he gets sick.
"I'm building this little house. Am I building the house to die in or to live in? There's no difference," he said. "That's Zen practice. Knowiledge and consciousness of mortality is a freeing thing."

To survive a "real crisis" like AIDS, Haber professes an awakening experience.

In describing the healing process. Haber had mixed emotions.
"In one sense there"s nothing to be healed. We are whole and complete as we are."
"When we see the world with open eyes, it doesn't become more beautiful, just more spacious," he said. "And our lives become more spacious."
"\{The meditation process) is opening doors, and with rigorous work the light begins to illuminate the room in the life we live," he said. "When this happens, there is hope and a cause for real celebration."

\section*{Beijing rebuffs Baker}

It's time for Congress to begin serious discussion about imposing diplomatic and trade sanctions against China. Secretary of State James Baker's recent trip to Beijing has shown that the Bush administration's policy of "constructive engagement" is failing to produce results.

The secretary said he didn't go to China expecting "a dramatic breakthrough." In that case he surely was not disappointed.

The Chinese promised Baker they would refrain from selling missiles to Pakistan, Syria and other nations, but no formal agreement was signed. This commitment is contingent upon the United States allowing the Chinese to have access to high-speed American computers. In addition, Beijing also wants President Bush to rescind his order barring the Chinese from launching American satellites from their missiles.

Baker failed to get a commitment from the Chinese to stop selling nuclear technology to other nations. The material that Beijing is selling for civilian use can easily be adapted to a nuclear weapons program. China is already exporting such material to Iran and Algeria.

Baker failed to make any progress in the area of human rights. His request for the release of democracy advocates, in prison since the Tiananman Square demonstrations, fell on deaf ears.

In fact, two more dissidents were detained during Baker's visit in an effort to prevent them from meeting the secretary.

Baker failed to persuade the Chinese to allow members of the Red Cross to visit the political prisoners and he failed to convince Beijing to stop jamming the Voice of America broadcasts.
Baker did receive a commitment from the Chinese to refrain from exporting prison labor products to the United States. However, China has had a ban on these products for years. They have simply failed to abide by their own laws.
Restrictions on market access have resulted in China's \($ 13\) billion trade surplus with the United States. They have no reason to comply with Baker's requests.
As Baker has left Beijing emptyhanded, the White House would do well to consider replacing "constructive engagement" with a policy of "enlightened disengagement."

\section*{Void filled by WERW}

I can't decide whether to be more annoyed or amused with WJPZ after reading the article in The Daily Orange titled "Alternative radio program hits airwaves."

It's frustrating that WJPZ has decided to start featuring "alternative" programming precisely at the same time that WERW, after years of struggling, can finally be heard on the SU campus. What is even more annoying is the fact that WJPZ doesn't want to acknowledge WERW's existence, much less consider WERW to be a threat to their oh-so-precious ratings and new oh-so-precious ratings and new

And in this quest for ratings and recognition, WJPZ lost sight of the fact that, ideally, a college radio station's main purpose is to provide progressive programming for the college community. Instead, WJPZ jumped right into the

Like many cities across the country, Syracuse is in the process of revitalizin and rejuvenating its downtown area.

Large department stores have gone out of business, The Galleries of Syracuse building has been unable to attract the expected number of tenants, and repairs expected number of tenants, and repa

But help is on the way
A year ago, Mayor Thomas Young committed \($ 10\) million to an overall plan to improve the basic infrastructure of downtown, according to Anne Sheridan, assistant director of development.
"Salina Street, which is everyone"s perception of downtown, is in pretty rough shape." Sheridan said in a recent phone interview

Plans call for the widening of Salina Street in the downtown area by four feet on both sides, new sidewalks with brick strip paving and ornamental lighting that complements the architectural design of older buildinge.
"If (the repairs are) not done, you've got stuff that's in serious need of repair," Sheridan said. "It's more maintenance than anything else."

Syracuse University's Project Advance (SUPA) is a program that provides high school seniors with the opportunity to take college-level courses.

Project Advance offers a variēty of courses that are identical to the ones taught at SU. High school studerits are taught by their own teachers, but experitaught by their own teachers, but experience the same course load, tex assignments as SU students.
"These are the actual freshman courses that you get on campus,"~ said Sari Signorelli, assistant to the program's director. director.

Biology, chemistry, computer engineering and calculus are offered through SUPA. Courses in economics, public affairs, English, writing, psychology, sociology and religion are also available.

A majority of the more than 4,000 students participating in SUPA can receive credit, exemption from courses and advanced placement at the college they eventually attend.

lying beneath the city sidewalks.
When downtown was built 100 years ago, vaults were constructed to store coal and merchandise that were delivered to stores, Mareane said.
"The vaults have generally deteriorated as a result of neglect, which means our sidewalks are on the verge of collapse at worst," Mareane said. "At best, it means we can't put attractive streetscape improvements on top of them if they will collapse in five years."
Mareane said the decision to repair or fill in the vaults will be up to the owners of the stores.
"With that very unsexy improvement we can put icing on the cake in downtown," Mareane said.

While revitalization projects have oc curred in pockets of the city before, this will be the first large-scale atternpt at rejuvenating the downtown area itself.

We're applying the phenomenal results of experiments in Armory and Franklin squares on a much larger level," Mareane said. "A lot of development has already occurred, and there's more to follow. This fits nicely in an overall downtown development agenda that totals \($ 300\) million."

"Teachers get special training and a greater knowledge base," said Kirk Bristol; an administrator at West Genesee High School. West Genesee, in Camillus, is one of 15 Syracuse-area high schools participating in SUPA. According to Bristol, his school has between 30 and 40 students enrolled in five Project Advance courses this semester.
SUPA started in 1973 with six high schools in the Syracuse area. The program began as a way to combat "senioritis."
"In the Syracuse area, high school administrators were concerned over the academic boredom of seniors," Signorelli said. These educators came to SU "seekstudents, she said.

Signorelli explained the program was created to challenge high school seniors and to give them a chance to work at a higher educational level.
"The program is very successful pertaining to the educational needs of students," Bristol said. "We are able to teach courses we would normally not have available to our atudents."

Improvements are also planined for Perseverance Park, while recent improvements in the City Hall area include the conversion of the 140-year-old SA&K building into a City Hall annex.

Mareane also described the adaptive reuse of the Larned Building on Wash ington Street. While the 100 -year-old facade will remain, the inside is being gutted to make way for a parking garage. In addition, a 1960 -style parking garage will be connected to the Larned Building. It will also get a facelift to mateh the older building.

And the National Guard armory at Armory Square will be converted into a Armory Square will be converted into a hands-on science museum, similar to the Onds-on science museum, similar to the antarios said.

Another project on the horizon is further development in Armory Square Mareane said a mixed-use commercial and residential development will be added, including 39 condominiums, restaurants, retail shops and possibly a movie theater.

City officials hope to draw more conventions to Syracuse when a convention center, under construction near the Everson Museum of Art, opens. Sheridan said the revitalization will take that prospect into account when planning the types of outlets for the downtown area.
"One of the nice things is that people are looking for a mix." Sheridan said.

\section*{See City Page 11 \\ earn credit}

Since its introduction, SUPA has grown to include 105 high schools in five states. Signorelli believes the program is successful due to "the fact that we have survived almost 20 years and grown immensely."

A majority of SUPA students go on to attend college, according to Signorelli. Most of these colleges give the students some type of credit for their courses, but they are not obligated to do so. SU automatically accepts SUPPA credit.
Regardless of this, SU does not use SUPA as a recruitment tool. "We don't solicit the students to come to Syracuse," Signorelli said.

\section*{'Unbelievable' rock band to take Schubert Dip at SU}

\section*{By BRUCE BUCKLEY}

English-based hip-hop/dance/ punk smash EMF will take a Schubert Dip into Syracuse University's Goldstein Auditorium in Schine Student Center this Wednesday.

EMF first entered the American spotlight this summer with its hit dance single "Unbelievable," from its platinum-selling debut album Schubert Dip. Recently the band climbed back up the charts with the single "Lies."

University Union Concert Board Coordinator Stephanie D'Amico said the Concert Board decided to book EMF for the Goldstein show because of band's broad-based appeal.
"EMF caters to so much of the campus because they're both Top 40 and alternative," she said.
Pre-sale tickets for the show sell for \($ 12.50\) with Syracuse University D and \($ 14.50\) without ID at Spectrum Records in Schine. Doors open at 7 p.m. where all tickets will sell for \($ 14.50\).

At 8 p.m., English "spunk" sensation Carter the Unstoppable Sex Machine will take the stage with the mix of hardedged, dance hilarity that the English press described as "The Clash eating The Pet Shop Boys for breakfast."

Carter U.S.M. was chosen earlier this year by England's New Music Express magazine as one of the 10 best new bands of 1991.

D'Amico promises that Wednesday night's double bill will be "high energy" from start to finish with three hours of straight dancing.

Those remaining four divi sions consist of the \(126,134,158\) and heavyweight classes. A talented corps of freshmen figure to contend for the starting spot in each division.
The 126-pound class was held by Trumpet last season. This year redshirt freshman and former high school All-American Shawn Welch will battle freshman Joe Ierubino and Pennsylvania state champion Fred Fabbrini for No. 1 on the depth chart.
The 134-pound weight class has been left vacant by Santana's move to 142 pounds. Freshman Jason Lanoue, who finished his high school carcer ished his high school carcer with a record of \(84-0\), will Jamie Kyriazis for the starting Syracuse tailback David Walker needs 149 yards in Saturday's game against West Vir ginia University to become only the fifth Syracuse back to top the 1000 -yard mark in a single season.

Walker has eclipsed his own career-high twice this season. He rushed for a new career-high 148 yards against Boston College on Saturday.

His former career best was a 138-yard performance against the University of Pittsburgh on Oct. 19.
Entering the season, the junior tailback's best performance was 134 yards against Pitt in 1990.

Walker is the Big East's rushing leader with an 85.1 yards per game average.
Despite being close to 1,000 yards, Pasqualoni said the tailback platoon of Walker and Terry Richardson will remain intact.

I couldn't tell you how many yards David Walker has,* Pasqualoni said. "I know he's been doing very well and we're very happy for him, but it's a team thing.

On Saturday, they got that and a lot more.

Womack made an appearance on defense as a safety and sacked BC quarterback Gienn Foley on a blitz, causing him to fumble.
The Orangemen recovered the fumble and John Biskup con verted a 33-yard field goal.
"He's still a quarterback on this team and he's very important to us there," Pasqualoni said. "At the same time, there were times when we were able to find time where he could come over and work on pass defense.

Womack's first pass was a short six-yard attempt to wide receiver Qadry Ismail which fell incomplete.

Womack has also returned punts for the Orangemen this season. He broke a 41-yard return against Temple Univerreturn against sity on Nov. 10.
"We're just concerned we're not spreading him too thin with all the things he's doing," Pasqualoni said.

The Syracuse corps of wide eceivers seems to have gotten stronger as the season wears on. Quarterback Marvin Graves not only has starters Ismail and Shelby Hill to shoot for, but Antoniodohnson and Kerry Ferrell have emerged as surehanded targets as well.

Ismail did not catch a pass and Hill grabbed just one catch for 13 yards against Boston College.giving Johnson and Ferrell a chance to shine.

Johnson, the recipient of the game ball, caught a 55 -yard touchdown pass and recovered a fumble which he took 63 yards down the sideline for a second score.

Ferrell caught three passes for 38 yards including an 11capped the game's scoring.

Junior midftelder Paul Young said that Moyer's personality is what strikes him the most.
"I don't know how he does it, but he's one of those guys who goes around always smiling and always encouraging you," Young said.
Perhaps Moyer's enthusiasm stems from his extensive experi-

\section*{Don't bash trophy winner}

\section*{just yet}

Ty Detmer, like most Brigham Young quarterbacks, will probably not have a spectacular National Football League career.

If he's like Steve Young, he could be a career back-up. If he's like Robbie Bosco, he won't even have an NFL career.

\section*{ROB}

\section*{SPORTS} OPINION Recently, Detmer's lack of pro potential has taken center stage. He is no llege quarterback that he is.
Instead, Detmer has been labeled a "fluke" and become a whipping boy for professional scouts and college football analysts, who are still upset football analysts, who are still upset that he won the Heisman Trophy last year

Detmer has been a target of criticism in many stories I've read and interviews I've watched as "those who know" belittle his past accomplishments by saying he won't make it in the pros.
Detmer Iost his first five games after winning the trophy. The critics went nuts. It was as if Detmer had embarrassed the trophy's prestige. Some people wanted to take it back. Or ask for a recount.

Let's see. Should Raghib Ismail and his six touchdowns have won it? He took second. Or David Klingler, that awesome throwing machine from Housawesome throwing machine from Houston should have won it. right? He took ton sh.
I have a problem with those who have questioned whether Detmer deserved to win. First of all, hindsight is 20/20. Second. the Heisman winner is only as good as his team.
BYU lost each of its top five receivers from last year. Early this season, Detmer was battling with inexperienced teammates.
Let's think about two things before the anti Detmer campaign grows:
1. He directed the Cougars to a win over the University of Miami last year when the Hurricanes were No. 1. Both Klingler and Casey Weldon of Florida State would like to say they beat Miami. Yet NFL scouts love these two guys. He threw for 569 yards in the Holiday Bowl two years ago against Penn State, the most passing yards the Lions have ever given up. Think about that for a minute. It's not necessarily the number itself, but who the number was against.
who the number was against. Since being declared dead after BYU's \(0-3\) start, Detmer is doing just ine this season, thank you.

He threw for a career-high 599 yards and six touchdowns Saturday night in leading the Cougars back from a 45-17 third-quarter deficit to a 52-52 tie against San Diego State in a game as wild as the score indicates.
The tie assured BYU its third Holiday Bowl appearance in Detmer's three years as the starting quarterback. From what I hear, that's pretty good.
Detmer might be forgotten once he gets to the NFL, but let's give him a chance. How many great quarterbacks can there be in the NFL today if Steve Bono, Eric Kramer and Stan Gelbaugh are getting starting nods?
Detmer is great college quarterAnd let the rest take care of itself. 7

\section*{Human rights crisis plagues Zambian women}

By MICHAEL PADDOCK
Contributing Writer
Women in Zambia suffer from social, cultural and economic prejudices similar to those that have plagued women through out the African continent for centuries according to a Zambian university ad ministrator.

Monica Munachonga, coordinator of women's studies at the University of Zambia. spoke about the conditions of women in Zambia and her efforts in creating a women's studies program Tuesday.

Munachonga said that statistical information in Zambia often goes uncollected, because a less academic, "actionoriented" emphasis is necessary to address the more pressing immediate problems facing women there.

She said academic studies that are undertaken are either too limited or hindered by their interdisciplinary nature.
\({ }^{\text {"I }}\) I hope to provide purely academic studies of African women," she said.

Munachonga spoke about the difference between rural and urban women in Zambia.
In the rural areas of the country, traditional roles have kept women from having a place in development programs, gaining economic independence and owning land, she said.
Production control
She said that in rural areas, "production is done by women, but the control of the product is limited to men.
In the urban areas, she said she observed problems in the educational system and government-sponsored family planning programs.
"Education has been geared toward boys ... a remnant of the colonial system," she said. Because of this, Zambian women have had difficulty "catching up" to their male counterparts, she said.

Similarly, family planning programs have succeeded in little more than maintaining the traditional status quo, she said.

The School of Education is going to be hit harder than most schools at Syracuse University as a result of the \($ 28\) million downsizing program. according to Dean Steven Bossert.

Bossert said the school is planning for an initial cutback of 21 percent of its budget over four years.
"This will have more of an effect on our graduate programs than undergraduate," he said. "I'm going to try to protect our undergrad programs as much as possible."
Five graduate program"s have been recommended for closure or consolidation:
- Special education administration will be consolidated with education administration.
- English as a second language will be eliminated.
- Adult education will be eliminated.

\section*{Part of a continuing series}
- The master's degree program in foreign language education will be liminated
- The master's degree program in school psychology will be eliminated.

A need for minor leagues?
} College basketball coaches say sport is not ready - yet

By ROB GUYETTE
Statio Writer
Thirty-five percent of Division I men's basketball coaches responding to a Daily Orange survey say there is a need for a minor league basketball system.

The system would give senior high school basketball players the option of going to college or playing professionally right away - the same option currently right away - the same option currently available drafted.

Surveys were sent to 75 of the top college basketball coaches in the nation. Forty-six coaches returned the survey, including Dean Smith of North Carolina, Mike Krzyzewski of Duke and Louisville's Denny Crum.
While 35 percent said there is a need for a minor league system, only 29 percent said they would support it. "It would be a conflict of interest," Crum said.
Reaction was mixed as to how a minor league system would affect college basketball today. Fifty-six percent took the middle road, saying minors would have somewhat of an effect, while 22 percent somewhat of an effect, while 22 percent said it would greatly affect and another 22 percent said it would have no effect.
Responding to whether a minor league system would he!p eliminate some of the recruiting and academic problems in college basketball. 52 percent said no.
Six percent have problems
The basis for the survey was that as of Jan. 1, 1991 . seventeen Division I men's college basketball teams were on probation and two more were conducting versity.
That adds up to 19 schools of the 292 that play Division-I basketball (six percent) having problems with NCAA regulations. At this rate, each conference will have one team on probation every other year on the average.
In addition. Auburn University's bas-years' probation on Monday.

Men's college basketball is peaking as far as popularity. The NCAA's television contract with CBS television is \($ 1\) billion for four years, running through 1994.

The largest producer of NCAA revenue is men's college basketball. Its, 6.8 percent contribution to the NCAA's pool of television contract with CBS provides a television contract with CBS provides a large portion of the 73.9 percent that television contributes to the NCAA revetelevis.

Yet no other sport has the problems men's college basketball has. Six NCAA Division I football teams were on probation at the start of the year, the second most of any sport. Yet football isn't one-third the problem men's college basketball is.

Is the money causing this corruption? one school on probation in the last two years, the University of Michigan. Baseball's system is not perfect, for recruiting battles between colleges and professionals can often be exhausting to the loser.
But baseball's problems with NCAA rules are minimal. Athletes who don't want to study don't have to. But many college basketball coaches claim a minor league system in their sport would leave a lot of failed athletes on the street without an education
One question becomes the cost. College basketball's probation list is beginning to sound like roll call. Is it worth losing a Iittle integrity in exchange for helping more kids develop?
In other words, would a minor league system benefit college basketball?
Several coaches that commented on the survey said this kind of system would be worth studying. But they also said costs, finding owners and finding places to play might be too much. These start-up problems were given as the main obstacle to its formation.
"The concept is probably a good one," said Les Robinson, head coach of North Carolina State. "I think such a league would have a lot of ramifications and take considerable planning and organization."
"We're not ready yet for something like this," Bill Foster, head coach at Northwestern, said. "Although someone will try it and it will fail. Today, there would be a lack of interest, money and support. But maybe someday.

Syracuse's Jim Boeheim said a minor league system wouldn't help the individual athlete. Ninety-eight percent of all baseball minor leaguers never make the baseball minor leaguers never make the majors, a point Boeheim said emphasizes experience, regardless of whether they graduate.
"It's been proven with baseball," Boeheim said. "These guys go right aut of high school. spend three, four, five years there, don't make it and then where does it leave them?
"It might be better for his baseball career, but it's not better for his life.
Richmond coach Dick Tarrant is an advocate of a minor league basketball system. He said too many college basketball players emphasize the latter part of the student-athlete.
Tarrant and other coaches pointed out that it's their responsibility to see that a student-athlete is at college for the education - and not being pushed through school with easy courses to stay eligible.
"College is not, for everyone," Tarrant said. "Some athletes are simply not students. They attend college to prepare for professional careers in athletics. A minor league system is for them."

\section*{Expansion of CBA a future possibility \\ By ROB GUYETIE}

Stritf Writer

For a minor league basketball system to work, help from the Continental Baskethall Association would almost certainly be needed.
Many college coaches consider the CBA to be the minor leagues today. Several in the survey said a modification of the CBA would be the best bet for establishing a league for players out of high school to play in.
But CBA Commissioner Terdema L. Ussery II said there's no rush on his part to form such an alliance with the NBA or the NCAA "No, not at this moment," Ussery said. "That's an idea that has been bantered off and on for several years from what I understand."
One reason many point toward the CBA is the recent suecess the "official developmental league of the NBA" has enjoyed.
More players than ever are jumping from the CBA to the NBA (a record 30 call-ups were made last year), proving that the CBA just may be the "secondbest basketball league in the world," as Ussery says.

But more importantly, the CBA set an attendance record last year for the second consecutive year. And it now has Ussery, who has set out to financially stabilize a league that has seen many teams open and fold in recent years.
Ussery, 32, took the commissioner's iob this past April 12, replacing Irv Katz, who retired 11 days before. Ussery, the first black commissioner of a major professional sports league, brings a law degree and a business-oriented mind to the now-prospering league.

The CBA's expansion will be on hold for at least another three years, as Ussery has said he wants to make sure the franchises the league has are in place the franchises the league has ar

The quality of play in the CBA has risen to a level that would make most, if not all, of today's high school seniors unqualified. That, combined with the CBA's expansion regulation, puts a fullfledged minor league system several years down the road.

\section*{cba}

But while Ussery said he hasn't ever had formal discussions on the subject. he wouldn't rule out the possibility if the time was right.
"It's not something we're spending any time on at the moment," Ussery said. "Not to say that at some point in the future, in conjunction with the NBA or something else, something like that might not be done.

Ussery admitted he is not very familiar with the operations of the NCAA or the 17 teams that were on probation as of Jan. 1 of this year. He said he didn't know if a minor league system would help eliminate some of the probation-itis college basketball has been hit with.
"We're a professional league so our interests and the way we view things are very different and the pressures are very different," Ussery said. "If the NCAA, however, came to me formally, I would however, came to me formally, i would certainly listen to what they had to say." certainly listen to what they had to say.
Thirty-five percent of college coaches responding to the survey said there is a need for a minor league system. Ussery said he has never heard anything from coaches and added that he thought the 35 percent figure was surprisingly high.
"It would depend on if there's enough interest," Ussery said. "I don't think 35 percent represents enough to get something like that started. You'd have to have overwhelming support.

Ussery said he is "a big advocate of education," and any league formed while he was commissioner would have a strong educational component.

But the main obstacle, no matter how much need or conperation there may be on the part of 'I governing bodies of basketball (NBA, CBA, NCAA and USA Basketball), is stil! money, Ussery said.
"Forget all the issues, you're talking about a tremendous financial committment." Ussery said. "From everyone involved, you'd have to get all those bodies together in order to do something that was going to work."
"And I don't mean work from the team's perspective, but something that would be beneficial for the kids as well,

\section*{Trapping not true game management}

\title{
To the editor:
}

I am writing in response to Christopher Crossman's letter in the Nov. 11 issue of TheDaily Orange. I feel I must address what seems to be the dissemination of propaganda on Mr. Crossman's part.

Mr. Crossman defends trapping and the fur industry and states "they are harvested in such a way that there is no more pain inflicted upon the animal than we would suffer animal than we would suffer from an ordinary injection." The euphemistic use of the word "harvest" and the use of word "harvest and the use of to enlighten the reader Animals on fur farms are killed in one of two ways, period. They are electrocuted or they are put into gas chambers. The animals are electrocuted by touching the nose or mouth with one electrode and inserting the other electrode into the anus. Otherwise, the animale are forced into'gas chambers not unlike thase used on humans in Germany during the Second World War. The pain involved in both cases is interise and cannot fairly be likened with "an ordinary injection."

In regards to trapping, Crossmanstates"an animal feels no discomfort inflicted by the no discomfort inflicted by the numb." Animals commonly numb."Animals commonly chew off a paw or part of a leg or arm to escape these traps, or arm to escape these traps, extainly not a pain-free experience. To test this for your fingers in a car door. See whether your hand hurts or just feels numb.

Last, Ibeliove it is impqrant to critically analyze the idea that trapping and hunting ar essential in the process of.
"game management." The idea that animals must be trapped and huinted for purposes of management is fundamentally flawed. Animals, and for that matter our environment in general, has existed in balance feneral, has existed in balan for milions of years without the need of humans to interfer It is precigely when humans started carelessly draining the started carelessly draining the environment of its resources and dumping toxic waste that problems arose. It is the "game problems arose. It is the management" preudoof the title "propaganda."

\section*{Animals: food or pets?}

To the editor:
I would like to direct these comments to the members of SUFAR You have been very prolific lately in The Daily Orange. I have several things I would like to say to your group.

\section*{After reading the Nov. 18} Daily Orange. I noticed that no definition of fanimal "rights has been listed. Therefore, I would like to present my view of animal "rights." On this campus I'm sure my view is in the minority. So here it is: the minority. So here it is:

to be pets.
Now that that's out of \(t\) way, let me ask you, the way. let me ask you, the members of SUFAR, some members of SUFAR, some questions. Forgive me if I get too personal. Have any of you ever used deodorant? \(\mathrm{O}_{r}\) medicine? Have any of you ever had surgery? Mr. Henn's letter should give you an appreciation \section*{of animal contributions to your} health. Do you own any wool sweaters? How about a down pillow? Do you own any leather shoes? Have you ever eaten a hamburger? Or a steak? Or a pizza? Or a turkey or ham sandwich? Have any of you ever had a glass of milk or a slice of cheese or an egg? I know you wouldn't want to put the American dairy farmer out of business - on second of business - on second thought, maybe you would.

I am getting tired of I am getting tired of Groups must define 'research'

To the editor:
Recently The Daily Orange has published letters that support both sides of the debate over the experimental use of animals. All letters have centered around making the public more aware of the facts surrounding this debate. However, one aspect of this debate is clouded on both sides of the argument. That is the issue of what constitutes research. We are opposed to the loose translation of the word "research" that both parties utilize. Research is defined as "careful study and investigation especially in order to discover new facts or information" (Oxford American Dictionary). Research does not automatically entail cutting up or removing parts of the animal for testing, or even seeing how chernicals influence intact body parts (invasive techniques).

\section*{Animal products make life easier}

Marc Wiener's letter in the Now. 8 issue of The Daily Orange contains false, misleading and offensive statements regarding the values of animals to society and human use of other species Apparently such statements are familiar and accepted by those few members and supporters of animal cults, but theirobsessive devotion to such ideas sound quite bizarre to the rest of us. A few nationally based individuals who have seeded the misguided thoughts on animal"rights" championed by Marc Wiener now obtain a big salary and plush livelihood on contributions fleeced from on contributions feeced from they are benefiting animals.

In fact, no effort is made by any of the various animal "rights" groups to help animals digectly - that is to providea directly - that is to provide habitat for wild animals. protect or restore natural environments or to increase environments or to increase the welfare of domestic and captive animals. Their agenda is to harass agencies, institutions, animal scientists and sportsmen in the puise of and sportsmen in the guise of benefitting animals. We should benefitting animals. We should all be concerned about animal all be concerned about animal welfare - the humane welfare - the humane treatment of captive wildlife and domestic animals, including pets but the very thought that wild animalshave some right to a joyous existence at the expense of our species is counter to nature, human culture and common sense. We have nothing to gain from such altruistic behavior being promoted by those seeking an outlet for their anti-societal, counter-cultural urges.
Marc Weiner and others have a problem with animals in small cages. But following centuries of selective breeding. the domestic chicken is perfectly happy sitting around in a climate-controlled facility producing fatherless eggs and big thighs and breasts. Some animal "rightists" would favor releasing domestic animals in the city, or dumping them out in the country, or perhaps sending chickens back to Southeast Asia to join their jungle fowl ancestors. What jungle fow ancestors. What retrograde behaviors appear retrograde beh

To deny humans the pleasure and use of pleasure and use of agricultural products such eggs, chicken, pork, beef. eggs, chicken, pork, beef. from domestic animals is folly. I am very appreciative of the great strides made in animal husbandry and all of the many fine animal products that make our existence (and survival) easier. I accept the use and death of a few animals in turn for all of the advances in medicine, autornotive sarety, health care and production, etc.
Wild animals continue to do their darnedest to do their darnedest to overpopulate. As a selfrenewing natural resource and product of our great outdoors they should be harvested for they should be harvested for food, fur and recreation by sportspeople, even by commercial operations. I'd rather see the traditions of farming, animal production bunting, trapping, game farming, and fur ranching continue than Persian Gulf wars for petroleum or other wars for petroleum or other resources to produce synthe polyester, exotic foods, and other ecologically unwise products or processes to meet human needs of food, fiber. sport and recreation.

So let's put our support behind pro-active, responsible local groups like the Burnett Park Zoo, Beaver Lake Nature Center, Save the County, Center, Save the County, Return a Gift to Wild Nature Conservancy, Nature Conservancy, which use our time and dollars which use our time and doll for habitat acquisition and restoration, nature education. outdoor recreation and public programs for the benefit of both animals and people.

Many areas of animal research investigate how an animal's environment influences its behavior or distribution using non-invasive procedures. Behavior research includes studies which assess why and how an animal responds the way it does in a given situation. Ecological studies are often concerned with how animals distribute themselves and maintain their population numbers. Animals used in such investigations are necessarily whole, active individuals. These types of noninvasive studies differ dramatically from the invasive procedures normally associated with research.

These types of research have been beneficial to humans. They have, for instance, provided us with greater understanding of subjects which range from human \section*{which range from human} behavior and cultural evolution to heat transfer and aerodynamics. They have also provided the information necessary for conservation and management of animals, as well as information to satisf well as information to satisfy and stimulate the curiosity of every human.

Although we support the use of animals in research, we feel a need to make a distinction between different kinds of animal research which range from non-invasive observational-based research in nature to invasive biomedical research. In the future, we hope everyone will be more cautious in the general condemnation or support of broad issues.

\section*{Livestock}

To the editor:
Peter Hallock and Briana Eickhoffs letter in the Nov 12 Daily Orange, especially the comments on livestock excrement, really set off my bullshit meter, pun intended.

The writers claimed that one of the main reasons for being a vegetarian is that "200,000 pounds of excrement per second is produced by U.S. livestock." For those of you who did not make the connection (as I did not), "this excrement is allowed to wash away into streams, rivers, and lakes where its high concentrations of nitrates and phosphates upset the natural energy," according to the authors and Jeffrey Hollender, whoever he is.
Asfar as I know, most human excrement also ends up in our waters due to factors of gravity and waste

\section*{Abortion rights fading \\ President Bush exercised his veto} power yesterday, proving his pen to be more powerful than the American people.

Restriction of a woman's right to have an abortion, while not yet completely taken away, came one step closer to destruction. The House of Representatives, dominated by Democrats, voted a majority in favor of a bill designed to allow abortion and parenthood counseling. Since the House majority did not total two-thirds in favor of the bill, the president exercised his power to veto it and, essentally, killed it before it spreads.

Women are losing sovereignty over their own bodies. The U.S. governTent, with a few strokes of President Bush's political pen, is taking control of women's bodies and forcing them to deal with the tragedies associated with unwanted or unplanned presnancies. It is denying doctors the right to free speech and proper treatment of a patient.

Logic should tell people to use some form of contraception when engaging in sexual activity. The threat of the AIDS virus is reason enough for such precautions. However, accidents happen. No form of contraception is 100 percent effective, except abstinence, which is a tall order in our culture.
President Bush needs to be more realistic about what goes on in the United States. If he honestly believes premarital sex is not happening, he is living in a fantasy world.

And if he honestly believes controlling the speech of trained and educcated physicians is the way to combat the problem of teen-age pregnancy, he is breaking down the communication necessary in a complex American society.

If you have had any enduring acquaintance with a computer, I'm sure you can probably relate to what, for me, has unfailingly proved to be a major frustration. It's often taken for granted that Syracuse University students have available to them free computer services, terminals, printing, and learning programs. Taking advantage of Alademit Computing Services during one's student career at \(S U\) is a terrific idea. After college many of us may not have such convenint and affordable access to computers and their willing human experts. Computer illiterlacy is fast becoming undesirable and unattraclive to potential employers. And though there are certainly good arguments for doing things in traditional and familiar ways, fear alone should not be one of them. Not that I expect anyone to be a fearless computer whiz. Even those who have built their schedules around this technological wonder are probably still intimidated by the power of artificial intellifence from time to time.

\section*{To the editor:}

In response to Darin Powell's column published in The Daily Orange on Nov. 18 regarding my position on ROTC discrimination, I submit that Mr. Powell misunderstands my position, and that of those committed to ending ROTC discrimination.

In Powell's column, I am accused of intolerance because I advocate that ROTC's continued relationship with Syracuse University be contingent upon an end to its discriminatory practices. Of what am I intolerant? Discrimination? Bigotry? Prejudice? I accept this accusation - as a compliment I will not apologize for being intolerant of intolerance. I believe that the misunderstanding which exists between Mr. Powell and myself, rests in his interpretation of my goals. Let me make it clear that I do not wish to punish ROTC cadets nor dol wish to deny scholarships to working class students who may not have other opportunities. However. I have committed myself to the struggle for gays, lesbians and bisexuals - for dignity, respect and basic civil rights. The military must not be allowed to discriminate on this campus. If it will not withdraw its discriminatory policy, then the military s agent, R or cannot cannot comply with the codes of acceptable behavior which of acceptable behavior which have been established at this discrimination is wrong, while refusing to establish any refusing to estab

Furthermore, I call upon the Board of Trustees to take responsibility for the SU students who are damaged by this policy, for the gay, lesbian and bisexual students who cannot go here students who cannot go here

First of all, the policy restricting departments to use the university's catering service is an attempt to keep our student dollars in the university. "Right now our senior faculty, who do cutting-edge research, are actually teaching freshmen and sophomores," he said.
" W : had to bite the bullet of eliminatingsome grad programs to retain the quality of these ... we don't want to compromise. It's important that students re alize, the programs offered will still be top quality," he said.

Bossert said a task force will convene within two weeks to redesign programs so they fit within the new budget strucure.

The task force will be headed by Gerald Grant, professor of cultural foundations of education.
"We're going to take a look at the future, to see how we can be smaller and better," Grant said.

Senior elementary education major Iris Pachter said the combination of programs may not be bad.
"Elementary ed. is being phased into an inclusive program with special ed., so when you graduate you're certified in both," she said

Senior Holly Cottrell, a speech pathology major, said she is worried about the effect the downsizing will have on her program.
'It's so small already, I don't know what would happen if it gets sized down anymore," she said. "I don't have a very wide selection of classes to take now, and if that gets cut back I won't have much of a choice at all."
"We're one of the few universities that gets so much time in the classroom," said senior Jennifer Smith, who is currently student teaching in the Syracuse' Minoa school district
"If this was affected by the downsizing, I would see it as a downsizing, I would see

Smith said she is worried about what her degree will mean if the school she gradu mean
"Coming from a school that may be phased out, you kind of wonder how much weight your degree is going to carry," she said.
"If your program couldn't succeed, it could eventually gues-tion how valid a teacher you are," she said.

Become a Student Cardmember today and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only \($ 129\) or \($ 189\) each.

Only the American Express \({ }^{\circ}\) Card offers an exciting travel program exclusively for students-including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines. And much, much more.

Just look at the map and pick the place youd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only \($ 129^{*}\) roundtrip. Or you can cross the Mississippi for \($ 189\) roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytimebecause there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

By becoming a Student Cardmember you'll also enjoy other benefits from the American Express* Stucdent Privileges \({ }^{-}\)Program. Such as up to 30 minutes of MCl long-distance calling every month for an entire year-absolutely free. And that's just one example of how the Card can help you save.

For just 855 a year, the Card gives you all these savings. And it's easy to apply. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now while you're-still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new terri tory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.

Hermann said he became interested in Harkin when he spoke at the last tearnster convention.

Many residents who attended the party said they hoped Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York will decide not to run for president, and will focus more on solving the problems of New York state.
"The only benefit Cworno has brought to the state is he has brought to the state ts he has built more jail cells than any built more jail cells than any married women cannot get free care and often fall into the position of "child-bearer" before they are prepared, she said.

Munachonga described her role in the formation of a women's studies program at the University of Zambia.

At first, the university admimistration would not support the idea, she said. "In terms of the university officials, women's studies is a foreign idea."

However, she said, by establishing independent financial support from outside, she and several students were able to succeed in initiating an interdisciplinary program.
"I'm trying to establish a single academic discipline," she said.

Munachonga is currently trav eling to a conference of African women's stucies scholars in Ohio scheduled for later this month.

Her speech was sponsored by the Syracuse University women's studies program.

To the final question of the survey－should college players today receive money in addition to their scholarship－ 70 per－ cent said yes．

Coaches get a salary and usually a shoe contract，while the players get a free education usually worth less than 15 per－ cent of what the coach makes．
In the National Basketball Association，which is equally as popular as college basket－ ball，players make as much if not more than their conches．
Several college coaches said players should get incidental money．Suggestions ranged from \($ 50-200\) per month．But as far as a piece of the big pie，the players don＇t even get the crusts．
＂They shouldn＇t get a part of the \($ 1\) billion because that＇s not what college athletics is all about，＂said Long Beach State coach Seth Greenberg．TThey should get incidentals．because they＇re not allowed to work while under scholarahip．＂work while under scholarship．

Missouri coach Norm Ste－ wart，an outspoken critic of NCAA policjes，said players should receive \($ 75\) per month －at least something to reward those who reward the univer－ sity．
＂Let＇s quit playing games，＂ Stewart said．＂If you＇re going to give them money，give it to them．When somebody is pro－ ducing there has to be a differ－ ential between revenue－produc－ ing athletes and non－revenue producing athletes．＂

\section*{SU strokes past Bulls}

By MATT SIMO
Staff Writer
For the Syracuse University swimming teams, Saturday's meet with the University of Buffalo was a chance to experiment while the season is still early.

And the experiments were successful as the Orangemen (3-1) topped Buffato 127-117, and the Orangewomen (4-0) ripped the Bulls 157-87.

The Orangemen had to come from behind after losing the first event, the 400 medley relay, and they didn't take the lead for good until the 12 th event, the 200 -meter breast stroke.
Sophomore Attila Ari won the event in 2:09.23 for a 116110 score - Syracuse's second lead of the meet at that point.
The Orangemen clinched the meet by winning the last event, the 400 -meter free relay, in 3:10.79.

"The guys started slow, but they got the ball rolling and had, some good performances,' Syracuse coach Lou Walker said. They had the opportunity to fold, but the way they responded was outstanding.

Ari also won the 200 -meter freestyle and junior Jay Craft won the 500 -meter and 1000 meter freestyle events.
Senior Steve Burke won the 200 IM, junior Derek Phillips won the 200 -meter backstroke, and freshman Seth Williams won thé 100 -meter freestyle to round out the scoring.

Walker said he didn't use the team's top four swimmers in the 400 medley relay because he was trying people in different positions.
The Orangewomen dominated the Bulls, winning 10 of the meet's 13 events and placing second in 11 of them.
Sophomore Michele Ciesienski won the \(200-\mathrm{m}\) breast stroke and the \(200-\mathrm{m}\) freestyle. which isn't a regular event for her.
Other Syracuse winners included sophomore Laurie Kasch in the \(1000-\mathrm{m}\) freestyle, freshman Amy DeMarle in the 200 IM, sophomore Dana Mueller in the \(200-\mathrm{m}\) fly, sophomore Jenny Patterson in the \(200-\mathrm{m}\) backstroke, freshman Kerri Colditz in the \(500-\mathrm{m}\) freestyle, and senior Shannon Jerome in one-meter diving.

The Orangewomen also swept the relay events.
"I was very pleased with how things went," Walker said. "We had a lot of real nice performances (that were) better than last year. I don't think we can complain a whole lot at this point.

Syracuse University forward Dave Johnson drives against a defender in the Orangemen's \(96-75\) win over the Canadian National team Tuesday night. Johnson led all scores with 22 points. as Orangemen nail threes

\section*{By JOSH BARNETT}

Assl. Sports Editor
The last time the Syracuse University men's basketball team shot 24 threepointers, they converted only three of them.

Tuesday night in Syracuse's 96-75 win over the Canadian National team, the new look Orangemen hit 12-of-24 three pointers and signaled a turning of the page from SU's old power game to this season's perimeter oriented style.
"The main emphasis of (Syracuse coach Jim) Boeheim has been to penetrate, and kick it back out for the three, saind SU forward Scott McCorkle, who made one-of-two three-point shots. "Tonight it was effective.
The Orangemen were not as effective two seasons ago when they shot 3-of-24 from three-point range against the University of Pittsburgh.
Syracuse's proficiency at the threepointer forced the Canadians to abandon their 3-2 zone and go more to a man-toman coverage.
"It made it difficult for us to play the zone," Team Canada coach Ken Shields said. "We were fatigued and when we went man-to-man, we couldn't combat their speed. We didn't want to stay with one defense for too long."
Eight Syracuse playersattempted threepointers and seven made at least one.
"It's nothing people should be surprised about." guard Adrian Autry said.
"We're a great shooting team. We can shoot the ball."

The game began for the Orangemen with a three-pointer, ended with a three-pointer and it was a string of three-pointers which pulled the Orangemen away from the Canadians.

Syracuse forward Dave Johnson opened the scoring 47 seconds into the game with the first of his team-leading four three-point shots. "I have to do what's best for the team," Johnson said. "I can't post up all the time. I have to go outside and open it up.

Syracuse hit seven of 11 three-pointers in the first half.

The three-point shot helped SU get back into the game after it trailed by as many as six points early in the game.

Mike Hopkins hit a three-pointer with 12:13 left in the half to cut the Canadians' lead to 15-12.

Three of Syracuse's next four scores came via the long-range shots. Freshman guard Anthony Harris hit both of his threes and then freshman forward Glenn Sekunda got his only three points which gave SU a 27-20 lead.
We were struggling early," Boeheim said. "The freshmen came in and did a good job. Anthony Harris hit a couple of threes, Glenn got us a three and they got us back into the game without the us back \({ }^{\text {." }}\)
The Orangemen were able to run and even attempted the three-pointer on the break.

\section*{Syracuse exhibits flair in win}

By DAVID J. BUSCEMA
Assf. Sports Editor
The Canadian National team may want to vote to change its national anthem to 'Oh, I'm tirec,' after a vicious road trip that ended on Monday night with a \(96-75\) exhibition game loss to Syracuse University.
"Tonight's game was the first game of a long. long road trip that we could actually use fatigue as an excuse," Team Canada coach Ken Shields said. "But Canada coach Ken Shields said. "But, give credit to coach ( Jim ) Boeheim an the Orangemen, they did a great job."

Any member of the Carrier Dome crowd of 11,135 could attest to both of Shields' claims. Although a rigorous 10-city. 15-day tour through the Big East may have had an impact on the Canadians, Syracuse played well in just about every facet of the game.

The Orangemen used excellent perimeter shooting, including 12 threepointers, to bust Canada's zone and open up what had been a close game early in up what had been a close game early in the second half. They then used slick the second half. They then used slick passing to get easy inside po Four players scored in double figures for the Orange, while two others had nine points and another two had eight points.
All this despite the fact that two starters were out of the opening lineup.
Center Conrad McRaé did not dress for the game due to a case of the flu, and point guard Adrian Autry did not start for the same reason, but did play 17 minutes, gathering eight points.
"I think tonight we helped each other get open shots," said guard Mike Hopkins, who had 12 points. "We basically run a three guard offense with Adrian, Michael Edwards) and myself. And DJ (forward Dave Johnson) can shoot from outside, so it's almost like a four guard offense."
Johnson, who led all scorers with 22 points, showed his outside touch, canning four of nine treys, including one with 7 seconds left in the first half to give SU a 44-35 halftime lead.

Until that point, Syracuse's largest lead had been six points, as the Orangemen dug themselves an early deficit with turnovers and a lack of solid interior defense.
Syracuse trailed by as much as 11-5 before a flurry of treys got it back into the game.
In a span of 4:52, SU went on a 15-7 run, built largely around a Hopkins three-pointer, two treys by freshman Anthony Harris and another by 6 -foot-8 freshman Glenn Sekunda. The outside shooting show gave Syracuse a 27-22 shooting show gave syracuse a \(\mathbf{l}\), \(7: 21\) to play in the half. The lead with \(7: 21\) to play in the half. The Orangemen were 7 -of- 11 on threeOrangemen were pointers in the first half.

It was an even more rapid-fire outside bombing attack that decided the game in the second half, though.
With 16:15 left in the game and Syracuse leading 47-41, the Orangemen went on a 9-0 run in just 1:39 to take a commanding 56-41 lead.

Hopkins, forward Scott McCorkle and Johnson all buried treys in the minuscule time period.
Having successfully busted the zone, the Orangernen then went to work on their inside game, as the freshmen began to demonstrate some of the pizazz and flair that Dome crowds have come to expect from exhibition games.
"It was the threes breaking the zone down (that enabled us to move inside)," said freshman Lawrence Moten, who had 11 points and six rebounds, and made a pretty no-look pass to Autry under the basket for an assist. "If we shoot like that, there isn't anybody who can beat us.

Moving the ball was a big factor. When you make good passes, it's because guys get open and they make you look good.'

SU looked good in the second half, as it never let the Canadians come closer than 13 points after the three-point bombing run.

The Orangemen used the remainder of the game to unveil the talents of their freshmen and showcase their veterans.
There was a hellacious slam dunk by Johnson off a long outlet pass by Harris. There was a pretty give-and-go play on The break from Moten to Johnson and the break from Moten to Johnson

And there was freshman Luke Jackson And there was freshman Luke Jackson scoring all eight of his points in the second half.
"The freshmen came in and were great." Hopkins said. "This is what they were recruited for - it's showtime."
The game was a marked contrast from last week's \(95-85\) loss to Marathon Oil, and should silence some overanxious critics. according to Moten.
"It was good to get a win under our belts," Moten said. "After last week a lot of people were doubting us.

And, according to Hopkins, now that the young team has been able to compare the tastes of victory and defeat, it will be anxious to notch many more wins into its belt.

Syracuse University's College of Nursing may consolidate with the School of Human Development or the School of Sucial Work to face imperiding hard times, according to the Chancellor's Ad

The college has been classified as a category-three school by the committee. Which means it is under consideration for budget reductions, program eliminations or consolidation.

The College of Nursing currently has a total of 206 graduate and undergraduate students and generates \($ 424,497\) in graduate tuition, according to the Report on the Schools and Colleges.

School officials refused to discuss or speculate on the school's restructuring.

The committee report, released Sept. 16. said, "Although we believe that it is a good teaching program, and there is unquestionably a demand for its gradu-

Eduard Shevardnadze agreed Wednesday to return as Soviet foreign minister because "the future of the planet depends on how events develop in this country."
Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev reappointed Shevardnadze Tuesday in an attempt to rebuild the authority of the central government and attract Western aid.
Shevardnadze's role may be more limited this time bince the Kremlin's role has been shrinking; however, President Bush and other Western leaders expressed praise for his return.

Shevardnadze resigned from his post after serving five years and helping to end the Cold War. In his resignation end the Cold War. In his resignation could retuirn to the Soviet Union.
"The future or the planet depends on how events develop in this country," he told Pravda. "So I decided to take some place, it does not matter which, in this struggle. This decision was very hard, much harder than the resignation.

Bush said, "We know him well and have great respect for him."

This reappointment could help the new Soviet confederation persuade its republic members to assume responsibility for the \($ 81\) billion Soviet debt.

Cornell faculty changes old course requirements
The faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences at Cornell University has voted to change distribution requirements governing course choices for the first time in more than 40 years.

The faculty voted 66-30 for somewhat stricter requirements in the areas of mathematics and science, as well as requiring students to take five courses from the combined fields of the humanities, social sciences, history and expressive arts.

The college spent more than two years considering revisions in curriculum. The changes require. for the first time, that students take one course with a focus on non-European culture and one with a pre-20th century focus.

These two courses would be included among the five to be required in the humanities grouping.

\section*{For the health of it}

The good news is that the number of smokers in the United States has fallen to the lowest rate ever. The bad news is that those who smoke are starting at a younger age.

The fact is - nobody should smoke.
The national Centers for Disease Control say 34 percent of all high school drop-outs smoke while only 16 percent of college graduates are smokers. However, as you walk around campus today, notice how many of the students you see smoking. Members of the faculty and staff will be included in your observation.

It's an established medical fact that smokers suffer health problems from tobacco intake. Last year the Environmental Protection Agency released a study that confirmed what many had long suspected: non-smokers are also at risk from exposure to smoke.

Passive smoking, as it is known, is the process by which non-smokers involuntarily inhale the smoke produced by another. Children of parents who smoke are at risk - along with the health of non-smokers who are exposed to various environments that allow people to light up.

Nicotine is an addictive substance. If you've known someone who has tried to quit, or tried yourself, you realize how difficult it can be. Often an atternpt to quit smoking results in an undesired weight gain or nervousness.

While smoking should be viewed only as a health matter, it remains tied to political and economic concerns as well. The Tobacco Institute, no longer able to hide behind the irritating "there's no conclusive evidence that it's harmful" dogma, has shifted to a patriotic theme. They now tell us we all have the right to smoke.

Everybody likely knows someone who would love to quit but "just can't." If Syracuse University students, faculty and staff could agree (even for one day) to have a "Smokeless SU," it might provide the support needed to help a few people breathe a little easier.

\section*{Defining Women's Studies program}

This morning we got a letter from Elizabeth Peterson, who is an eighth grader in Somerset, Mass. She says she is doing an independent rescarch project on womens rights and her teacher told her to write to "someone who \end{tabular} these questions while she is in the eighth grade shows she is living and learning in a setting that is friendly to such questions, a setting where it is possible to think such questions and then ask them and expect that a letter to another state will be answered.

That is, Elizabeth Peterson is living in a That is, Elizabeth Peterson is living in a setting where such questions are legitimate and she can assume that they will be taken seriously.

When you ask, "What is the' purpose of Women's Studies?" and "What are you trying to do there?" the answers have a lot to do with making sure that young women like Elizabeth Peterson can go on asking these questions and be taken seriously. Obviously, since this is a university and our primary means of education is formal course work, this means course offerings, both an introductory course such as WSP 101 and the wide range of courses currently offered that are cross-listed in other departments. We are also engaged this year in putting forward a formal undergraduate in putting forward a formal undergraduate major in Women's Studies. We say that Women's Studies is "trans-disciplinary" not only because course content regarding women has been missing across the acadernic discihas been missing across the academic disciplines, but because ways of thinking aboutplines, but because ways of thinking about women (and how it has happened that we've women (and how it hast happened that weve been missing) transcends the boundariess of academic disciplines and themselves can be a subject of study. In fact, the very boundaries of disciplines - how knowledge is produced and organized in a particular field - can be political; that is, these boundaries can be used to keep wornen "missing" by claiming that discussion of women's issues "isn't appropriate here."

Less obviously than "real" course work for which you pay tuition, what were trying to do is keep open an environment on this campus that is friendly to questions like Elizabeth's. A lot of what \(I\) do as assistant to the director is about organizing and promoting this. This part of Women's Studies is not about your transcript or your favorite feminist theory but about how you operate in the world, all the time and wherever you are. This means regular events like The Friday Series, the longest continuously running speaker series at Syracuse University, which also includes women from off campus, for much of women's women from of campus, for much of women's major work and thinking has taken place off major work and the campuses.

It means this week's visit by Zambian scholar Monica Munachonga includes a lecscholar Monica Munachonga includes a lecture in Maxwell and a visit to Grace Children's ture in Maxwell and a visitto Grace Children's Academy and a chance for her to meet with the city youth of the Africa Bound project. It means solidarity with other groups who are means solidarity with other groups who are made marginal, who have been somehow made marginal, who have been somehow always "missing, not only for invisibility but for violence, just as women are. It means helping organize a major conference on women and prison, not that many of you reading this are going to prison, but precisely because we as privileged university women need to understand how it is organized in this society that poor women are increasingly being warehoused behind bars, how it's organized that we come to think they have nothing to do with us.

It means having and providing role models too. Encouraging each other, sometimes in the ways adults didn't care to have "wilder and looser characters" encourage us. Insisting, meddling. Often it means consciously putting people in the same room who otherwise should not cross p.paths, and then you watch the magic happen. We have a sign in the Women's Studies suite: "When in trouble, start more." Elizabeth Peterson will still have lots to do when she gets here.

Let's start with your intolerance. You claim you are intolerant of discrimination, bigotry, and prejudice." Surely RO4-Eannotiarguathat thet-eROTC program is full of prejudiced bigots. The Department of Defense is responsible for the policy. I suggest you target the department as the discriminator and not the ROTC program.

You also make the point that you would like the university to take responsibility for "those who suffer the social and emotional damage of hiding their sexual orientation in order to get into the ROTC program." Mr. Wiener repeats about thalidomide what the uninformed animal rights leaders have been telling each other, him and us for years. that they promulgate so zcalously. the statement just happens to be entirely wrong. Thalidomide does produce birth defects in does produce birth defects in boons. (For the primary date on monkeys and baboons and for meferences on the other work, see Delahunt and Lassen, Sci ence, 146:1300-1305, Dec. 4 1964; and Hendricks, Axelrod and Clayborn, Natare, 210:958 959, May 28, 1966.) It was in effect tested on human beings. something that the animal rights fanatics still persist in recommending for newly developed drugs. Fortunately, an alert Dr. Frances Kelso of the Food and Drug Administration, recognizing thalidomide's potential dangers and inadequate safety testing, refused to allow its sale and distribution in the United States. 1961 opinion of one M.D. in experimentation with animals appears to carry a great deal of weight with Hallock and Eickhoff. The opinion of the Na tional Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences -representing the best trained and most informed body of scientists in the United States - might outweigh what one dismight outweigh what one dissenting M.D. is purported to have said in 1961. The National Research Council madethis statement in Sept. 1988: "The chance thatalternatives will completely replace animals in the foreseeable future is nil." Or perhaps the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the largest body of practicing scientists in the world, will be accorded some respect. The use of animals has been and continues to be essential not only for appied research with direct clinical applications in humans and animals but also in reand animals but also in research that furthers the understanding of biological processes' (Joint Resolution adopted by the AAAS Board and Councit, Feb. 19, 1990). Virtually every active biomedical research scientigt anywhere in the world would agree with both of those statements.

The problem with animal rights folks like Mr. Wiener and SUFAR is that they forget, or never realized, they are promoting a religious belief system not trying to convince research scientists that we don't know what we're doing. The question at issue is not.and never was. Does research with experimental animals tell us things that are important in biology and medicine and that are attain able no other way?" The answer to that question is an unequivo cal, emphatic "yes" from any practicing biomedical scientist Why else would anyone possibly think we would do medica experimentation using animals? Would it be because we are perverse, insensitive, stupid, un maginative and out-of-date; or o we do it because we must, for crucial parts of our work -work which ultimately leads to helping suffering human beings and animals?

The real question is and always has been this: "In spite of the fact that we get knowledge from animal research that is crucial for human and veterinary medicine, is it ethical to obtain knowledge this way?"
religious quesstion, not a scientific one. On religious grounds, SUFAR is free to proselytize willing listeners to try to advance its beliefs. It is not free to make up facts about biomedica! science, especially since public acceptance of those distorted "facts" kills human patients, because such acceptance seriously delays progress. That delay in medical progress that kills human patients also in the end requires the use of more experimental animals than would otherwise have been needed to finally achieve the delayed beneficial discovery. The ignorant interference by animal rights zealots into the substance ofbiomedical science thus serves to harm human patients, the general public and experimental animals.

The grossly increased costs and wasted research space, personnel and precious time caused by the attacks on medical research by animal rights antagonists does not dissipate the resources of that vague, nebulous entity "the biomedical research establishment" that the activists are fond of citing.
It is time for the general public to recognize what is being done to us all, by what is in fact a well-disguised religious belief system whose basic dogma is that mammalian animals or all vertebrates, or even at its extreme sentient creatures, are equal in moral value to human

\section*{Ad hoc \\ To the editor:}

On Monday night students found out exactly where they stand with the Student Government Association. The SGA Constitution states that "any student may introduce legislation at any meeting of the Assembly"; however, that doesn't mean the Assembly ill listen.
In September a group of concerned students formed the Ad Hoc Committee to talk ubout making SGA more accessible and accountable to the student body. In order to reach these goals we found it reach these goals we found necessary to address the constitution and amend it to actively reflect the needs of the tudents.
Currently, even though the Finance Board positions are technically open to the entire student body, most of the candidates come from within SGA and are usually taken from and confirmed by theAssembly. This legislation students, will have the power students, will have the power be making decisions about be making decisions about dollar student fee. It also includes a redistricting plan so that each Assembly representative is moredirectly accountable to a certain group of students around where they of students around where they live.
We as constituents of SGA We as constituents of SGA did our part and attempted to bring our concerns to our "representatives." They treated of theirs; with theratrorente that they were too tired, our concerns would take too long concerns would take too long and that their procedures overrode our rights.
SGA always complains about student "apathy" but night? When one of SGA's "so-called" apathetic students, one of your peers. voiced her disgust with the Assembly's our elected representatives laughed at her.
SGA's only defense of their actions was that the students didn't do it the way SGA wanted it done. When constituents cake the time to show up, our SSA "representatives" have an overriding obligation to listen. Isn't it about time that SGA became accountable to someone other than themselves? This is not a laughing matter; SGA is supposed to be ours - let's reclaim it.

Don't let them laugh at you again. Be there Monday, Nov.

\section*{Committee acted out of order}

\section*{To the editor:}

As a student government assemblyman from South Campus, I feel that it is my duty to let the student body know the true facts surrounding the Nov. 18 Assembly meeting.
While the "ad hoc student committee," which comprises committee, "Which comprises Assembly and executive staff members, feels what occurred members, feels what oc at that meeting was a "travesty" to the rights of "travesty" to the rights of students on this campus. this students on this campus, thit is simply not the case. The is simply not the case: The issue, contrary to popular belief, does not revolve around whether or not the Assembly wants to hear the proposal, but rather it revolves around correct parliamentary procedure. Every governing body on this planet has certain rules and guidelines that must be followed to allow a smooth process of deliberation. While this might be construed by some as unnecessary bureaucracy, it is, however, a bureaucracy, it is, however, a fact of life and must be dealt fact w .

To refresh the memory of those in attendance at last Monday's Assembly meeting. the Speaker came before the Assembly and explicitly asked if there were any additions to that evening's agenda. Seeing none, the Speaker then proceeded with the meeting. What I find extremely fascinating is why, at that time, the sponsor(s) of the time, the sponsor(s) of the proposal did not come forward to ask the Speaker to make an addition. Had they done so, this whole "travesty" could have been prevented. Since the sponsor(s) and numerous sponsor(s) and numerous backers of this proposal are backers of this proposal are Assembly members, and know Assembly members, and the correct procedure of Assembly, it seems odd that they did not pursue the correct channels to get the proposal onto the Assembly floor. This procedure requires the "extremely complex" action of asking the Speaker to place the proposal on the agenda.
By bot following this simple, established procedure, it appears as if those that support this proposal have ulterior motives. In view of their "rally" at the Schine on Monday night, the motive appears to be publicity and press. Knowing that it would be too simple to follow the correct path, thes people deciced to try and \({ }^{\text {subuert the system. That way, }}\) they could make such a big issue out of a small problem

My fellow students, do not believe the rhetoric that these "soapbox" politicians are trying to feed you. SGA is a body of students looking out for student interests. The issue is not whether the Assembly wants to hear this proposal - it does. The issue is whether the manner in which the proposal manner in which the prope was being forced upon the Assembly was through Assembly was through opportunity to place the opportunity to place the proposal on the agenda w problems, for some reason that opportunity was not taken, and what occurred was a "beautiful" opportunity for certain members of the Assembly and the SGA executive staff to make a "mountain out of a mole hill." By the way, if any student or backer of the proposal would like to follow the correct procedure, I am sure that the Assembly would be more than delighted to hear it.

\section*{Proposal methods questioned \\ To the editor: \\ the addition to the agenda. \\ ategorized as Off-Campus)}

We are writing with regard to the actions that took place The Assembly refused to hear a student's legislation regarding an amendment to the constitution. The objection was not against the principle of allowing any student to bring legislation before the Assembly, rather at the blatant atternpt by certain sponsors of the bill to railroad legislation through the Assernbly that would have serious ramifications to the constituencies of SGA members without proper review by the representatives.
We realize that railroading may be a harsh term, but in this case it is accurate. At the opening of the meeting Speaker Dionne Roberts asked if there were any additions to the agenda. At least seven of the bill's 17 sponsors were in attendance, including Speaker Roberts and Vice President for Student Affair Desmonique Bonet. However, none of these sponsors made

One of the most disturbing things about the bill was that and dirafted the proposal on and drafted the prop
Nov. 14, could have distributed copies of the bill to the Assembly sooner. The complex proposal that this bill represented warranted the representatives to carefully read and give thought to the bill, something that the short amount of time provided by the Assembly meeting does not allow. Why did the sponsors apparently feel that it was necessary to shroud the bill in secrecy and then "spring" it on the Assembly?

This proposal contains facts that many students are unaware of. First, one of the named sponsors was unaware that his name had been added by one of the co-sponsors, nor did he want to be associated with the bill. Second, the redistricting of the South Campus, Oft-Campus and Greek Housing districts (which according to this proposal would be eliminated and would affect 38 mernbers of the Assembly, which at this time constitutes roughly onetime constitutes roughly on half of the Assembly-This translates into representatives translates into representati undergraduate student body. Third, the proposal is worded vaguely and contains several ambiguities that need to be cleared up before the Assembly can vote.

To clear up the intent of this response, we are in favor of any student sponsored legislation. However, we objected to the methods with which the sponsors of this legislation attempted to railroad it through the Assembly and we will continue to object to any methods employed that are similar to those used by the sponsors on Monday, Nov. 18

\section*{Legislation kept secret; Assembly}
o the editor:
I am writing this letter in response to the actions of the Ad-Hoc Committee, which attempted to push its legislation through the SGA Assembly Monday night.

First, I would like to address the refusal of the Assembly to hear the legislation. As stated by Natanya Levioff, SGA recorder, "This body didn't vote against the student body, they voted against a proposal because of certain procedure." A majority of the members of this committee serve either as representatives or executive members of the Student Government Association. They all know the proper and "normal" procedures followed with regards to introducing legislation to the Assembly.

The sponsors of this legislation had at least two opportunities prior to their time of proposal to have the Assembly hear it Seeing that this legislation has been known about for some time, it should have been on the agenda from the beginning. When this was not done, a second opportunity

\section*{Questionnaire probes off-campus housing \\ their landlord's name and other}

The Syracuse University Student Government Association and Alteracts have developed an Off-Campus Housing Questionnaire to help students get a better idea of the kind of apartment or house they might be moving into.
"The survey is trying to focus on individual properties and the specifics of those properties," said Carol Stone, coordinator of off-campus housing at Alteracts.
"We want to compile something for new students moving off-campus so they have a basis to make their judgement on," Stone said.

When students move offcampus, they sometimes find themselves complaining about things they did not know about their apartment or house when they signed the lease, said Aaron Amos. SGA vice president for university/community relations.

Arnos said he hopes the questionnaire will put pressure on landlords to take better care of their property.
"We don't want to threaten or alienate the landlords." he said. "But we want to let them know they are being watched.'

\section*{Know thy landiord}
"If landlords know students are getting information beforehand, they may shape up their acts," he said. "For good landlords it will give them free advertising."
The 10 -question survey allows students to rate aspects of their rental unit, , their landand maintenance and problems with noise and neighbors.
Students may also write in comments about the property. The questionnaires may be picked up at Alteracts or SGA and turned in to both offices.
Once the surveys are collected, they will be put into a file at Alteracts so students can find out what the previous occupants said about their rental units, Stone said.

If the questionnaires are collected correctly every year, there should be a rating on almost all the properties in the area, she said.

Considering the large number of students who live offcampus, there are relatively few complaints, she said.
"There are a lot of good landlords," Stone said. "But the few that are bad happen to own a lot of property and are making it distressing for students."

Despite the poor past records of some landlords, students continue to rent from them, she said.
"I see the same thing over and over,"she said. "Students are renting from the same landlords who aren't so good because of the locations of the places, or because they have a ceiling fan or something.

Current student tenants think the questionnaire will give new students an advantage they did not have.

Learning about renting
"It's a smart idea. We went to getour house and didn't know anything about it, senior Justine Gerdausaid. still a lot of problems with the house we would have wanted to

"Other students don't know there are nicer places out there," senior Jodi Berman said. "A lot of people don't know you can look around.
"When I first looked at apartments, I thought you had to find a place by Jan. 15 or you wouldn't get one."

With Syracuse University downsizing over the next-few years, landlords will be competyears, landlords will b ing for fewer students.

Landlord David Rezak said he thinks property owners will have to improve the quality of their rental units to attract students who will have more choices.

Rezak sees the survey as a way to make landlords more accountable for their properties.
"Some landlords give us a bad name," he said. "Andimpleased to see them brought to the attention of renters because economic pressure is the single most important influence on the

"I think it"s a good idea, but people who fill out the form will probably be the people you have trouble with," he said. "I'm afraid if a student went by what someone said, they might not get a true picture.
Amos said the questionnaire should add valuable insight to getting a true picture of a rental unit.
"Students should gain information about as many offcampus apartments and landlords as they can," he said. "People shouldgetan idea of the

After solid high school careers, frostration sets in as the games mount without the walkons getting in the contests.

This season's tournament features 13 teams, seven of which are ranked in the Top 20 of the pre-season collegiate wrestling poll, including the top-ranked team in the East, the Penn State University Nittany Lions. You think about yourself and you know what a great talent level people are on and you accept that," Gross said. "It takes a while to realize it until you see someone rumning past you and you know you're a step behind."

Very few people attempt to rake the team as walk-ons. Since Syracuse is a private institution, the players would have to pay their own tuition.
To just make the team is a challenge and there are several challenge and there are severa obstacles in the players' paths.
"There is no criteria because we don't encourage it," said Syracuse coach Paul Pasqualoni. "We sit down with thern and explain the situation. We don't paint a rosy picture.

After being heavily recruited. he broke his ankle in the third game of his senior season in high school, causing many programs to shy away from him.

Despite not being on scholarship, Lusardi was on the kickoff return team in his first game He was later awarded a scholarship prior to his junior year.
IHou can't come here and say I'm a walk-on, I'm never going to play," Lusardi sajd. "You come here. You want to play. You have to bust your butt like any scholarship player."

"We just did not have any positive things at all come out of the bame, \({ }^{2}\) Berndt said. "Rutgers needed to win to have a winning season and they went out and did it. It was very disappointing and disheartening from our standpoint."

Ny plane leaves for Tampa (for the Hall of Fame Bowl) the same time everybody else's does. "You're recognized as being a little different. (Other players) know it's there, but it's not that big of a deal. You're not looked down upon."
Most of the walk-ons had other scholarship opportunities, but realized that football wouldn't be a lifelong pursuit.
"I knew that football was not going to be what I was doing for the rest of my life," Hanson said. "I had other interests and the academics at Syracuse are the academics at Syracuse are what attracted me here. Footwanted to give it a shot when I got here.'

"I had this dream of playing big time ball and I didn't want to give up that dream," Shavers said. "I knew I wasn't going to be recruited, but I still wanted to give it a shot."

While their careers may end after four years at Syracuse. Hanson said he will take away many things from his tenure as an Orangeman.
"Football teaches values that can be used in life," Hanson said. "Where the other guys may be going to earn a living in the NFL, we take what we learned from football - the values of discipline, self-motivation, hard work, teamwork, leadership - and can apply it to anything we might want to do."

For the year, Temple has been outscored 253-113, and lost all six contests it has played on the road.

In conference standings, Berndt's squad is ranked last in total offenserf264.6 yards per game) as well as total defense (361.6 yards per game).

However, the Owls out the season on a positive note, as they host the 4-6 Zips on Saturday.
Akron was also shut out last week in a 19-0 defeat at Army. According to Berndt, he does not expect a scoring duel at Veterans Stadium.

SPORTS
OPINION The Orangemen have a group of solid veterans, but some holes but some holes too. Syracuse will on its freshmen heavily and should they come through, this team will will unquestionably be led by its captains Darin Farrell, Mark Kert nd Rich Santana.
Syracuse has holes at 126, 134, 158 and the heavyweight classes
At 118, Drew Black is ranised No. 1 in New York, but needs to improve on his consistency. He finished with a \(21-15\) record at that weight last year. Sometimes he looked brilliant but at other times made foolish mistakes late in matches which cost him. At 126, Syracuse will be forced to replace Steve Trumpet, who very well may have been the Orangemen's most improved wrestler
At 134 pounds, Santana, a twoto replace another two-time All American, Darren Schulman. That move leaves a monstrous hole to fill.

At 142, Santana should be able to dominate. At 5 -foot-II, his height gave him leverage against the smaller 134 -pounders and now he should be able to continue to dominate in the 142-pound class. Santana can make plane reservations for a trip to Okla homa City for the NCAA's today.

Chris Saba, who many considered the weak link on the team last year is ready to assume a major role at 150 pounds.

Saba proved he is a tough customer at last season's New York State Championships. A head butt opened to wrestle and advanced.

The Orangemen had a strong 158 pounder in NCAA qualifier Jamie St. John last season. With St. John redshirting this year, his weight class has the biggest questions.

At 167, the "Terminator" is back, plain and simple. After a redshirt geason two years ago, Farrell battled through injuries and won the EIWA

If he can maintain his weight to the point where he doesn't have to struggle to make the weight limit, he too hould make plane reservations.
At 177 pounds, Ethan Bosch proved he could assume the spot last season when Farrell was injured
At 190. Kerr was the EIWA Champion for the second time last year. If he maintains his poise and composure, it wouldn't be a surprise if he won the whole thing.
With Joe Zito redshirting at heavyweight. SU may have to establish its dominance in the earlier weight classes to succeed.

As the Syracuse University wrestling team prepares for its opening meet of the season this weekend at the Lock Haven Invitational, its greatest concern ce around the young and the restless.

The 14th-ranked Orangemen are not avid fans of the soap opera, but their success at this weekend's tournament does revolve around a group of young and does revolve around a group of young and inexperienced wrestlers.

Syracuse will start first-year wrestlers in four of the ten weight classes at Lock Haven.
"We know, what we will get out of our older guys," assistant coach Gene Mills said. "But it is our younger guys who are going to have to step in there for us this weekend, and we expect, and they ex pect, to do well.
Freshmen Fred Fabbrini, Jason Beupre and Seamus Lyman will nill in at the 126-, 158 -and 167 -pound weight classes. Redshirt freshman Jamie Kyriazis will man the 134-pound spot.
The Orangemen's corps of young wrestlers has been moved into starting spots due to a combination of injuries and because many onsus more experiences.
Kyriazis moves into the 134 spot vacated by All-American senior captain vacated by All-American senior captan 142 pounds.

Lyman starts at 167 because of senior captain Mark Kerr's move to heavyweight, which forced junior Ethan Bosch to fill in at 190 and senior captain Darin Farrell to move up a weight class from Farrell to 167 to 177 .
Beupre finds himself in the 158 spot due to the redshirting of junior Jamie St. John and injuries to senior Alex Teran and sophomores Andy Antonucci and Steve Taylor
"For our young guys it will be their first college meet," Mills said. "They will be a little nervaus

We are not as strong as we will be second semester, we usually never are. It is very hard for our best guys to keep a low weight for the entire season, so we let them stay up weight first semester. This will also give us an opportunity to get a good look at some of our younger guys." forts from both then wir need strong efexperienced wrestlers if they intend to duplicate last year's second place finish at Lock Haven.

Many children will die or be .injured this holiday season because of their toys, with choking constituting the majority of the accidents.

A national survey conducted by the Public Interest Research Group, along with an annual report, from the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), were released Monday, in an attempt to inform consumers of the potential dangers of many the F toys.

Toys are supposed to bring children pleasure and joy, but too often bring pain and some times even death," said Robert Merli. New York Public Research Interest Group project coordinator.

Nationally, 37 children died in toy-related accidents from January 1990 to September 1991. Nineteen deaths were caused by choking, according to the CPSC's report.

The CPSC projected 164,000 toy-related injuries for this year alone.

Representative Cardiss Collins, D-Ill.. will introduce the Toy Injury Reduction Act to Congress this week.

This bill, consists of three main parts:
- Cautionary labeling on toys intended for children ages three to six which might prevent choking hazards for children under three.
- Cautionary labeling on balloon packages warning about the choking hazard. Uninflated or popped balloons are involved in nearly half of the choking fatalities.
- A minimum size and cautionary labeling for small balls and marbles. After balloons, small balls are involved in the largest number of choking deaths.

Mary people anxiously await the holidays. The weeks leading up to Christmas and Hanukkah are filled with joyous trips to the mall, seemingly endless wish lists and trips to relatives' houses.

But not everyone enjoys the holidny season. For a variety of reasons, this festive time of year brings on severe bouts of depression in many people.

Nan G. Jensen, coordinator of counseling at Hendricks Chapel, said false expectations and the resulting disappointment upset many people.

\section*{Film executives bite nails over season releases}

By ROB OWEN Asst. Lifestyle Editor

While families across the country will be celebrating the holiday season with gift exchanges, candle lightings and carols, executives at the major motion picture studios will be more interested in how their films fare at the box office.
Studio executives are especially worried because movie attendance has been down all year. After a lackluster summer with few clear cut hits, this fall proved even more disappointing as no blockbusters appeared.

The holiday season has become the second biggest time of year for major motion picture releases, and it's also the period when most Oscar-winning films are unveiled. For these reasons, the studios have a lot riding on their November and December releases.

Lynn LaRocea, promotions director for Allied Advertising in Syracuse, said the holiday season has become popular for major film releases because there is a built-in audience.
"It probably started because kids are off of school," LaRocca said. "It's especially true in the eastern section of the United States. When it's cold out and you want to do stuff inside, a movie is the perfect opportunity."
Almed at different targets
LaRocca said the holiday release season generally includes films targeted at several differ firms targeced ant seves some ar made for families: others are more adult-oriented.

Macaulay Culkin and Anna Chlumsky experiment with their frst kiss in My Girl, an upcoming Columbia Pictures film.
LaRocca said another reason studios open so many films at the end of the year is so they can be considered for Academy Award nomination. In order to be eligible, film must be be eligible, a film must be United States by Dec. 31 .
"The logic on behalf of the studios is that pictures released later in year will be fresher in the minds of voters," LaRocca said.

The holiday film rush unoffiw cially begins tomorrow with the release of three major films: Paramount's The Addams Famm ily, Universal's American Thil: Fievel Goes West and Dinney's Beanty and the Beast.

All three of these films are especially The Addams Family which has been heavily promoted for almost a year.

Beast vs. mouse
In the most animated box office battle of the year, Beauty and the Beast will compete with the latest Fievel adventure. While Fievel and company are expected to bring in good business, even the executiveproducer of Fievel Goes West predicts Beauty and the Beast will be the winner.

Steven Spielberg, whose com pany produced Fievelfor Universal Pictures, said in the Oct. 31 issue of USA Today that he expects Beast to come out on top because it appeals to both adules without children and families.

Other films looking to find box office success this season include Warner Brother's The Last Boy Scout (Dec. 13) and \(\sqrt{F K}\) (Dec. 20).

\section*{anti-crime bill}

A handful of Republican senators has blocked final action on a wide-ranging anti-crime bill that would impose the death penalty for more than 50 federal offenses and curb gun trafficking.
The last-minute snag could undo months of negotiations that led to House and Senate passage of differing bills. Further action could be delayed until 1992 , when election-year pressures could complicate the outcome.
Sen: Steve Symms, R-Idaho, using Senate procedural rules, has vowed to hold up appointment of Senate GOP members to a conference committee to work out the differences between the bills.

Some senators said Wednesday that backers of the crime bill were trying to find a way to get the bill to the Conierence committee next week. colleague for scandal

Two men convicted of gay-bashing munrder cted of murder Wednesday in the killing of a man who was beaten with hammer and stabbed with a knife be cause he was gay, prosecutors said.

A State Supreme Court jury in Queens delivered the verdicts after a three-week trial.

The two defendants were accused of taking part in what prosecutors called a gay-bashing spree.

They were convicted of not having inflicted the single fatal stab wound but of having acted in concert with a friend who did.

The friend was the main witness against the two. He testified under a plea deal in which the prosecution dropped the murder charge against him and allowed him to plead guilty to the lesser charge of manslaughter in return for providing the only eyewitness account of the crime.

"We're actually seeing a loss of revenue," Taddeo said. "We've decided that enough is enough."
At Syracuse University, the biggest problem takes place in residence halls or off-campus houses where the cable signal is split so that other television sets can receive cable for free, Taddeo said.
"In the past three years, we've caught two fraternity houses stealing." he said. "In one of these, essentially every room in the house had cable (illegally)." These fraternities have since paid "thousand of dollars in retroactive fees and fines."
"So what?" you say. "They'llnever find out that I have cable ... right?"

The more common method is to send patrol teams to check for illegal cables on streets or in residence halls, he said. If there is a suspicion that someone is stealing cable, an investigator is called in to gather further information.
"Right now, we have investigations of about 100 people going on," Taddeo said.

Tickets are then issued to people caught stealing cable and they must appear in court, he said. From there, a judge will determine what action will be taken.
Depending on the severity of the violation, a ticket could cost hundreds or possibly thousands of dollars, he said.

A recent offender in the Syracuse area was issued a ticket for an illegal cable hook-up and received a fine of \($ 5.000\). Taddeo said
"We are no longer settling for damages in civil court," Taddeo said. "Cases are now being turned over to the district attorney for criminal prosecution."

Aside from a fine, violators could receive a jail sentence for up to six months. A longer sentence is possible for those who sell or install illegal cable were high on the list were high on the list The action that will-follow leads to the consideration of two questions: Of a specific nature, how will the U.S. government deal with the political ramifications of Pan Am 103 and the current Middle East quest for peace? Of a general nature. What policy will Washington employ in dealing with intermational terrarism?

Libyan leader Muammar al-Qaddan is well-known in the world of terrorism. Barry Rubin, of the Johns Hopkins Foreign Policy Institute, wrote that terrorism for Qaddafi is as such a Heapon of desperation as of choice. He cannot successfully invade or organize coups in targeted countries, so he resorts to assassinations and spectacular attacks to neutralize enemies and intirnidate bystanders."

\section*{Politically motivated}

Terrorism is not the culmination of activities by maniacal individuals or groups but rather the result of circumspect political calculation.
Syrian dictator Hafez al-Assad has historically sought to dominate Lebanon and decrease American influence in the region. The first goal has been more or region. The irst goal has been more or less accomplished. Iran, firmy antiAmerican since the rise of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, has endeavored to Ruhollah Khomeini, has endeavored to spread an Islamic fundamentalist revoluspread an Islamic fundamentalist revolution throughout the area. The Palestinian tion throughout the area. The Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) has historically desired a Palestinian state and the elimination of Israel.
Moscow succeeded in aligning itself with Libya, Syria and the PLO in order to enhance its influence throughout the region. As demonstrated by the events of the last year. Moscow is no longer in a position to supply client states with the funding necessary to purchase that influence. The states are lef without a sponsor.

And so the balance of power has changed by virtue of two major events: the upheaval in the Soviet Union and the Gulf War. Through a determined effort, the Bush administration fashioned the Madrid Conference in much the same way that it put together the coalition for the Gulf War: exerting economic pressure and eajoling the participants.

It is certainly possible that Libya is connected to the attack on Pan Am Flight 103. Regarding the implication of Syria and Iran, Robert H. Kupperman, senior adviser at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, suggests that and internationai of any responsibility may be politically inspired.

Kupperman pointsout that the Syrianlranian connection was abandoned by the Central Intelligence Agency in mid1990. That coincided with Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and Washington's need to bring Syria into the coalition. Kupper. man noted that "indictments also let the Palestinians of the hook at a semsitive moment for the ... Mideast peace conference and absolved Iran, the main facilitator of recent hostage releases in Lebanon."
Whether or not Washington is purposely altering data for political purposes is the subject of speculation. Such modification of data would require the complicity of several other governments. Yet the accusation of such activity is reminiscent of the hearings that resulted in Robert Gates' appointment to head in Robert Gates appointment to head the Cor for political reasons.

The second question that must be met is: What is America's policy in dealing with terrorism? It is understood that terrorism is not the sole province of the left or the right. Since some movements may be a response to genuine grievances it becomes necessary to define terrorism.

\section*{Deliberate motives}

The case of Pan Am Flight 103 brings with it a definition provided by Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. He wrate terrorism *does not accidentally kill civilians, it deliberately kills them ... What distinguishes and defines terrorism is not the identity of the perpetrator, not the cause that he professes, but the nature of his actions."

Terrorists deliberately seek out tour istsand merchants as their targets. They attack cruise ships like the Achille Lauro and bring civilian airliners ont of the sky. It is the various states that sponsor such activity that, at least in part, allow for the persistence of terrorism. These states permit their embassies to become bases of operations. Their diplomatic pouches become a safe means of transporting material.

Washington has said it is considering a range of options in dealing with the a range of options in dealing with the operation after so many years have operation after so many years have passed. It is worthwhile to reflect on the notion that, should military action be used, its propriety would lie in the fact that such a response was not rushed into.

To rule out a military response because of the lapse of time would be to suggest that any action by any group is

Economic measures can be effective in that they require a multilateral action and bring about a sense of community. The count against such a program is that it tends to produce a protracted condition whereby an entire nation is made to suffer for the actions of its government. Such a situation now exists in Iraq- Also, boycotts are only as pator least committed to the cause.

The military option places individuals and governments in a state of moral ande political confusion. The United States, for the sake of generating peace in the Middle East, hag engaged in relations with a variety of lurid governments. It was imperative for Washington to do so.

But even as the Bush administration's search for peace is admirable, the danger lies in pursuing the goal with closed eyes. Withholding a last resort military response to incidents like that of Pan

One of the drawbacks to the restructuring would be the possible loss of the advising program. Giovenco said.

\section*{Hold SGA accountable}

Monday night's Student Government Association meeting has the potential to be the most important meeting in the organization's history.

Ad Hoc Committee representatives have taken issue with the Assembly's refusal to hear the committee's proposal at last week's meeting. The Assembly has defended itself by saying the group was out of order during that SGA meeting.

If students have any desire to improve student government at Syracuse University, they must attend the SGA meeting Monday night and let their opinions be heard.

Students must find out who their representatives are and call them. Encourage them to attend Monday night's meeting and do their jobs. Remind them of their voluntary duty - one that, in many cases, was won in an uncontested race.

Representatives should act as liaisons between students and the upper echelons of SGA. One night a week is not too much to ask for such an important responsibility.

\section*{Open minds may surprise students} disturbed by some of what I hear.

I realize that the basketball tearn is full of great guys. I realize that the football team is full of great guys. But what a lot of women don't know is that this school is full of great guys.

I have been hearing a lot of women say that they would give an athlete only a "chance."

Make representatives take their responsibility seriously by telling them their actions matter to the student body.

The proper function of a representative democracy is to bring constituents' interests to the governing body and fight for their approval. After all, achieving "grassroots" relations with the student body was on the initial platform for the present administration. Hold SGA to its campaign promises.

The best way to do this is to show up at the meeting Monday night and actually voice your opinion to the Assembly. If you don't see your Assembly representative at the meeting, go back to your district and tell the constituents their representative is not fulfiling duties.

Student input is crucial in forming a more user-friendly environment in and around the SU community. Attend the meeting on Monday night and hold SGA representatives accountable for their actions as a governing body.

\section*{Give thanks for holiday message}

Thanksgiving is here and the View Master has some advice on how to approach this special time of year.

It is so common to perceive Thanksgiving as time off from school, an annual holiday spent with strange relatives, or maybe just a day for watehing football. Well, I think it is important to go a bit deeper than that. Thanksgiving ERIC knowledge all of the great STANGEL_ moments we have in life.

\section*{VEW \\ MASTER} moments or granted. And We don't fully appreciate simple things like the luxury of having a bunch of friends to hang out with or having parents or grandparents just a phone call away in case we need them. just a phone call away in case we need them. be able to share intimate feelings with a girlfriend or boyfriend.

We get lulled into assuming that these moments will always be there for us. We never get to appreciate them until they are not there. Then we realize how good they really were. It shouldn't be that way.
Thanksgiving should be an annual gign to step back from our busy lives and see the wonderful things we do have.

There are so many areas which we don't recognize is being special. Attending this school is a perfect example. It is so easy to walk around every day and point out all of the Walk around every day and point out all of the things wrong with SU. Yes, even it have been known to be guilty of that.

But the truth of the matter is we are at a great university and we are very lucky to have the chance to study here... or anywhere for that matter. Who are we to nitpick about bad scheduling procedures when there are so many people in this world, this country, this state, this city who don't even get the chance to continue their schooling. Face it folks - we have it damn good.

Friends are another subject that we often take for granted. We should understand how fortunate we are to have people to laugh with, get advice from, or just shoot the breeze with. Even having one good friend is the greatest thing in the worid. It is true that friends are hard to come by. And if you happen to have hard to corne by. And if you happen to have more than one, think how fortunate you are. I don't want to preach any more. Ill end by saying that life is to be enjoyed, not to be taken for granted. It is so easy to forget how good we have it because we get used to having it so good.

One of my father's favorite expressions really holds true here. When I was a kid, he would always say, "Don't postpone joy." He's right. Unfortanately, we only learn how true that statement is by doing just the opposite. Try not to make that mistake. Be happy.

\section*{Republicans ready}

\section*{To the editor:}

We found Doug Melcher's comments about the College Republicans' attitude toward a debate with the University Democrats ("UDemocrats look to debate Republicans," Nov. 13) to be quite curious.

Mr. Melcher alleged the College Republicans "are typically against debates," a remark that is totally remark that unfounded.
A little history, Mr. Melcher. Members of your group may not have been around when the College Republicans debated the UDems in 1988 and 1989. Leaders of the two groups then felt that spring was the ideal time for the event: the fall campaigns were over and the students werent rushing into final exarns and vacation.
The College Republicans had a debate team ready to go last year when the University Democratic Forum, a splinter group of the UDems. canceled the debate for its own reasons. To avoid problems this year. To avoid problems this year.

run" Calhoun said. "My worst dreams are of Stevie Thompson going up and dunking the ball. They were always tall, but they always ran."

According to Calhoun, a ranning team needs many guards who are able to keep the grueling pace of a 40 -minute game. \(S \mathrm{U}\) is loaded with guards.
The Orangemen, who will begin the season unranked for the first time since 1984, have two experienced guards in jun. ior Michael Edwards and sophomore Adrian Autry, who was an All-Big East Rookie selec. an Al-big Last Rookie selec ion Harris and Lawrence hony Harris and Lawrence Moten are well-suited to a run ning style of basketball and will press the starters for playing time.

A two-year starter at point guard, Edwards was moved to the off-guard in SU's \(95-85\) loss to Marathon Oil on Nov. 12. Autry started that game at the point.
SU coach Jim Boeheim said he made the position change because he wanted to free Edwards up for more jumpers and capitalize on Autry's penetracapitalize tion ability.
"Adrian has really stepped forward as a point guard so far forward as a point guard sofa this season," Boeheim said. "He's a much better penetrator and with Mike on the side he'll get a lot more shots."
Edwards averaged 7.9 points per game last year and handed out 78 assists. In his freshman year he passed for 168.

Autry led the Orangemen in assists last year with 164 , bui also committed 112 turnovers.

Syracuse is also fortanate to have three swingmen who can play either a guard or forward position.
Johnson, SU's leading scorer last season, is listed as both guard and forward in the media guide, but hell probably be in the power forward slot this season.
"This year more than anything I really have to do every thing," Johnson said. "I want to become a total player so 1 had to work on every aspect of my game."

Johnson did see extensive playing time at the guard spot in his freshman and sophomore sensons, but was mainly the shooting forward last year opposite Owens.

Johnson averaged 19.4 points per game with 201 rebounds in 32 games. He also dished off for 75 assists.

Hopkins is also listed as a forward but saw plenty of time at the No. 2 guard last meason. Hopkins shot 52 percent from the field last year and handed out 43 assists.

SU's third swingman bophomore Scott MicCorkle, was last year's perimeter threat off the bench. The Califormia native hit on 15 of his 40 three-point shots (38 percent).

Scotty's main attribute is his shooting," Boeheim said. "This year he'll have to do more rebounding too. He's got grod size and be's a strong kid. We'll need him to use more aspects of his game."

In the paint, \(S U\) will be going to junior center McRae. Rated the fourth best center in the country his senior year of high school. Mcrae was relegated to back-up duties behind Ellis and Coleman.

McRae challenged Ellis for a starting position early in the season last year, but the senior caught fire and worked his way to becoming the NBA first-

For the first time since 1984, Syracuse is not ranked in the preseason Top 25. SU will turn to a mix of veterans and freshmen this year as it atarts the season without an experienced post player.
round draft pick of the Los Angeles Clippers.
McRae's development inside will play a vital role in the Orangemen's success this season. He will be looked upon to be the primary rebounder and to provide interior defense in a league which boasts quality big men.
"I believe Conrad is a true center," said Boeheim. "He might not be as good as some people might hope, but he is a center. It's just a question of how rapidly be adjusts from being a center to being the center.
McRae showed flashes of brilliance last year with crowdpleasing dunks and blocked shots. Still, he averaged just five points and 4.2 rebounds per game. In an \(88-79\) win over Florida State University last February, MeRae hauled down 12 rebounds in only 17 minutes of action.

"I feel no pressure being the most experierred big man coming back," McRae said. "Hapefully people will see a change in my game for the better. Last year 1 thought I was getting better and it made me work harder in practice knowing that was close to starting."
Johnson said he has no qualms about McRae's ability in the paint.
"Conrad hasn't had the game experience, but he's a great player who's just waiting his turn," Johnson said. "Ive seen him dunk over Billy Owens. I ve

He just had to wait his turn." Junior Dave Siock will be McRae's back-up. Siock is the most inexperjenced returning player from last season as he saw only 112 minutes of action last year.

He averaged 2.6 points and 1.9 rebounds.

Calhoun said McRae and Johnson are the two most important players in Syracuse's season.
"Whe key to the team will be, Can Dave Johnson assume the role that Billy had last season?" he said. "Can he lead the team as a small forward and can Conrad hold his own in the pivot? Those two things will be the telling factors with this team."

Junior finally gets 'Hop' on starting spot \\ \\ By JEFF ELBAUM \\ \\ By JEFF ELBAUM \\ myself, making things happen,

Staff Writer

\begin{abstract}
If early season action means anything, Syracuse University junior Mike Hopkins is in a position to meet the goals he set for himself as a freshman.
"My goal when I came to Syracuse is that I wanted to Syracuse is that I wanced to body said I would never do it. I body said I would never do it. I want to be an actual part of the wins. I think I've really worked wins. I think I've really worked hard. I'm a junior now and I think it's up to me to step forward.'

Hopkins started at small forward, and scored six points in 26 minutes in the Orangemen's exhibition game against Mara-\end{abstract} thon Oil on Nov. 12.

Last season, the 6 -foot-5 Hopkins started four times at guard when injuries sidelined Adrian Autry and Michael Edwards.

Overall, Hopkins averaged 3.3 points per game in 13 minutes.

This season, with a shortage of experienced forwards, Hopkins is in the hunt to grab one of the starting positions
"I think he can be a factor, more so than some other years," SU coach Jim Boeheim said. "He'll get a rebound for us, and we're going to need somebody to get us rebounds. He'll battle, he'll scramble, and he'll make the little plays."

Over the summer, Hopkins played in Australia on a Big East All-Star team and in Los Angeles Pro-Am leagues.

Hopkins concentrated during the summer on improving his outside shot, which has been inconsistent throughout his career at SU.

My goal this season is to be more of an offensive threat," Hopkins said. "A lot of times in the games, people would say, 'You're wide open. Why aren't you shooting it?'
(Over the summer) I gained a lot of confidence asserting instead of playing back and just passing it.

His big key is, if he shoots it well from the three point line, he then becomes a more effective player," Boeheim said.

One of Hopkins' strengths on the court is his work ethic, and the people around him have the people
"My goal when I came to Syracuse is that 1 wanted to start. Everybody said I would never do it. I want to be an actual part of the wins."
- Mike Hopkins
"He's probably the hardest worker I've ever seen on a baskethall court," said forward Scott McCorkle, who has known Hopkins since his sophomore year in high school. "He's in great shape and is getting stronger and stronger."
"Mike works harder than anybody we've ever had," Boeheim said. "He has got tremendous experience, and is a fighter. I experience, and is a fig Because Hopkins redshirted his freshman season, this is his fourth year at Syracuse. That puts him in more of a leadership role on a team with only one senior.
"You just try to show the (younger players) the ropes," Hopkins said. "You don't want to be too much like, 'I am the leader because I am older.' You lead by example."

McCorkle said Hopkins keeps the team loose, often cracking jokes to alleviate the pressures of Division I basketball.

McCorkle said there's another side to Hopkins, however.
"There's also a serious side to Mike, and he's proven that this year with his grades,"

Syracuse University junior Mike Hopkins has seen his status stay up in the air for the past two seasons, but this year he appears to be in line for a starting position.

\section*{Harris shows flair beyond years \\ By DAVID I. BUSCEMA \\ Moten said.}

Asst. Sports Editor
Syracuse University freshman Anthony Harris is as quick to make a point verbally as he is to can a three-pointer or shume a no-look pass into the lane in traffic.

As most of the 6-foot-2, 190 pound guard's tearmmates were shyly talking about the jitters of their first appearance in the Carrier Dome, Harris was blunt.
"When you're on the court. you have to be a player," said Harris. following his 10 -point debut in a \(95-85\) exhibition game 12ss "If you're on the court. Nov. 12, "If you're on the court.

you shouldn't be out there in the first place.

Well. if his high school career and first two games as an Orangeman are any indication. Harris bolongs out there.

Harris was a two-time \(P_{a}\) rade All-American and the Connecticut Player of the Year at Danbury High School.

In his first two games at Syracuse, Harris has scored 10 points and gathered four assists in each sontest and electrified the Dome crowd with deft nolook passes.

Although his debut impressed the crowd. Harris was not quite ready to receive accolades following the Marathon Oit garne.
"Overall, I would say tmy performance was) less than average." Harris said. "I got off to a-quick start with eight points, then finished with only 10 . I want to be consistent."
A look at Harris' high school numbers indicates why the fresh-man- has- established such - a high standard for himself.
Harris averaged 33.4 points per game, seven rebounds and five assists as a senior and led his team to a \(90-12\) mark in his four years, As a sophomore, he led Danbury to the state charmpionship and his senior year the team was state runner-up.

Harris senior season numbers are startling. especially considering he no longer had to impress college coaches by that time.
Harris had signed with Syracuse at the end of his junior year.
Harris motivation for the numbers came from a more basic desire: one that, rather than desire: one that, rather than nailing a good shot, he described as "I love to win," Harris said. "I do anything to win. People say I can score, but I see myself as an all-around player."

All-around for Harris evidently also means going all-out in practice.

Harris and sophomore forward Scott McCorkle both showed up with bandaged heads for last Tuesday night's 96-75 exhibition win over the Canaextibition win over
The two injuries were not even a result of one massive even a result of one massive head butt. but actually two isolated accidents. Harris, however, was involved in both.
Harris threw an elbow that caught McCorkle in the head, requiring 14 stitches. In the next day's practice, Harris collided wich freshman Lazarus Sims, and this time Harris needed seven stitches.
Freshman Lawrence Moten said Harris' intensity in pracsaid Harris intensity in prato hit people over the head with his hit people over the \(h\)

It is widely known by now that Harris' early decision to attend SU, despite being recruited by high-profile schools such as Georgia Tech and the University of Kentucky, was based largely on the play of the Pearl.

Now that Harris has arrived and has suited up in Washington's old No. 31 jersey, however. he said he wants people to deal with the present.

\section*{DEAR MEMBERS OF THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY:}

The new street configuration is almost three months old now. Comstock and Waverly Avenues, now four-lane, two-way roads, serve as traffic routes around the main campus. University officials and City Planning Commission consultants have closely monitored the new system since it opened in mid-August.

During this period, we have implemented several adjustments.
- In September, three additional traffic lights were installed at the intersections of Waverly Avenue at Walnut Avenue and Walnut Place, and at Comstock Avenue and University Place.
- Traffic Signal timing cycles and phasing coordination have also been adjusted.
- Increased lighting on Waverly Avenue is planned for the immediate future.

Basically, the new system works. But we continue to be concerned about safety, especially in light of the pedestrian-car accidents that have happened on Waverly Avenue. And we will continually review the new street patterns over time.

We need your help.
- Drivers need to be ever alert when travelling through the area. A four-lane street is not an invitation to exceed the city speed limit. Exercising additional caution is highly advisable, especially during times of heavy pedestrian traffic, inclement weather, and after dark.
- Pedestrians need to cross streets with caution and only at intersections. Use extra care at riight and during bad weather when drivers may not see as well. Choose to let a car pass rather than making a dash across the street.

If we as drivers and pedestrians cooperate with one another, the new system can work. Thank you for your help.

Lane clears for center McRae

Syracuse University junior Conrad McRae will finally haul in the starting center position after backing up NBA first-round draft pick LeRon Ellis the past two seasons.

By DAVE HAUT

For two years, Conrad McRae has played in the large shadows of departed Syracuse University basketball stars Derrick Coleman, Billy Owens and LeRon Ellis.
After years of playing, practicing and learning from those current NBA players. McRae is now getting the cali from his coaches to step up and fill the void they left in the paint.

At 6 -foot-10, McRae will be the Orangemen's only legitimate big man with playing experience this season.

McRae, however. must now face two new troubles. Besides trying to overcome the pressure of being the Orangemen's new starting center, he must try to overcome a career-threatening knee injury incurred over the

After surgery and six weeks of rehabilitation, the jaggededged knee cap is at almost back to full strength, according to McRae.
"It definitely set me back." he said. "But now I have to work a little bit harder to get my stamina back."
"I know I will have to work hard to improve my entire game, but my first objective is for the team to win."
- Conrad McRae
"Conrad will have to get back into shape," SU coach Jim Boeheim said. "With the style of rumning and trapping game we play, Conrad will have to work even harder now.
"But if I have anything to do with it. all the attention I gave to Rony Seikaly and Derrick Coleman, I will give to him.

McRae said his heaith should return to normal once the regular season starts.

According to some of the coaches and players, McRae`s progress is an integral part of the team's success.
"He's a key guy," Boeheim said. "There's no question about it.
"He is a great athlete who has put in in apprenticeship against Derrick Coleman and LeRon Ellis. Hopefully he's paid attention and understands what has to be done."

Syracuse captain Dave Johnson said McRae will make his mark this seasion and shows no signs from his knee injury.
"The knce will be no problem," Johnson said. "I saw him play some pick-up games over as devastating as ever with his dunking and screaming.
"The sky's the limit for him."
Junior Mike Hopkins said he is looking for McRae to play as once was expected. McRae was rated the nation's fourth best center prospect during his senior year of high school.
"I think with more playing time for Conrad this season, everyone will see a more dominant player, like he was in high school." Hopkins said.

McRae, however, has received much negrative criticism for his low offensive output, as well as his tendency to accumulate fouls.
"I think Conrad will need to improve on all the facets of his game," SU assistant coach Bernie Fine said. "I don't think he is agreat player in any facet.

Conrad could be as good as any big man in the league. It all depends on how hard he wants to work.

McRae's work ethic so far has placed him 11 th on SU's career blocked shots list with 58 .

His 42 swats last season produced a block shot every 11 minutes.

McRae traveled on SU's European summer touring team, and he led the Orange in rebounds (10.2) and blocks (2.91, while averaging 10.7 points per game.

Even with the summer success, Boeheim said McRae must still concentrate on his offensive game as much as possible.
"Conrad is a much better defensive player than offensive," Boeheim said. "It's no secret. but with hard work he could output."

Last season, McRae played in every game, while leading the team in shooting percentage 1.543) and blocks. He averaged five points per game and 4.2 rebounds pergame.

However, unlike his predecessors Billy Owens, LeRon Eltis and Derrick Coleman, Siock is far from basking in the Orangemen's preseason spotight.

He is even overshadowed by fellow big man McRae.

But this does not bother Siock, who said he doesn't mind the lack of attention.
"There have been a lot of very good, very well-known frontcourt players that have been here in the past," Siock said. "I've always just kind of been in the background.
"Even with Conrad, he is very loud and flamboyant, but that's not me. I guess that's why it sometimes seems that way."

This season, Siock hopes his actions on the basketball court will speak louder than his silence of the court.

Siock will be looking to increase his playing time after redshirting two seasons ago and seeing only 112 minutes last year.

Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said he has seen Siock grow as a player.
"Dave is working, and has worked very hard and is much improved," Boeheim said. "We are going to need him to contribute with rebounding, his defense, and his offense and we think he will."
This season, the SU backcourt is expected to provide much of the Orangemen's offense. Boeheimsaid he wants rebounding and defense from his big men, but Siock believes he can contribute at both ends of the court.

\section*{Edwards plays role as little big man} Sophomore season plagued by severe ankle sprain

Asst. Sports Editor

Syracuse University guard Michael Edwards may be small in size, but he said he finds no challenge too tall.
"I think I'm tough," Edwards said. "I may be small, but I don't take any junk from anybody."
"I say smart things to big guys and they like to chase after me. But they can't catch me."
Following the tenth game of last season, however, the 5 -footlast season, however, the 5 -footfinally able to corner the speedy guard.

After getting off to a fine start, Edwards sprained his left ankle in a 78-73 win over Tbwson State on Dec. 20.
While Edwards missed only two games after that, the greater loss was to his previously unshaken confidence level, he said.

The ankle injury ruined my whole season," Edwards said. "I never got injured before. I was in shock.
"At my size and the position I play, I couldn't afford to lose my mobility. It killed my confidence because I couldn't do the things I was used to doing. I things I was used to doing. I getting yelled at by the coaches

Edwards' voice trailed off as he reflected on his worst basketball memory. He said he felt so helpless at the time that he "wanted to stop playing -that's how had it was."

Orangemen guard Mike Hopkins said Edwards' loss of confidence was uncharacteristic.
"Michael had a lot of confidence in himself when he came here as a freshman," Hopkins said. "I think that's (what) he lost when he hurt himself. I mean, he was so high, he didn't care who was guarding him, Mark Ifacon, this or that, he was just going to do it.
"When Michael went down it was basically the first time that he's been hurt during a season. And he comes back and he wants to be 100 percent and he's not 100 percent, so his shooting's off a little bit and he iust loses his confidence.'

Edwards' frustration at not being 100 percent healthy was understandable since he had overcome distracting preseason factors in order get off to a good start

Edwards scored in double digits three out of the first nine games, had nine points in two others and registered 18 points and seven assists against Indiana University in the championship game of the Maui Invitational Tournament.
"I wasn't worried about my spot. I wasn't scared because I'm a ballplayer, I know I'm going to play."
- Michael Edwards
"That's the real me," Edwards said. "The Indiana garne was really me.

When Edwards arrived in Maui the spotlight was on another guard, Indiana freshman phenom Damon Bailey, Yet it was Edwards who shined as he led the Orangemen to a 77-74 win.
By that time, though, Edwards should have been used to other guards stealing his attention.

Following a freshman season which saw him lead \(S U\) to a 14-4 mark and average 6.3 points per game and 6.1 assists after taking over as the starting point guard midway through the season, Edwards heard only complaints.

After the NCAA Tournament's Southeast Regional Semifinal game in which \(S U\) was defeated 82-75 by the University of Minnesota, national and local media speculated on how Syracuse would have fared with then-Georgia Tech guard Kenny Anderson at the point. The Orangemen had recruited Anderson heavily the year before.

Anderson was, after all in the midst of taking the Yellow Jackets to the Final Four Then Syracuse signed high school All-American Adrian Autry - a move many thought would lead to the unseating of Edwards at point guard.

Edwards scored 16 points againat Villanova, including two three-point shots.

Against Richmond, Edwards connected on four three-point attempts and finished with 12 points.

Edwards also had an opportunity to tie the game in the contest's last moments, with SU trailing 72-69, but his threepoint attempt rolled off the side of the rim.

The near-miss seerned to personify his season, but Edwards didn't look at it negatively.

I thought that shot was in all the way," Edwards said. "Whenever I shoot, I think it's going to go down."

And the amount of time he'll be shooting this year will increase as Edwards moves to the two-spot. Edwards apparently doesn't mind Autry moving into his point guard position this year.

I want to score more points," Edwards said. "I was always \(n\) scorer in high school.

While Edwards" move to shooting guard will help him to do that, so too will the move Billy Owens made to the NBA a year early.

In the past two seasons, Edwards has stifled the 31.8 Ppg average he had in high school to make room for veterans like Owens and Derrick Coleman.
This year, however, with Owens gone, Edwards has emerged as a veteran, and according to Hopkins, his leadership role will increase along with his scoring.
"I think he'll definitely be a leader." Hopkins said. "He"s a great shooter and he's really been working hard."
\({ }^{2 \prime}\) think it's going to be a big year for him, I think it's going to be a turning point and I think he knows that."

The Bis Enst schedule begins shortly for the Orangemen, but Sekunda is eagerly awaiting a trip back home to Seton Hall University.
"I'm definitely looking forward to playing back home at the Meadowlands - in front of my hometown crowd, in front Sekunda said. "It's just going to be a big game for us."

One Big East coach has already heard the rumors about Sekunda's abilities, and said he knows hell be a threat in the Jeague. Jeague.
"A nybody who can shoot can fit in regardless of their size." Boston College coach Jim O'Brien said. "Anybody who can shoot the three-pointer like he can will fit into any program. They'll have to find some time for him."

Cigarettes aren't good for your friends. Adopt a friend who smokes and help "em quit today. Youll both be glad tomorrow.

Edwards certainly is amxious o tarn his season around after last year.
"'rm looking to step up and have a good seasion because I got hurt last year," Edwards said. "Coach (Jim) Boeheim said he's looking to me to acore more this year."

Edwards honed his skills over the summer at the Sonny Hill league in Pennaylvania, averaging 17.3 ppg and seven assists.

While Edwards was working on his game, the media were working on rumors that the guard was dissatisfied and thinking of tranaferring.

Edwards quickly dismissed the idea of leaving.
"I'm here and I'm going to play," Edwards said. "I wasn't even thinking about transferring."

Hopkins heard the rumors, but said it would be foolish to expect Edwards to run away from any challenge.
"Ke had a lot of bad press," Hopkins said. "A lot of people were doubting him after (he was) shooting bad last year, after his iniury.
"I think he's the type of guy who's going to want to come out and show people he really can play. He realized it was an injury, that's all well and done, look out next year.

Orange guard Michael Edwards is looking to turn the corner and increase his scoring following a sophomore season which saw him average 7.9 points per game while hampered by an ankle imjury.

Freshman Lawrence Moten took an extra year to get to Syracuse University, but he has finally arrived. Moten spent a year at a prep school following his high school graduation because he failed to meet NCAA academic attempt to play two sports for SU. "If Bo knows, Mo attempt to play ewo knows.' Moten says.

By JOSH BARNETT
Assl. Sports Editor
For most high school basket. ball players it's a long road to get to the college level.

For Syracuse University freahman Lawrence Moten, the road took a one-year detour.

Moten, a 6-foot-4, 195-pound guard/forward, committed to Syracuse in the fall of 1989 , but then failed to meet the NCAA eligibility requirements under Proposition 48.

Rather than come to SU and sit out a year. Moten attended New Hampton Preparatory in New Hampton Prep
"No ifs. ands or buts about it I just couldn't sit out." Moten said. I think it would be harder for a person to come up io a school and just sit out watching the team play.

I went to prep school, got my stuff together and now Itm here for four years."

Moten's year at prep school gave him an opportunity to play stiffer competition and to increase his Scholastic Aptitude Test scores by 100 points which allowed him to qualify for NCAA eligibility.
"My year at prep school helped me out a lot," Moten said. "I got a chance to get stronger and also had a chance to get my schoolwork together. I think grew as a person. It really paid off."
"I've never seen a game in this dome. I had a little jitters. I got a few steals and the blood started flowing and then everything took care of itself."
- Lawrence Moten

Moten's additional season of experience puts him ahead of Syracuse's five other freshmen. according to SU coach Jim Bocheim.
"l think it's good for him," Boeheim said. "He's older and more mature. He's, been away from home. He's been through practices at a higher level, so I think it definitely makes it casier for hirm."
The extra season also gave him a chance to improve on the weaker areas of his game.
"He got a good indication out of high school what he needed to do to compete at the next level." Syracuse captain Dave Johnson said. "He couldn't come in last year so he applied that to what he was doing at prep school."

Moten made his first appearance at the Carrier Dome in an exhibition game againgt Marathon Oil on Nov. 12. After a year of waiting, he was a littie nervous.
"I've never seen a game in this dome," Moten said. "I had a ittie jitters. I got a few steals and the blood started nowing and then everything took care of itself."

"Pearl is gone now," Harris said. "There's no question that I like how the Pearl played. (But) that was the mid-'gos and this is the '90s.
"The number is on my back. I'm going to do what I can with it. I warrt people to know me for who I am. Not because, 'He's wearing Pearl's number,' or 'He wants to be like Pearlf.
Harris also said SU coach Jim Boeheim's role in allowing him to be himself was just as integral a part as his admiration for Washington in his decision to attend Syracuse.
"The reason I came to SU was because of Coach Boeheim." Harris said. "The trust he had in the Pearl to let him (use his style) on the court... If you can play, Coach B. will let you play. If a freshman's going to play anywhere, he's going to play here." And, according to Moten, what Harris new teammates have seen of his play. they've liked.
"He has a lot of NBA moves," Moten said. "We all joke about him. Every time Anthony shoots the ball, even when he misses. he looks good."

So far, Harris looks good enough to gain a sizeable amount of playing time and possibly one of SU's veteran backcourt duo, Michael Edwards and Adrian Autry.

While the coaches haven't really discussed such a scenario publicly. Harris' play indicates it is a possibility.

In SU's pre-season opener,

Harris was the only freshman Boeheim inserted at the end of the game during crunch time. In last Tuesday night's game. Harris hit a couple of threepointers during a key Orange run that helped them control the game.
"(The Marathon Oil game) showed me that Coach B. has sorne confidence in me." Harris said. "It made me feel good that he would put me in the last crucial minutes of the game." Confidence is one thing HarConfidence is one thing faris does not lack. As unabashris does not lack. As unabashedly as he treated his collegiate debut, Harris predicted four debut, Harris predicted of success for his new years team.
"The (Carrier) Dome crowd can expect a lot of winning, a iot of emotion," Harris said, "and a helluva team for four years."

four points, had three steals and an assist.

Moten averaged 26 points, seven rebounds and four steals last season at New Hampton, where he worked mainly as a small forward. He is expected to play small forward and possibly even power forward because of Syracuse's lack of size.
"He can help us in a couple of spots," Boeheim said. "He understands the game really well and he's a year older.

This season, the Orangemen have made a change in style to a more perimeter-oriented game. They have moved away from last season's power game. Moten originally committed to SU so he could play the power style of basketball that the Orangemen are known for.

Forward Dave Johnson said the difference in style won't be the primary adjustment Moten has to make, however.
"It's going to be a big adjustment regardless," Johnson said. "I just think the extra year helped him out. He's going to be banging against All-Americans and future NBA players. He's got his work cut out for him."

If Moten has his way. his work may involve double duty as a member of the Syracuse football team.
Moten is considered by some Moten is considered by some than basketball player.
than basketball player. Moten was a wide receiver and strong safety for the 8-1 New England Prep League runnerup.
Moten was recruited by Notre Dame, Miami and Southern California to play football.
"If Bo knows, Mc knows," Moten said. "I'm just taking it one game at a time. I think I can play football.
Moten was a high school teammate in both basketball and football of SU quarterback Marvin Graves at Archbishop Carroll High School in Washington, D.C.
Boeheim said being a twosport athlete would be very difficult for Moten.
"If he was going to play football and be a good part of the team and they go to a bowl. he wouldn't be around until January," Boeheim said. "By then, we already know what we're doing."
Moten, who rooms with Graves and SU fullback Al Wouten, has received some advice from the quarterback about piaying sports in Syracuse.
"(I told him). 'You have to be your own man," Graves said. "You can't worry about the fans. You're playing for yourself and your teammates.
"You can't expect everything to go right, so deal with things in stride.
While Moten's football carcer is on hold, he's content keeping his mind on basketball
"I don't just go out and play," Moten said. "You have to know how to think the game and I know how to out-think the next person."

\section*{Touch gives Sekunda early shot}

Syracuse University freshman forward Glenn Sekunda has only been playing Division 1 basketball since Oct. 15, but he already has an advantage over some of his teammates.

Just ask Orangemen head coach Jim Boeheim.
"Glenn Sekunda is probably the best shooter of all the incoming players," Boeheim said. "And maybe the best shooter on the basketball team.
Sekunda, a 6-foot-7, 210 pound forward from Parsippany Hills (N.J.) High School, averaged 30.7 .points, 11 rebounds also shot 43 percent from threepoint range.
Sekunda left school as the all-time leading scorer in Morris County with 2,130 points. His all-around efforts made him the USA Tbday New Jersey Player of the Year, as well as an Associated Press and New ark Star Ledger first team AllState selection.
Sekunda doesn't want to place emphasis on his high school statistics, but he does want people to know how he achieved them.
"You take it as it comes."

Sekunda said. "I went out and worked hard every day and it paid off:"
Sekunda's efforts on the practice court allowed him to leave high school as an established three-point threat.
"His strongest asset in high school was his uncanny perimeter shooting," Parsippany Hills coach Rich Fachet said. "He's a great perimeter shooter.
"This year my role will not be to take over for Billy Owens. I just have to do smart things on the court."
-Glenn Sekunda According to Fachet,
Sekunda's height coupled with his outside shooting ability made hima very versatile high school player.

What helped was that he was a force inside and outside," Fachet said. "He could be moved all over the court.
With a lack of people up front, Sekunda can continue to monopolize his height at the Division I level, according to SU forward Scott McCorkle.
"Since we are a smaller team this year he can go in and bang with the big guys." McCorkle said. "I do think that he can have an impact on the team if we get into trouble at the center position.
With the departure of 6-9 forward Billy Owens and 6-10 center LeRon Ellis to the NBA. Sekunda could soon find himself a busy freshman.
"There's a possibility that I will see a lot of playing time," Sekunda said. "Right now I have to get a lot of positive notes in the coaches' heads and get on the court and show them what I can do."
Sekunda said he just wants to adjust to his new system and doesn't want anyone thinking he will take over where Owens left off.
(Adjusting to the system is) definitely a key," Sekunda said. "This year my role will not be to take over for Billy Owens. I just have to do smart things on the court."
Sekunda chose Syracuse over the University of Connecticut and Providence College and said he was drawn to SU by more than just its basketball program.
"I liked the carnpus, and what it had to offer academically," Sekunda said. "I liked the coachSee SEKUNDA Page B9

Syracuse University sophomore Adrian Autry will be making the switch from off-guard to full-time point guard this year.

Freshman has wild year Rough ride inspires Autry to make point

\section*{By JOSH BARNETT}

Asst. Sports Editor
Syracuse University guard Adrian Autry had a roller coaster freshman year, and unfortunately for him and the Orangemen they were knocked for a loop at the end of the season.

The 6-foot-4. 195-pound sophomore was selected pre-season
Big East Rookie of the Year Big East Rookie of the Year before his freshman year and scored in double Figures in Tive of his first seven collegiate games. During that span he averaged 5.2 assists per game.

But when it came to tournament time, Autry scored just 14 points in two tournament games - a loss to Villanova University in the first round of - the Big East Tournament and Richmond in the NCAA TourRichmond in the Ne mament's irst round.
Autry shot only 24 percent from the field, including o-for-6 from three-point range in the post season
"He's one of the suys that came in and everybody expected a lot from him," said Chris Walker, Villanova's three-year starter at point guard. "When things didn't happen well. I think a lot of people got down on him toward the end of the year.

"Adrian's one of the special kind of people that comes through. He can't have an off game or people criticize him heavily."
"Sometimes, I caught myself just watching Dave (Johnson) and Bily (Owens) when 1 could have been doing other things to help the team out."
- Adrian Autry

Autry's late season perform ance received much criticism, especially his defense.

Richmond's Curtis Blair, the man Autry was responsible for guarding. scored 18 points.
"He's.sot to go out and really defend." Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said. "Last year, he was passive. He's got to be aggressive.

Autry, however, didn't seem concerried about the criticism from last year and is just lookfrom lasty
"I'm coming back to better my year," said Autry, who was voted to the 1990.91 Big East All-Rookie first team. "If have a bad year, then. Ill look at myself and see what it was."

Autry, who committed 112 turnovers last season; made a list of things to improve on, and said \(1991-92\) will be a season of change.
"I have to be more vocal." Autry said. "I have to do more of the things I didn't do last year like rebound, good shot year like rebound, good she selection, passing, tough deselection, passing, tough defense, and concentrate when 1 fense, and concentrate when shoot, penetrate and not turn is shoot, penetrate and not turn it over." A year of collegiate- experience has convinced the coaches the time is right to move Autry to the point guard position fulitime.
"Last year I didn't want to play Adrian at the point when we only had Adrian and Michael Edwards," Boeheim said. "I didn't want to put that extra "I didnt want to put that extra responsibility on him. but I think this year he's ready for think this year he's ready for it." Autry split time at the offAutry split time at the offtions last seasen. He was only the fourth SU freshman to have over 100 assists. Autry finished second in the Big East with a 5.3 assists per game average after leading the conference for most of the season.

At the point guard position. Autry will have a greater opportunity to penctrate and then pass to the perimeter, something Boeheimconsiders Autry's greatest strength.

Autry's new role will give him an apportunity to do more things on the court which he said he didn't do last season.
"Sometimes, I caught myself just watching Dave (Johunson) and Billy towens) when I could have been doing other things to help the team out," Autry said. "L felt I could have played a lot better than I did.

Along with his 5.3 assists per kame averoge, Autry averaged 9.7 points per game last season. He led the team in assists 20 times and scored in double figures 16 times

With more perimeter shoot: ing opportunities, Autry will be forced to improve on his 40 percent shpoting from the field. especially his 32 percent accu: racy from three-point range.
- I think it will be the same as last year except we're going to put more emphasis on the open three-pointer. Autry suid. "We just want to score more

With the Orangemen expected to run and press more, Autry spent the summer getting into better playing shape for his second time through the rigors of a college basketball season.
"I think I could have been in a lot better condition last year," Autry said. "I think that would have helped me out a lot more on the court.
"That's what I tried to do this summer - conditioning and getting into the best possible playing shape I can.

Autry, who started 30 games last scason, said there were times when he was tired at the end of games and lost the followthrough on his jumpshot.

With the revised style and a guard-heavy crop of recruits, Autry said he needed to be in better condition to take advantage of his latest opportunity at point guard.
'I didn't want to break my shot off by not playing, by not getting ready, by not getting in shape," he said. "I was aware we would be running and I wanted to play.

Autry saw that Seton Hall guard Terry Dehere had gotten stronger when the two played this summer, so Autry tried to follow suit.
"I said, 'If I'm going to be garding teriy, \(i\) have to get tronger, Autry said. "He's one of the premier shooting guards and if he's stronger I have to get tronger."
Dehere, an All-Big East firstteamer and Seton Hall's leading scorer, said he expects the betterconditioned Autry to have a bigger role with the Orangemen.
"He's got to pick up some of the slack now that Billy Owens is gone," Dehere said. "I think he's up for the task. He really looked good this summer when I saw him.'

Autry's on-floor leadership will be felt by all his teammates, but his leadership will most especially be felt by the "Fger guards. gung the ittle bit of experience I have I will try and reflect on them." Autry said. "I don't think any of the guards coming in are real freshmen. I think ther're above that."
One obstacle Autry said he isn't concerned about is the sophornore jinx.
"I don't particularly believe in the sophomore jinx," he said. "I think people use that as an excuse.
"Coming into the season, you have to be mentally and physically prepared, having the confidence you're going to have a good year."

\section*{McCorkle ready to uncork skills}

By KeVIn SAX
Staff Writer
For most freshman basket. ball players, the first season in the Big East is overwhelming.

The throngs of fans, the cameras, the cavernous arenas it's enough to make any 18-yearold long for the cozy confines of his old high school gym.

But Scott McCorkle seemed to thrive on the attention, having two of his best games against the defending Big East champion University of Connecticut.

The 6 -foot-5, 220 -pound forward earned player of the game honors for his 12 -point, fourrebound, three-assist performance in SU's 81-79 overtime win over the Huskies in the Carrier Dome.

McCorkle also tossed in 13 points and had five assists at Hartford, Conn., in another twopoint, 68-66, win.
"It's tough for a freshman coming in on the road at Connecticut and shoot and play the way he did," Syracuse assistant coach Bernie Fine said. "Hopefully he'll be a big contributor this year and the option's there to start."

With the loss of two Orangemen to the NBA, opportunity is staring McCorkle in the face. On a squad with six freshmen and only one senior, experience is one of McCorkle's most valuable assets.
"Hopefully this year I can do more of the other things that 1 'm capable of doing rather than just doing my regular roles."
- Scott McCorkle
"I think it's right there for him, senior forward Dave got the young guys. With any team, the first thing the coaches do is to wo with experience Scott McCorkle has performed.
"But he still has to come out there and prove himself against whoever he may be contending team ( 51.9 percent) and shot 38 percent from three-point range McCorkle also reached double figures in scoring six times last

After losing weight over the summer, the sophomore hopes to be a defensive asset as well.
"Hopefully this year I can do more of the other things that I'm capable of doing rather than just doing my regular roles," McCorkle said. 'iSyracuse coach Jim) Boeheim will hopefully get more trust in me doing those things.

My defense has picked up a lot, so hopefully l'll get a lot more playing time this year that way. Defense wins ballgame, and hopefully I improved on that.

One major contribution the Orangemen will need from McCorkle this season will be his physical play and rebounding既 Billy Owens and Ron Ellis, McCorkle will be counted on to pick up some of the slack.
"I think he needs to help us on the boards this year," Fine said. "We're going to be a smaller team than last year. I think if he rebounds effectively, that will definitely have an effect on his playing time."
Last season McCorkle didn't have to worry about rebounding but this season McCorkle's role will be expanded, according to Boeheim.
"This year he's a more capable player," Boeheim said. "Last year he didn't have to do the other things. He went-into the game to shoot. We had guys to rebound. This year he's going to have to do more things, but he's aware of that.

Senior walk-on Todd Barlok pointed to McCorkle's versatility as one of his most valuable qualities.

Hes got the confidence to handle it and be a leader out there," Barlok said. "You can see it in him. He goes out there and gets it. That's what you need on the court - someone you can look to that can do that."

Despite having a self-described satisfying freshman season, the year wasn't without its adversity.

McCorkle took a couple of teeth in the head against the University of Notre Dame and suffered a bruised back the following game against Providence College. He also strug gled with the flu during the middle of February. McCorkle's playing time dropped significantly for the remainder of the season.

The injury bug caught up with McCorkle again at the beginning of the summer when he hurt his shoulder in a pickup game.

Although the injury sidelined McCorkie for a month, he said he feels no lagging effects from the set-back.
"I was just finding out what I was capable of when \(I\) got hurt." MrCorkle said. "That was frustrating, but i learned from it too.:

"I think we were a little overconfident,"SU forward Dave Johnson said. "With the Villanova game, things didn't go as well as we wanted them to so we didn't play the way we should have. In the NCAA's we were just looking way past Richmond.

Syracuse figured to have an advantage in the two close postseason lusses because nine of SU's regular season wins came by seven points or less. Seven of those were wins of four points or less.

All the nail-biting finishes failed to help the Orangemen sustain their composure in the post-season losses, however.

If SU's troubles were limited to its on-court struggles, then perhaps the season would not have been so disappointing for many Orangemen fans.

The Syracuse Post-Standard, however, broke a two-part story of alleged improprieties in the SU basketball program in late December. The series sent shock waves through the SU community.

The story accused SU boosters and local merchants of providing players with fringe benefits and free services - a violation of NCAA rules.

The story also spurred an internal investigation of the SU basketball program. The results of that investigation were slated to be released last May, but complications pushed the date back until this month.

When the investigative team failed to complete its duties a second time, the release date was again rescheduled. The committee is currently shooting for a January completion.
The investigation has already had repercussions on the SU programas several recruits have

New York state high school stars Otis Hill and John Walstars, SU's current recruits, have lace, SU s current recruits, have the Orangemen. Wallace did, however, issue a verbal agreement to Syracuse last week. He said he will officially sign in the spring.
Last year's tournament troubles and investigation overshadowed the success that Syracuse had last season.
In addition to the 26 wins, the Orangemen claimed their firstever outright Big East Conference title with a \(12-4\) mark. They finished two full games ahead of second place St. John's University (10-6) and clinched the title with a 77-63 dismantling of Villanova in the Phila-

Confidence. It can make the difference between a good player and a great player, a star and a superstar.
It's one of the intangibles a coach cannot teach, and one of the main assets to Syracuse University senior Dave Johnson's game and character.
Johnson, the 6 -foot-6 captain of this season's squad, is fresh off a year for the Orangemen in which he was called the most improved player in the country by basketball analyst Dick Vitale. He is looking forward to the challenges of a new year with new circumstances.
He has confidence in himself, in his ability as a player and in his team. And on a team in need of leadership after the departure of star forward Billy Owens, Johnson returns as the lone senior.
"I've been here for three years and I've played with some great ones," Johnson said. "I know what it takes to be a great player and to play on a great team. I'm real confident in my abilities as a leader." Johnson arrived at SU as part of a ix-man freshman class in 1988 . He is the only senior left from that class.
Along with Owens \({ }^{\text {d }}\) departure. Richard Manning and Tony Scott have since transferred and both Mike Hopkins and Dave Siock redshirted during their caeers.
Johnson, though, is no stranger to headership. The Morgan City, La., native whs captain of his Maine Central High School squad, and now anxiously anticipatesthis opportunity to lead the Orangemen.
"It fells good," Johnson said. "First there was Sherman-(Douglas), then there was Derrick (Coleman) and Stevie (Thompson) and then Billy (Owens). So it feels real'good to finally get that it feels real good to inally get en Since his arriyal at Syracuse, nobody doubted Johnson's athletic ability, but his skill as a player was questioned in his first two seasons.
After averaging 4.2 and 6.5 points per game in his freshman and sophomore years, Johnson silenced all critics with his play last year.
He finished the season with a 19.4 points per game average, to go along with a 6.3 rebounds per game mark. Even more impressive were his 20.1 points and 6.4 rebounds per game averages in Big East play.
"If I knew there wasn't a prayer in the world for me to get to the Final Four, there would be no need for me to be out here."
- Dave Johnson

His numbers were good enough to place him as the conference's fifth leading scorer and 14 th leading rebounder. SU coach Jim Boeheim said he looks for Johnson to assume the squad's leadership role and continue his play from a year ago.
"Dave has got to step forward this year," Boeheim said. "He has to show the way a little bit for the young guys. Last year he did, even though Billy was here, and he was a solid leader and a solid player."
Johnson entered the SU record book last year, as he became only the ninth Orangeman to record 600 points in a season.

Lastseason's performance left Johnson widely regarded as the nation's most improved player and left an impression on teammate Conrad McRae.
"I admire DJ because he really went through a lot," McRae said. "He came here and he wanted to play; he was in and out of the lineup, and he took a lot of pressure from the media, from the coaches and from himself.
"He stuck it out and worked real hard and he's All-American now."

Boeheim, who called Johnson the best

With the departure of yeterans Billy Owens and LeRon Ellis, Orangemen captain Dave Johnson will be expected to carry much of the scoring load for SU this year.

Syracuse University senior forward Dave Johnson is the Orangemen's top returning scorer and rebounder-averaging 19.4 points per game and 6.3 rebounds last season. This year he was named to the preseason All-Big East first team.
athlete of his 1988-89 freshman class, had a simpler view to Johnson's explosion last season.
"His patience just got a little bit better and he started making shots," Boeheim said. "If he makes his shots from the outside, it opens up everything for the rest of his game."

Johnson reaped the fruits of his labor by being named second-team All-Big East at the end of last season and to the conference's first team in this year's pre-season poll.

But for Johnson to be successful this season, he'll need a strong performance from the players around him. Last season, Johnson had Owens and LeRon Ellis to compliment his game, but both are gone.

According to Johnson, he is fully confident in this year's squad as well as the up-tempo style of play the Orangemen are expected to run.
'One of the reasons I came here was because I knew we were going to get the ball and get down the court." Johnson said. "We're looking forward to that and I think we can even play a halfcourt game because we've got some guys that can shoot the ball."

Aside from the success of the team, Johnson should reach a personal milestone early in the season.

Johnson, who joined Owens by scoring in double figures in every contest last year, needs only 20 points to become the 33rd Syracuse player to reach the 1000 point plateau.

But according to Johnson, he will not be satisfied unless he at least repeats last season's performance this year.
I think I'm a good player right now, but I want to be a great player before my college career is over," Johnson said. "But the guys that you look at as great players or superstars have consistency. Doing it all the time, game in and game out, year in and year out is what rm looking for."

Being the lone senior, Johnson should play a large part in the team's growth and success. He will be the go-to guy in clutch situations.

That should not be a new role to Johnson, because he has come through in pressure situations in the past. He followed a missed rebound with a jumper in the final seconds to defeat Seton Hall University 69-67 last year. He also had University 69-67 last year. He also had two last second free throws to beat Duke two last second free throws to beat Duke University in the 1989 Big East-ACC Challenge.

I think it's going to be fun this year Johnson said. "I like having the ball. When the game's on the line, I want the ball."

What remains to be seen is whether or not Johnson can help an inexperienced team succeed in one of the toughest conferences in the nation.
And when he speaks of his goals for the team, as always, he remains confldent.
"I'm looking at a Final Four this year," Johnson said. "I know you can talk to a lot of people and they would say "That's a big statement." But that's why we play the games, nobody knows what's going to happen at the end of the season.

Dave Johmson's confidence level is soaring after a successful 1991 campaign.

With the lights upstaging EMF, fans saw a harsh reality. Frontman James Atkins isn't the teeny-bop scream machine MTV makes him out to be. No, he looks like a pineapple, with drooping black dreads tied into a Flintstones knot on top of his head.
More importantly, though, Atkins comes across as a skate punk without a skateboard. EMF's vehicle is affectation. They sludged through their set and came to life only during the last song, when the keyboard player smashed his synthesizer, a la Pete Townshend, and threw he pieces into the audience.

Season comes down to weekend for SU
}

\section*{By ZEV BOROW \\ Shaff ivriter}

This weekend the Syracus
University women's volleybal team will be: playing for all the marbles, laying it on the line, going for broke

Pick any cliche you like, but any way you say it the Orangewomen's 1991 season comes down to this weekend's Big East Tournament at the University Tournament a of Pitsburgh.

Syracuse (19-10,5-2), the No. 3 seeded team in the conference tournament, will take on the
No. 6 seed, the Seton Hall No. 6 seed, the Seton Hall
University Pirates \((17-14.2-5)\) in its first round matchup on Saturday morning.

The Orangewomen defeated the Pirates \(3-0\) in an early season matchup in East Orange. N.J.
SU's most formidable compehost No. 1 seed Pittsburgh Panthers (22-6, 7.0) and the No. 2 seed Villanova University Wild. cats (28-5, 6-1).
Syracuse's two regular season conference losses came to the Panthers in Pittsburgh 0.3. and to the Wildeats \(2-3\), in the Women's Building.
The Orangewormen are 1-12 lifetime against Pitt and have never beaten the Panthers in "Our tou will probably \({ }^{\text {d }}\) competition Dan Schulte said. "But Villa" nova and Georgetown the No. 4 seed) are aiso very strong ceams. We are going to have to be on top of our game as a whole team in order to be successful. A first.mound victory over the Pirates would lead SU to a face-off with the winner of the Villanova-University of Connecticut match in the conference semifinals later on Saturday.
The Orangewomen, however, come into the weekend tournacome into the weekend tournaand seven of their last eight and seven of their last eight games. Sespite SU's recent slump, Schulte said he and the team were confident going into the tournament.
"I am certainly not happy with losing," Schulte said. "But I am convinced that, number one, we are the only ceam that can knock ofl Pitt. Number two, we definitely have the ability and the potential to win the Big East Tournament. Number three, we are the onlyteam in the conference to have gone out in these last two weeks and play tough competition."

"And those two tough weeks have raised our level of play to where it needs to be to do well in the Big East tournament." Schulte added.

Syracuse will rely on the talents of the trio of senior Jesaica Paarlberg and juniors Andrea Carson and Annie Parisien, all of whom have been named Big East Players of the Week during the regular season.
"All of the competition this weekend will be tough," Pittsburgh cuach Sue Woodson said. "Syracuse and Villanova are two very good teams, but we \section*{will have the advantage of play-} ing at home, and we feel we will play to our potential."

Pittsburgh, ranked 19th nationally, is the only team in the tournament assured of an NCAA tournament asid. The remainder of the Big East teams will have of the Big East teams will have to win the conference tournato win the conference tournament outright in order to an automatic NCAA bid.
"I think we will get to the finals against Pitt," Schulte said. "I mean, it's Big East time. We know what we have to do mentally and physically.
"Il think this team has as good a chance, if not better, than any other team I've had here to win

The race for the case

By DAVE MAGER
WAER Sports Director
It's a New Year's Day ritual which has become as much a part of the angst of our times as the question, "How did Milli Vanilli become popular in the first place?"
And it's called the Drowsy Two O'Clock Hung-Over Bowl Game Explanation:
"You see, Flo, Team A (burp) has to beat Team B to win the national title. So long as Team C loses to Team D by a large margin. Don't we haveanydamn margin. Don't we haveany Alka-Seltzer in this place?
"But, Hank, there is no national title. Can I have one of those pork rinds?"
"But there is a national title Pass the Meister Braun" Pass the Meister Brac."
"So what do these four games we're watching now mean?" we're watching now rnean?"
"They mean a lot of money. Man, does my stomach hurt."

College football's greatest games are piled up to compete against each other on the first day of the year. None can be enjoyed fully, with all the channel flipping and beer sipping.

Let's all take two aspirin, some Pepto and a legitimate playoff system. Before America starts finding the 2,000 better things to do on New Year's Day. West Virginia at Syracuse (-10 1/2):

After several tight games, SU (8-2) may be hitting its stride at the right point of the geason. All cylinders were rolling in last week's win over very tough BC - pass offense, rushing offense, defense. ing offense, defense.
The play of TB Da and his several fullback palker and his several fullback partners has been astounding. When SU's offense has been down, Walker, Wooten and Co. have been there. Walker surpassed WVU's Adrian Murrell for the Big East rushing lead last weekend.

This game represents the season for the Mountaineers (6-4) They're not going bowling, and would love to play spoiler for the Orange after losing to Syracuse by 24 last year at Morgantown. Don Nehlen will fire up the offense and WR James Jett, one of the fastest players in the But with the momentum build-up starting last week, the Orangemen will roll in the home finale, and finish with a perfect 5-0 conference record. Syracuse 35. West Virginia 21.

Ohio State \((+15)\) at Michigan:

These two teams don't like each other much. This rivalry annually turns mild-mannered, white-bread midwesterners into ranting, drooling lunatics. (Nice imagery, eh?) Over this game, families have split, marriages have been broken up.

The Buckeyes are in a tough spot here. Michigan has wrapped up the Rose Bowl, but there's up the Rose bowi, but there's no way any self-respecting wolverine would look past the Buckverine would look past the Buckeyes, thus facing the wrath of every Michigan fan old enoug to say, "I hate Ohio State.

John Cooper's Buckeyes (82), SU's opponent in the Hall of Fame Bowl, come off a tight one over Indiana. Cooper has never beaten Michigan - and losses to the Wolverines and the Orangemen would probably seal his fate as coach.
But this spread, even with Desmond Howard tearing up the turf, is too much for this always-close game. Michigan 28, Ohio State 21.
Miami at Boston College (+21):
One year, one national championship for the Big East football conference. The Miami Hurricanes are the best in the league, and in the nation -by a nose over Florida State.

Miami (9-0) is tough all over with FB Stephen McGuire and ever-poised QB Gino Torretta. If this game was in Miami, it would be a walk
But against Boston College (4-6) in Chestnut Hill, the 'Canes won't win by three TD's. With the Orange Bowl coming up, Dennis Erickson will be extra careful with his starters, and BC is a team that played Michigan tough for a while al home. BC hasn't beaten Miami since Hail Flutie - they'll keep it close this time. Miami 28, Boston College 10.
Washington State at Wash. ingashington (-35):
Oregon State didn't take my advice last week ... they stuck around and got stuck in Corval lis.

If you've beenaregularreader during the season (as opposed to an irregular reader?), you've learned two things:
1. Never, ever bet anything on the basis of these picks. Unless you like losing money.
2. Always take Washington and a big spread - especially at home. Washington 41, Washington State 3.
Ivy League Game of the Week - Harvard \((+5)\) at Yale:
Fourth quarter. Yale Bowl, New Haven. It's Harvard by six. With fourth-and-goal on the 1 -yard line, Yale head coach Carmen Cozza is handed the red phone. This could only mean one thing.
"Coach C, it's Poppy again.

 Brasit, friveride, Reme\%

Who does this guy thin
George Steinbrenner?"
George Steinbrenner?
Out of respect for Yale's most famous graduate, Cozza grabs the phone. "Coach, it wouldn't be prudent to throw in this situation. Let's stay conservative - try that Quayle kid over the right wing. Now get out there and win one for the, uh, you know, that Gipp guy.'
Fearing for his job, Cozza calls the play. Fearing for his life, the young running back runs for a score ... 99 yards, the wrong way. Fans pelt him with their pipes, and Mandy Pepperidge gives him the cold shoulder for weeks. Harvard 18, Yale 10.

NFL Game of the Week -San Francisco (-3) at L.A. Rams: While neither team is having a good year, this always makes for an interesting game.

San Francisco (5-6) is not a great team, but always expect a final push from a team with so many playoff-quality players. The Rams' John Robinson should be put on the first train to Akron. L.A. was on the verge of greatness just two years ago, but has floundered to a \(3-8\) mark this season. San Francisco 32, L.A. Rams 25.

For a movie based on a series of books, the characters developed in V.I. Warshawski are incredibly one-dimensional and the plot frightfully thin.
Although Turner is allowed some good lines ("Never underestimate a man's ability to underestimate a woman." 3 , the mystery about a murdered hockey player is so uninvolving that even the surprisingly violent ending won't give you much to think about.
Young Angela Goethals costars in the film as Kat, the daughter of the murclered hockey player. She's a dirty-mouthed little rat, but eventually her character becomes likeable.
Charles Durning, however, is completely wasted as Lt. Malwho tells Turner that "being a detective is no job for a girl like you.

Syracuse University men's basketball fans have always been known for their intensity and dedication to their team.

OPINION on Nov. 12, I can't number of people who besieged me With questions of Following SU's \(96-75\) win over Team Canada last Tuesday night, however, these same fans were extolling the virtues of this year's "underrated" team.

Does every Syracuse fan have to be as fair as the weather here?
First of all, anyone who made a serious judgment about the potential of this team from the Marathon Oil game should dial 1-800-GET-CLUE.

C'mon, the Orangemen did not use a set lineup for more than five minutes at a time. Freshmen who had never played college ball before were battling former collegiate players used to playing togetiner for some time now Jim Boee he was doing some in the game, thing more beneficial for the success

We saw some of the results from
We saw some of the results from that experiment on Tuesday night as most of the freshmen contributed most of the fresh heavily to the win.
THE FRESHMEN ARE GOD! THEY WILL LEAD SU TO THE NATIONAL TITLE!
Not quite. The Canada game was also an exhibition game. An exhibition game against a team that had played a ridiculous amount of games vs. good competition'in a very short period of time. This is not to diminish the ancomplishments of the SU team however, since it played a great game in just about every area.

The point is, however, that both these contests should be kept in perspective - a word the SU basketball fan seems to have eliminated from his (or her) vocabulary

Let's face it, the team is a puzzle this year. No one can really predict what it will do: there are too many what ifs.

If the freshmen can adjust to playing in the big-time, if Dave Johnson shows he can carry a team, if Conrad McRae emerges as a force inside, if ..

Some of those ifs will probabiy come through, some won't. Granted, I'm not exactly sticking my neck on the line here, but at least I'm not making premature judgements.

I can tell you Anthony Harris is going to contribute considerably in his first year, and fellow freshmen Lawrence Moten and Luice Jackson will make somewhat smaller, yet significant contributions. I think DJ will have the year he's capable of having. I'm not really sure about Conrad.
Now I may be wrong about all of this, but once again, that's my whole point. I won't know the answers to these questions until they've played a while. Neither will you.

Despite a decline in entollment and impending university-wide budget cuts the Syracuse University School of Management will continue to improve, said Dean George Burman.

No decisions have been made regarding restructuring within the school, Burman said, but the school will be able to continue to improve.
"It's our idea that we will be able to continue to strengthen our faculty and scholarly activities." he baid.
"The university is downsizing across the board," Burman said. "As such, we'll do some adjusting."
But the quality of education in the school will not be negatively affected by any changes or budget cuts, he added.

"In a professional school like this, we need to have close ties to industry," he said.

\section*{Improving projects}

The school has also undertaken a number of other projects designed to for comptroller, said SGA Elections Commissioner Neil Sutter.
"There are no candidates right now, and no one can be put on the ballot because the deadine has passed." Sutter suid.

Students have the opportunity to vote for write-in candidates on the ballot, and the writewin candidate with the top number of votes will be offered the position, he said.

\section*{Write-in comptrollers}
"Write-in candidates won't have to get 500 signatures to gret the position," Sutter said.

If there are no write-ins, there witl have to be a new election, Sutter said.

The only other cornptroller candidate originally set to be on the ballot withdrew earlier, Sutter said.

Michael Drueen, the current comptroller for University Union, said he withdrew for personal reasons also.
"The position requires a lot of time and dedication," Drueen said. "What I would be getting out of the position I would be getting elsewhere.
Drueen said he hopes whoever assumes the position is qualified.
"I really hope whoever comes forward is truly qualified, because they could make or break SGA next year. "Drueen said.

There are currently four presidential candidates on the ballot: David Aitken, Steve Gariner, loe Shields, and Eric Winig.

Current SGA President Emily Zenick said she is not endorsing any candidate.
"t really feel it's time for a good transition," Zenick said. "Im really encouraged that four people are running, and I think it's impressive."
Zenick said not endorsing a candidate will make the transition smoother for the new president,
"If I endorse someone and they lose, whoever the new president is may not feel comfortable talking to me when I sit down to talk to him about the position and responsibilities," Zerick said. "It just makes for a smoother transition."
In addition to voting for candidates, students have the opportunity to vote on a referendum concerning The Daily Orange.
The referendum asks "Do you want \($ 7\) of your student fee ( \($ 97.50\) ) to go toward funding The Daily Orange?

The Student Government Association needs to reach out to the student body, said Joe Shields, SGA presidential candidate.
"SGA needs to be established in the lives of students," he said. "Too many people have said to me, 'SGA? What's that?' That's (SGA's) responsibility."
Shields said the SGA has not been illing to respond to student concerns.
They're not willing to tackle general student concerns, such as study space in computer clusters and tuition," he said.
"Ive been here for three years, and I saw things that needed to change," Shields said. "I don't see any understanding ... SGA is not relating to other people.
"Trust is not a given at this university," Shields said. "SGA is for students, t's the ultimate open forum."

"We should have information about SGA available on Opening Weekend so students know how to get involved, he said.

Aitken said other issues relevant to SGA are the ROTC policy, lighting on campus and student-faculty! relations.

The ROTC policy that prohibits homosexuals from participating in the program is wrong, but removing it from campus would not make the problem go away, Aitken said.
"The policy is wrong, but kicking ROTC off campus is not going to help." he said. "It's a society issue, not just a university issue.

Financial aid is important for SGA to address, Shields said.
"There is a lack of enough' financial aid even in the wake of rising tuition," he said. "Too many people have said they got good financial aid packages as fresh men, but they can't get aid later on."

Shields said the next SU fund drive should be for financial aid.
"We can take Chancellor (Kenneth A.) Shaw up on his promises and really make the next drive of the university a drive for financial aid and scholarships," he said.

Shields said the most important thing to do during SU's downsizing is to build trust.

People are taking suggestion as fact." he said. "Nothing has been decided yet that's why student input is iphportant."
ROTC is also an important issue for SGA to address, Shields said.

The university needs to make their discrimination policy elear," he said.

SU has to consider actions taken by other campuses to deal with the ROTC Shields said.

SGA needs to establish trust with students in order to work effectively, he said.

Why not me?"

Lack of student involvement and apathy are two of SGA's problems, Winig said.
"SGA has its own agenda," he said. There's so little democracy, and I see a bad situation getting worse.

Many students are uninformed about SGA, Winig said.
'Most people don't even know who their SGA representative is," he said When I went around getting signatures and telling people I was running for SGA president, people asked, What's SGA?"

More students need to be involved and aware of SGA and what it does, he said

Gardner said other issues SGA needs to address are downsizing, ROTC and safety issues.
"SGA must react to downsizing," he said. "We have to talk to the chancellor, because no matter what the cuts are, someone is going to be affected."

Gardner said the SGA will have to be firm on downsizing. "If the administration is unresponsive, and talking doesn't work, then we may need to be more vocal," he said.

Another issue SGA should be concerned with is the ROTC policy that prohibits homosexuals from participating in the program, Gardner said.

SGA issues bring criticism, support on campus
} Theatrics have no place in SGA

To the editor:

For those mermbers of the Student Government Association Assembly who, because they were too busy laughing at me, cidn't catch my name and automaticall assumed that I was just an actor in the so-called "political charade" on Nov. 18, I would like you to know that Lisa Nichele Skop is no one's "political puppet."

I should start this letter by explaining that after taking a two-year leave of absence and having to deal with the bureaucracy that hinders every student, I returned to this university witha renewed sense of interest in making the entire process more approachable to was that I should approach the SGA. After all, they are my representative body. They are supposed to hear students concerns and, if unable to correct problems, then at least address them. This is where address them. This is where my disgust for the systern as a whole began

I don't know how many people outside of SGA have ever tried to visit our SGA office, but for those of you who haven't, let metell you now what happens when you get there. From the moment I entered the SGA onice disturbed a lot of people with my presence. As an unfamiliar face, I was hit with the kind of looks that imply "What you want from us," your you want from us," your we do for you?" or "What can we clarify" or "How can we interest you in becoming more aware of the job of \(S G A\). Once aware of the job of SGA." Once again the "talented 10 percent" of this university thinks that not only SGA but the world revolves around them! It is inconceivable to people like SGA Comptroller Chris Loggans, South Campus Representative Steve Weidenkopf or former SGA Comptroller candidate Michael Drueen, that any student who has major concerns, and needs to approach SOA could actuall use the Constitution the wa

Are our supposed representatives so jaded as to not be able to conceive of this in any other way and feel they need to belittle this as "just a political move," or do our supposed representativesthink that like them, once drunk with power there is no groing back to the people? Why is it such a radical notion? Why does this scare our comptroller Mr. Loggans so, into taking the time to write such long supposedly clarifying letter. Imsure it has nothing to do with the his track record of with the his track record of student support, fhelost the student support, he lost the election to WWF character Macho Man Randy Savage) that he is insecure about how long his power trip will last.

Why should Mr. Loggans be so afraid of "radical changes to the Constitution?" If they are what the students want then maybe Mr. Loggans should question why he wants things to stay the same. Isn't it iranic that Mr. Log views the entire proposed legislation as an "essentially financial matter" when that is the only part that could usurp his misuse of power implore Mr. Loggans to illustrate forme who are the "proper persons" if not the students. I feel that if I, as a students. I feel that if I, as a student, am not the "proper student, am not the "proper inherently wrong with the system.

Maybe it's about time we removed politics from the hands of people like you Mr. Loggans, and redistributed to power evenly amongst "true" representatives. Those who actually get out, speak to me, and more importantly, "Iisten" to me, you're damn right, I will be an active supporter because these are the politics that concern me. I will now be "a political force" Mr. Loggans and that is a good thing! What is sad is that before now, and even aner I came down to the office and the Assembly meeting, my name, my face, Nevertheless it is important to remember that there is nothing common about Joseph Shields.

Mr. Shields possesses qualities that are both humanistic as well as professional and that is what makes him the most complete candidate for the Student Government Association President. Mr. Shields is always willing to show hiss friends and constituents that what matters to them matiters to him. \section*{Gardner for president}

Steven Gardner has the necessary agenda to be the next president of the Student Government Association. Gardner's desire for increased and improved communication between SGA and students as well as his clear-cut game plan to improve the workings of SGA make him the most qualified choice on this week's election ballot.

Gardner believes SGA must gain the respect of students and faculty before it can play a more active role in the campus community. The current administration has left much room for improvement in this area. Interaction with the student body has been non-existent and Assembly representatives have taken advantage of their positions too often. These are only two of many areas within SGA in need of strengthening.

The president's role, as the leader of an umbrella organization, is to treat all student groups fairly and equally - in all aspects of representation including matters of finance and the budget hearings themselves. He or she must be able to relate to students on a personal level and know how to deal with people who have all types of concerns.

When comparing credentials, it may seem that other candidates are better qualified for the position of president than Gardner. However, connections do not make a qualified candidate.

Gardner will properly represent the student body's interests to SGA and the Assembly. His goals, those of improved communication and organized representation, show a desire to make SGA a better organization for its constituents, the students at Syracuse University.

\section*{Vote 'yes' for DO funding}

This year the United States celebrates the 200th Anniversary of the Bill of Rights.
Syracuse University can celebrate the First. Amendment's aniniversary by voting "yes" on The Daily Orange referendum - and ensuring the freedom of the press.

The referenduin, open to student vote during the Student Government Association presidential elections (Dec. 4 through, 6 , sasks students if they want to fund the \(D O $ 7\) of the student fee (which is \($ 97: 50\) ) Currently, The Daily Orange receives this money. A yes vote simply means students wish the DO to continue to receive the funding: A yes vote does not increase the student fee by \($ 7\) :

A no vote means students, do not want the DO to receive funding If the DO does not pass the referendum; students will not get their \($ 7\) back

For that portion of your student fee, the DO is deliverda free each day, tin aditíon, the DO offers a reduced advertising rate to student groups. Student grotips pay \($ 4.20\) pericolumm inch as opposed torthe national rate of \($ 5.30\)

The Daily, Orangeis a referendum group for an mportant reason- to upholathenirot mendraptgapap; tee of the freedom of the press
As a newspaper, The Daily Orange should not ask the government for money. It is for this reason that the DO asks the students for their finan cial support.

Imagine a budget hearings process in which the amount of money the newspaper receives is contingent upon its editorial policies.

Imagine the implications for one of the most cherished ideals of this country that of free speech te This wèek, stidents have à chance to vote for the rights of their student newspaper.

If the DO's voice is stifled, 'the students \({ }^{\text {voice }}\) is stifled. The DO's editorial'poze is Syracuse University's forum for getting its ideas into the marketplace.
Syracuse University is in a time of great change. Next year: at this time, many students, wilk be attending a Gaistly different university With the issues facing this campus today, students need place for their thoughts and coneerns to be heard.

With?the university's downsizing looring on the horizon, don't let your newspaper, your voice he silenced.

In praise of Bush's veto

To the editor:
I am writing this letter in response to the editorial that was published in Wednesday's Daily Orange. This editorial concerned Fresident Bush s veto of a bill to allow abortion counseling in federally funded clinics. Privately fundedclinics can and do counsel women for abortions (contrary to what the editorial would have you believe.)

The bill mentioned in the editorial was an atternpt to reverse the effects of the Supreme Court's Rust vs. Sullivan decision which determined that counselors may not give abortion counseling in federally funded clinics. The court said that Planned Parenthood and other clinics were in violation of the Title \(X\) clause (passed by the U.S. Congress back in the 1970s) which states. "Federal funds may not be used in programs that includeabortion as amethod of family planning."

Members of the press have labeled Rust vs. Sullivan a "gag rule." I call it enforcement of the law set down by the U.S. Congress. Restrictions on what counselors in federal clinics can say is not restricting freedom of speech (as this editorial suggests.) The state can regulate what public school teachers say in the classroom because the state is their employer; likewise, the state also has a right to regulate what these counselors (state employees) say. Doctors and counselors in their own private clinics can advocate abortion until they're blue in the face. Under Rust vs. Sullivan, I as a taxpayer don't have to pay axpayer dont have to pay

As the many animal rights letters suggest, there is a lot of confusion in this country as to who or what has rights. I agree, under current U.S. law an eagle embryo has more rights than a human embryo. I am just thankful that President Bush is not only concerned with balancing the rights of both wornen and the unborn, but he respects the rights of we taxpayers, who respect human life, and don' want our pocketbooks raided by proponents of public funded abartions.

\section*{LETTERS}

The lynching of SUFAR

To the editor:
I wish to address the lynch mob recently gathered in an effort to denounce the concerns of SUPAR (Syracuse University for Animal Rights). It is a recurring theme in U.S. history that when the basic beliefs of people are called into question, they often react aggressively and with little forethought. Abolition, civil rights, feminism and even seemingly minuscule issues like rock \(n\) roll were greeted with a violent back lash from those aiming to uphold "traditional" society. When left unchecked these backlashes have spread to cause such atrocities as wartime Japanese internment, McCarthyism and most recently, a successful racist politician in Louisiana.
A similar (although smaller sale) backlash is now being directed towards those who have the courage to defend animals who cannot defend hemselves. Shock tactics concerning animal rights are oscential to awaken an inactiv ociety and shatter its obstinate resistance to change.

Connie Bear's (SU 1996) letter doesn't even get off the ground before exposing her biased and tainted opinions Referring to "animal cults" that continually "harass' people to satisfy their "antisocial counter culture urges," she makes the basic argumentative mistake of attacking her opponents and not their views. Of course Connie, if you had dared to decry the brutal whipping of an African-American in the United States only a century and a half ago, you too would be recognized as part of an unwelcome and un-American minority. But in Connie's world people killing animals with high-powered rifles, electronic scopes, and camouflagedesigns to fool an animal's vision are sportsmen. About as sporting as me roughing up my infant sister, and hardly men by any srer, tretch orthe word Craig Benton (SU 1992) has a more simple philosophy Animals have the right to be eaten and nothing more. Me able to kill animal, me do so, me eat him, no qualms ... and no higher sense of reasoning He proceeds to chastise those n SUFAR by questioning th purity of their beliefs. He questions whether those who profess to care for animal rights are they themselves using animal products, apparently believing that if even one product is used (i.e. deodorant) then their concerns becorne invalid. Translated into practical terms, don't even attempt to right wrongs unless you're confident that you'll never overlook a single one. A brilliant call for social and political inaction.
Benton concludes by reaffirming his belief in Oid Glory and its guardian, the conservative Republicans. The very party which turned that symbol into a political weapon during the flag burning dispute. While the Democrats recognized the need to protect the Bill of Rights, Bush and his party fought to transform the issue into a debate over patriotism, hoping to muster the support of less adroit Americans.

I have only in the past year become concerned over animal rights following my change to a vegetarian lifestyle. I do therefore understand some of your views. Myself and those in SUFAR (although I can't speak for that organization) do not contend to be holier than thou. Only better informed.

I would only ask the SU community to engage in some serious introspection. Do you really feel unaffected at the image of a small animal crying out in pain to free itself from a steel trap? Or a young calf living a short and torturous texture? Let your beliefs be texture? bet your beliefs of human decency. Not a stubborn human decency. Not a stubborn remains many living, breathing remains many living, breathin things which are depending things on you.

The rally focused on giving women power by allowing victims of sexual assault to talk about their experiences, Angela Jo Verdone, former co-president of Students Concerned About Rape Education, said.
"War is what we are talking about," she said.
"And when we scream tonight, remember that we are screaming at our outrage and we are screaming for our lives, we are screaming for our lives, and for once, maybe well b occur, but a lot do not understand them, Verdone said.

"I spoke earlier to two young boys and I asked them, 'Do you think women hurt men more, or do men hurt women more?" she said. "Both of them, with very little thought, knew that men hurt women more.

Society needs to recognize that there are differences between rape and sex assault, Verdone said. But both are violent crimes.
"We recognize that rape and other forms of sexist violence are hate crimes," she said

People misuse language when referring to sexual crimes, Verdone said.

\section*{Different names}

For example, rape survivors might call a man a rapist while the media or public official might call him perpetrator or assailant.
"We are more than likely to do something that the media, administration and other people in power aren't fond of," she said. "We are more likely to call a man who has committed rape a rapist. Not a perpetrator, not an assailant. not an attacker."
Women need to reclaim positions of power in anti-rape organizations, Verdone said, calling for reforms in S.C.A.R.ED.
"The feminist voice has been chased out of S.C.A.R.ED," she chase
SU senior Laura Gray also discussed her survival as a rape discusse

It has been three years since was raped on this campus, and it is a very important time for me to speak out and say 'I'm alive.'
"I speak tonight because women I love die from the crime of sexual assault." she said.

Talking about rape incidents helps victims cope with the pain, Gray said.
"The mernories we have don't go away so easily," she said. "We don't trust so easily. We don't love so easily, and we don't feel so easily."
"But we walk together," she said. "We walk together in our collective knowledge of the pain anger, and the willingness to break silences again."

Linda Alcoff, assistant professor of philosophy, said society needs to give women confidence by putting them in positions of power.
"It is an issue of power, of women's power," she said. "The ultimate solution to sexual violence is to empower women and children.

Our demand should not just be to take back the night, but be to take back the night, but take back the day and the sunny summer afternoons, and to take back our workplaces, to take back our workplaces, and our homes and to take back our own bedrooms," she said.
Releasing emotions is not enough for a survivor of rape. A lcoff said. They need to gain self-esteem before they can begin recovery.
"Reforms can be a big part of social change when they are done to empower women." she said.

\section*{Video information booth seeks to inform, entertain}

\section*{By IUSTINE CIOVACCO Contributing Writer}

A new addition to the lower level of the Schine Student Center combines entertainment, information and advertisements in one modern package.
The Laser Video Network (LVN) fuses optical laser discs with state-of-the-art computer technology to form the Info Source Box.
The 7'6" box displays announcements about university and community events, corresponding to student needs.

The system also displays commercials from companies such as Reebok, Nike, Certs and AT&T, which provide the funds to operate the service. The university reserves the right to reject any of the ads for display that it finds offensive to the student body.
The LVN offered to donate the box at a time when Director of Schine Services Toby Peters was looking for an outlet to display such information to students.
"The product was generally what we had been searching for all along to inform students, and the only cost to the inform students. and the only co university is time, \(: ~ P e t e r s ~ s a i d . ~\)

\section*{Prograreining promqs}

The University Events Office programs the machine and updates events," Peters said. "That's the most involved the university gets."

Syracuse University is one of 10 colleges in which the box is currently being marketed. Similar boxes have been placed at Boston University, Harvard, MIT and the State University of New York Stony Brook campus.

These universities were chosen for their population size, demographic makeup and proximity to major cities.

We felt the chosen universities would be the most representative campuses in the northeast," Tom Kidrin, president of LVN, said.
Kidrin has high hopes for the box, which will be placed on more than 200 campuses by 1993.
"The system is more than an entertainment center - it's a lifestyle,' Kidrin said.

He said the network also plans to include contests and interact with causes include contests and interact w .
"Each month, we want to give a portion of the proceeds from the box to charities," Kidrin said.
"We are going to do promotions on the box with celebrities and their causes: Sting and the rainforests, Madonna and now Magic Johnson for AIDS awareness are just some of the stars we plan to interact with," Kidrin said.

Videos on the way
In the future, the box will also hoid more than 60 music video titles, a ticket center for both on-and off-campus events, comedy clips and sports shorts. It will offer coupons for upcoming ev products advertised on the box.
Several of these programs should be implemented this year, Kidrin said.
"It's just a matter of time before the system is fully programmed," he said.

While the initial student response appears to be favorable, Kidrin said they may feel that many of the categories offered by the system are now blank. See BOXES Page 22

When you're one, you tend to be fairly short. I was no exception. When I walked into the little boys room, the toilet would actually come right up to my waist.
At first I thought this was why they called it the little boys room. The rim of the bowl became a great resting spot. I ... well, you know.

If there is a good reason to stop being potty trained, this is definitely one of them. I think it is pretty natural for a one-year-old to be traumatized by huge porcelain objects smashing into his privates. I mean, you think putting a band-aid on the tip of your finger is difficult?
Diapers really didn't seem that juvenile to me.

Biff Henrich's recent exhibit at the Light Work Gallery in the Watson Theater Complex included a quote on the wall that explained the artist's philosophy.

There is a certain grotesque surreality in the truth." it said. "Within that surrealistic truth one often finds humor.

Light Work supplies a univer-sity-owned and operated darkroorn open to students and the community. It is also responsible for the artwork displayed in the Light Work Gallery

Amy Hufnagel, the assistant director of Light Work, said the gallery always looks for original and/or experimental work to display.
"We often seek artists who are original and who seem to push the boundaries of what is considered 'traditional' photog' raphy." Hufnagel aaid.

Works of Biff Henrich were most recently displayed in the Light Work Gallery. They depicted animals in the many stages of taxidermy.

The large \(30^{\prime \prime} \times 40^{\circ \prime}\) prints were composed in atudio setting with the animals in the foreground. Dramatic blue, black and red backdrops make up the background.

Prior to this, Henrich depicted lifersize photos of men eating bizarrely packaged junk food, Hufnagel said.

Henrich has said of his photography, "Preserved artifacts mirror a culture's values."
Hufnagel said, "Henrich seems to want to make a atate-

Hufnagel said the reactions to the work were varied.

Kumon Method strives to improve math skills
}

In today's society, with such a strong emphasis placed on education, many organizations have cropped up worldwide to help children receive a better education.

The Kumon Educational Institute, which specializes in math, is one such organization.

The Kumon Method was founded in 1951 by math teacher Toru Kumon. Dissatisfied with his son's math abilities, Kumon developed worksheets that helped enhance his son's calculating skills.

According to Ruth Lipka, director of the Kumon Educational Institute in New Jersey, Kumon "took only the things that are necessary for computation skills."

For example, with the Kumon Method, a child would not be taught how to make change. Instead, addition and subtraction skills are reinforced. The child is then able to apply these skills to other areas.

Based on the success of his method with his son, Kumon opened his first center in Japan in 1958. Today. more than 1.6 million children study the Kumon Method around the world.
Following an intense training course, Dr. Betty Feng of Jamesville became a qualified instructor. She has opened a center in DeWitt.

According to Feng, the Kumon Method is a supplement, not a substitute, for the education received in school.

Based on self-learning, its goals are to improve a child's performance in math, increase confidence in abilities and teach good study skills.
"Our role isn't to teach, but to monitor," Feng said.

This is accomplished through a well-planned course. The objectives of this course are to have the student complete the given work in the allotted amount of time with 100 percent accuracy.
"The time frame is important, because if the child is slow, it indicates that this particular mathematical skill has not been mastered," Feng said.
In order to be placed at an appropriate level within the program, the first thing a stu dent must do is take a diagnos tic test. Based on the results the student is placed at a level where he or she will feel comfortable.
Familiarity with the informa tion on the level they are placed at will enable them to do well They will therefore receive good grades and become confident about their abilities, Lipka said

\section*{200 sheets per level}

After being placed, students are given worksheets. Each level has 200 worksheets, which are completed by working for 20 minutes each day.

According to Lipka, each worksheet takes about two minutes in the lower levels. At higher evels, the worksheets contain ewer problems so that they can be completed in the allotted time.

In order for instructors to monitor theirstudents' progress, the students come to the center twice a week

At the center, they receive and review last week's graded work and get their work sheets or the next week. The tests at the end of each level are also administered at the center.
The test is given after a student has received 100's on every worksheet, Lipka said. When the student receives a 100 on the achievement test, they move on to the next'level.

Students not receiving a 100 will repeat worksheets in order to master the information. Feng said the tests are arranged in such a way chat the mistakes can easily be matched up with the appropriatc set of work--sireets.

Children are always encouraged, Lipka said, and reviewing the worksheets is not seen as failure but ag a way to gain mastery.
"I don't make as many mistakes" Joy Yang, I1, of Liverpool, recently enrolled in Feng's center and has found it beneficial.
"I don't make as many mistakes as before," Yang said.

It is necessary to realize that students must spend 20 minutes a day learning, Lipka said Kumon is a discipline that promotes good study skills applicable to all areas of study, she added.
"Kumon is not a quick fix," Lípka said.

Therefore, Kumon has more benefits for young people because they have not yet devel oped good study skills, Feng said.

Yang's mother agrees and said she found that in the two months her daughter has been with the program, Yang's study skills have improved

Lipka cites examples of students who were receiving \(C\) ' and \(D\) 's in school. After being enrolled in the Kumon method for one academic year, they were receiving \(A\) 's.
Despite this, it is not unusual for adults to enroll in the program "Kumon is age-blind and grade-blind," Lipka said.
She mentioned two women who enrolled when they were more than 50 years old. They used the program in order to help them train for better paying jobs.
Other people take the course to help them receive the high school general equivalency degree.
Here in Syracuse, people can enroll at Feng's newly opened Kumon center in Dewitt. The courge covers math from kinderparteri to advanced calculus. Costs include a \($ 30\) registration fee and a-$65 monthly fee. For more information, contact Feng at 446-4431.

\section*{Now students can get the Card and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only \($ 129\) or \($ 189\) each.}

There's only one way to cover a lot of territory without spending a lot of money. And that's by getting the American Express \({ }^{\circ}\) Card. It's the only card that offers an exciting new travel program exclusively for students-including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines.

Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fyy for only \($ 129\) roundirip. Or, you can cross the Mississippi for \($ 189\) roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime-because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/ 6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

In addition to this great travel program, you'll also enjoy all the benefits of Cardmembership as well as other exclusive student privileges. They include a quarterly magazine filled with informative articles on summer jobs, careers, campus life. Plus valuable discounts from leading retailers.

But remember, there's only one way to get all this-and that's by getting the American Express Card. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now whikeyou're still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new territory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.

Youth hostels offer budget travel lodging

By BETH AMOROSt
Contributing Writer
If you are thinking of taking some time off and trekking across the state, the country or the world, you might want to consider membership in the International Youth Hostel Federation (IYHF).

A youth hostel is "an inexpensive place to stay for people who are traveling overnight," according to Richard Lewis, assistant house parent at the Syracuse hostel. The Syracuse hostel is affiliated with the American Youth Hostel, which is a member of the IYHF.

IYHF is a non-profit organization. It was started in Europe and has developed into one of the world's largest travel orthe world's largest travel organizations. There are about ganizations. There are about 5,300 hostels worldwide and about hoo in North America. There are hostels in 59 countries, and it boasts a membership of around three million people.

Although there are some states without hostels, such as Kansas, they are present in all regions of the country. In New Richard Lewis is assistant house parent at the Syracuse youth hostel.

The Syracuse youth hostel is located at 535 Oak St.

York, there are hostels in Albany, Lake George and Niagara Falls, as well as other prominent cities.

Youth hostels are more widely recognized in Europe, and the majority of visitors to the U.S hostels are European.

"Traking
"Taking a year and a half off to travel is nothing for (Australians)," Lewis said.

Travel is heavier in the summer, averaging about 10 to 12 people per night in the Syracuse hostel, located at 535 Oak St.

Lewis said most of the travelers are between the ages of 20 and 60.
" \(\mathbf{A}\) lot of people think that because it is called a youth hostel, it only pertains to young people," Lewis said. "That is not According to Lewis, each hostel has its own personality. Styles range from ranch bunk houses to a converted jail. Each one is set up in a single-sex dormitory arrangement and rooms are available on a firstcome, first-serve basis. But resdrvations can bermade to set aside space for families or married couples:

The hostels do not allow sleeping bags. Members must bring their own sheets, or rent sheets, blankets arid pillows from the hostel.

Each hostel is equipped with a kitchen. Many travelers find this advantageous because it is not necessary to spend money at a restaurant, Lewis said.

Surrealism through saturation
Henrich said he views his photography as surreal because of the daunting and somewhat disturbing images displayed in the color-saturated Cibachrome prints. This surrealism is intensified by the exaggerated use of light accents, Henrich said.

Henrich is a professional photographer who lives in Buffato.
N.Y. He has also taught in various capacities at Empire State College, the State University of New York at Buffalo and Medaille College.

Henrich's work has been exhibited nationwide, and he has received grants from the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) and other groups.

\section*{Keep your student newspaper free and independent.}

The Daily Orange appears on a referendum December \(4-6\). The referendum asks if students wish to give \($ 7\) of their student fee to fund the DO. Currently, the \(D O\) receives the \($ 7\).

If students vote yes, it means they wish to continue funding the \(D O\). A yes vote does not increase the student fee by \($ 7\).

A no vote does not mean that students will get their \($ 7\) back - the money will be redistributed elsewhere.

unless he can go big potty by Christmas Eve

I laughed at her. Santa was everything that was good in the world. His existence meant that there is true magic. He would never be so petty as to hold something so silly against me. Santa Claus would be on my side.

Did you ever notice that if you re-arrange a few letters in his name that it could spell "Satan?"

Christmas Eve at Grandma's rolled around, and I had still not managed to get a bowl bid. Mom had taken Santa's veiled threat from being an incentive to flat out extortion. I stood my ground, no matter how soggy it got.

But after six cups of egrnog at Grandma's. I knew that it was my last chance to earn the Farm. If I wet my good Garanimals, I would be doomed to a Christmas morning of nothing but sweaters as gifts. Still. the toilet could not be trusted.

The final showdown
There was only one option.
Maybe Mom heard the door slam. Maybe she spotted the cloud of steam rising off Grandma's rosebushes. I don't really know. The point is she dragged me to my nemesis by my ear. She was resolved to end it.
It was pretty ugly for a while, but by midnight she broke me. I managed to use the bathroom without being attacked. I felt pretty good about myself, and I knew Santa was on the way.
Finally, it was Christmas morning. I tore open each box morning. I tore open each more ander the free, get ing each and mor
There I sat, counting my sweaters, matching them to my socks, when my sister picks up a box clearly labeled "To: Ann. From: Santa.
Inside the box was ... The Farm.
In retrospect. I suppose 1 should have been happy that there was finally a Farmhouse in my house. But she was sitting there, opening and closing that doore. Rubbing that "ment in my face. The spirit of Christmas overcame me.
So I whizzed on the barn and she never wanted to play with it again.

Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good moo.

There is also a pass for nonprofit organizations with groups qf 50 or more. There is no membership fee, just the overnight fee.
"Which would you rather spend. \($ 10\) a night or \($ 50\) a night?" Lewis said.

Besidessaving money, hostels offer many other opportunities as well. Lewis finds "there are never any hassles.

By IOSH BARNETT
Asst. Sports Editor
The Syracuse University wres tling team began its 1991-92 campaign with first year wres tlers in five of the ten weight classes
After the season's first two meets the Orangemen ( \(0-1\) ) have learned that with young talent also comes inexperience.
SU placed fourth out of fourteen teams at its season opening competition at the Lock Haven Invitational on Nov. 24.

Last Monday, the Orangemen were defeated by Navy 21-18 in their first dual meet of the season.
"We have a lot of young guys and it was their first college meet," Syracuse coach Ed Carmeet, said. "But overali I think they did well and will only they did well and will only continue to improve, and as they get better the team will be more successful." The performances successful." The performances of redshirt freshman Jamie Kyriazis at 134 and freshmen Seamus Lyman and Fred Fab brini at 167 and 126 were all singled out by Carlin.

The Orangemen expected to rely heavily on youth, but something they'didn't expect was for freshman Jeff. Cervone to win the starting position from fifth year senior Drew Black at the 118 -pound class after the Lock Haven meet.

Cervone's progress in the preseason was hampered by injuries. but he was cleared to wrestle and was able to unseat Black.
The Midshipmen beat Syracuse for the third consecutive season. All the losses have come in the earlier part of the season, a factor which has greatly contributed to the defeats, according to Orange assis, eant wrestling Coach Gene Mills.
Mills laid Navy is not ined to abido by the Oct required to abide by the Oct. 15 starting deadline other programs are forced to follow.
"They were much more ready at this point in the season," Mills said. "I honestly believe if we wrestle them second semester we'd win.
"Syracuse always starts slow. (Navy) has worked so much harder and so much longer. They beat us on heart and conditioning."
A win at 177-pounds by Darin Farrell cut the Midshipmen's lead to 18-15.
Ethan Bosch then lost at 190 pounds to extend Navy's lead to 21-15, which meant the best Syracuse could hope for was a tie with a pin in the heavyweight bout.
In the heavyweight bout, Mark Kerr, the defending Eastern Intercollegiate champion at 190 was unable to score a pin and escaped with a slim 3-2 decision to make the final 21-18.

Syracuse two-timeAll-American Rich Santana, who is ranked third in the nation, successfully assumed his new weight class at 142 pounds after competing primarily at 134 for the past three seasons. He took first place at Lock Haven and scored a win in SU's loss to Navy.
"He's not really giving up any size," said Mills of Santana's move up a weight class. "Nobody is going to be any stronger at 142. If he wants to beat somebody really bad he can."

Zev Borow contributed to this report.

"I'm sure we will respond better this year." Jacobs said "We have more players, more numbers and more people that are ready to play."

In the squad's first full contest without Oslander. the Orangewomen were walloped at No. 7 Penn State (4-1), 98-66 on Monday night.

Taneshia Welch, Shawn Ziemba and Patrice Amos comprised the frontcourt for the Orangewomen that was only outrebounded 43-39 by the Lady Lions.

Ziemba and Welch led the team in scoring with 13 and 12 points respectively, while Amos paced Syracuse with 11 rebounds and five assists.
"Patrice did a great job on the boards," Jacobs said. "Taneshia helped us out on the boards, too. helped us out on the boards, too.
She stepped up her game for us."

But although the frontcourt held its own against the Lady Lions, things will be tough all season long for Syracuse's big players.

According to Jacobs, Penn State attempted to exploit the hole left in the paint by Oslander's absence.

\section*{By MiKE BUSH} Staff Writer

The Syracuse University women's basketball team anticipated playing an up-ternpo. run-and-press style this season which was opposite from the halfcourt style injuries forced it to play a year ago.

Only a week ago, the Orangewomen (3-1) did not realize how different things would be coming into tonight's contegt with ing into tonight's Siena College (1-2).

The loss of center Holly Oslander. who tore the anterior cruci ate ligament in her right knee Nov. 26, will force the team to rely more on the up-tempo game.
According to Coach Barbara Jacobs, the team showed the ability to run without Oslander in its 98-66 lass to No. 7 Penn State on Monday.
"To run you have to rebound so we're definitely working on our rebounding," Jacobs said. "(The Orangewomen) showed me, against Penn State, that they were capable of doing that and they did it against a topranked team."
Siena, much like Syracuse and Penn State, is a team which also relises on the up-tempo game. Jacobs said.

And according to Jacobs, the Orangewomen had their problems defending the break lems defending the "Siena is a team that runs and shoots off the break a lot," Jacobs said. "And we didn't defend the break real well against Penn State. So I'm a little concerned about that."

Siena last played on Nov. 30. an 84-65 loas to the University of Vermont, and are led by guara Peg Taylor and forward Liz Lops.

Taylor is averaging 13.7 points and 4.7 rebounds for the Saints, while Lops, a 6-footer, has chalked up a 12.3 point and eightrebound per game average this season.

At the center of the Syracuse running game is sophomore point graard Angel Lewis. In the tearn's two victorica in the Nov. 23-24 Carier Classic, Lewis made her collegiate debut in style.

Kenneally scored 18 points in both contests white Oslander totalled 29 points, 19 rebounds and seven blocked shots.

\section*{Orangewomen nab top preps}

Stulif reports
The Syracuse University women's basketball team got two important letters in the mail recently, but they weren't entry-winning forms for the Publisher's Clearinghouse Sweepstakes.

During the early signing period, the Orangewomen signed two players to National Leteers of Intent for the \(1992-93\) season. The first player to sign was

G-foot-2 forward/center Kristen McCrory from Cromwell (Conn.) High School. The Orangewomen also added 6-0 guard Mary Duffy from Phillipsburg, N.J.

After three beasons, McCrory holds both the scoring ( 1,205 points) and rebounding ( 740 ) records at Cromwell.

McCrory averaged 20 points and 12 rebounds a game during her jumior season. Cromwell has reached the state championship game in both her freshman and sophomore seasons.

Duffy scored 23.5 points per game during her jumior season at All Saints Regional High School. Her scoring average was the highest ever for a junior girl in the Mid-Delaware Valley region.

Duffy's 1,028 career points leaves her just 426 points short of the school record as she of the school record as

\section*{Noles bombarded by SU threes, 89-71}

\section*{Johnson hits record seven treys}

Statif Reports
Earlier in the season Syracuse University coach Jim Boeheim said his team's ability to shoot the three-pointer would come and go

In Tuesday night's 89-71 defeat of Florida State University in the final year of the Big East-ACC Challenge game the Orangemen's outside shooting skills came and conquered the Seminoles.

Syracuse (3-0) jumped out to a quick 12-3 lead based largely on outside jumpers within the contest's first five minutes, and held a commanding \(49-30\) halftime edge before a sparse crowd at Atlanta's Omni Arena.
For the game, the Orangemen were 0-of-22 from three-point range.
The Orangemen finished the threeyear series with a 3-0 mark, topping Duke in 1989, North Carolina State last season, and FSU.

The Seminoles ( \(1-1\) ), who were favored to win, were never in the game, failing to come closer than 11 points in the second half.

The Orangemen were led by the game's high scorer Dave Johnson, who had 29 points. Johnson connected on a school-record seven three-pointers.
Syracuse was also bolstered by freshman Lawrence Moten, who started at forward due to some lineup shuffling caused by an ankle injury to guard Adrian Autry. Autry did not start, but did play a key role, scoring 11 points in just 20 minutes.

Moten, however, was as big a reason as any for the Orangemen's quick jumpstart. He had 18 points for the game, with 11 coming in the first half.

Moten also connected on 2 -of-4 three point attempts

On the defensive end, Syracuse did an incredible job on the Seminoles' All American forward Douglas Edwards Edwards, who torched the Orangemen with 31 points in an \(88-79\) loss to SU last year in the Carrier Dome, managed just 14 points on Tuesday night.

In fact, the Orangemen, who were at a great size disadyantage in the frontcourt, were able to dominate the boards at times, and finished with a 42-40 advantage. And the closeness of that margin may even be misleading since Orange center Dave Siock fouled out with about six minutes left in the game as \(\mathbf{S U}\) held a comfortable lead.

\section*{McRae, Orangemen await NCAA committee's decision} 'Street agent' involved with eligibility tampering staf Repoots
The case of Syracuse University's suspended center Conrad McRae should be decided by the NCAA's Eligibility Committee via conference call this afternoon.

If all goes well, the 6 -foot-10 jumior could return to the Orangemen in time for the opening-round game of the Carfor 9 p.m. against Eastern Kentucky University.

McRae was placed on permanent suspension by SU on Nov. 26 , just minutes before the Orangemen took the court to face Cormell University. McRac was replaced by junior center Dave Siock and replaced by junior center Dave SU struggled to a \(78-71\) win.

The NCAA reported that information revealed by the university's on-going internal investigation showed Syracuse had illegally tampered with McRae's recruitment out of bigh school. Those violations were made known to SU on Nov. 19 and involve "street agent" Rob Johnson. After an initial appeal to the eligibility staff was rejected, McRae was suspended.

Johnson was also linked to the transfer of former Orangernan Tony Scott to Texas A&M. The Aggies were recently put on probation for Johnson's dealings.

If the committee rules against McRae's reinstatement, then his final option would be an appeal to the Division 1 members of the NCAA Council. If that fails, then he would be unable to play for Syracuse, but could transfer to another school and retain at least one season's eligibility.

Conrad McRae

Syracuse University swingman Lawrence Moten made his first collegiate start Thesday night against the Florida State Seminoles, Moten scored 18 starit points in SU's \(89-71\) win.

\section*{Ligament damage ends junior center's season}

By MIKE BUSH
Shall Writer
For the second straight year, the Syracuse University women's basketball team is faced with a season without its star player.
Second team All-Big East center Holly Oslander tore the anterior cruciate ligament of her right knee Nov. 26 against Iona and will miss the remainder of the season.
Last year, the Orangewornen (3-1) lost the services of senior captain Davita Smith in their first conference game, when she also injured her right knee.
Oslander underwent surgery Satur day and will need 10 to 12 months of rehabilitation.
The 6 -foot- 5 junior suffered the injury while pursuing a loose ball in the second half against lona, a contest won by Syracuse 65-59.

According to Coach Barbara Jacobs, Oslander's injury provides her with a challenge all too familiar "Personally, it started in '87-88 when I lost Felisha (Legette)" Jacobs said. "We also lost Danene (Hopson), so we lost two that season, yet we managed to win the Big East regular season champiwin the

Last season. Oslander averaged 17.4 points and 8.1 rebounds, and broke the Syracuse single-season scoring record as well as the Big East single-season as well as the Bed shot mark

Jacobs did not downplay the importance of Oslander to the Orangewomen's gameplan
"The loss of Holly is big, real big," Jacobs said. "Offensively, inside she's such a big threat that teams would have to play the inside and it would leave our perimeter game open to shoot."

In the Iona win Oslander spearibeaded the Orangewomen to a 12 -point lead before the injury. Soon after she departed, the Lady Gaels tied the score.
 Oslander will miss the remainder of the season after tearing ligaments in her knee on Nov. 26.
only to see SU pull away with the six-point victory,

SU also lost freshman guard Angel Lewis last year with a pre-season knee injury. Then forward Ciridy Pittner went down late in the year with an injury to her hand.
Jacobs said this year's team will be more equipped to handle the injury bug than was last year's squad. At one point last year SU's roster was reduced to eight players.

Fearing elimination of the School of Music. students and faculty began a sit-in Wednesday morning in the office of the dean of the College of Visual and Performing Arts.

About 40 people sat on desks, chairs and the floor in Dean Donald Lantry's office in Crouse College Wednesday afternoon.
Some sat silemtly and read books and music scores: others played instruments and sang Christmas songs.

Lynda Maccini, a senior majoring in music education and the chairwoman of the School of Music Student Government, said the sit-in will last until 5 p.m. today.
"Our purpose here is not to whine or to initiate a scramble for whatever resources are avallable, but to make a point." said Andy Waggoner, an associate professor of music theory and spokesman for the music udent government.
The Chancellor's Ad Hoc Committee classified the School of Visual and Performing Arts as one of the most financially healthy schools at Syracuse University - but the committee also recommended cutting the budget of the School of Music by \($ 215,000\) aver the next three years.
Possible scholarship cuts
The committee also recommended the elimination of special music scholarships starting with next year's freshman class.

We're operating at bare bones level financially now." Maccini said.
"We've been doing a great deal with next to nothing,"

Waggoner said.
Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw said in a Daily Orange interview that SU will have a music program, but it was too early to tell what kind of program it.would be.
"How that will come out, I don't know," Shaw said. "We can't make up our minds until the pieces are there."
Currently the school employs 15 full-time faculty. There are 91 undergraduates and 26 graduate students.
"We feel we are not trying to be radicals ... we are iust trying to make a point," said Marshall Winney. a graduate student representative to the student governgraduate student representative to the \section*{Architecture school plans growth}

The School of Architecture was designated a Category 1 school - a college whose strong fiscal position and strong application demand will continue to make the college profitable. That, says Abbey, was no surprise.
"I think it's a real testament to whatour faculty has accomplished," he said. "Over the last decade, they have built a national reputation for the school."

\section*{Demographics play role}

Still, Abbey cannot overlook the effect national demographics have had on his school. Undergraduate applications have dropped from 721 for the 1989 fall semester to 582 for the current semester. The school has a 35 percent acceptance

So, as Abbey tries to foster growth within his school, he will look to a new source-graduate students.
"Most of the tuition crisis has been undergraduate-driven," he said. "People are just now beginning to realize the potential of terminal graduate degree programs as revenue sources.

Syracuse University administrators attempted to gain insight into restracturing from top administrators from other universities last month.

The consultants visited \(S U\) to suggest ways the university could cut \($ 28\) million from the present budget of \($ 161\) million.

According to Benjamin Ware, SU vice president for academic affairs, the consultants visit cost up to an estimated \($ 30.000\).

However, ChancellorKenneth A. Shaw estimated the total cost as between \($ 10,000\) and \($ 15,000\).

SU paid for travel and living expenses and gave each consultant an honorarium for their trip to SU on Nov. 5 through 7 . Ware said.
"We paid them a small honorarium, because they did a lot of work," said Ware.
The consultants spent two nights at the Sheraton Hotel. See COST Page 6

\section*{Rape awareness group supports Shields'}

After viewing all the candidates for the office of Student Government (Association) president. Students Concerned About Rape EDucation wishes to endorse Joe Shields based upon his genuine concern for student issues his ability to unite a diverse student body and his experience in representing students' concerns to administrators.

Shields has demonstrated his concern for students by taking strong stances concerning financial aid. student representation in university decision-making and quality of education.

Financial aid at Syracuse University is targeted toward atiracting first-year student However, this aid is often decreased after the first year so as to not help returning obligations. Shields is the only candidate who has clearly candiculated concerns that financial aid be extended to cover beyond the first year a studentis at SU. He has also endorsed a more intensive review process to determine student's financial needs after student's financial needs a their first yearbecause as tuition increases each year, students' financial situation offen remains the same if not worsens.
The university is entering a period of downsizing where directly affect students.

However, it seems that students will have little, if any, say in what these decisions will be.

Joe Shields has committed to involving students in these decisions. He endarses seeking students instead of waiting for students to come to open forums which are often scheduled during class time and where students feel they have little voice.

Shields has also actively endorsed a vast improvement in the qualuse University. He endorses a more active review and rating of classes so that and rating of classes so that students can see ratings of students can see ratings of

This will allow students to get the most of their education by allowing us to choose not only classes that interest us but professors who will challenge and stimulate our learning.

Shields also seeks improvements in the Student Government Association so that it truly becomes an open forum for student concerns. This would allow student groups and students in general to easily introduce legishation aimed at improving academic quality

In addition to all this, doe is the only candidate who has tothe A nt Reme movement to the Anti-Rape movemen chaired the Syracuse Coalitio chaired the Syracuse Coalit concerning the issues of rape and sexual assault. He has also been active in scheduling speakers for anti-rape rallies as well as helping S.C.A.R.ED coordinate programming in residence halls and Greek housing.

Joe Shields has also demonstrated the leadership necessary to implement thes three years he has represented students' concerns as an SGA Assembly member, SGA vice president of universitycommunity relations, student representative to the Board of Trustees, and member of the University Senate. In all these positions, be has shown that soe Shields concerns are the students' concerns.

Since most candidates didn't have the opportunity to attend the debates between candidates for SGA president.

Steve Gardner presented a platform claiming to also represent students concern. However, when pressed by questioners on how to implerment this platform, he failed co present a clear play action. It appears that Mr. Gardner would continue siong he same path that SGA has shown during the past years. of SGA and not the concerns of students.

\section*{Sununu sacked ... so what?}

On Tuesday John Sununu resigned from his position as White House chief of staff. Bush supporters say the president asked Sununu to step down. The incumbent is cleaning house, they enthuse, and preparing to battle the Democrats and disbelievers in his own party.

Bush should first tackle the domestic front. Bloodhounds couldn't track down the president's economic policy. As a shallow-pocketed middle class America faces the holiday season, Bush is engaging in his favorite pastime - a game we played when we were kids called "It's not my fault."

David Mullins Jr., vice chairman of the Federal Reserve, said the reason the nation's economy is not recovering is because Americans aren't spending. He said that instead of borrowing money to spend, people are borrowing to pay off debts or refinance their mortgages; America's middle class has to realize that the nation's fiscal turmoil is their fault. In order to set a good example, President Bush went to J.C. Penney to buy sweat socks.
Sununu's continual bad judgment was becoming a liability to the president. Although Sununu was unpopular and abrasive, he was not the problem: domestic policy was and is. Bush has yet to show an interest in it comparable to his lust for foreign policy.

The president should break the 1990 budget agreement. While it's important to control spending, there is nothing irrational about reallocating funds. The fact that 81 House Republicans are lobbying for Bush to appoint Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Jack Kemp as his "domestic policy czar" indicates a number of the party faithful find the administration out of touch with economic reality.
The allure of foreign intrigue must yield to the needs of America's pallid economy. It is no surprise that Bush wanted the next round of Middle East peace talks to be held in Washington. He's hoping the Arabs and Israelis will bail him out.

Maintain common goals and vision

To the editor:
The various committees of the University Senate have presented their reports to the Senate relating to the restructuring at its November sessions. In the Nov. 14 issue of The Daidy Orange the first of these reports was described. The Academic Affairs Committee was reported to have recommended that "the university's goals with financial restructuring should be more clearly articulated and more widely understood." While the aims of the financial aims of the financial restructuring should be made clear, the Academic Affairs Cormmittee was concerned with an even more important and fundamental issue - that "the vision of the university ought to be more clearly articulated and more widely understood." The goal of financial restructuring is to enable the university to balance its budget However, that restructuring must be done in such a manner that the vision of the university is maintained.

\section*{Shields defends grants for students}

To the editor:
I am writing this letter to give my support to Joe Shields for the upcoming Student Government Association presidential election. As all have been reading, there have been a few conflicts within SGA concerning student issues and how they are handled during SGA meetings. I think it is important to know what your representatives are supporting and if they coincide at all with what you believe in. Joe has many goals to help in. Joe has many goals to help believe he can help overcome them if he is elected SGA

\section*{president.}

Another concern Joe strongly supports is the topic of financial aid. I'm sure this is a concern to all students, especially now that the downsizing is occurring. As a freshman, I know how much effort the financial aid office puts into giving financial aid to a new incoming student. However, this is not the case for upperclassmen. What Joe Shields supports is to have the financial aid office reevaluate your financial status each year, not just before you get here.
Joe Shields has many important and diverse goals.

He is capable of tackling all the issues he is concerned about as well as hearing yours. His hard work, involverment and determination can help all of us here at Syracuse University - as long as you get out and vote for Joe Shields for SGA president. Here's your chance to be heard: Vote

I have done nothing to violate the stipulations of my lease, but I am being kicked out anyway. My landlord has refused to give me the privilege to squat my home and I was planning onliving there next year. When I agreed to the terms of my lease, I was not told of this possibility. Where do I live? In Kimmel Hall on Waverly Kimmel

A representative from the Office of Reaidence Life informed the residents of Kimmel Hall recently that they will not be able to live there next year because the building is going to be offered to graduate students beginning

This has infuriated many of the residents because some of them had planned on residing there next year, and because the university did not inform them of their intentions until after the final decision was made to "evict" them.

The residents of Kimmel Hall are not being compensated for their loss of their personal space, their community and a building in which some of them have become fond of in the few months they have live there. A great number of Kimmel residents had wished to squat their dorms, only now they will be thrown into the housing lottery with other students. This liquidates the students. After shutting my door, I proceeded to go about my business until I heard something being torn off my door. When I opened my door again I found that these two young men had torn down a poster that had been hanging on my door.

Not only was this theft but also harassment. What was I to do? Chase after them and demand my poster back? I certainly would not have been taken seriously if I had called SU Security and asked them to retrieve my stolen poster. The only thing that I could do was to inform my RA about what had happened and hop that the same thing did not happen to someone else. I am not only angered by what happened - I feel violated. The university installed security doors in all of the residence halls to keep incidents like what happened to me from happening. The university seems so proud of these doors and how secure they have made the residence halls. I would like to inform the university that I have gained access to my building more times without using my D card then I have by using it. \section*{Weight equipment may be relocated}

\section*{BY SCOTT MULLER}

Staff Writer
To reduce crowding at Syracuse University's weight training facilities, a report released by the Ad Hoc Weight Training Committee recommended relocating equipment to a basketball court in Archbold Gymnasium.

Relocating would increase floor space by 1,900 square feet. the report stated.

The increased floor space would increase the amount of aerobic and weight equipment by 55 percent.

Moving equipment to the basketball court would require car peting for the stationary weight and aerobic areas and rubber floor tile in the free weight area, according to Vicki Vescio. chairwoman of the committee.

The report recommended the university buy more equipment for the new area

Renovations and new equip ment will cost a lot at first, said Vescio, who is also a graduate assistant in Recreation Services. But changes will eventually benefit the university financially.

The finess and leisure program could ofter more classes, she said.

Vescio said the program currently has limited use. offering 14 aerobic classes.

An increased interest in fit. ness and leisure among students and faculty makes expanding fitness and leisure necpasary, Vescio said.

Renovations should offer people more tai chi, yoga and aerobic dance programs, the report stated.
The committee also suggested that the Nantilus room in Archbold be maintained as a second facility to house selected weight training equipment.

According to the report, a second facility would serve the needs of special interest groups, such as the Free Weight Club or the physical education department.

The larger faciltty would be opened strictly for recreational purposes.

The report also suggested the operating hours of both the weight and aerobic rooms coincide with the building's operation hours.

Standardized hours replace the limited times during the day when the facilities are open. The committee also recommended to put weight and aerobic equipment in the weirht facility which will open in Marion Hall next semester.

Vescio said any SU student can use the Marion Mall center.

The committee recommended not to place free weights in the center since that is what caused overcrowding in Archbold Gymnasium.

Specialized equipment. including one multi-station universal unit and various free-standing units, will be available in the Marion Hall center, the report Marion said.

Computerized aerobic equipment such as stair-masters, row ing machines and bicycles will also be included in the new fitness center.

Professors here don't encourage students to work for The Daily Orange. 1 know it's not their job, but I was surprised at the lack of interest. Instend, they hype these internships with the downtown papers like they're the greatest thing since sliced bread.

Well, after 37 road trips with the DO, Ive made more contacts than I ever could have made downtown. I have more experience and better clips. And I have a job.

I'm thankful that my ambition overrode my professors' wishes. Otherwise, I'd probably be graduating right now with less than half of what I know.

My goai before I came here was to cover one rren's basketball game, and I fgured I'd be waiting until my junior, if not senior, year to do so.

Three years ago, as students headed home for the holidays, news reports began trickling in of a plane crash in Scotland. That disaster changed Syracuse University forever. Those who were freshmen then are seniors now, but even as they prepare to leave campus, the memory of that fateful day in 1988 - and those who died - endures. In honor of those 270 innocent victims, The Daily Orange presents a section of remembrance.

\section*{In Remembrance}

\section*{Tears and Questions}

Behind the ceremonies and tributes to the victims of Flight 103 has lurked the investigation into the tragedy. Here are some of the significant events.

Dec. 21, 1988: Pan American Flight 103 explodes over Lockerbic, Scotand, when a bomb planted by terrorists is detonated. Of the \(\mathbf{2 7 0}\) people killed in the tragedy, 35 were students enrolled in Syracuse University's Division of Intemational Programs Abroad, 5 had other ties to Central New York and 11 were residents of Lockerbie.

Feb. 6, 1989: Relatives of the victims of the explosion call for action by the U.S. government at a press conference in New York City. Among their demands were public access to any threats issued against airlines and a congressional investigation into the tragedy.

June 19, 1989: Construction begins on the SU Place of Remembrance. The name was selected by Chancellor Melvin A. Eggers. The wall, which was dedicated April 22, 1990, later had its inscription changed to indicate the tragedy was caused by a terrorist bomb. SU changed the inscription because of complains from parents.

Oct. 10, 1990: American investigators are quoted in newspapers as saying the bomb on board Flight 103 may have been smuggled onto the jet by Libyan inteligence agents. Previously, Syrian terrorists had been suspected.

Nov. 14. 1991: Libyan intelligence officers Abdel Al-Megrahi and Lamen Fhimah are indicted by the U.S. attomey general on charges of killing 270 people by blowing up Flight 103.

Jan. 18, 1989: Gov. Mario Cuomo speaks in the Carrier Dome at a memorial service for the students.U.S. senators Alphonse D'Amato and Daniel Patrick Moynihan and Syracuse Mayor Tom Young also autended.

Feb. 9, 1989: Robert Berrell, whose son Steven was a victim of Flight 103, testifies before a House of Representatives subcommittee on the first day of Congressional hearings concerning the tragedy.

Dec. 21, 1989: A wall engraved with the names of the 270 victims of Flight 103 is dedicated in a ceremony at the Garden of Remembrance in Lockerbie. Hundreds attend a memorial service on the first anniversary of the tragedy.
- Jan. 8, 1991: Pan Am files for banknuptcy, blaming in part huge losses from the bombing of Flight 103.

People visiting Syracuse's Colonial Laundromats can now see more than dirty laundry.

They can also see Spin Delirious, Carl Geiger's art display. Geiger says his main reason for showing art in a laundromat is to change the environment and setting that art is shown in. By doing this, he says, he will be able to reach a different audience.
"It is a deliberate thing, to reach out to different people," Geiger said.
When people go to a museum to see art, Geiger explained, it is a calculated decision. They are going to the museum to see art. When they go to a laundromat, art is the last thing on their minds.
"It is a new experience for someone who is expecting to someone who is expecting to come home with only clean clothes," Geiger said. "The su prise element is interesting. Irene Benton, a Geiger chose the name Spin Delicious for this show because it tied into the setting. Deliclous, he said, just sounded right.

"I like to play with language," Geiger said.
The fun he has with language is also evident through the names of his pieces. In this particular

Discovery Center aims for education
}

BY BETH AMOROSI
Staif Writer

The Center plans to move to the Jefferson Street Armory and become the Museum of Science and Technology (MOST). Construction is scheduled to begin in June 1991 and should be finished by the end of 1993 .
MOST will contain seven times more exhibit space than he current location, and more than 200 exhibits are planned. The Center is funded by grants donations and admission fees.
"We have provided 10 ycars of education resource in this community. Many people do not realize that." DeBlaay said.
The Discovery Center is involved in many activities designed to bring the Syracuse community together. It sponsors travelling science programs that go to schools and senior citizen centers. These programs perform demonstrations and ex performany different animals. such as snakes and ferrets.

The Center also sponsors the Greater Syracuse Seience Fair for students from elementary through high school. It is a regional competition held in the five counties that make up Central New York.

Walking through history
On Jan. 26. 1992, the winter National History Walk at Clark Reservation, sponsored by The Discovery Center, will be held.

Also, during the ammual Winterfest, which is held Jan. \(27-\) 31, the Center holds lunchtime sidewatk science demonstrations."

I flew to Dallas by myself and stayed in a hotel by myself for four days. I didn't know anybody else. I was only 18 and didn't yet have other media riends.
My first night there I went to the media lounge and drank Beers with former Duke star ing the rame for cable TV I met ing the game for cable TV. I met Ron Franklin, who now does college football for ESPN every week. I met a reporter from Feinstein. who was a hot item because his book on a season with Bobby Knight had come out.

It got to my head a little bit. I started to get caught up in the excitement and think I was more important than I really was.

What followed was my first confrontational interview with Jim Boeheim, a man I never understood.

After SU beat Colorado State to reach the final 16 , I approached Boeheim in the locker room and asked him some strategy questions. I admit that went too far, but back then I didn't know anybetter. Boeheim to someone out there. lashed out at me, "Look, I'm the coach. I'll do the eoaching. Don't tell me how to coach. You worry about the reporting."

I was stunned. I wanted to dig a hole in the locker room and jump in. I wasn't telling him how to coach. I was looking for some reasons behind his decisions.

I didn't know any better.
A reporter from \(S t\). Louis witnessed the whole incident and came up to me and asked me what happened. I don't know who he was, but he helped me deal with it. I'm forever in debt lt was a difficult way to learn a difficult lesson. I learned that I could not cover the team and be a fan of SU sports.

Subsequent experiences - 95 percent of them with tise men's basketball team - enhanced those feelings.

Boeheim also taught me that I was no hero. I was nothing but a mas no hero. the media. And I could be replaced just as easily could be rep places. And I thought it was a big deal for a while, too. Well, it's not.

In retrospect. I'd like to thank Jim Boeheim for that experience. It gave me great perspective. I've never liked Jim, but I now know that's the point. We're not supposed to be friends. I do respect Mr. Boebeim, though I'm not sure if that's the point or not.

The following are a collection of thoughts, or bits and picces of columns, that I never wrote, for one reason or another. Most of the time l just didn't have the guts. Other times it just wasn't the time and place. You'll never read another column from me read another column from me rip.
\({ }_{-1}\)
I never understood Boeheim I know the media here is tough. but I don't understind why he pays so much attention to us.

I never understood why he would take out his frustrations on the Syracuse media when the New York City papers would print rumors about him
I never understood why he couldn't have time for me on a lazy mid-summer afternoon as soon as I told him I was from The Daily Orange.
I never understood why he would walk away and turn his back on me while we were having a face-to-face conversation without politely saying. "Excuse me." "No comment." or "I don't like you and I don't want to talk to you." Those answers would have been fine. Was I just supposed to follow him or stand there and get the Doppler effect?
I never understood how Boeheim could be all this and then sit down with The Daily then sit down with he Danf Orange for over an hour and openly and honestly discuss the transfer situation. On this day he couldn't have been nicer.
Boeheim, to his credit, has more perspective than many of the coaches I've encountered. He knows that college sports are blown way out of proportion, and he shows more care for his players than the average college coach as well.
I never understood why the SU men's basketball players so often skipped out of the locker room without talking to the media when no other college team I've covered has ever done that.
One time, after SU beat Pitt last year, Billy Owens, Dave Johnson and LeRon Ellis combined for about 72 of SU's 87 points. All were unavailable for comment. And this was after a win
I was denied comment by Derrick Coleman more times than I have fingers on my hand Yet when I've needed to talk to Yet when Ive needed to talk to Eric Murdock, Terry Dehere or Alonzo Mourning after a tough loss, they've been as polite and classy as they could be.
- I've always wanted to write a column of support to Dave Johnson. When the sex allegations and university discipline probation came about last year, I really felt bad for him. And not many did.

We all make mistakes. Dave made one when he was 18. And it got put all over the papers. I'd hate to think how the rest of 115 would feel if our worst mistake at age 18 got played up in all of the papers like his did.
I lobbied for you here, Dave, in hope that we would not exploit your story. But I vas overruled by ireater number of headline-seckins news ple. I'm sorry I didn't win.
ple. Imevor blamed D.J for no speaking to the media. Im surprised he is talking ayain this season.

Johnson is one of the few college athletes I admire because I know how much controversy he's gone through while at \(S U\). Ivecovered it all. Alesse man would have left by now. Good luck in your future, Dave Johnson.

I never liked Herald-Journal columnist Bud Paliquin. I find his line of questioning during interviews to be annoying, and I don't like his writing style.

But Bud Poliquin is good for this profession. And newspapers need more people like him. People love to dislike people, and a Jot of people dislike Poliquin. He sells papers. thouigh. and that's the bottom line.

Intso don't like Andre Agassi. But he's great for the sport of tennis. Anytime Agassi is in the news, people reate. Does anyone news, people reatet. Does anyone zare if Jim Courier a better player than Agassi, yet not as tashy - pulls out of a tourna-
The McEnroe syndrome here prevails. All sports need big names to succecd. Liked or disliked, big names of the stars sells tickets. Sports needs controversial figures, whetherstuffy sports purists will admit it or not.
What shocked me most about this university is how few facSte FAREWELL PAgk* 10

Continued from Page 24 over the game's final three minutes. All told, the Saints outscored Syracuse 34-11 over the last five minutes.

Taylor did most of the damage for the Saints, scoring 19 of her 27 points in the second half.

The 5-foot-10 forward drilled five three-pointers in the contest and was even better from the foul line, where she was perfect in eight attempts.

Syracuse, without center Holly Oslander, who tore the anterior cruciate ligament in her right knee on Nov. 26, was paced by senior forward Shawn Ziemba.
Ziemba scored 20 points and grabbed 10 rebounds, including nine offensive boards, before fouling out with 15 seconds remaining in the contest.
Syracuse played from behind for most of the first half before taking a 38-36 advantage at the intermission.
The Siena fronteourt, taking full advantage of the 6 -foot- 5 Oslander's absence, accounted for 28 of the Saints 36 points in the half.

According to Siena couch Gina Castelli. the Saints attempted to explait the shorthanded SU rontcourt early on.
"We told the post players to look inside because we knew Holly wasn't going to be there," Castelli said. "We knew that Ziemba was going to be tough though because she's an excellent rebounder."
The balance swung back and forth throughout the second half, with neither team staking a solid claim to a lead.

Siena held a seven-point advantage early in the second half, before the Orangewomen rallied with a 26-8 run to give them their 11 -point lead with just over four minutes remaining.

According to Jacobs, the Syracuse defense - not the number of turnovers was to blame for the team's defeat.
"Our transition defense and our defense as a whole was really poor," Jacobs said. "We scored 85 points, so it wasn't our offense.
"We were playing a full-court press and we weren't rotating buck to the players in the halfcourt once they threw the ball court once they threw the ball vU the top rof the press) on us. Who cinished with 14 points Crouse, who finished with 14 points and seven rebounds, said the team was still feeling the effects of Monday's game at No. 7 Penn State, a 98-66 loss to the Lady Lions.

"We just came off a road trip from Penn State and Ijust think a lot of us are tired," Crouse said. "But (Siena) was real scrappy. They just got to every loose ball and the team that does that is usually going to win.".

Siena forward Amy Barickman had a game-high 13 rebounds. The Orangewomen had a tough time gaining position on her.

Liz Lops and Michelle Collins each had seven rebounds for the Saints.

According to Ziemba, the lack of playing time for forward Taneshia Welch hurt the Orangewomen defensively.

Welch played the first four minutes of the game, but sat the rest of the game for undisclosed disciplinary reasons.
"Taneshia only played four minutes and that really hurt us because she usually rebounds really well," Ziemba said. "I do think that if we control the boards we'll win. We should've controlled the boards tonight."

Ziemba also admitted that the Orangewomen haven't yet overcome the loss of Oslander.

Tonight, we really missed Holly," Ziemba said. "If we had Holly tonight. we would have won, period."

\section*{Playoffscene muddles} as year ends

As the NFL season draws to a close, the playoff scenario has about as many possible combinations as late night TV has 1-900-Bimbo ads.
With three games left in the sea son, the majority of NFL franchises are still in the hunt for playoff spots. One might even say the league is beginning to resemble the NBA or NHL with the number of teams still eligible for postseason play since last year's addition of a third wild card team.

DAVIDJ. Last season 1 BUSCEMA SPORTS agreed with that agreed with that statement because Dallas, a \(7-9\) team. almost

\section*{OPINION} made the play

This year, however, it does not appear that a team truly undeserving of a postseason spot will obtain one. The large number of teams involved in the playoff chase is due to preponderance of winning records.

In the NFC, there are currently six teams with winning records who will battle for the three playoft spots and others.

The AFC's picture isn't as bright with four teams above 500 vying for wild card berths, but the overall scenario makes for an exciting finale to the regular season.

What follows are my predictions for playoff berths.
-AFC: Buffalo has already clinched the East and Houston is about to do the same in the Central. The West appears to be close, but isn't, even though two teams are currently tiod for the lead.

The Los Angeles Raiders and Denver Broncos are both 9-4. The Raiders are clearly the best team in the division, as the Chiefs have been inconsistent and the Broncos are not as good as their record indicates.
The best team will not win the division, however. Denverwill take the title because of a light season-ending schedule. The Raiders probably will lose one of their final three contests against Buffalo, New Orleans and the Chiefs.

Kansas City and L.A. will snag two of the wild card spots while the Jets and Miami will make a long-standing rivalry meaner in the season sinal contest. The game will be in Miami and will be a classic, with the Dolphins barely snagging the last spot.
-NFC: Why I'm even trying to sort through this mess is beyond me. But here Igo.

Washington has clinched the East.
Detroit will finish a great season as a wild card, but only because the tie-breaker system will give the title to the Bears in the Central.

In the West, the Saints will barely hold on to the division title over Atlanta.

Dallas will return to the playoffs with key wins over Philadelphia and Atlanta. (I must confess, however, that this pick is based in large part on heart.)

Atlanta, though, will still be able to edge perennial playofrteams Philly, the Giants and San Francisco. For those who are excited or disappointed by my picks, just see my record in check.

When junior center Holly Oslander went down with a season-ending knee injury on Nov. 26, the Syracuse University women's basketball team lost its main scoring and rebounding threat.
Wednesday night to Siena College on Wednesday night gives any indication. senior forward Shawn Ziemba plans on taking over Oslander's role as the team leader.
Ziernba had a career-high 20 points along with 10 rebounds in the losing cause.
"I have to play a lot harder now that Holly's down," Ziemba said. "I thought I've always played hard, but now we have to make up for that slack now. for that void in the offense and the defense.
"My role has changed from being the person who sets Holly up ... now I'm looking to post-up. People are looking to get me the ball more.
Ziemba's previous scoring high was 16, which she netted last season against Rutgers University SU coach Barbara Jacobs said Ziemba was a bright spot in a game marked by very sloppy play.
"Shawn has been playing very well," Jacobs said. "Again tonight, Shawn was very steady. She was the highlight there."
Siena coach Gina Castelli said the Saints expected Ziemba to be tough. "We knew that (Ziemba) was going to be a key inside." Castelli said. "She's a the ball."
Despite Ziemba's strong play, the Saints still tried to exploit the Orangeworren inside - and on many occasions they succeeded.

\section*{The action during Wednesday night's} women's basketball contest between Syracuse University and Siena College was much like the weather outside Manley Field House - sloppy.
The Saints (2-2) overcame an 11 -point deficit late in the second half to defeat the Orangewomen (3-2) 94-85 in a contest marred by 50 turnovers.

The Orangewomen did themselves in as they turned the ball over 16 times in the second half and 22 times overall.
According to SU coach Barbara Jacobs, Siena's trapping press was responsible for many of the miscues.
"Their press bothered us a lot and that's something that shouldn't be both ering us at all," Jacobs said. "We did not see the opening over the top cof the press), and instead we kept going into the trap. Siena, down 74-63 with 4:55 remaining in the game, used a scrappy halfcourt press to disrupt the Orangewomen
The move paid off for the Saints, as in the next 1:39, they outscored SU 13-2 to tie the game at \(76-76\) with \(3: 16\) left in the game.
Siena used balanced scoring during the flurry as five players scored during the run, which was capped by forward Peg Taylor's three-pointer.
After tying the Orangewomen, Siena finished them off with another \(18-9\) run ith 4:32 remaining when Ziemba was taken out of the game after committing her fourth foul When Ziemba returned to the game 1:07 later, the Orantrewomen's lead had dwindled to three.
"It's really tough to come into a pressure situation when you're cold." Ziemba said. "I think that's what happened. It was a little inexperience too." "We were able to get insidie a little bit better than we would if Holly were in there," Castelli said. "We tried to post-up a little bit stronger than we have been. and we were able to go inside a little bit more."
Sophomore center Patrice Amos moved into the starting role with the loss of Oslander.
She said the frontcourt could have done a better job of defending inside.

The L.C. Smith College of Engineering can maintain its high quality of education despite the impending cuts due to restructuring. according to Dean Bradley J. Strait.
"It won't be casy. though; that much is certain," Strait said.
The college has been labeled a Category 3 school by the Chancellor's Ad-Hoe Advisory Committee, meaning that it will absorb a larger portion of the budget cuts than other schools within the university.
The reduced number of students, the high cost of staff and operating expenses have led to a need for a large subsidy, the report stated.

A substantial portion of the college's subsidy goes toward research, the report tated.

Research is an important part of the undergraduate education," said John LaGraff. director of the aerospace engineering department.

In addition, funding is important in establishing graduate and post-graduate research facilities," he said.

Engineering is one of the largest research-generating colleges on campus," Strait said. "We account for more than 30 percent of the university funds allocated for research."
Strait said a cutback in research is not the answer.
"The majority of research funding is generated outside the school anyway, so it is questionable as to how much impact it may have." he said.

A cutback in research would impact the campus on the whole," he said. "It is important that we remain a research institution."
There will be a reallocation of research in that we will become more selective," said Earl J. Kletsky, assistant dean for undergraduate affairs. "HowSee ENGINEER Page 15

If the one-year residency rule is waived, McRae could be playing for another collegiate tearn as early as next semes er. However, Hill said the hikelihood of that happening is also slim.

To find a school, get accepted and join the team during the interim break is extremely unlikely," he said.

Conrad McFrae's waiting game was ended Wednesday night by the NCAA. Unfortunately for the junior center, another one has already begun.

The appeal was denied after the committee was informed that members of the SU coaching staff made illegal contact with McRae during his junior year of hight school.
The committee has recommended that the center be allowed to immediately transfer to another school and retain at

If the 6-foot-10 center decides to stay at SU , he may enter a final appeal to a sub-committee of eligibility appeals that could offer his reinstatement. Many agree, however, that reinstatement at this point is unlikely.

Three of Mario Cuomo's closet advisers have begun searching for a campaign team that would steer an effort to carry the governor from the state to the White House.

State Democratic Chairman John Marino confirmed Wednesday that he and two others have begun looking for potential campaign managers, field directors and other top staff members needed for a presidential race.

Marino said he has begun to make calls around the country, asking consultants and political professionals for peo ple who could help with the Cuomo mpaign.
Mike DelGuidice and Brad Johnson are helping Marino. DelGuidice, an investment banker. was Cuomo's first chief of staff when the governor took office in 1983.

Johnson is Cuomo's Washington lobbyist and key adviser on national political affairs.

\section*{to help Latino teens}

The W.K. Kellogg Foundation has awarded Syracuse University a threeyear grant of \($ 68,483\) to support Teens Teaching Spanish, a program developed by the Maxwell School of Citizenahip and Public Affairs.

Introduced last summer to 49 county and city workers, the program relies on Latino teen+agers to coach people on a one-to-one basis in conversational Spanish.
The grant will be used to expand the program by incrensing the number of teen instructors and providing teenagers with further training and support.

William Coplin, professor, chairman of the Public Aftairs department and director of the program, said the goal of the program is to increase the selfesteem of Latino teen-agers, improve their academic skills and break cultural barriers that exist between Latino and non-Latino communities.

TTS is part of University Reach, a program that allows Maxwell School undergraduates to work with inner-city teen-agers to solve community problems. Coplin said.

\section*{Speech relates pornography, violence Vigil to honor}

\section*{BY ERIN NEFF \\ Managing Editor}

One of the first slides of the "Pornog. raphy and the Media" presentation of a naked woman on her hands and knees with a bag over her head.

This type of image leaves male readers of pornography blind to that woman's qualities. said Gail Dines. But some audience membors claimed the professor from Wheelock College in Bos

Following her hour-long presentation of the images of violence against women, Dines told women they should "get together and shut down fraternities

While her statements about fraternities in the question and answer period were greeted with applause from some of the 150 prople in the audience, Dines was challenged by others for alienating men with her remarks.
During the presentation. Dines compared themes found in Hustler and mainstream media such as Cosmopolitan, Vogue and Seventeen magazines.

Evidence for her argument
After arming the audience with the following statistics - one in three Pornography is a \($ 10\) billion-a-year industry that eroticizes violence, Dines said. But since wornen are often portrayed as children - by shaving their pubic hair or portraying them as powerless - she said all pornography leads to the \($ 2\) billion-a-year child pornography industry.

It seems that we have found ourselves in a tough situation here at Syracuse University.: At a time when we have downsizing won us, and other problems such as continuous tuition hikes, it seems that the student body has exhausted its reserve of capable leaders. I don't mean capable in the sense of the plain ability to do the bare minimum of work and have the organization function, but I mean capable in the sense of leadership who has the true aim of a

\section*{Shields: accessible anc}

\section*{To the editor:}

I have been a student at Syracuse for two years, During his time l've had the opportunity to witness Student Government Association activities, but only as an outsider. Even though I try to be informed, there is still a lot about SGA that is a mystery to me. I am familiar with all to me. I am familiar with all four of the SGA presidential candidates and their views and candidates and their views an ideas. I feel that gince SGA is ideas. I feel that since SGA is the voice of the students, the president should be able to work and relate to all aspects of the student community. The of the student community. The president should also be able to effectively seek out students concerns and communicate them to the administration in order for the university to better serve the students. Furthermore, as the head of SGA, the president ahould make the activities of SGA known to the campus and seek out opinions from the students who don't belong to organizations and would normally not come in contact with SGA.

I have had the opportunity to know Joe Shields primarily through his work with Students Concerned About Rape EDucation. As the chair of the Campus Relations Cornmittee, Joe has dealt with many diverse groups. He has established relations with groups ranging from fraternities and sororities to the administration to other student organizations. He has shown dedication in his position and has done a great job.

As a student still somewhat unfamiliar with SGA, I expect a president to make SGA more accessible to students who aren't aware of what all SGA does and make representatives more visible and more accountable to their constituents. As a member of he Ad-Hoc Committee, Joe helped come up with legislation recently passed by the Assembly that would make the Finance Board elected by the students and redistrict.the election zones sa that stydents have better access to their

I feel that an SGA president should be able to relate to the administration, the students' concerns and have the experience in dealing with the administration. As a University Senate representative and a representative to the Board of Trustees, Joe has had the experience in letting the administration know about what students think.
Like most students, I am receiving financial aid. I've seen many of my friends forced to reave the university because their finaricial aid was either reduced or eliminated;'and I'm afraid that one of these days by sid will be cut. Finally, an SGA president should berucessible to students and truly listen to their concerns. I feel comfortable coming to Joe with my concerns and he has taken the time to listen and answer any questions that I may have, even though I'm not a member of his constituency.

\section*{Gardner will listen}

\section*{To the editor:}

Steve Gardner will bring the neceasary change needed for the Student Government Association to get back on its

with the SGA Constituition

\section*{Value of true freedom}

Former hostage Terry Anderson, the longest-held American detainee in the Middle East, has finally been freed along with other American hostages. But with the gift of freedom come many questions about the status of the United States' relationship with the Middle East and any actions the United States may take regarding the recent end to the hostage ordeal.
Freedom must be defended both in the United States and abroad. President Bush must acknowledge the experiences of the American hostages and respect the fact that their freedoms have been denied. Retaliation through peaceful means, like sanctions, is in order.
Bush has held his ground against the Iranians by not acknowledging or considering any proposed bargains with the hostage-takers during the Americans'captivity. The policy, while decidedly risky, has proven fruitful and has successfully brought the hostages back to the United States.

The picture looks nice now, just in time for the 1992 presidential election. However, Americans cannotoverlook the fact that these men spent large portions of their lives in captivity, being denied freedom.

The release efforts must continue. British hostages are still in Iranian hands. The bodies of two American men are also in the country's possession.
Freedom is a gift many Americans do not take the time to appreciate and enjoy. A handful of Americans, however, have been denied that right for too Iong. Now, just before Christmas, they are free and finally at home. Their ordeal must not be forgotten.

\section*{to the editor:}

Thank you, Jodi Meadows, for opening my eyes. I now know that we, as humans, are far superior to these "lesser" animals. You see, I was under the impression that man was a natural predator but now I realize that we are so evolutionarily advanced that we should no longer figure into any type of food web.
We can just synthetically produce all of our material needs just like ancient man used to. If you haven't caught on yet, maybe this will help. Man does figure into this idea of natural selection - he always has and he always will A bigger dent will be made in the food chain if you take man out of the system. Take for example an area where wolves are dominant and then remove them. You will have such an increase in whatever species that is the main supple of wol ves that a major dieback is inevitable. Who knows what will happen then. Is this the type of balance you want? I certainly hope not. I am not trying to enlighten you on the subject for I'm sure you are well-educated. All I arn saying is that the scales are just as easily tipped by removing something than by adding

\section*{Animal argument not fully addressed}

To the editor:
In Naomi Aliza Pine's letter in the Nov. 21 issue of The Daily Orange, she writes that eating turkey on Thanksgiving is a sick practice because of the inhumane methods used to kill turkeys. Though she has some very valid points about the cruel treatment of livestock we feel that she does not present the entire story and so we are afraid that we must bring up some questions and facts from the other viewpoint

First of all, how would you kill the turkeys if given the chance? What method could be more humane? The blade kills thern instantly. Hanging them upside down is the most efficient way of exposing their necks to the automatic blade. so that the farmers don't have to spend hours chesing them to spend hours chasing them shouting, "Here turkey, shouting, "Here turkey, think. "Oh my goodness! I'm going to die! Lools at what they going to die! Lools at what along the lines of \({ }^{4} \mathrm{Hey}\) !

Everything is upside down How about that"'Turkeys are not the smartest of creatures.

We agree that the idea of eating a decapitated dead bird with its feathers and internal organs ripped out and its most intimate crevices stuffed with bread isn't the most appetizing thought: it still feeds a lot of people and it tastes pretty good. Let's have a look at the "humane" alternatives you have suggested: stuffed squash. The plants are crowded onto narrow hills just far enough apart so that they can breathe. They are sprayed with toxic chernicals to kill the insects around them and the other plants that are not as "desirable." Then the womb and the unborn children are ripped off while the plant is still alive. The wombs are hacked open and the embryonic life is scooped out, discarded and replaced with a mixture of bread. Sounds a lot like the turkeys, doesn't it? Tofu loaf: yummy. A gelatinous glob of ground unborn soy babies mixed with microorganisms to provide the B12 the green plants cannot produce. Keep in mind of course that these microorganisms are often eaten alive. Cranberries- a deliphtful alive. dish to any holiday feast. red-brown pulp. The point is, red-brown pulp. The point is, anything can be made to sound disgusting if worded properly.

Whatever gave you the idea that animals are more sacred than plants? We can understand a bias towards animals, because they are warm and fuzzy, while plants are just cold and green. This is probably the chiefreason that the plants rights movement does not have quite the following as the animal rights movement. We like animals too, but just because a plant doesn't howl in agony when cut doesn't mean that it is less valuable. True, a plant is easier to hunt down and beat to death, and it doesn't look at you with big, sad eyes before you kill it, but it is an organism just the same as a cow or a dog or a turkey. Do you ever swat at flies? We're sure you've smashed one or two. How about a mosquito? We're sure you felt relatively comfortable dashing their brains out with whatever object was handy. Would you do the same to the next dog that decides to try to have sex with your leg? Why not? Are they not both God's creatures? Why do you pick and choose amongst them?

We are not trying to say that it is wrong that you that it is wrong that you choose to eat no meat and we choose to eat no meat and we anyone witli our opinions. anyone with our opinions. There is nothing at all wrong with being a vegetarian. It is your right to choose what you will and will not eat, but it is also our right to decide to eat whatever we will or will not eat. Trying to make us sick is not going to change that.

To the editor:
As we go through the process of restructuring, I believe we must provide as much information as we can when it is needed. Therefore, to address the concerns voiced by a number of students about. the possible impact of restructuring on their academic programs, I offer the following clarifications.

Restructuring may reduce the number of programs in which students are enrolled. However, we will commit the curricular and faculty resources necessary for those currently enrolled students to enable them to finish their course of study within the normal number of years. Naturally, we can expect changes because of budgetary reductions and possible restructuring. But we remain firm in our commitment to our students.

MeRae made his appeal to the eligibility committee last week, but because of the Thanksgiving holiday his case was not heard until Wednesday night. The committee heard more than three hours of testimony via a conference call Wednesday.

After an hour of deliberation the committee handed down the ruling which was not disclosed until Thursday afternoon.

\section*{'Fantasticks'}

No play has run in the United States for a longer period of time than The Fantasticks, the Syracuse University Drama Department's latest production, and I cannot understand why.

Among other things, it features an extremely pretentious book, disjointed scenes and characters that are less than politically correct.

Most musicals don't have lines like, ERIC "There are no other ERIC GRODE There are no other ears but hers to exTHEATER REVEW plain the explosions of my soul," and that is how it should be. For these reasons, to see it knowing only about its track record -. it has run off-Broadway for more than 30 years - will probably be disappointed.

Despite its flaws, The Fantasticks does have many redeeming characteristics, not the least of which is a hummable score.

And this particular production is aided by an accomplished group of actors and some intelligent directorial decisions, like changing the two fathers to mothers

These qualities go a long way toward improving the show, and the result is an entertaining but flawed play.

\section*{Boy meets girl ...}

The story, loosely adapted from an obscure play by Edmund Rostand, tells a simple story. Boy (Skie Ocasio) meets girl (Lisa Kain), boy loses girl, boy and girl undergo events of deep personal growth, boy and girl live happily ever afer.
But composer Harvey Schmidt and But composer Harvey Schmidt and Most of the scenes between the young lovers have a smirky, tongue-in-cheek quality. These scenes result in no sense of innocence, and it is consequently the weakest part of the show.

Only during their songs, especially "Metaphor," do Ocasio and Kain start becoming realistic characters. They both have fine voices and their delivery perfectly matches the roles.

Another accomplice to the pretentiousness is the narrator (James Sullivan), who also plays the mysterious are virtually impossible to deliver, at

But the part of El Gallo requires a powerful voice - the show's best-known number, "Try to Remember," is sung by him and opens the show.

Sullivan's lower range is fine, but he seemed to be straining for the higher

But Spock designs it so Kirk and his crew are chosen to escort Corkon to a peace conference. When Kirk objects to Spock's meddling, Spock responds, There's an old Vulcan proverb: Only Nixon could go to China."
Along the way, the audience is introduced to Spock's new prodigy, the Vulcan Lt. Valeris (Kim Cattrall). While published reports have called this character a love interest for Spock, that type of relationship is never made clear in the ilm.

Things soon get complicated when one of the high-ranking Klingons and several of his underlings are killed and Enterprise crew members appear responsible for the action.

Kirk and McCoy are imprisoned by the Klingons, while Spock and company search for the Federation officers accountable for the Klingon deaths.
This final journey is not as wellrounded as director Nicholas Meyer's first Trek novie, The Wrath of Khan, but his latest entry in the series is certainly better than Star Trek V: the Final Frontier. Shatner's sorry excuse for a directorial debut.

Untike The Final Frontier, the special effects in The Undiscovered Country are pretty good, with only one really fakelooking shot of the Excelsior being toseed about like the plastic model it is.

The best effect features Klingon blood floating in zero gravity. It looks like the innards of a lava lamp.

-Throwing Muses - The Real Ramona
This Rhode Island band, led by sisters Kristirn Hersh and Tonya Donnelly, tends toward the angrier end of the emotional spectrum, setting their words in songs made of feedback and funky bass.
On this album, released early in 1991, the Muses get a little mean, a little angry and a little weird. Singer Hersh croons and bowls like nobody's business and both sisters wield mean suitars. use of the secondary Trek characters, who all have a hand in saving the day

Despite these improvements there are still some problems with this aged space saga. But they're problems only a devoted fan would notice.

Director Meyer and coscreenwriter Denny Martin Finn throw in a few things that just don't seembelievable in the world of Star Trek.

At one point Scotty (James Doohan) says, "No way," which doesn't sound natural.

In another scene, Uhura (Nichelle Nichols) and Chekov (Walter Koenig) attempt to respond to a message in Klingon using a half dozen books as reference manuals. But this makes no sense; wouldn't they have a guide to the Klingon language in the ship's com. puter? This strained attempt at humor lacked credibility, since the only other time we've seen an actual book in Star Trek is as an antiquegift.

While it's commendable that more screen time is given to the secondary characters, not enough is done to develop Cat trall's new Vulcan character The only scene in which she gets to display some range of talent is in a well-directed, albeit uncomfortable, mindmeld with Spock.

Star Trek VI: The Undiscouered Country is also replete with politically-correct ideology While this works well as par of the story, it comes off as preachy when made too obvious indialogue.
When Kirk says the Enter prise "will continue to go boldly where no man -where no one - has gone before," his tone is a bit too smug and selfrighteous to be effective.

Another stumbling block is the film's music by Cliff Eidelman. Instead of sticking with traditional Star Trek-style fanfare, Eidelman uses quiet, in-trigue-suggesting music to get across the film's theme. But since this is the last film, it should be filled with pomp and should be filled with pomp and circumstance rather

Their numbers are two of the play's highlights, with "Plant a Radish" eliciting the most enthusiastic audience response. Brite, in particular. kept the audience in stitches wherever she spoke.

And the two "abductors" are flawless. Henry, the head actor (Doug Shapiro) resembles the Pinyer in Rosencrantzand Guildenstern Are Dead as played by a young Alec Guiness. His asides to the audience and constant to the audience and constant referrals to his past work are referrass fantastic.

Mortimer (Jason Cicci) never stops moving throughout the play. The musical sequence where he. Henry and Et Gallo are "vanquished" is probably he show's high point
The final cast member is Jacquelyn Hodges, who pulls off Jacquelyn Hodges, who puils off the difficult role of the-Mute very well.

The musical numbers are performed well by the cast, but the three-piece orchestra does not do the play justice. The orchestrations are tinny and distract. from the performers.

The production is directed well by Terry Runnels. The fast-paced tempo keeps the action going, and the choreography is inventive.

Looking back, the phenomenal success of The Fantasticks seems inexplicable. Much of the music is very good and deserves its reputation.

But many other musicals have equally good music and a much better book.

These musicals like next These musicais - like next semester's drama department musical, Stephen Sondreim

For now, however, The Fantasticks is a largely well-done. diverting eveningat the theater.

"Programs must fall within the successful mainstream of academic activity," he said. "If not, they will be scrutinized carefully with a possibility of reduction and/or elimination." "The challenge is to make the necessary adjustments without hurting the good parts." LaGraff said. "If the university hurts a good program, it will have negative short- and longterm effects."
"It is essential to protect those programs that are doing well," he said.

Kletsky and Strait said it would be premature to announce which programs were under consideration for cutbacks Aerospace engineering is the only financially strong unit, the Ad-Hoc Committee's Report said.

The aerospace engineering de partment also had the largest incoming group of freshmen this year within the college, LaGraff said.

Despite increased freshman enrollment, the college overall has experienced a substantial drop in enrollment over the last two years, the report stated.

Historically, enrollment in en gineering programs is cyclical Kineering programs is cyclical, Kletsky said. Presently, programs around the country are at a low ebb

Increased enrollment would greatly enhance the college's situation, but Strait said he has situation, but Strait said he has ruled out the possibility of lowering academic stan
"Entrance requirements cannot be lowered." he said. "All but one of our programs are accredited. As a resuit, our standards are quite rigid."
"If we lower admission standards, a lot of those who are accepted will not be as successful upon graduating since engineering is a strict academic discipline," he said.

Strait said a decrease in al-ternate-offer applications to increase enrollment is also not a solution.
Maintaining standards
"Again, that would mean lowering academic standards, something we don't want to do," Strait said.
With decreased enrollment and revenue, downsizing will require a proportional reduction in the number of faculty, the report stated.
For undergraduates, the student/faculty ratio within the school is 9-to-1. Strait said. For full-time graduate students, it is 5 -to 1 .
With the impending cutbacks in faculty, that ratio would jump to at least 10-to-1, Strait said. Teaching loads would also substantially increase.

\section*{In Search of ... Physical Plant}

BY KEITH KIRKPATRICX Contributing Writer

Although most Syracuse University students may have heard the term "Physical Plant." or seen trucks with "Physical Plant" on them, not all students know exactly what the Physical Plant does.
Physical Plant employs 384 people, including managers, skilled tradespeople and laborers.
These people provide services such as routine, preventative and emergency maintenance; building operations, including temperature and ventilation controls of all buildings, elevator operationsand security systems; custodial service in academic buildings; and requests for charged services, such as cleanups after special events.
Physical Plant plans for basic repair work, such as changing light fixtures and doing backordered work over the winter break.

Acting Director Kevin Kenyon took over on Aug. 14, after the retirement of John Sala. Kenyon 2990 as Physical Plant Kirector after more than 12 years with the Miller Brewing Co., where he held many jobs, such as electrical/instrumentation maintenance supervisor, plant maintenance planning and scheduling supervisor and plant engineering supervisor
Wearing many hats
At Physical Plant, he has many responsibilities, such as scheduling improvements, restructuring Physical Plant, the new environmental shop and team building, which encourages laborers and managers to work closely together.
This year Physical Plant confronted a food at Lawrinson Hall, several water main breaks, and the tough ongoing job of maintaining the Carrier Dome roof during inclement weather.
"You get used to it, it's part of the job," Kenyon said. "What may seem tough to you is routine, everyday stuff for me.'
Kenyon has many goals for Physical Plant, which include improved safety, quality, timeliness of work, communication wess of work, communication partments and cost-effectiveness, all of which he hopes to nchieve soon.

\section*{THE DEADLINE HAS BEEN EXTENDED !!}

\section*{Your student fee at work.}

He wants to "fine-tune" Physical Plant, and restore the image of a more service-oriented operation.

He would also like to address the confusion between Physical Plant services and the Office of Design and Construction.

\section*{Not renovating}
"We don't do extensive modifications or renovations; that's the responsibility on the Office of Design and Construction." Kenyon said. "We are mostly a maintenance operation.'

Kenyon is proud of the creation of more middle-management positions in a time when most companies are eliminating these positions.

One such position is Planned Maintenance Analyst, currently filled by Ken Morgan. His job is to inspect and do an audit of all of SU's facilities, which means there will be more organized and timely service for repairs and maintenance.
Kenyon said he stresses "team building," and wants to train more managers and workers this way, but added that budget limits restrict the department

Along the lines of the budget Kenyon will also be working on contract negotiations.
Kenyon's personal goals are Kenyon's personal goals are to get thin a man wioly and efficiently but with quality He has three children quaty He has thre ehildren, , he is interested in staying at Physi cal Pla he said he wacuse area. He said he wants to try to learn from each day and each new experience. Kenyon said he enjoys the challenge of work ing in a service-oriented job a opposed to an industry job.
"No two days are alike here," he said. "There's a real opportunity to learn and develop.'

\section*{SU needs to take bite of Terrier 'D'}

By MIKE BUSH
Stafil Writer

\begin{abstract}
The, Syracuse University women's basketball team, in the midst of a two-game losing skid, will look to get back on track Saturday as it hosts Boston University.

After opening the season with three consecutive wins, the Orangewomen (3-2), have dropped both contests since the loss of center Holly Oslander to a knee injury on Nov. 26.
The Terriers ( 2 -o) come into The conterriers with victories over the contest with Victories over Massachusetts and Central Connecticut. According to Coach necticut. According to Coach Christine Basile, while Oslan-der's absence may alter SU's der's absence may alter SU's strategy, BU doesn't plan on making changes.
\end{abstract}
"I think any time you lose a 6-foot-5 player of Holly's quality, it will change things," Basile said. "However, I think it will affect SU's game plan more so than ours."
On Wednesday night, Syracuse dropped a 94-85 decision to Siena College, despite holding an 11-point advantage with less than five minutes to play.

In the contest, the Orangewomen committed 22 turnovers and allowed the Saints to score 34 points in that five-minute 34 point
According to SU coach Barbara Jacobs, the Terriers play with a style close to that of Siena.
"They're a similar type of team as Siena." Jacobs said.

Syracuse University forward Patrice Armos and the rest of the Orangewomen hope to break a two-gane losing streak when they host Boston University Saturday at 2 p.m. at Manley Field House.

"They're a scrappy team. They work real hard on offense and they work real hard on defense."

The Terriers are led by the trio of Jill Sosnak, Richele Van Zandt and Andrea Higgins. Sosnak has averaged a teamhigh 17 points this season, and also tops the team with an average of 10.5 rebounds per game.

The BU backcourt of Van Zandt and Higgins has combined for 24.5 points per garne and 6.5 assists in the Terriers' first two contests.
One player who has stepped up her play since the loss of Oslander is senior forward Shawn Ziemba.
For the year, Ziemba is averaging 11.8 points to go along with a 5.6 rebound per game mark. She paced SU Wednesday with 20 points and 10 rebounds. Junior Erin Kenneally is the Orangewomen's scoring leader for the season, with a 15.4 point per garne average.
But despite the efforts of Ziemba and Kenneally, Syracuse remains winless without Oslander. According to guard Angel Lewis, the squad must pick up its intensity level in order to compete with the Terriers.
"I think we just have to be more intense from the get-go," Lewis said. "Just because we lost Holly, we just can't collapse like that (against Siena).

Orange swim teams expect top challenges

By MATT SIMO
Staff writer
TheSyracuse Universityswimming teams departed to Pein State University Thursdaynjght in search of good competition.
The Orange will find out just how good that competition is in the Penn State Irivitational this weekend.
"We want to go to get some good competition." Syracuse coach Lous Walker said. "Our approach is that there are a variety of good swimmers to give us an opportunity to get some good races with schools we gencrally don't cross paths with."
Those schools implude the host Nittany Lions, Drexel University. James Madison University, Bucknell University and fellow Big East member the University of Connecticut.

Walker said the Orangemen \{3-1) have "a real good shot" at winning the men's meet while winning the men's meet while the Orangewomen (4-0) should realistically finish second behind a strong Penn State team that is currently ranked I6th nationally.
"We'll be in the finals in a variety of events," Walker said variety of events,
The question is whether they can compete in the championship format of an invitational after proving they can compete in a dual meet artangement. The underdog role hasn't stopped the Orangewomen from winning before, however.

To open the season, SU routed heavily-favored defending Big East champion University of Pittsburgh, and it hasn't let up since.

They will look to genior CoCaptains Lisa Bock and Shannon Manikowski to continue their dominance in the freestyle heir dominance in the freesty events.
Walker also expects freshman Amy DeMarle and sophomore Jenny Patterson to "be right in there" along with sophomores laurie Kasch in the longer distance events and Michele Ciesienski in the breast stroke.
On the men's side. Syracuse is led by junior Jay Craft, who is hailed by Walker as "the premier distance freestyler on the East Coast."

Other key swimmers for the Orangemen are sophomore Attila Ari in the breast stroke events and senior captain Steve Burke in the individual medley.
"It's an carly season opportunity for a championship format." Walker said about the meet. "Our goal) is to have great races and come back in the evening finals."

\section*{SU's season continues despite loss of center}

\author{
By IOSH BARNETT \\ Asst. Sports Editor
}

The biguest story concerning the Syracuse University men's basketbal team is the permanent suspension of center Conrad McRae, but the Orangemen will still take the floor tonight in the opening round of the 15 th Carrier Classic.

The Orangemen (3-0) open with Eastern Kentucky (3-2) tonight at 9 in the Carrier Dorme. In the other game Wright State University (1-0) faces St. Joseph's University (2-1) at 7 p.m.
Eastern Kentucky coach Mike Pollio. however. adided some perspective to the ituation
"I hate to tell you this, but people in Kentucky aren't too concerned about it." Pollio said. "I don't even want to know about it. Hell. I got enough problems wh my own team.
The Orangemen, however, are very concerned about McRae, yet they still must focus on the Colonels.

We're using (the suspension) as a motivation," said Syracuse guard Mike Hopkins, who is averaging eight points per game. "Conrad is our good friend. He has no enemies in this world. We're just going to go out there and play as hard as we can as a team Syracuse enters the Carrier Classic coming off an \(89-71\) win over Fiorida State University on Tuesday night in the ACC-Big East Challenge.
One of the keys to the victory was the Orangements ability to combat the Seminoles" large front line, a concern without the 6 -foot-10 McRae.

The performance against the Seminoles gives the Orangemen an additional boost of conildence and momentum entering the Carrier Classic, according to SU captain Dave Johnson. who seored 29 points against FSU.
"Our zone showed us that if we are outmanned as far as our front line goes. our zone can be effective," Johnson said. The Orangemen's impressive victory over Flarida State left its mark on Pollio.
"If they played like they played on Florida State, this baby's over quick, Forida State, this baby's over quick, Pilio said. "They looked (ike) a Top Five team that night."

Eastern Kentucky presents Syracuse with another large front line, including the team's leading scorer, 6-foot-7 forward John Allen, who is averaging 14.2 points and 7.6 rebounds per game and 6.10 center Mike Smith aversging 11.8 points and eight rebounds per game.
With a smaller front line. Syracuse has had to rely on perimeter shooting. The Orangeman shooting was sluggish in the first two games - a 78-71 win over Cornell University on Nov. 19 and an 83-68 win over UNC-Asheville on Nov. 30 . Syracuse shot 43 percent from the field and just 23 percent from three-point range.
Against the Serninoles, the Orangemen shot 31 -of- 65 from the field and 10 for 22 three-pointers, including a schoolrecord seven three-pointers by Johnson. "We have to be consistent (from threepoint rangel, but how consistent can we be?* said SU guard Adrian Autry. The sophomore didn't start against the Seminoles, but still managed 11 points. We've got to keep shooting because threes are a part of our game
Autry said the sprained ankle which limited his playing time against FSU was feeling fine, but he was unsure whether he would start against the Colonels.
Syracuse is \(14-0\) in opening round Cartier Classic games, averaging a \(25-\) point margin of victory. Never has an opening round game been decided by less than 11 points.
The Orangemen have won 12 of the 14 tournaments and have not lost a game ince St. Joseph's won the 1981 final Pollio said he realizes the deck may be stacked against his team, but the nature of the game causes these early season match-ups.
"That's what December is all about," the third-year coach said. "It's for all us have-nots to make some money for our program by playing these kind of teams.

Syracuse University's Scott McCorkle looks to break out of a shooting slump when the Orangemen host the Carrier Classic this weekend. SU will be joined by Eastern Kentucky University. Wright State University and St. Joe's University in the tourney. Syracuse plays its first game against Eastern Kentucky conight at 9. The consolation game will be Saturday at \(7 \mathrm{p} . \mathrm{m}\)., immediately followed by the championship contest.
"It gives our kids a chance to play where they usually don't get a chance to play. These are guys Syracuse wouldn't even talk with or even send a letter to."

After their appearance in the Carrier Dome, the Colonels will have played in four of the nation's largest college bas ketball arenas in terms of capacity. EKU senior guard Jamie Ross said the Colonels won't be intimidated.
"It's just another game for us," said

Big Ten champion No. 4 Michigan plays No. 2 Washington in the Rose Bowl on Jan. I and conference runner-up No. 8 lowa plays WAC Champion Brigham Young in the Holiday Bowl on Dec. 30.

For the Orangemen, this is their fifth-consecutive bowl appearance and they are 3-0-1 in their previous four bowls. For the Buckeyes, this is their third straight appearance, but they have lost the previous two games. including an embarrassing 23-14 loss to Air Force in last season's Liberty Bowl.

The game also features a battle of two different conferences, something Syracuse has not been accustomed to. Syrncuse will represent the one-year-old Big East while the Buckeyes are from the 95-yearold Big Ten. In its inaugural geason, Big East teams have compiled a 3-1 record vs. the Big Ten. Neither Syracuse nor Ohio State was invelved in those games.
While Syracuse and Ohio State have only played four times, the teams last meeting in 1988 has history for both meetimg Buckeyes beat the Orangemen 26-9 in coach John Cooper's Ohio State debut. For Syracuse, the game at Ohio Stadium before 89,758 was the largest crowd SU has ever played in front of.

The Daily Orange freed itself from all obligations to the Syracuse University Student Government Association by refusing to accept its portion of the student fee Monday night

DO Editor in Chief Jodi Larnagna said the money was refused because of the Assembly's attempts to exert unfair controls on a free press.

I condemn the Student Government Association for what it has attempted to do," she said. Lamagna said the newspaper would return its campus-wide subscription fee of about \($ 80,000\) so it can be divided among student groups.

The DO was granted the subscription fee by 78 percent of students voting in a referendum last week.
"We thank the students for their unflagging support of the DO," Lamagna said. "However, at this time, we can said. "However. at this time, we can chose of a free press - by decluring our

The Daily Orange will still be distributed free on the SU campus and at the State University College of Environmental Science and Forestry.

When The Daily Orange accepted student fee money, it was forced to adhere to several SGA-imposed regulations. These included: keeping a copy of the DO budget on file with SGA, signing

These regulations. in essence. gave the government too much control over the press, Lamagna said.

\section*{Free press at last \\ "Without freedom of thought there} can be no such thing as wisdom; and no such thing as public liberty without freedom of speech."-Benjamin Franklin.

Freedorn of the press from government control is a constitutional right enjoyed by all Americans. Now, Syracuse University students will be further ensured their right to a free student press.

The actions of this newspaper to formally disconnect itself from the Student Government Association are long overdue.

Student interests are not being served when elected officials within the student government use The Daily Orange's referendum status in an attempt to manipulate and control the content of the newspaper.

Not only will a truly independent newspaper better serve the constituaid the financial concerns of student groups who rely on the student fee for their existence. The seven dollars per student formerly allotted to The Daily Orange will be redistributed during budget hearings.

Above all else, The Daily Orange will remain the students' newspaper. Of those who voted in the recent election, 78.3 percent defended The Daily Orange and its independence. That unfailing support proves the student body's commitment to constitutional ideals and a free press. Through voting, SU has rejected the manipulative efforts on the part of certain government officials to control the content of the press.

Last week, the DO asked you to vote "yes" to keep the paper independent and free from government control. You did.

Even though the purse strings have been cut and independence has been achieved, student interests will remain the DO's top priority

\section*{Massacre in Timor documented}

To the editor:
Until we all wait for the announced New World Order. we stick around with the Old One-Guessing by the massacre of close to 200 unarmed women, children and men at the hands of the Indonesian army in the occupied east part of Timor.
The massacre happened in the East Timor city of Dili.just outside the Santa Cruz cemetery - an island east of Indonesia and north of Australia.

So much for the Indonesian government's later claim that it was an error that triggered the shooting, due to the soldiers tension and the "stabbing" of Major Q .

You think this is bad? These were just 200 slaughtered sheep. Since Dec. 7,1975 , when the Indonesians invaded the former Portuguese colony following its independence on Nov. 28, experts estimate that 200,000 Timorese, one-third of the population, died in the first five years of the invasion We are talking of systematic genocide comparable to Cambodia's killing fields or to any of Saddam Hussein's any of Sad Sad that there was no video footage of such carnage. Surely that would expose the massacre. Right? Wrong. A British cameraman. Max Stahl, was in the cemetery when the killing started. He taped it. It has been shown on Australian and Canadian television. The U.S. networks were probably short of funds from the Gulf War effort when they complained they were unable to get live footage. So I guess they were unable to buy it from the Brits.
Indeed, the Portuguese government decreed a national day of mourning, Nov. 19, in memory of the Timorese people memory of the Tirnores massacred on Nov. 12 .
In response to these events some of the folks in Washington, D.C., may have even asked, "Where is Portugal anyway?" Then they probably went home to enjoy Thanksgiving dinner with family and friends.

\section*{GSO questions DO}

To the editor:
A motion came up to cancel the Graduate Student Organization's subscription to The Daily Orange at the GSO Senate meeting this evening. Themotion followed discussion of the non-coverage by The Daily Orange at that student Daily Orange at that student government meeting. I made the motion.

Whoa! I was once a grad student at Newhouse. I was once an advertising manager for The Catholic Sun here in Syracuse, and later sports editor and general assignment reporter for the North County editions of The Post-Standard and Herald-American. Why the heck was I kicking the Fourth Estate? One does get older, if not wiser, but...

What is the implied role of the newspaper? Is it not to act as the public's eyes and ears in the role of the fourth arm of democratic governments? The GSO Senate has seen little of this activity on the part of The Daily Orange. Perhaps, if the motion had passed, a message might have gotten through to the managing editor (who allegedly did a pretty good job of covering gradurate concerns when it was her newsbeat). Unfortunately the Senate Unfortunately the Senate Daily Orange to ignore responsibility to the graduate community at Syracuse University.

But the GSO Senate is an honorable organization. The Senate rejected the motion to withdraw the GSO subscription because it recognized a commitment of funding and the majority of senators must the majority of senators must have felt honor-bound not to reject

However, a second motion did pass. That was to require the GSO president to return a report on the obligations of The Daily Orange vis-a-vis the GSO subscription contract questioned at previous unreported Senate meetings) at the next Senate meeting on at the next Senate meetin Jan. 23,1992 . Would The Jan. 23, 1992. Would The Daily Orange editors care to explain their obligation ... thei explain their obligation public responsibility?

I would be terrified at the thought of a contract, even a subscription agreement, requiring coverage of GSO activities to ensure future DO funding. Such a specific written agreement would reek of its implied control on the Fourth Estate. Nevertheless, I stand by my motion as, in my view, The Dajly Orange isn't keeping up with its implied obligation, to act as the Fourth Estate, particularly in matters Estate, particulariy in of campus governance.

It is recognized that direct GSO funding, some \($ 6.000\), is insignificant in the total budget of The Daily Orange. Advertising in The Daily Orange by Campus-Wide and Special Programming activities funded by the GSO as an indirect source of funds may even approach or exceed direct even approach or exceed direct funding. The graduate student who picks up The Daily Orange who picks up it probably and looks at it probably contributes more to the contributes more to the rationale for the advertising base and rate structure than whatever per capita direct contribution is committed by the GSO. Unfortunately, some senators felt their subscription fee was what earned their right to read this paper.

I'm looking forward to the GSO budget activities this spring. Perhaps some (Newhouse) grad students can (Newhouse) grad students can propose an alternative campus propose an alternative caper. Think of the newspaper. Think of the potential for paid editorial positions for graduate, students.
Or maybe a fortnightly, strictly grad student-orienited and produced section could be integrated into The Daily Orange Corporation's future Or maybe the managing editor could cultivate some interest in her staff.

I hope graduate students will talk to their GSO senators concerning the continued funding of The Daily Orang funding of The Daily Orang

"I did not accept questions after the meeting for one important reason. I do not., nor does my staft. want this to become a DO vs. other student groups issue," she later said. "This action should only strenkethen our relationship with other student groups. And as for SGA. the main hone of contention between it and the DO --. student fee funding - has been removed.

\section*{Controls are gone}

Assembly members responded to the announcement with a ments as they realized their controls over the DO were gone.

said Assemblyman Gary DePiero. "They now have no oblipation to give a free newspaper." Antion to givea freenewspaper. remarked that the DO-SGA Con-suling Board would probably no longer be active.

The DO is always open to student comments and questions," Lamagna said. "While there will no longer be a formal consulting board. we realize that we are a student newspaper. and student opinions will still be actively sought." Questions about the DO decaration spilled over into SGA President Emily Zenick's report.
Zenick sald Lamagna had told her about the announcement the night before but had not supplied any details Lamagna stressed during her address that the DO's action should not be interpreted as criticism of Zenick.
One Assembly member asked Zenick if it would viotate the SGA constitution if the DO did not spend its allocated funds.

If a group turnsaway money. we shouldnt have to shove it down their throats." Zenick replied.
-They aren't required to spend it." agreed SGA Comptroller Christopher loggans.

Objections from Assembly
Many Assembly members objected to the fact Lamagna did not allow questions.
"I think that's pitiful", said Assemblyman Jeremy Marin. Other Assembly members took offense at some of the accusationsleveled by Lamagna. Lindy Crescitelli, a Students Concerned About Rupe EDucation member, said Lamagna's address contained *half-truths and innuendos" and that the way the Do made the announcement was "extremely offensive."
"I. personally, have never asked (DO staff members) to change their letters or their change their letters or their articles." said Assembly memJoe Shields. "t think if they are Joe Shields. 'I think if they are they should be more specifte:
Lamagna later responded to these statements.

I knew questions, some ho:tile, would arise from my speech." she said. "I made some points about why we rejected the funding. Some have termed them 'accusations.' I reassert that they were truthful. If As sembly members chose to deny this truth, that is their premoga, tive. However, this denial reaf. firms my stance that answering questions would have belittled the issume at hand.

After the meeting, Zenick sabd she Wias surprised to leart of the announcement but knew complete independence had beer considered for many years.

There's always been ques tions." Zenick said. "Will the DO go independent? Can it financially survive?"

Shields senses antagonism
Shields said affer the meet ing he thought the announce ment was handled inan antago nistic manner.
"It makes me think the rela tionship tbetween SGA and the DOI is not going to be positive." Shields said.

St. Joe's attempted to inbound the ball across half court and it was McRae's outstretched arms which knocked the ball into a Hawk player. The Ball bounced out of bounds giving SU the firal possession.
"We just made big plays." said McRae, who had eight points, five offensive rebounds and five blocked shots. "I was just hoping to contribute to the team."

The Orangemen had a 57-48 lead; their biggest margin of the second half, before a St, Joe's timeout at 10:54.

In the next \(4: 22\), the Hawks went on a 13-6 run, highlighted by five points from Jones and a pair of three-pointers, which tied the score at 61-61.

It was a switch in defense, however, which led to the Hawks: however,
"There was a sequence where they were getting easy shots so when we switched to zone it forced an adjustment that took a little time.

Autry said the key to SU's recovery was trying to retain its rhythm.
"We just had to be more patient." Autry said. "That was the main thing. We had to try and run our offense and get the ball inside as much as possible."

The Orangemen were forced to go into the paint because thes were unable to hit the three. pointer. SU shot 4 -for- 18 from pointer. St shot 4 -for- 18 from three-point range.

SU coach Jim Boeheim. "When you shoot 4-for-18 it's a strugEle."
Without the three-point shots falling, the Orangemen relied on rebounding, especially on the offensive end in the first half.

Syracuse outrebounded St Joe's 12-5 on the offensive boards in the first half and finished with a 17-14 edge.
"I expected them to be a good offensive rebounding team,"Griffin said. "They're strong and they follow their shots. In the they follow their shots. In Miami will make its seventh appearance in the Orange Bowl game on lan. i. but are certainly no strangers consccutive games.

The last time the Hurricanes lost in the Qrange Bowl was a \(35-23\) loss 1985 season-opener.
Miami should be barred from play ing in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 1. It's iust that simple.

A college football team should not be allowed to play a bowl game in
I wouldn't object as m
I wouldn tobject as much to Miami staying in town and playing in the Blockbuster Bowl at Joe Robbie StaBlock dium.
dium isn't the Hurricanes fault that Miami has beautiful weather. which is one of the main qualities for bow sites. Still it is unfair to allow them to play where they play their regular season gatnes.
The only way they could make it worse is to add the Orange Bowl to could really make it fair to the opponents whe would be alloted the normal visitor's section.

During bowl weak. Miami players can prepare at their own practice they would normatly enjoy.

Hurricane players will walk through the sime doors they walk through all the time. They will dress in lockers the time. They will oress in lockers through the tunnel to cheers just like any other regular season gome in the any other rega Orange Bowl.

All this amounts to an unfair advantage for Miami. While Miami's opponent. the 1 lth-ranked University of Nebraska, will have to pet accliof Nebraska, will have to get acclimated to an entirely new atmosphere.
the Hurricanes will have all the the Hurricanes will have all the they are.
The Hurricanes currentiy hold a slim lead in the polls over the secondranked University of Washington. As long as Washington can beat the No. 4 University of Michigan Wolverines, Miami has to clobber the Cormhuskers to remain No. 1 in my poll Miarmi has all the qualities to be the No. I team in the country and they have beaten some quality teams including Florida State and Penn State.
The bowls are supposed to be the games that decide who the better Crange Bowl in what amounts to Orange Bowl in what amounts to tional television. however, hampers thenal television. however, hampers their ability to prove that they can go anywhere and beat anyone as the consensus best team in college foot conse

    The Syracuse Police force maintains a "visible force" during weekends on Marshall Street year-round to prevent damage to businesses, injuries to people and to keep alcoholic beverage consurnption under control, according to Steven P. Thompson, deputy chief of police.
    "Marshall Street is a melting pot," he said "We have Syracuse University students, local kids and kids from suburbs, plus businesses and bars."

    The number of officers in the Marshall Street area depends on the season, he said.
    "During the summer and early fall, the Marshall Street beat includes a supervisor and two to four officers," he said.

    Thompson said that during this time, some of the officers may ride horseback.

    He said during the late fall and winter, the number of officers is reduced.
    "We cut back and we are not quite as visible," he said
    No lack of security
    "There has never been a lack of security due to the cutback," he said. "Our assignments are fluid in nature. We assign personnel where we need them.*

    Thompson said answering emergency calls was the force's first responsibility. This need for available officers to answer calls led to police involvement in the new policy banning non-SU students from attending events in The Underground at the Schine Student Center.
    "We want to make sure that if events were held, sponsors could assure us of no outbreaks of violence," he said. "We can't take away units from other parts of the city."

    Thompson said SU students believe police are making underage drinking checks more often on the SU hill than other parts of the city, but this is not true.
    "Marshall Street is a small portion of what we have to handle on the weekends," he said.

    He said Alcohol Beverage Control units make checks in all city parks to look for offenders of the city's open container law and underage drinkers.
    "So far the law has been successful," he said.
    Students don't know
    Thompson said that the studersts' perception of what the police do on Marshall Street is not always in line with what the police actually do
    "The police are there to deter individuals from harming themselves or others," he said

    He said there were two problerns on the SU hill that needed more attention. One problem is the increase of theft from student housing during school breaks. "Year after year, the same thing happens," he said.
